Austrasia, enfeofed of this Country, by the name and Title of Earl of Hainault. Twice this Estate was added or united to that of Flanders. 1. In the person of Baldwin 5. Earl of Flanders, succeeding hereunto in right of Richild his Wife, Daughter of Regnier the 3d. 2. By the Marriage of Baldwin the 6th of Hainault with Margaret Countess of Flanders, Sister and Heir of Philip of Elzefs, Earl of Flanders. But being divided the first time by the usurpation of Flanders, wrested from Arnulph the 3d, by his Uncle Robert, and the second time by the intrusion of John de Avesnes, natural Son of Margaret the second Daughter of the Emperour Baldwin, unto the Estate and Earldom of Hainault: it was finally annexed to Holland by the Marriage of John de Avesnes to Adelise or Aleide, Daughter and (at the last) Heir of Florence the 4th, Earl of Holland, Zeeland, &c. From which it never was divided, till they were both incorporated into that of Burgundy.

The Earls of HAINAULT.

1. Alberic, one of the younger Sons of Brumhault Earl of Ardeine.
2. Wautier, Son of Alberic.
3. Wautier II. Son of Wautier the first.
4. Wautier III. Son of Wautier the second.
5. Albon, in right of his Wife, eldest Daughter of Wautier the third.
6. Albon II. Son of the said Albon by that Wife.
7. Manassier, Son of Albon the second.
8. Regnier, Son of Manassier.
9. Regnier II. Son of Regnier the first.
10. Regnier III. Son of Regnier the second.
11. Baldwin V. of Flanders, and the first of that name in Hainault, succeeded in right of Richild his Wife, the sole Daughter to Regnier the third.
12. Arnulph, Son of Baldwin and Richild, deposed of his Estate and life by his Uncle Robert, who seized on the Earldom of Flanders.
13. Baldwin II. Brother of Arnulph, succeeded in Hainault.
14. Baldwin III. Son of Baldwin the second.
15. Baldwin IV. Son of Baldwin the third.
16. Baldwin V. Son of Baldwin the fourth.
17. Baldwin VI. of Hainault, Son of Baldwin the fifth, and the eighth of that name in Flanders, into which also he succeeded in right of Margaret his Wife, Sister and Heir of Philip of Elzefs, Earl of Flanders.
18. Baldwin VIII. of Hainault, and 9. of Flanders, Emperour of Constantinople.
19. Joan Countess of Hainault and Flanders, first married to Ferdinand of Portugal, and then to Thomas Earl of Savoy.
20. Margaret the younger Sister of Joan, married to William of Bourbon Lord of Dampierre, by whom she had William and Guy both Earls of Flanders.
21. John de Avesnes, base Son of Margaret, begot before her marriage by Bischoff her Guardian the Prior of St. Peters in L'Isle, by force and fraud extorted Hainault from his Brethren born in lawful wedlock, and married Aleide Daughter and Heir of Florence the 4th, Earl of Holland; whose Successors in both Estate we shall meet with there, and amongst them with William the 2. Father of Queen Philippa, Wife of Edward the 3d, one of the most considerable of all the number.

4. The Bishoprick of CAMBRAY.

Southward from Hainault lieth the Bishoprick of CAMBRAY, continuing a goodly Town and Territory, reckoned of anciently as a part of Hainault, now a State distinct, rather confederate with the Princes of the Netherlands, than subject to them.

The principal City hereof is Cambray, (called in Latin Cameracum) seated on both sides of the River Scheld, a fair, goodly and mighty City, full of people, many of which are rich Merchants, but all of them industrious, especially in making such fine linen Cloth from hence called Cameras, or Cambricks. The private Buildings are very fair, but the publick much fairer, especially the Monasteries and other Churches, of which the most remarkable is that of our Lady, an ancient and sumptuous Fabric and the See Episcopal. From whence the Country and Territory hereunto adjoining is called Cambresis, in which are divers Villages and places of importance. The chief of which are, 1. Chastell Cambresis, six leagues from the City, remarkable for the Treaty held there betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559, in which a Peace was happily settled amongst all the chief Princes of Christendom, after a long and tedious War between those Kings and the Confederates of each; and before that, for the Confederacy there made by the said King of France and Spain, the Emperour, the Pope, and many of the Princes of Italy, against the Scignoury of Venice, Anno. 1568, called the League of Cambray. 2. Avesnes le sec, (so called to distinguish it from Avesnes in Hainault) near which are digged excellent white Stones for building, little inferior unto Marble.

This Bishoprick was Founded in the person of S. Disgenet, a Gracian born, An. 390, or thereabouts: whose Successors in tract of time became so potent, that at the last the Bishop hereof became both the Lord Spiritual and temporal of the Town and Territory, honoured with the title of a Duke, and Prince of the Empire, and was in the end made an Archbishop by Pope Paul the Fourth, An. 1562. And as for the City of Cambray, it was made Imperial by the German Emperours afterwards by Henry the fifth, given in protection to Robert of Jernusalem, Earl of Flanders and finally settled and confirmed on all his Successors by the Emperour Frederick, An. 1164. Which notwithstanding, the French finding it convenient for them, divers times possessed it: but governing with too great indulgence, they were driven out by the people in the time of Leu the 11th, and the Town yielded voluntarily unto Maximilian, Governour of these Countries for his Son Philip. Charles the fifth, in the year 1543, built a strong Citadel in it, pretending that he did it for defence of the Town against the French, but indeed to keep it for himself. After this it was taken by the Duke of Alençon, (Brother of Henry the 3. of France) then Governour of the Netherlands, An. 1582, but regained not long after by the Spaniards, the Inhabitants giving up the Town for want of victuals. Since that continually possessed by the Spaniards, and by them strongly garrisoned; but so, that the people still enjoy their ancient Privileges, and are governed by their own Laws and Bishops, as in former times.

5. NAMUR.

The Ealdom of NAMUR hath on the East Hainault, on the West the Bishoprick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South Luxemburg; so called from Namur the chief Town of it; Namurcum and Namurensis Comitatus in our Latin Writers. The Country is very small, containing only 182 Villages, and four walled Towns, but plentiful of all commodities, and replenished with a loyal and industrious people. Particularly the Air hereof is very wholesome; the Country watered with many Rivers and plentiful Brooks (amongst which the Sambre and the Mees) which, besides the benefit of Portage, yield great plenty of Fish. The Hills, whereof it hath not many, are clothed with Woods, abounding with all kind of Fowl and venison; the Vallies eminently fruitful of all sorts of Grain, rich Mines of Lead, Quarries of Marble of all colours, as also of Porphyre or Jasper, and great plenty of Coal. In Mines of Iron to abound, and that continually hammered by a painful people, that Vulcan Forge may seem to be reformed to the world again and heated here; which as it makes the people wealthy, so it keeps them from idleness. And as for the Nobility they are generally valiant, given to all military exercises fit for their degrees, and very affectionate to their Princes, the greatest virtue of a Subject.

Walled Towns it hath but four, as before was said; that is to say, 1. Namur, the chief of all the Province, where residdeth the Council for the Country, from which lieth no Appeals but to Mechlin only. Seated it is between two Hills on both sides of the Sambre, which doth there fall into the Meuse. The City is rich, inhabited for the most part by the Nobility, defended with a strong Castle, and beautified with a fair Cathedral, Founded here in the Church of S. Albin, Anno 1559. Not far off in the Villages of Ardeine and Mosnier are two Nunneries of Ladies, like those of Monti and Maubuge, spoken of in Hainault. 2. Boisvies, upon the Meuse, sacked by the French, Anno 1554, since repaired and fortified. 3. Charlemont, a small Town, but of most exact Fortifications, built by Charles the fifth, An. 1555, to oppose the French, who had then possessed themselves of Marienburg, a Town of Hainault, 4. Valencourt, a little Town, but standing in a goodly and fruitful Country. Of the Villages the chief is Dome, seated on the Meuse or Mees, fortified with a strong Castle, and honoured with the title of Viscountie, 2. Floren, 3. Vaschie, and 4. Sauson, of much beauty and greatness.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were a part of the Nervi. It was first made an Earldom by some of the Descendents of the Sons of Clodion, the second King of the French, who being dispossessed of their Father's Kingdom by Mercovius, the Master of his Horse, (to whom he had committed the Guardianship or Tutition of them) were forced to betake themselves to the most defensible places of the great Forest of Ardeine and the parts adjoining, where they Founded the great Earldoms, of Ardeine and Moselle, as before is said, divided in succeeding times into many parcels, of which this is one. By what and how many Earls this Earldom was possessed, I am yet to learn, the Estate being small, and consequently the Princes of it not much considerable. They were allied to the Royal House of France, by the Marriage of Albert Earl hereof with Irmingarde Daughter of Charles of France, the first Duke of Lorraine; and after unto the House of Flanders, by the Marriage of N. the Daughter and Heir of Peter, the last Earl of that race, to Henry the Second, Son of Baldwin the eighth of Flanders, and Brother of Baldwin Earl of Flanders, and the first Emperour of the Latins in Constantinople, whom he succeeded in that Empire. After whose death it came by Toland, his Daughter, to Peter Earl of Avesner, who succeeded also in the Empire, and after his decease to Philip his younger Son. But he deceasing without Issue, and Robert his elder Brother reigning in Constantinople, it was seized on by Philip the Brother of Henry, who, to assure himself thereof, took to Wife Mary Daughter of Philip Augustus King of France, by a Niece or or Cousin of this Philip it was conveyed in Marriage to Henry Earl of Luxemburg, (the Father by a former Wife of Henry the seventh, Emperor and Earl of Luxemburg) and finally brought back again to the House of Flanders, by the Marriage of Guy of Dampierre Earl of Flanders, with Isabel Daughter of that Henry by the Heir of Namur, and in his Issue it continued (for ought I can find) till it was swallowed up with the rest of the Belgick Provinces by the House of Burgundy. So that the highest we can go in search of the Earls of Namur, is to the time of Hugh Capet and Charles of Lorraine, which was 540 years after the coming in of the Sons of Clodion. From which time downwards the Succession is confused and broken, and towards the latter end discontinued for 140 years. Such as are left upon Record I have drawn together (not without much trouble) in as good order as I could, and here present them in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Earls of NAMUR.

1. Albert, the Co-temporary of Hugh Capet, spoken of before.
2. Godfrey, the Son of Albert, and Father of Alice Wife of Baldwin the fifth of Hainault, and Mother of Baldwin the sixth of Hainault, and the eighth of Flanders.
3. Peter the Son or Brother of Godfrey.
4. Henry the second, Son of Baldwin the eighth of Flanders, in right of N. his Wife, the Heir of Peter, Emp. of Constantinople, also on the death of Baldwin the 9th his elder Brother.
1216. 5. Peter II. Son-in-Law of Henry Emperor of Constantinople, and Earl of Namur.
6. 7. Philip, the younger Son of Peter, and John the elder Brother of Henry, both taking to themselves the title of Earl of Namur, the one at Constantinople, the other in the Netherlands, and both deceasing without Issue.
8. Philip II. Brother of John and Henry without Issue also.
9. John I. surnamed of Dampierre, the third Son of William of Dampierre by Margaret Countess of Flanders, Daughter and Heir of the Emperor Baldwin, succeeding by the gift of his Mother, challenging the disposing of it as next Heir of Philip the second, or in the right paramount of the Earldom of Flanders, enjoyed upon a better Title by
10. Guy of Dampierre, Earl of Flanders, and elder Brother of John the second, in right of Isabel his Wife, Daughter of Henry Earl of Luxemburg by his Heir of Namur; but I neither find her Name nor Parents.
11. John III. Son of Guy and Isabel.
12. John IV. Son of Guy, by a former Wife, the Brother of John the third by the whole blood being absent or unfriended, and so put beside.
13. Guy II. the Brother of John the Fourth by the same Venter.
14. John V. Son of Guy the second, who in the year 1307, married a Niece of Lewis the ninth of France, by Robert Earl of Clermont a younger Son.
15. John VI. who in the year 1429, sold his Estate to Duke Philip the Good to be enjoyed by him on the death of Theodore, the next Heir hereof, infirm, and (as it seems) without hope of Children.
16. Theodore, of Theodorick, the last Earl of Namur, after whose Death Duke Philip entered on this Earldom by the former Contract, and as the next Heir of the House of Flanders it continuing ever since into his Posterity.

9. LUXEMBURG.

LUXEMBURG is bounded on the East with the Moselle and the Land of Triers, on the West with the Meuse or Mees and a branch of the Forest of Ardenne, on the North with Luskyland, Namur, and a part of Hainault, and on the South with the Dutchie of Lorraine; so called from the Castle near the Town of Luxemburg, selected by Sigefride the first Earl hereof for his Seat and Residence.

The whole is divided into parts: the Eastern part being called Favonne, fruitful of Corn, and yielding with some Wines, some Mines, and many excellent Quarries of goodly Stone, the Western called the Ardenne, a remainder of that spacious Forest, which sometimes overshadowed all this Country, barren of Corn, but very plentiful of Venison, and of Fowl good store.

The people of this Country are not all of one Language: those nearer Germany, as in Luxemburg, Arles, Rodemark, Theowille, and the rest on that side speaking the Dutch, as those of Montmedy, Marville, Dampville, with the rest bordering on France, do corrupt or broken French, in which regard the Pleadings held before the Council residing in Luxemburg are made in both Languages, that so they may be understood by all that be business there. But the Nobility and Gentry (of which there is more in this Province than in any other of the Seventeen) speak both Tongues perfectly. A broad men full of Ve true, Courtesy, and Hospitality towards one another, and of great Truth and Faith to their Prince: but reckoned for the worst Landlords in all these Countries; governing their Subjects and Tenants like the Peasants of France, contrary to the use and Liberties of the rest of the Netherlands. Both sorts, as well the Nobility as the Commons, hate both Law and Lawyers, and for the most part end their Controversies amongst themselves without any Process.

The whole Country containeth in compass about 70 leagues, or 200 Italian miles, in which are comprehended 23 walled Towns, and 1168 Burroughs and Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Luxemburg or Luceburg, built in the place where anciently stood the Augusta Primadivorum of Ptolemy; and took this new name quasi Luci burgum, from the Image of the Sun there worshipped; seated on the Alfuntium, or Alze, which runneth through it, large and of a strong situation, but not very well built, nor yet recovered of the spoils which the long Wars betwixt the French and the Spaniards brought upon it before the Treaty of Cambray. However it is the chief Town of the Province, honoured with the Residence of the Council hereof, and the Sepulchre of John King of Bohemia, slain in the Battle of Cressy against the English, An. 1348. 2. Arles, on the top of an Hill, so called quasi Ara Luna, from an Altar consecrated to the Moon in the time of Paganism. 3. Theowille, on the Moselle, over which it hath a goodly Bridge, a Frontier town near Metz, and the Border of Lorraine, and for that cause made marvellous strong; but taken by the French, An. 1578, and restored the next year by the Peace of Cambray. 4. Boftenack, a fair Town, and very well traded, commonly called the Paris of Ardenne, in which part it standeth. 5. Montmedy, on an high Hill, at the foot of which runneth the River Chiers. 6. Dampville, once a very strong place also: both taken and ransacked by the French, An. 1552. 7. Marville

7. Marville, upon the Chiers, the one half whereof belonged to the Duke of Lorraine, the other to the King of Spain as Duke of Luxemburg, for which cause it is called la Ville commune. 8. Kock & March, fortified with a strong Castle. 9. Trois, a place once of great importance, sacked by the French, An. 1552, and restored by the Treaty of Cambray, on condition it should never more be walled. 10. La Fayette on the Chiers, a Town of the same condition.

In the skirts of this Country towards France standeth the Principality of Sedan, extended all along the banks of the River Mais, from the borders of Lorraine on the South, to the great Forest of Ardenne and the Dukedom of Bouillon on the North. A small, but very fair Estate, of fruitful Soil, and beautified with many rich Villages, and some Towns of note: the principal whereof are, 1. Jamais upon the borders of Lorraine, by the Duke whereof it was taken, after a long season, from the Lady Charlotte, the last Heir-general of the House of Mark, An. 1585. and laid under that Dukedom as a part thereof. A place of great importance, and therefore much contended for by each Pretender. 2. Douchery, a strong Town of war, bordering on Trafalke in Picardy, by which it is ascribed. 3. Sedaine, in Latin called Sedunum ad Mosam, because the late Duke, in Latin called Sedunum ad Mosam, the usual Residence on the banks of the Mais or Mosa, the usual Residence of the Prince: a fine neat Town, well fortified, and planted with 80,000 plants of Ordnance, honoured with a seat of Learning, which being of a middle nature betwixt a Grammar-School and an University, is in the Criticism of these times called Academia illustris, to which men may send their children to learn good Letters, though they can take in them no Degrees, that being a privilege reserved only to the Universities. So that these Schools may be somewhat like our Collegiate Churches of Westminster, Winchester, and Eaton, but that the younger Students in these last named are more retrained to Rhetoric and Grammar, than in the other, though these more liberally allowed for the encouragement and reward of Learning, than all the Schola illustres of either Germany, 4. Mosfau, a Town of great strength and consequence on the River Mais, upon some jealousies of State, garrisoned by the French, as also is Sedan it self, and most of the other good Towns belonging unto this Principality, but so that the Revenues of it, execution of Justice, and all other rights of Sovereignty, are still enjoyed, as formerly, by the Lords thereof.

This estate anciently was a part of the Dukedom of Bouillon, from which it was dismembered for the Portion of some younger Prince, at such time as Godfrey Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorraine, after Charles and Orho the first Dukes; or else accepted and referred by Godfrey, surnamed of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine, and King of Hierusalem, when he sold the Dukedom of Bouillon to the Bishop of Liege. By many mean Conveyances and alterations of the Owners it came at last to the House of Ardenne, a Family of great wealth and power in Westphalen, (a Province of Germany not far off) by the Heir-general of which House it was brought in Marriage to Engelbert Earl of Mark, about the year 1350, from whom descended Robert Earl of Mark, and Sovereign of Sedan with the Towns annexed, who succeeding his Mother in the Estates of Saus and Florence, Fiefs holden of the Dukedom of Bouillon, and eagerly affecting to unite the Estates together, (as they had been anciently) purchased the Town and Title of Duke of Bouillon of Eberhard Earl of Mark his Brother, Bishop and Cardinal of Liege, and consequently Duke of Bouillon also. Proud of his honour, and being somewhat too stiff in maintaining the Rights of his new Dukedom against a Sentence passed in the Imperial Chamber, in a Suit there depending betwixt two of his Vassals, he took up Arms against the Empire, with far more courage than discretion. For being in the course of that War worsted by Charles 5. (for whom he was too weak an Enemy) the Town of Bouillon, being taken by the conquering Emperor, was afterwards restored to the Bishops, and nothing but the Title of Dukes of Bouillon left to the Princes of Sedan. And that he might be able to hold Sedan, this Robert was fain to return again to the protection of the French, (as his Ancestors from the time of Charles 8. had done before) and died Anno 1555, leaving his Titles and Estate unto Robert his Son, one of the Marshalls of France, whose Grandson, called also Robert, being a dear friend and companion of Henry of Bourbon King of Navarre, and afterwards of France also, dying without Issue at Geneva, Anno 1588, committed to him the disposal of his Estates, and of the Lady Charlotte his only Sister. And he so well discharged his trust, that (having settled his own affairs) he gave the Lady in Marriage to Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Touraine, in France, (one who had done him very good service in the course of his long War, against the Leaguers) and with her possession of Sedan, and the Title of Bouillon; whose posterity do still enjoy it. The whole Succession of these Princes we shall find in Bouillon, of which more anon.

But to return again to the Dutchie of Luxemburg. It was at first a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, dismembered from it in the time of the Emperor Orho the first by Sigefride the Son of Ricinius Prince thereof, who in the division of that Estate amongst his Brethren, had this for his Portion, with the Title of Earl. Of his Successors there is little to be found upon good record in a constant order of Succession, until the time of Henry I. Father of Henry 2. Emperor of Germany, and they of a Royal Progeny of Kings and Princes; two of the which are most considerable, though all of them of eminent quality in their several times, viz. 1. Henry, elected and crowned Emperor by the name of Henry 7. said to be poisoned by a Friar in the holy Chapel, to prevent some designs he had against the Pope, in asserting the Imperial power in Italy. 2. John, the Son of this Henry, chosen K. of Bohemia, in regard of his Marriage with Elisabeth the Daughter of Wenceslaus King thereof, the possession of which Realm he left unto his posterity, advanced unto a Dukedom by Charles 4. the eldest Son of this John, in the person of Wenceslaus his younger Brother. What else concerns it we shall find in this following Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of LUXEMBURG.

1. Sigefride, the Son of Ricinius, Prince of Ardenne, the first Earl of Luxemburg.
2. Gilbert, the Father of Ogine, Wife of Baldwin the fourth of Flanders; but whose Son I find not.
3. Godfrey, Earl of Namur, was also Earl of Luxemburg by the right of Marriage, Father of Agnes the Wife of Simon the second Duke of Lorraine.
4. Conrad, perhaps the Son of Godfrey by the Daughter of Luxemburg, Father of Carbarine, Wife of Matthew the second, Duke of Lorraine.
5. Henry Earl of Luxemburg, slain in the quarrel of Rainold Earl of Geldres, contending with John Duke of Brabant for the Dutchie of Limbourg.
6. Henry II. Son of Henry the first, by means of his Brother Baldwin, Elector of Triers, was chosen Emperor of the Germans, the seventh of that name, Anno 1308, first crowned at Aken, Ahen, and afterwards at Rome; one of the last Emperours that meddled in the affairs of Italy.

- 1319 7. John Son of Henry II. Earl of Luxemburg, married Elizabeth, Daughter of Wenceslaus the elder, K. of Bohemia; of which he was upon that Marriage elected and crowned King, Anno 1311, in the life of his Father; slain by the English in the Battle of Cressy, Anno 1346.
- 1346 8. Wenceslaus, the younger Son of John, created Duke of Luxemburg by his elder Brother Charles the 4th, Emperour and King of Bohemia.
- 1383 9. Wenceslaus II. eldest Son of the said Charles 4. Emperour and King of Bohemia also, succeeded his Uncle in the Dukedom.
- 1419 10. Sigismund, Brother of Wenceslaus, succeeded Wenceslaus in all his Estates; to which he added the Crown of Hungary, by the Marriage of Mary, Daughter of King Lewis the first.
11. Elizabeth, Daughter of John Duke of Gorizia, (a Town of Lusatia) the Brother of Sigismund, by the gift of Sigismund her Uncle, being then alive, the better to fit her for the Bed of Anthony of Bourgoyn Duke of Brabant, after whose decease she married John the 3. Earl of Hainault, Holland, &c. But having no Issue by either of them, she sold her interest in this Dukedom to Duke Philip the Good.
12. Philip the Good succeeded on the Sale aforesaid made by the said Elizabeth, in pursuance of the Contract and Agreement made at her first Marriage, for settling this Estate in the House of Burgundy. Of whom, and his Successors in these Belgick Provinces, we shall speak hereafter.

The Arms are B. fix Barrulets A. supporting a Lion G. crowned and armed Or.

7. LIMBOURG.

THE greatest of the Estates of Belgium for extent of Territory, at the time of their Incorporating in the House of Burgundy, was that of Brabant, comprehending 5 of the 19 Provinces; that is to say, the Dukedom of Limbourg, and Brabant, the Marquisate of the Holy Empire, and the Seigniory of Meclun, with the Sovereignty of Liege or Luyc-land.

LIMBOURG hath on the East the Dukedom of Guick in High Germany, on the West the Bishoprick of Liege, on the North Brabant, and on the South the Dukedom of Luxemburg. The Soil is fruitful of all necessary Commodities, excepting Wines, the want whereof is recompensed with most excellent Wheat, great store of Fenel, and plenty of the best Iron Mines in all these Countries: all which Commodities it hath of so great excellency in their several kinds, that it is said of them proverbially, that their Bread is better than Bread, their Fire hotter than Fire, and their Iron harder than Iron. It is also well stored with medicinal Simples, and enriched with a Mine of Copperas, (by Pliny called Lapis arvensis, lib. 34. c. 10.) which being incorporated with Brass makes Latun, and increaseth the Brass by one third part. Lapis arvensis multum aris habet, & ex eo fuso fit æquis that Author hath it.

It is one of the least of the Belgick Provinces, containing in it but 125 Villages, and no more than five walled Towns or Cities: viz. 1. Limbourg, which gives name to the whole Estate, pleasantly seated on a Hill amongst shady Woods, under which runneth the River Wesde, which, having watred the whole Country, emptieth it self into the Maes; well built, and fortified with a very strong Castle, mounted upon a steep Precipice, of no easie access. 2. Valkenburg, called by the French Faumeunt, a reasonable fair Town, with a large Territory, two Dutch miles from Masfricht; conquered from Reynold, Lord hereof, by John the third Duke of Brabant. 3. Dalem, a little Town with a Castle, the Territory thereof extending beyond the Maes; conquered by Henry Duke of Brabant, of that name the second. 4. Rhode le Duc, a little old Town with as old a Castle, half a league from Valkenburg. 5. Carpen, situate between Guick and Colden, beautified with a Collegiate Church and a strong Castle, in which there is a Governour with a good Garrison for defence of the place. Each of these Towns hath Jurisdiction on the parts adjoining, but with Appeal unto the Chancery at Brabant.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract, and the Bishoprick of Liege adjoining, were the Ebmoures. When it was first made an Earldom, I am yet to seek. Most probable it is, that lying within the Verge of the great Forest of Ardenne, it was at first a member of that Earldom also, difmembered from it for the Portion of some younger Son, as Luxemburg and Namur were, or seized on by some strong Pretender (as Guick was) when Godfrey and Baldwin Dukes of Lorraine, and the direct Heirs of the House of Ardenne, were absent in the Wars of the Holy Land. But whensoever & by whomsoever it was made an Earldom, certain it is, that of an Earldom it was made a Dukedom by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, An. 1172. Henry one of the Dukes hereof, married his Daughter Margaret to Godfrey the third, Duke of Brabant, which gave the House some colour to pretend unto it, backed with a better Title on the death of another Henry, the last Duke of Limbourg, whose next Heir, Adolph, fold it to John, Duke of Brabant, pretending to it in the right of the former Marriage, An. 1293. But Reynold Earl of Guick, thinking himself to have a better Title than Adolph in right of Ermingade his Wife, the Daughter of Herman, a late Duke hereof, put in his plea, and challenged the force of Arms; but being vanquished and taken prisoner by the said Duke John in the Battle of Worancum, was slain, for his Release, to release all his Claim and Title to the Dukedom of Limbourg after that quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Brabant, till they fell both together to the House of Burgundy.

The Arms hereof are Argent, a Lion Barrie of ten pieces, Or and Gules.

8. LYCK-LAND, or, the Bishoprick of LIEGE.

WESTWARD of Limbourg, but a far mightier Estate than it, lieth LYCK-LAND, as the Dutch, or the Bishoprick of LIEGE, Leodiensis, as the Latin and French Writers call it; anciently under the protection of the Dukes of Brabant, and afterwards of the Princes of the House of Burgundy, as Lords of that Country. By some it is accomplished of and debased as a part of Germany; but for the reasons before mentioned I shall place it here. It is environed on all sides with the Belgick Provinces, that is to say, with the Dukedom of Limbourg and the Earldom of Namur on the East, with Brabant on the North and West, on the South with Luxemburg.

The Air hereof is very wholesome, and the Earth as fruitful, abounding with all kind of Grain and Fruits, with some store of Wine; and as for Fleish, Fish, Fowl and Venison, it hath very great plenty, and that too of an excellent taste: less fertile it is in such parts hereof as lie towards Luxemburg, in which it is most swelled with Hills, and over-spread with shady Woods, remainders of the great great Forest of Ardenne, within which it stood. But the rich Riches of this Country is under ground, consisting in mines of Lead and Iron, and some few of Gold; Quarries of Alabaster, mingled with all sorts of Marble; rich veins of Brimstone, and unexhaustible pits of Coals; which last it hath in such abundance, that there is digged within the compass of one league of the City of Liege, not only sufficient for that great City, but so much over-plus, as being sold at mean prices about the Country, amounts unto 1000000 Ducats of yearly value. The Coal much sweeter than elsewhere, and of nature contrary to all other Coal, in that it is kindled with water, and quenched with oil, and the strong fervour of it taken off by casting Salt on it.

The whole Country containeth 24 walled Towns, and 1800 Villages. The principal of which are 1. Liege or Luyc, (in Latine Leodunum) situate in a pleasant Valley environed with four lesser Rivers, which make in it many delightful Islands. The compass of it is about four miles; the ordinary Buildings very fair, all built of Stone; the Bishops Palace a magnificent and sumptuous piece; the Churches in number forty, of which eight are Collegiate; 2. Parochial, all of them for their riches and beauty exceeding all in any City of France or Germany. Besides these, there are so many Convents, Monasteries and Religious Houses about the Town, that taking all together they amount to an hundred; all of them of such fair Revenues, so well endowed, and the Religious persons thereof of so great authority, that it is called the Paradise of Priests, and that derisively. It is also an University of good antiquity, wherein were Students at one time 9 Kings Sns, 24 Dukes Sns, 29 Earls Sns, besides Barons and Gentlemen; the greatest part of which were Canons of the Church of S. Lambert, which is the Cathedral of the City. Yet notwithstanding it hath taill of the malice of Fortune as well as others, being first destroyed by the Danes, then by the Normans, twice taken, and once destroyed, by Charles of Burgundy, Anno 1468. Subject it is unto the Bishop as Lord temporal of it, from whom (being long since made an Imperial City) there lieth an appeal to the Chamber of Spire. 2. Dinant, upon the Meuse, near Namur, of very great Traffick, till destroyed by Charles of Burgundy in the same year with Liege; hardly recovered of which wounds, it was again sacked by King Henry the second of France, Anno 1354. 3. Musick, upon the Meuse or Maes also, a league from whence is the fair Nunnery of Thuren, of the same nature with that of Mont and others (spoken of before): the like to which there is near 4. Bissen, another Town of this Bishoprick; the Abbesses of each having the privilege of Coining both Gold and Silver. 5. Lootz, by the Dutch called Borchim, in the County of Dioffain; made a County in the time of Charles the Great, the Title and possession of Ogier the Dane, so famous in the History of Alaric of France and others of the old Romans. 6. Franchimont, which gives the Title of a Marquess to the Bishop of Liege. 7. Centron, or St. Truden, a fair Town, so called of the Abbey dedicated to that Saint. 8. Huy or Hoy, so called of a violent River which there runs into the Meuse. 9. Tongres, the City of the Tongres, which together with the Ebmoures were once the inhabitants of this Tract; in which are still the ruins of a Temple consecrated to Hercules. Anciently it was an Episcopal See, translated hence to Masfricht, and at last to Liege; and in those times so great and of such renown that Attila the Hun destroyed in it 100 Churches now but a very small Town, and not worth the mentioning but for these Antiquities. Eight leagues from hence amongst the shady Thickets of the Forest of Ardenne, is 10. that to celebrated Village, and those famous hot Baths frequented from all the places in Europe, called the Spa; not so pleasant as wholesome, not so wholsom as famous. Yet are they good for sundry diseases, as the Tertian Ague, the Dropsic, the Stone, the Exaltation of the Lungs, the Sciatica, &c. They are of most virtue in July, because they are then hottest; and to such as taill them they restiff much of Iron, from some Iron Mines, it seemeth, through which the waters run, which feed them. These Baths were of great fame in the time of Pliny, who do thus describe them: Tongri Civitas fontem habet infusum plurimis balis stillantem ferreque vel saporis, quod ipsum non solum in fine potui intelligitur. Hinc aut hic corpora febres terribiles discitis calculorumque vitia. Solie, lib. 31. c. 2. agreeably to the nature of them at this present time.

This Country (not taking the Dukedom of Bonillon, though now reckoned as a part thereof, into this account) followed the Fate Fortunes with the rest of Belgica, till the Conquest of it by the French; whom it was made a part of the Kingdom of Lorraine in the division of which Kingdom between the Kings of France, and Germany it fell unto the share of the Kings of France, as lying almost wholly on the West or French side of the River Maes, which parted their possessions in that broken Kingdom. Won from Lotharius the French King (the last but one of the Caroline Race) by Otho the 2. it was by him made part of the Dukedom of Lorraine then by him created, and continued as a part thereof, till sold by Godfrey of Bonillon, Duke of Lorraine to the Bishops of Liege, (of which more anon) since which time it hath been the Patrimony of those wealthy Prelates. As for the Bishoprick of Liege, it was founded at Tongres, as before was said; after the sackage of which City by Attila, it was removed Anno 498 by S. Servatius unto Masfricht. But the people of Masfricht having martyred S. Lambert their Bishop, Anno 763, by Hugot, his designed Successor, with the leave of Pope Constantine, it was translated to this place, and a Cathedral Church there founded by the name of S. Lambert. His Successors did so well husband their advantages that they did not only buy the Dukedom of Bonillon, but the City and Territory of Liege, sold unto Spemius and Othertus successively Bishops of it by Godfrey of Bonillon, Duke of Lorraine, at his departure hence to the Holy Land: not much increased since that in Lands, though they be in Titles, the Bishop being filled a Prince of the Empire, Duke of Bonillon, Marquess of Franchimont, Earl of Loetz, and Habsburg. Yet are not his ordinary Revenues above 30000 Ducats yearly; his Subjects living very well under him, at ease, Rents, and growing for the most parts unto good Estates. An argument whereof may be, that when the Liegeois had rebelled against Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy (under whose Clientele they were as Dukes of Brabant) they bought their Peace of him at the Price of 600000 Fiorens of the Rhene, to be paid in six years. After which again Rebelling against Charles the Warlike, (as they have been of old to be the most rebellious City in Europe, excepting Ghent) they were able to wage 30000 men; but not being able to withstand the Forces of their Lord Protector, they fell in to that miserable destruction spoken of before. Since that time they have lived with more moderation under the protection of the Princes of the House of Austria but were counted Neutral in Quarrels betwixt the King of Spain and the States Confederate, as formerly between the Spaniards and the French; though many times they suffer in the contestations.

Southward hereof betwixt it and Luxemburg, lieth the Dukedom of Bonillon, subject unto the Bishops of Liege, but a State distinct, and holden by a different Title. It taketh up a great part of that Country which more particularly and specially is called the Forest of Ardenne, with the Woods thereof in many places over-shaded; but not unfurnished of fair Towns and wealthy Villages. The principal of which are, 1. Loni, and 2. Mou-fon-Court, destroyed by Charles the fifth in his War against Robert Earl of Mark and Duke of Bouillon, but on the Peace ensuing repaired again. 3. Sauv, and 4. Floringe, Fiefs, as before is said, of the Dukedom of Bouillon, but possessed by the Sovereigns of Sedan, since the time that Robert Earl of Mark and Sovereign of Sedan had them in Marriage with Joan his Wife, the right Heir thereof, from whom came Robert Earl of Mark, the first Duke of Bouillon of that Family. The last a pretty Town, till destroyed by the French, in the Wars betwixt Henry and Philip the seconds, Kings of France and Spain, since passing in account as a principal Village. 5. Hierk, in the Forest of Ardenne, the cause of the great War betwixt Charles the fifth and Robert Duke of Bouillon, spoken of before; the Emperor having passed sentence in behalf of the Embrives, who laid claim unto it, and Robert favouring the pretensions of the House of Chinay. 6. Bouillon, built on the side of a Hill near the River Sensy, a fair large City, and beautified with a goodly Castle on the top of a Tuffid Hill, and commanding over a large and goodly Territory, so strong as well by Art as Nature, that before the use of great Ordnance it was held impregnable; much spoiled in the War betwixt Charles the Fifth and Robert of Mark, and tolled from one Master to another in a little time, for being taken from Earl Robert by the power of Charles, it was from him gotten by the French, Anno 1552, and finally restored to the Bishop of Liege by the Treaty of Cambray, Anno 1559, but without prejudice to the Claim and Title of the Prince of Sedan. So that there are no fewer than three distinct Families which at this time enjoy the Title of Dukes of Bouillon, that is to say, the Bishop of Liege, who hath precedence of Title, and the possession of the City, the House of de la Tour, who hold Floringe, Sauv, and some other pieces, and the Heirs-male of the collateral Line of the House of Mark, who hold Lumagne, Rechfort, and some other places, but of less importance.

This Dukedom, once a part of the great Earldom of Ardenne, in the division of that Estate betwixt the Children of Ricaine, Prince or Earl thereof, fell to the share of Godfrey his eldest Son, (Sedan with its appurtenances then belonging to it) with the Title of Earl of Ardenne and Bouillon. By Godfrey his Son it was united to the Dukedom of Lorraine, who succeeded into that Estate after Charles and Orto, and by another Godfrey the first Duke of Lorraine dismembered from it, and given in Dower with his Sister Ida, at her Marriage with Eustace Earl of Boulogne in Picardy. Of these was born the famous Godfrey, commonly called Godfrey of Bouillon, since after he became he was here educated, or in regard he was Duke hereof before he did attain to the Dukedom of Lorraine; who, to provide himself of necessities for the Wars of the Holy Land, (so fortunately conveyed and conducted by him) sold first this Dukedom unto Obero, as afterwards of Liège successively, and their Successors for ever, which though accounted by most Writers for a part of Liège, and of the Bishoprick of Liège, call it which you will, was notwithstanding held by those great Prelates as a State distinct, and governed under them by the Bishops of the Country, from whose Sentence there lay no Appeal. The maintenance of which Privileges, on an Appeal made by the Embrives unto Charles the fifth, cost Robert Earl of Mark so dear, who had not long before purchased this Estate of his Brother Eberhard, Bishop and Cardinal of Liège, as was said before. The rest of the Story we have had already in our description of Sedan: we will now look upon the Princes which have born these Titles.

The Dukes of Bouillon of the House of Ardenne.

1. Godfrey, the eldest Son of Ricaine, Prince or Earl of Ardenne, the first Earl of Bouillon, and Husband of Matilda, a Daughter of the Emperor Otho the 2.
2. Godfrey II. Son of Godfrey the 1. who in the year 1044, by adoption of Duke Otho his Cousin, and the power of Henry the 2. Emperor, succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorraine.
3. Gozelo, Brother of Godfrey the 2. Duke of Lorraine and Bouillon.
4. Godfrey III. Son of Gozelo.
5. Eustace, Earl of Boulogne, and Ida his Wife, Daughter of Godfrey the 3, by him endowed at her Marriage with the Dukedom of Bouillon.
6. Godfrey IV. surnamed of Bouillon, Son of Eustace and Ida, on the death of his Uncle Godfrey, succeeded in the Dukedom of Lorraine, Anno 1078, and died King of Jerusalem. Going unto the Wars of the Holy Land, he sold this Dukedom to Obero Bishop of Liege and his Successors, Anno 1096, who did accordingly enjoy it till the year 1509 or thereabouts, when it was sold by Eberhard of Mark, to his Brother Robert, of whose descent and Successors you may take this view in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Sovereigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Bouillon of the House of Mark.

1. Engelbert, the ninth Earl of Mark in Germany, by marrying with the Daughter and Heir of Aremberg, added Sedan, Jumais, &c. to the House of Mark.
2. Everhard, second Son of Engelbert by the Heir of Aremberg, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
3. John, Son of Everhard, Earl of Mark, Lord of Aremberg, Sedan, &c.
4. Everhard II. Brother of John, Earl of Mark, &c.
5. John II. Earl of Mark, Son of Everhard the 4.
6. Robert of Mark, the 2. Son of John the 4. Lord of Sedan, his elder Brother Everhard succeeding in the Estates of Aremberg. He added Pirvenge and Saefz, Towns of the Dukedom of Bouillon, to his other pieces.
7. Robert II. Son of Robert the 1. Sovereign of Sedan, and Duke of Bouillon, which Dukedom he purchased of Everhard his Brother, Bishop and Cardinal of Liège.
8. Robert III. Son of Robert the 2. one of the Marshals of France, Sovereign of Sedan, and Titular Duke of Bouillon.
9. Henry Robert, Son of Robert the 3.
10. Robert William, Son of Henry Robert, zealous in the Reformed Religion, and a great follower of Henry of Navarre King of Navarre, to whom, dying at Geneva, Anno 1588, he bequeathed the care of his Estates.
11. Charlotte, the Sister of Robert William, married by Hen of Navarre (then King of the French) to Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turmeque.
12. Henry de la Tour, Viscount of Turmeque in France, descended from the Heirs-general of Eustace Earl of Boulogne and Duke of Bouillon, by Marriage of the Lady Charlotte, and the gift of Henry the 4. of France, succeeded in the Sovereignty of Sedan and Title of Bouillon, a Protestant, and the Founder of the Schola Illustri in Sedan.

13. De la Tour, Son of Henry by one of the Daughters of William Prince of Orange, succeeded his Father in his Estates, but not in his Religion also, which, to ingratiate himself with the French King, he exchanged for Papistry, made thereupon one of the Marshals of France, and now living, Anno 1648.

9. BRABANT. 10. The MARQUISATE. and 11. MECHLIN.

These I have joined together, though distinct Estates, because they have a long time followed the same fortune, and that the two last do not otherwise differ from the first than the parts from the whole; the Marquisate and Mechlin being now reckoned as parts of Brabant, and included in it.

BRABANT is bounded on the East with Lucyland or the Bishoprick of Liege, on the West with the River Scheld, and a part of Flanders, on the North with the Maes, which severeth it from Holland, and Gelderland, and on the South with Hainault, Namur, and a part of Lucyland; so called quasi Brackland, that is to say, a barren Land, as at first it was; or from the old Bratunphantum, which Cesar placeth in this Tract; but from whether of the two is not yet determined.

The Air hereof is generally very wholsome and good, and the Soil naturally fruitful, excepting Kempenland, (being the parts thereof lying towards the North) which being barren of it, fell, is made indifferently fertile by keeping Cattel, soiling the ground, and other arts of good Husbandry. The people live in most freedom, and are the best privileged of any in Belgium. A thing for which they are more beholden to the Prince's goodness, than their own great wits; being noted to be none of the wisest, especially as they grow in age, when most men learn wisdom. Brabantii quæ magis senescunt, eo magis insulescunt, as Erasmus.

The length hereof, from S. Gertruydenburg to Gembours, North and South, is 22 Dutch or German miles; from Helmont to Bergen op Zoom, East & West, 20 of the same miles; the whole compass 80. Within which circuit are contained 26 walled Towns, and Villages with Parish Churches 718; of which the odd 18, called Franky or Market-Towns, enjoy the Privileges of walled Towns or Cities, though unwall'd themselves.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Hertogenbosch, or the Bosch, as the Dutch Bos de Drie, or Baldine, as the French; and Sylvia Ducis, or Bosium Ducis, as the Latins call it: each name derived according to their several Languages, from a pleasant Wood, belonging to the Dukes of Brabant, where the Town now stands, situate on a little River, called Dreef, some two Leagues from the Maes, near the borders of Gelderland. A large and well-built Town, very strongly fortified, and of great trade for Clothing, here being made yearly in the time of Lewis Guicciardini 200000 Clothes, worth 200000 Crowns to the Clothier or Draper: Made an Episcopal See, Anno 1559 the Cathedral, which is fixed in the Church of S. John, being fair and large, and beautified with one of the goodliest Dials in the Christian world. This is the principal Town of Brabant (properly and distinctly so called) comprehending under it the four Countries of Kempenland, Maelland, Peelland, and Osserland; and was taken by the Confederate States from the King of Spain, after a long and chargeable Siege, Anno 1628. 2. Tilmont, on the little River Gert, once chief of Brabant, but long since decayed. 3. Ascher, on the little River Denmere, which gives the title of Duke to them of the noble House of Groz, descended from the Kings of Hungary (of which we spake before at large when we were in Picardy) the Dukes hereof (advanced unto that honour by Charles the fifth) being men of greatest Revenue and Authority of any in Belgium. 4. Bergen op Zoom, so called from the River Zoom upon which it is situate, about half a League from the influx of it into the Scheld, and not far from the Sea, which gives it a reasonable good Haven. A Town of great strength by nature, but more strongly fortified, famous for being made Marquisate by Charles the fifth, Anno 1553; more for the notable Rebellion which it made to the Marquess Spinola, Anno 1622. 5. Brada, upon the River Merck, a Town pleasantly seated, well fortified, and of great Revenue, having under it the Town and Territory of Osserland, the Barony of Ropland, and the Seigniority of Osserland, the Residence, Barony, and chief Town of the Princes of Orange, from whom being taken by the Spaniard in the beginning of those wars, it was again recovered by some venturesome Gentlemen, who hiding themselves in a boat covered over with Turf, were conveyed into the Castle, which they easily mastered, and made the Prince Lord of it again, after retaken by the Spaniard, Anno 1627, but now in the possession of its natural Owners, to whom it came by the right of the House of Nassau, by the Marriage of Engelbert their Earl, of that House, with Mary, Daughter and Heir of Philip the last Lord hereof, about the year 1400. 6. Dreef, on the River Denmere, a good Town and invested with a goodly Territory, belonging to the Prince of Orange, whose Ancestors of the House of Nassau had it in exchange for some other Lands of the Duke of Cleve; and in right hereof he is Burgave of the City of Antwerp. 7. Grimberg, an ancient Barony, with a large Jurisdiction, defendible on the youngest Son only, after the manner of Burg English, as our Lawyers call it. 8. Gertruydenburg, standing on the Dowg, not far from the influx of it into the Maes, the farthest town in the North of Brabant, where it joins to Holland, which makes it a matter of dispute betwixt those Provinces, to which of them it doth belong. A Town of great trade for Fishing, plenty of Salmons and Sturgeon being taken here, but of Shads especially, whereof 18000 are sometimes caught in a day, fatted, and sent abroad into Foreign parts. It acknowledged the Prince of Orange for the Lord thereof, as doth also, 9. Graves, a good Town upon the Maes, bought by these Princes of the King of Spain without consent of the States, without whose approbation no part of the Domain is to be dismembered. 10. Mastricht, (in Latine Trajectum ad Mosam) so called of a Ferry over the Maes in former times; supplied now with a goodly Stone-Bridge in the place thereof. A fair and goodly Town, beautified with two Collegiate Churches, in one of which the Dukes of Brabant were always Canons; subject in part to the Bishop of Liege, and partly to the Duke of Brabant. The Children are subject to that Prince to whom the Mother was subject at the time of the Birth, without relation to the Father according to that Maxim of the Civil Law, Parrus sequitur ventrem. And if a Stranger come to live there, he must declare to which of the two he will be subject. Yet is the Duke of Brabant the chief Sovereign of it, he only having the power of Coinage, and of granting Pardon to Offenders; and as a Town of this Dukedom it was besieged and taken by the Confederate States, Anno 1632.

Here it also within the limits of this Dukedom the Town and Seigniority of Racelstein, situate on the banks of the Maes, held by the Dukes of Cleve of the Duke of Brabant, but no otherwise subject; and on the same River the Town and Country of Horn, a Fief Imperial, beautified with a strong Castle and a goodly Territory, in which is Wier, the Residence of the Earls of Horn, descended of the ancient House of Montmorency in France.

2. The MARQUISATE OF THE EMPIRE, so called because the farthest Bounds and Marches of the German Empire fronting on Flanders, which appertained unto the Sovereignty of the Crown of France, comprehendeth four of the best Towns in Brabant, with very large and spacious Territories adjoining to them: viz. 1. Lovain, on the River Dile, about four English miles in compass; but in that compass much more delightful than it all built and peopled. It was the Mother Town of Brabant, and sometimes gave the Title of an Earl to the Dukes thereof: afterwards was made an University by Duke John the 4. An. 1426. wherein are contained about 20 Colleges, such as they be, much privileged, and enriched with Pensions for publick Readers, by King Philip the 2. 2. Bruxels, (Bruxella) the Seat of the ancient Dukes of Brabant, and of the Dukes of Burgundy also, after they came to be Lords of those Countries; seated upon the Sinne, and other sweet Springs and Rivers, which make it one of the sweetest situations in all Europe, having withall a goodly Chancel made by Art from Brussels to the River Dile, and from thence to the Scheld, the charge whereof amounted unto 500000 Crowns. It is of the same compass with Lovain, the Building sumptuous, and the Town very rich, not only in regard that it is the ordinary Seat of the Prince or his Regent, and the Chancery for all Brabant and the Duchy of Limbourg, but in regard of the rich Manufactures of Armour and Cloth of Arras, of Silk, Gold and Silver, which are there industriously pursued. 3. Nivelles, on the borders of Hainault, in a very rich and fruitful Soil, remarkable for the abundance of fine Linen which is therein made, but most of all for a very rich Nuntery (or rather a Nurfery) of noble Ladies of the same nature with those of Mons and others before described. 4. Antwerp, situate on a goodly Plain on the River Scheld, above 17 leagues from the Sea, but furnished with eight Channels, cut out of the River for the Transport of Commodities, one of the which is capable of 100 great Ships. The private Buildings were reckoned the Church of Notre-Dame, the Basilica Merchants. Well peopled it is, and of so great Trade in former times, that it was held to be the richest Empyre of the Christian World, the Commodities here bought and sold amounted to more in one month than those of Venice in two years. The causes of which sudden growth and encrease of Trading are said to be these. 1. The two Marts holden here every year, either of them during six weeks, in which time no man's person could be arrested, or his goods distrained. 2. The King of Portugal having in the year 1503 diverted the course of Merchandise from Alexandria and Venice to the City of Lisbon, kept here his Factories, and sent hither his Spices and other Indian Commodities, for which cause the Merchants in the year 1516 forsook Bruges in Flanders, and settled here. And 3. many of the Nobility and Gentry, during the long and bloody Wars betwixt France and Spain, forsook their Country-houses, and repaired hither by means whereof Antwerp, in a very little time grew bigger by 3000 houses than it had been formerly. But as the growth hereof was sudden, so the fall sensible, occasioned through the yoking it with a Cittadel by the Duke of Alva, which made Merchants afraid to resort any longer thither as a place of little freedom and less security; but chiefly by blocking up the Haven and intercepting the Trade as sea, by the more powerful Hollanders, which hath removed this great Traffic to Amsterdam and other Towns of their Country. So that now the chief support of it is the reputation which it hath of being an Imperial City, the place of receipt for the Kings Revenues, and a Bishops See founded here in the year 1559, which draweth hither more resort of Lawyers and Church-men.

3. The Seigniority of MECHLIN consisteth only of that City and a small Territory of 9 Villages adjoining to it. The City is seated on both sides of the River Dile, which ebboeth and floweth to the Town and a league above it, and runneth through the very midst, maketh in it a number of small Islands, to the great ornament and commodity of it. A goodly Town containing seven Parish-Churches, besides the Cathedral, being the See of an Archbishop, founded here in the year 1559. Strong in regard it may be easily drowned on all sides; and of great wealth by reason of the many Manufactures of Linen, great Artillery of Brasse and Iron, Bells, Painted works, and others of like use and ornament. And being situate in a manner in the Centre of Brabant, distant 4 Leagues from Antwerp, Lovain, and Bruxels, it was made by Charles the Warlike (who loved the place) the ordinary Seat of the great Council of State, to which Appeals are made from the other Provinces. But yet it was more beautiful in former times than it is at the present; the City being much decayed by firing 200 Barrels of Powder, An. 1546, and by the Sackage of the Spaniards, by whom it was taken by force, Anno 1572. Most memorable at this time for a famous Nuntery, like to that of Nivelles, wherein are sometimes 1600 Nuns, who when they please may leave their Cloister and be married. A Town though in Brabant, yet not of it, but a State distinct: for which cause many Women came at the time of their Child-birth use to lay down their Bellies in some Village of Brabant, that their Children may be capable of the Privileges and Immunities of the Country. The principall of the Villages is named Lesur Hout, pleasantly seated on an Hill, the residue of the Burroughs lying at the foot thereof. Both Town and Villages were the Patrimony heretofore of the noble Family of the Bertholds, which failing in the person of Gautier, slain in the Battle of Worancan by John Duke of Brabant, left the one half to the Bishop of Liege, who sold his moiety to John the 2. Duke of Brabant; the other to the Earl Gelders, who in the year 1333 sold his part unto Lewis Malain, Earl of Flanders. But he sold nothing but the Title, John the third Duke of Brabant having seized upon it, and added it to his Estate: the occasion of some quarrel between those Princes, composed by the Marriage of Lewis with the Heir of Brabant.

But to return again unto Brabant it self, the ancient inhabitants hereof were the Aduatic and some part of the Tungri: it was accomped by the Romans a part of the Province of Germania Secunda, and by the French Province of the Kingdom of East-France or Austrasia; the Southern parts thereof towards Hainault under the Governance and Command of the Earls of Ardenne; the Northern parts lying towards the Sea, and terribly infected with the Depredation of the Danes and Normans, committed to the care of some principal Officers, whom they called Lords Wardens of the Marches. The eldest Son of Theobald, the first King of Austrasia, accompanied with Utile a Boisarian Prince, having repulsed the common Robbers, obtained for Utile of his Father, the command of those Countries, and possession of a great part of them also, by the Title of Lord Marquess of Antwerp: the fourth from whom, called Arnulph, was the first Maier of the Palace (of this House) to the Kings of France, made as it were hereditary unto his Successors. By Dagobert the first, sole King of the French, that part of this Country which was under the Earls of Ardenne being taken from them, the whole Estate was conferred on Ansfisus, the Son of Arnulph, with the Title of Duke of Brabant. The actions and achievements of so many of them as were

Maiores of the Palace we have already seen when we were in France. The whole Succession follows here in the ensuing Catalogue of:

The Marquesses of Antwerp and Dukes of BRABANT of the German or Boissarian Race.

1. Utile, Son of Theobald, the first Duke, and Nephew of Aldingarius, the last King of the Boisarians.
2. Hugbert, Son of Utile.
3. Alpert, the Son of Hugbert, and Husband of Elybilda, Daughter of Cloaire the first of France.
4. Arnoldus, the Son of Alpert.
5. Arnulph, Son of Arnoldus, the first Maier of the Palace of this Family.
6. Ansfisus, Son of Arnulph, Marquess of Antwerp, and Maier of the Palace, by Dagobert the first made Duke of Brabant.
7. Pepin, furnished the Fat Son of Ansfisus, Successor to his Father in his Honours, Offices and Estates, and was herein succeeded by:
8. Charles, the base Son of Pepin, for his valiant acts furnished Martel, there being no lawful Issue of his Father living.
9. Pepin II. furnished the Short, Son of Charles Martel, having managed the Affairs of France from the death of his Father for the space of ten years, usurped the Kingdom, and was solemnly crowned King at Sallons by Boniface Archbishop of Meutz, on May-day, A. 751. The Dukedom of Brabant returning by this means to the Crown of France, continued a Province of that Kingdom, till the division of the French Empire among the Sons and Nephews of Lewis the Godly; when it was made a Member of the Kingdom of Lorraine. Not long before the fatal period of that Kingdom, having been many years before divided by the River Meuse betwixt the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, (each taking to themselves the Title of Kings of Lorraine) it was by Lotharius the 3. of France, in whose share it lay, conferred on Charles his younger Brother, together with the Title of the Dukes of Brabant. But indeed this Donation proved of little worth, the greatest part hereof, together with the rest of that part of the Kingdom of Lorraine, which of right belonged unto the French, being conquered by the Emperor Otho the 1. and by him added to the Empire. And yet this also fell out in fine to the profit of Charles, who being Count-german to this Otho the 2. by the Lady Gerburg, (Sister of Otho the 1. and Wife of Lewis furnished Transmarine, King of France, the Father of Charles) was by him invested into the great Dukedom of Lorraine, that Dukedom in the full latitude and extent thereof containing the modern Dukedoms of Lorraine, Guick, and Brabant, with the Lands of Luxy, with parts of the Lands of Trier and Colen. Brabant at that time had the name of Bajus (or Low) Lorraine, and as in memory thereof, there is a Court for criminal and Civil Causes held at Gennap (one of the Franks or Market-Towns of Brabant) called La Court de Lorraine to this day: an Estate first erected, as before is said, by the Emperor Otho II. who giving it to the said Charles of France, referred out of it, as a Dowry for his said Aunt Gerburg, the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Bruxels, Nivelles and Antwerp lying on the Marches of his Dominions towards France, which (with reference perhaps to the old Marquise of Antwerp) he honoured with the title of Marquise of the holy Empire. A. 981. Gerburg, the Sister, and Heir of Otho, the Son of Charles above mentioned being put besides her hopes of that fair Inheritance by her Brother Otho, who gave it to Geoffrey of Ardenne (succeeded her Grandmother, the first Gerburg, in the Towns and Territories of Lovain, Nivelles, and Bruxels, which she conveyed in Marriage to Lambert, one of the Sons of Rejner of Hainault, with the title of Earl of Lovain. Henry his Son, having made himself Master of Antwerp also, was by that means possessed of the whole Marquise, but still retained the title of Earl of Lovain. Godfrey the 6. Earl, having enlarged the bounds of his Dominions by the Conquest of the rest of the Country, Godfrey & Baldwin, Dukes of Lovain, being then absent in the Wars of the Holy Land, was by the Emperor Henry the fifth (whose Sister he married) created the first Duke of Brabant. John, the first Duke of that name, added hereunto the Duchie of Limbourg; and John the third, the Seigniority of Malins or Mechlin. How it became united to the House of Burgundy is to be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Earls of Lovain and Dukes of BRABANT of the Race of Charlemagne.

1. Lambert, one of the Sons of Regnier Earl of Hainault, made the first Earl of Lovain, in right of Gerburg.
2. Henry the Son of Lambert, who took Antwerp, making it the head City of the Marquise of the holy Empire.
3. Lambert II. Son of Henry.
4. Henry II. Son of Lambert the second.
5. Henry III. Son of Henry the second.
6. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third.
7. Godfrey, furnished Barbatus, Brother of Henry the fourth, in right of his descent from Charles Duke of Lorraine challenged the Country, and recovered it from the House of Ardenne, and finally by the Emperor Henry the fifth was created the first Duke of Brabant, An. 1108. Father of Adelice, the second Wife of our Henry the first, and of Joseline de Lovain, the Progenitor of the (late) Earl of Northumberland.
8. Godfrey or Geoffrey II. Son of Godfrey.
9. Godfrey or Geoffrey III. Son of Godfrey the 2.
10. Henry V. Son of Godfrey the third.
11. Henry the VI. furnished the Good, Son of Henry the fifth.
12. Henry VII. furnished the Magnanimous, by whose Marriage with Sophia, Daughter of Lewis the sixth, Landgrave of Thuringia, the Landgravedom of Hassia came into this House invested in it in the person of Henry his Son by the said Sophia.
13. John, Son of Henry the seventh, took in the Dukedom of Limbourg, and destroyed the potent Family of the Bertholds; his younger Brother Henry, by another Vener, succeeding in Hassia.
14. John II. Son of John the first, bought of the Bishop of Liege the moiety or one half of Mechlin.
15. John III. Son of John the second, added the whole Estate of Mechlin to the Dukedom of Brabant.
16. Joan, the eldest Daughter of John the third, married to Wenceslaus the first Duke of Luxemburg, but died without Issue.
17. Anthony of Burgogne, Son of Philip the Hardy and the Lady Margaret his Wife, daughter of Lewis de Malain Earl of Flanders and of Margaret the Sister and Heir of Joan, after the death of the said Wenceslaus and Joan his Wife, succeeded in the Dukedom of Brabant, his elder Trumpets to found, gave them the Signal, and then Comanded them to gather Cockles. Which Tower or Fortrefs was at the fall of the Roman Empire overwhelmed by the Sea, the Ruines whereof at a dead low water are still to be seen.

Besides these places on the firm Land or Continent, there are some Islands which pertain to the State of Holland, called by the general name of Voorn, because situate directly against Holland Voorn signifying as much as before, or in old Englisch bevoorn, but known by their distinct and more proper names of Somerdyke, 2. Gaurde, 3. Pier-schille, to call the principal Towns, and 4. Voorn specially so named, the chief of them all, being of a fat and fruitful Soil, and plentiful of most sorts of Grain. The principal Towns whereof are, 1. Briel, (which we call the Brill) a strong Town, and the first that revolted against the Spaniards, Anno 1572. Cautionary to the Englisch with the Town of Flysbijg, chosen by them in regard of the great command it hath upon the passage to Gerruydenberg and the rest of Brabant, as also to Delft, Dort, and Rotterdam, the greatest Towns of Trade in the South of Holland. 2. Groveliet, a small Town but having a Jurisdiction over many Villages. There are also on the North side of Holland the Isles of Wierogen and Texel; of which little memorably, but that the last is furnished with a safe and capacious Bay for receipt of Shipping.

One special accident concerning Holland I cannot overpass in silence, namely how Margaret Countess of Henneberg, and Sister to William King of the Romans, being of the age of 42 years, was delivered at one birth of 365 children, the one half Males, the other Females, the odd one an Hermaphrodite; all christened at the Church of Loofdaynen, not far from the Hague, by the names of John and Elisabeth, in two Bafins still to be seen in the said Church, by Guido the Suffragan of Utrecht, all which immediately after died, and with them the Mother.

The Arms of Holland of it self, as a State distinct, are Or, a Lion Gules.

ZELAND consisteth of seven Islands, the remainder of 18, the rest whereof the Sea hath swallowed, and in them 200 inhabited Towns. It is severed from Flan-ders with the left branch or arm of the Scheld, which they call Houte, and on the East from Brabant with the right branch of the said River, which still keeps his name; and on the North from Holland with the Gulf called the Vlack, and on the West with the main Ocean from the Kingdom of England. So called, as some say, quaſi Sea and Land; but as Junius rather thinks, from Seland, an Island of Denmark, as before was noted.

The Country is generally more fruitful than the neighbouring Brabant, producing great quantity of excellent Corn, plenty of Coriander, and abundance of Madder, used in Dying: the Soil also is very rich in Pasture, but low and marthy, which makes the Air to be very unhealthy: and the whole destitute both of Fresh water and Wood; the want of which last is supplied with Coal out of England and Scotland, or by Turf digged amongst themselves but very sparingly, for fear of weakening the Sea-banks.

The whole containeth 8 Towns, and 100 Villages. The Islands which remain are commonly divided into the Western, and the Eastern, according as they lie with reference to the River Sheld. The Western Islands are four in number: That is to say,

1. VALCHEREN, (V'alachria in Latine) lying to the North of Schuy in Flanders, the richest and most populous of all this Province, in compass 13 Dutch, or 40 Italian miles. The principal Towns of which are 1. Mid- deburg, seated on a Creek of the Sea, well walled and fortified, the Streets spacious, the Houses and Churches well built, inhabited by wealthy Merchants and industrious Trademen, and of late times (since the removing of the Englisch Trade from Antwerp) most flourishing Empery. So called because built in the midst of the Island, or because built (as faith Orellius) by Prince Zelandus, of whom this Province was thus named, in honour of his Grandfather Metellus, and by him called Metelli Burgum. 2. Flysbijg, of great note for its good Port and invincible strength. One of the first Towns which the Low-Country men took from the Spaniards by the diligence of Voorſt a Seaman and Monsieur de Berland, then the Bay-liff thereof, and not long after put into the hands of the Englisch as a Town of Caution; the first Governour of it being the renowned Sir Philip Sidney. A poor Town then it was, God wot, now the Key of the Netherlands, without whose license no Ship can pass either to or from the City of Antwerp; inasmuch that if the Duke of Alva in the beginning of his Government had bestowed that pains in the fortifying this and others of the Maritime Towns, as he did in the strengthening Antwerp and some Midland Cities, he had in all probability hindered the remediless Revolt of these flourishing Countries. Not far off standeth the Fort called the Rammekins, once Cautionary to the Englisch also, together with the Briel, the chief Town in the Isle of Voorn, (an Isle of Holland) all three being taken from the Spaniards, An. 1572, made Cautionary to Queen Elizabeth Anno 1585, and finally surrendered by King James to the States United, Anno 1616. Robert Lord Lisle (afterwards created Earl of Leicester) the Brother of Sir Philip Sidney, then Governour of Flysbijg, 3. Rammekins, or Armenyden, an unwalled Town, but beautified with one of the goodliest and most frequented Havens in all the World; out of which one may sometimes see 700 Sail of Ships of great burthen set forward on their Voyages to several parts. 4. Vere or Campſen, seated in the North part of the Island, which once gave Title to a Marquess, and from the which the Noble family of the Veres (now, and of long time Earls of Oxford) took denomination. So as it is no marvel that so many of that Family have ventured their Estates and lives in the Wars of his Country, being their Grandmother in a manner, or their primitive Parent, from whence they were transplanted into England.

2. SOUTH-BEVELERLAND, situate betwixt Walcheren and Brabant, the greatest of the Isles of Zeland; heretofore 20 Dutch miles in compass, but now much diminished by the rage and fury of the Sea, by which the Town and Seigniority of Boorsle, with all the Countries round about it, was swallowed up Anno 1532. That which remains hath in it many goodly Woods and pleasant Thickets, full of Fowl and wild Beasts for Hawking and Hunting. Chief Towns here are 1. Romerſloot, seated on the East toward Bergen op Zoom, severed at the same time from the rest of the Island, and made an Island of it self, defended with continual charge from following the sad fate of the Town of Boorsle. 2. Goes, or Tergoes, on the Northern Coast, a strong Town, well privileged, and the only walled Town in all the Island.

3. NORTH-BEVELERLAND, lying betwixt South-Beverland and the Isle of Schouwen, in former times esteemed the Paradise of Zeland, and having in it a proper Town called Chort Cheen, but so destroyed by the Sea-breach, spoken of, before, that there is nothing now remaining but a few poor Villages.

4. WOLFEKSDIKE, lying betwixt the two Beverlands, the smallest of the Western Islands, as having in it no more than two Villages but replenished with good store of Pasture,

And

And there are all which fall in the division of the Western Islands, so called because they lay Westward of the River Sheld, as those which they call the Eastern Islands on the East thereof. Of which last there are three in number.

1. SCHOWEN, lying on the South-West of Holland, so near unto North-Beverland in former times, that the Inhabitants could talk together from one shore to the other; but now the Sea hath for them at a greater distance. It containeth in compass fix Dutch miles. Chief Towns wherein are, 1. Zirzeeke, the ancientest Towns of all Zeland, once beautified with a fair and commodious Haven, now choaked up with Beach, yet still repaired for the second Town in Salt and Madder, of which it yields good plenty. Most famous for the birth of Levinus Lemnius, that renowned Philosopher and Physician. 2. Bronswi-Haven, inhabited only by Fishermen, not else remarkable.

2. DUVELAND, so named from the multitude of Doves or Pigeons, situate betwixt Schouwen and Tolen, in compass about 4 Dutch miles. It hath no good Town in it, but only Country Villages and Gentlemens Farms. Surrounded by the Sea, An. 1530, but by the industry and diligence of Adolph of Burgundy and the Lord of Boforeres in Flanders recovered again, and at the excessive charge of the people hitherto preserved.

3. TOLEN, so called from the chief Town of the Island, where the Earls Toll was wont to be paid, whence it had the name, is situate over against the North-west of Brabant, from thence disjoyned by a narrow Creek or Arm of the Sea: the second Town of note being called S. Martinus Dike, walled, but not otherwise considerable.

Agreeable to the quality of this Country of Zeland are the Arms thereof, being Or, a Lion Gules rising out of a Sea wave Argent and Azure.

WEST-FRIESLAND, hath on the East Groeningeland and a part of Westphalen in High Germany, on the South Over-Yssel and the Zuider-See, on the North and West the main Ocean. The Country is generally moorish and full of Fens, unapt for Corn, but yielding great store of Pasture, which, in orfulness of the ground make the Air very foggy and unhealthy; nor have they any Fewel wherewith to rectifie it, (except in that part of it which they call Seven-Walden) but Turf and Cow-dung, which adds but little to the sweetness of an unford Air. Nor are they better stored with Rivers, here being none proper to this Country, but that of Leemars, the want of which is supplied by great Canals in some places, which do not only drain the Marshes, but supply them with water: Which notwithstanding, their Pastures do afford them a good breed of Horses fit for service, plenty of Bees both great and sweet, the best in Europe, next to those of England; and those in such a large increase, that their Kine commonly bring two Calves, and their Ewes three Lambs at a time.

The Country is divided into three parts. In the first part, called WESTERGOE, lying towards Holland, the principal Towns are, 1. Harlingen an Haven Town upon the Ocean, defended with a very strong Castle. 2. Hindeloopen, on the same Coast also. 3. Stavoren, an Hanse-Town, opposite to Enchusen in Holland, the Town decayed, but fortified with a strong Castle, which secures the Haven. 4. Franecker, a new University, or a Schoola Illustri, as they call it. 5. Sneek, in a low and inconvenient situation, but both for largeness and beauty the best in this part of the Province, and the second in esteem of all the Country. In OSTERGOE, or the East part, lying towards Groeningeland, the Towns of most note are, 6. Leeuwarden, situate on the hinder Leemars the prime Town of West-Friesland, and honoured with the Supreme Court and Chancery hereof, from which there lieth no Appeal: a rich Town, well built, and strongly fortified. 7. Dockum, bordering upon Groeningeland, the birth place of emma Frisius. In SEVEN-WOLDEN, or the Country of Seven Forests, so called from so many small Forests joyning near together, is no Town of note, being long time a Wood-land Country, and now well inhabited till of late. The number of the walled Towns are 11 in all; of the Villages or Burroughs, 345.

To this Province belongeth the Isle of Schellink, the shores whereof are plentifully stord with dog-fish, took by the Inhabitants in this manner: The men of the Island attire themselves with Beasts Skins, and then fall to dancing, with which sport the fish being much delighted, make out of the waters towards them, Nets being pitched presently bewixt them and the water. Which done, the men put off their disguises, and the frighted Fish hasting toward the Sea are caught in the Toys.

Touching the Frisons, heretofore possessed of this Country, we shall speak more at large when we come to East-Friesland, possessed also by them, and still continuing in the quality of a Free Estate, governed by its own Laws and Princes: here only taking notice that the Arms of this Friesland are Azure, femy of Billets Argent, two Lions Or.

The ancient Inhabitants of these three Provinces were the Batavi and Caniofates, inhabiting the Island of the Rhe, situate betwixt the middle branch thereof and the Waal, which now containeth South-Holland, Utrecht, and some part of Geldres; the Frisi, dwelling in West-Friesland and the North of Holland; and the Mattiaci, inhabiting in the Isles of Zeland. By Charles the Bald these Countries, being almost unpeopled by the Norman Pirates, were given to Thierrie, Son of Sigebert, a Prince of Aquitain, with the Title of Earl: his Successors acknowledging the Sovereignty of the Crown of France, till the time of Annullis the 4. Earl, who turned Homager to the Empire. In John the 2. they became united to the House of Hainaut, and in William the 2. to that of Bavaria; added to the Estates of the Duke of Burgundy in the person of Duke Philip the good, as appeareth by his Successors; on of

The Earls of HOLLAND, ZELAND, and Lords of WEST-FRIESLAND.

- 863 1. Thierrie or Theodore of Aquitain, the first Earl, &c.
902 2. Thierrie II. Son of Thierrick the 1.
3. Thierrie III. the Son of Theodorick the 2.
988 4. Annullis, who made first this Estate to be held of the Empire; slain in a War against the Frisi.
From Sigefride the second Son of this Annullis came the Lords of Braderode, advanced by Marriages to the Seigniorities of Genepda and Wanen, and many other fair Estates both in Brabant and Holland.
993 5. Thierrie IV. Son of Annullis.
1039 6. Thierrie V. Son of Thierrick the 4.
1048 7. Florence, Brother of Thierrie the 5.
1092 9. Florence II. furnished the Fat, Son of Thierrie the 6.

Arms. Lycurgus gave a Law to the Lacedæmonians, that they should never fight often with one enemy: the breaking whereof made the Thebans, a small Commonwealth, to be their equals in power: wherupon it was lately said by Antalcides to Agelhas King of Sparta, that by his frequent warring on them and fighting with them he had made the Thebans good Soldiers against their wills. The Turks won the vast Empire they now possess by making many and speedy Wars. But now that Policy being worn out of fashion, we see that (to omit Persia) the little and distracted Kingdom of Hungary hath for 200 years refitted their Forces. So was it betwixt the Dukes of Austria and the Switzers, and so it is between the Spaniards and Low-country-men; who formerly being accompanied a dull and heavy people, altogether unfit for the Wars, by their continual combating with the Spaniards are become ingenious, full of Action, and great managers of causes appertaining to Fights, either by Sea or Land. We may hereby also perceive what advantage a small State gaineth by fortifying places and passages: there being nothing which sooner breaketh a great Army, and undoeth a great Prince than to besiege a well-fortified Town; for that here in he consumeth his time, and commonly loseth his men, credit and money; as the Romans before Numantia, the great Turk in Malta, and Charles of Burgundy before Nauvle. For where War is drawn out of the Field into the Walls, the Mattock and Spade being more necessary than the Sword and Spear, there the Valour of the Assailant is little available, because it wanteth its proper object.

Thus as, before we brought these several Estates and Provinces into one hand, so now we have broke them into two; the one part continuing in Obedience to the Crown of Spain, the other governing themselves as a State apart. Under the King remain the Dukedoms of Luxemburg, Limbourg and Brabant, some few Towns excepted; the Marquitate of the Empire, the Earldoms of Hainault, Namur, Artois, and Flanders, (except only Schelys); and the Lordship or Seigniorie of Mechlin, with many places of importance in the Dutchie of Gelders, to counter-balance the Towns are held from them in Flanders and Brabant. This is by far the greater part of the Country, and more fruitful in regard of the Commodities there naturally growing, but as much inferior to the other in power and riches, by reason of their strength in Shipping, by which they have the command at Sea, and thereby draw the whole Trade of Christendom, driven before at Antwerp, to Amsterdam, and other Towns of their Confederacy.

For the general Government of these Provinces there is a Regent sent from the Court of Spain, whose Authority is generally as great as that of the King; so that all matters of moment pass under the King's name, and that all Officers of any great trust and concernment are appointed by him, and that all Laws, Decrees, Sentences and Negotiations are dispatched in his name also. For the assistance of the Regent there is a Privy Council, a Council of State, and a Council of Finances, by whom all things are ordered which concern the Publick, the Regent's Authority co-operating and concurring with them, without which, though they may consult, they can execute nothing. And for the Governance and well ordering of their several Provinces there is in every one of them a Lieutenant or Provincial Government, subordinate to the Regent, and accountable to him; and in each Province a particular Council held in the King's name, consisting of more or less Counsellors, (as the bigness of the Province is) for the most part Doctors or Licentiates of the Civil Laws, with a President at the Head thereof, which in some places they call the Parliament, after the manner of the French, and in some the Chancery. To these Courts all the Subjects do resort for Justice, in Causes both Criminal and Civil: to these are brought Appeals from inferior Judicatures, such as the Courts of great Towns and particular Franchises: and from these lyeth an appeal to the great Council at Mechlin, supreme and superintendent unto all the rest.

When any thing is to be done which concerns the profit of the Prince, or otherwise is of publick moment, the Regent sendeth out Letters in the King's name, to command the Estates, that is to say, the Clergy, the Nobility, and the Principal Towns of every Province, (except those of Luxemburg, Gelders, West-Friesland and Over-Issel, who by special Privilege cannot be called out of their own Countries) to come before him. The place of their Assembly is for the most part at Brussels, the Court and Residence of the Regent; because the Brabanters are also Privileged not to be summoned out of the Precincts of their own Province. Where being come, the States Assemble not altogether, but those of one Province at a time, so one after another: to whom the President, or some one of the Council of State propoeth in the Prince's name that which he demandeth. To which if any Town oppose, then all which the rest have done is of no effect, nothing being granted by the Deputies or States of any Province, but with this condition, that all the rest of the Estates do agree unto it. Without this punctual consent of all parties interested, the Prince cannot impose nothing, by their Laws upon the Subject, nor any thing at all in the publick Government.

And as the people are thus Privileged in regard of the Prince, so are the Princes and Prelates privileged in regard of the Pope, it being agreed upon between them.

1. That the Prince is to give Clergy-Benefices, and the Pope to maintain them.
2. That neither Prelate nor Lay-person may be sent to Rome, but the Pope to send his Delegates or Commissioners into the Country.
3. The Pope not to give a Benefice, nor grant a Pardon, nor send a Bull into the Country, without the leave of the Prince.
4. That no Clergy-man can buy Lands or other immovables, without the Prince's consent. And
5. That the Prince hath power to visit the Clergy, to see if they be well governed or not; and if they be not, to reform the Abuses.

Great Privileges, if considered rightly; greater than which few Protestant Princes do pretend to in their own Dominions.

As for the Revenue raised by the Spaniards out of his part of this Estate, it is not easy to be guessed at; and of that which is, there comes but little to his Coffers. The expences of his Court there is as great as ever under any of the former Regents; and his charge of entertaining Soldiers for his Towns and Garrisons greater than before. Nor doth it now stand with reason of State to lay any arbitrary Taxes upon the People, least he exasperate them to a second Rebellion, or stirle them to some new Confederacy against his Quiet.

Under the Government of the Confederate Estates are the Dukedom of Gelderland, excepting some few Towns in the hands of the Spaniards, the entire Earldoms of Holland, Zeland and Zutphen, the Seigniories of West-Friesland, Over-Issel, Over-Issel, Greening, the Town of Schelys, with the Isle of Cassand in Flanders, and many pieces of importance in the Dutchie of Brabant. This is the lesser part by far, and far inferior to the other in regard of the Soil, but the more populous of the two, and by the Industry and great Trading of the people the more rich and powerful. They are governed after their own old Laws, by the particular Estates of every Province, not yet united into one entire Body of a Commonwealth; saving that for the better preservation of their Confederacy, the Commissioners of the several Provinces do consult together, whom they have honoured with the name of the States General.

The Estates of the particular Provinces elected out of the principal Towns and Places of most importance, do order the Affairs thereof according to their ancient Privileges, Rights, and Customs, as well by themselves as by their Collegues and Officers whom they do appoint; and that as well for matters of State as in point of Justice. For Administration of the which, the Governors, President and Counsellors of the Provincial Courts, have the cognizance of all Cases, both civil and criminal, and in all Causes of Appeal from inferior Courts; in each of which they proceed without Appeal, making their Acts and Commissions in the name of the said Governors, Presidents, and Council, but pronouncing Sentence and executing Judgment in right of the Sovereignty of the said Province. And these provincial States are chosen Generally out of the Plebeians or common People; and the Burgers (at the best) of the greater Townships: the Nobility and Gentry being for worn out, that in all Holland and Zeland there are not left above three Families of Gentlemen, and those compelled to live after the Plebeian fashion for fear of Envy, and to avoid the Insolency of the faucy Clowns, who, out of rudeness and the desire of Equality, hate nothing more among them than the name of a Gentleman.

Out of these Provincial States, which hold not for any certain and determinate time, but only during the pleasure of the Community for which they serve, are chosen one or more for each several Province, according to the condition and capacity of those which are chosen, to reside at the Hague, there to consult of the Affairs which concern the publick; but so, that be they more or less out of every Province they make amongst them but one Suffrage, when any thing is put unto the Vote. And these they call the States General, first because a collected Body out of all the Provinces; and, secondly, because they are not properly to deal in any matters of particular concernment, which are determinable absolutely by the States provincial, but only in such things as concern the general good of the whole Estate, as treating with Ambassadors, making War and Peace, &c. For their assistance in the which, there is a Council of State, made up of the Governors and some eminent men of every Province, (in which the Ambassadors of England as long as we held Flushing and the other Cautionary Towns, had his voice or suffrage) by whose advice they dispose of all things which concern the publick; but so that if any difficulty do appear in the business, they conclude nothing till they have the approbation and consent of the particular Cities and Provinces for which they are chosen, to whom they are provable for their Administration, and by whom revocable whensoever they please.

The Revenue of this Estate doubtless is exceeding great, the Army which they keep in continual entertainment consisting of no less than 30000 men; which they can draw into the field, leaving the Forts and Towns very well provided; yet so well paid that we never read of any Mutiny amongst them for want thereof. The whole Charge with the entertainment of Captains and superiour Officers, is said to amount to 500000. per annum; raised on the people by Excise laid upon all Commodities, and many Taxes of like nature, so insupportable in themselves, and amongst men which would be thought to live in a free State, that should the Spaniards or any Prince in Christendom lay but half so much on their Subjects, it would occasion a Revolt. So that whereas one of the first causes of their falling off from the King of Spain was to free themselves from Taxes and Impositions illegally (as they said) enforced upon them; they have drawn on themselves more arbitrary and illegal Payments than any Nation in the World. So little have they got by the change of Government. Touching their power at Sea, we have spoke of already. All I shall now add to it is by way of instance, which is, That in the year 1587 the King of Denmark, on pretence of some displeasure, arrested 608 Ships, of theirs of all sorts at one time in the Sound; and that the next year after they set out, upon very short warning, and hundred good men of War, to join with England against the invincible Armada, which then threatened both. To conclude, there is nothing waiting to these Countries wherewith the God of all blessings doth enrich a Nation, but a gracious Prince, unity of Religion, and a quiet Government: which if it pleased the Almighty to confer upon them, they would surpass all neighbouring States in Treasure, Potency, Content, and all worldly Happiness.

There are in these Countries,

OF GERMANY.

GERMANY is bounded on the East with Prussia, Poland, and Hungary; on the West with France, Switzerland and Belgium; on the North with the Baltick Seas, the Ocean, and some part of Denmark; on the South with the Alpes, which part it from Italy. By which account the modern Germany much differeth from that described by Tacitus and others of the Roman Writers: That comprehending the three Kingdoms of Denmark, Norway, and Sweden, with so much of the Kingdom of Poland as lieth on this side of the River Vistula; but bounded on the East with the Rhene, and on the South with the Danov: the modern Germany containing on the farther banks of those Rivers five whole Roman Provinces, that is to say, Noricum, Rhipense, and Mediætræanum, Rhetia secunda, Belgica and Germania prima, with some parts of Rhetia prima and Germania secunda: but terminated with the Danes and the Baltick Sea.

It was first called thus by the Romans, (as some conceive) who seeing the people both in Customs, Speech and course of life so like those of Gallia, called them the Germani to the Gauls; the word Germani in the Latine signifying a Brother of the whole blood, (as our Lawyers phrase it) that is to say, a Brother both by Father and Mother, those which have the same Mother, but divers Fathers, being called Fratres uterini. And of this mind is Strabo, who speaking of the great resemblance which was betwixt these Nations in Manners, Speech, Customs and way of life, concludes it thus, that the Romans did with very good reason call them Germani, cum fratres eos Gallorum hoc nomine vellent offendere; intending to signify by that name, that they were the Brethren of the Gauls. But this is to be understood of those people only which dwelt next to Gaul, and not of all the Nations which inhabited in this vast Continent according to the ancient extent thereof; it being very well observed by Tacitus, that Germany was at first Nationis, non Gentis, nomen, the name of some of the Nations only, not of all the Country, the name in process of time spreading over all that large Tract of ground and those scattered Nations which were either conquered by them or incorporate with them. Others will have the name to be merely Dutch, deriving it from Ger, which signifieth All, and the word Man, signifying in that Language as in ours; whence also they derive the name of Almans; by which they would imply that the Almans or Germani are a very warlike Nation, a people that have in them nihil nisi virile nothing not worthy of a man. Bochartus, somewhat near to this, telling us that Ger in the ancient Sallick did signify as much as Guerre in the modern French, would have them at their first coming over the Rhene to be called Germani by the Gauls, that is to say, men of War, (or Gens de Armes in the present French) by reason of the great and many Victories obtained by them.

The like diversity I find for the name of Almani. For though some gave them the name of Almans from the same originals from whence they fetch the name of Germani, as was said before, yet others as probably conjecture, that they had that name because they consisted of many several Nations coming out of the North and North-east hither, that they seemed to be a Hotch-potch of all sorts of men, kneaded into one name and Nation; which is the conceit of Alfinius Quadratus. But for my part, I do conceive (supposing the name of Almans to be Dutch originally) that the whole Country was not called Almain till such time as the Princes of the Dukedom of Almain (since called Suevia, or Schwaben) did possess the Empire, which continuing in that potent Family near 100 years, might very well occasion them to be called the Emperours of Almain, or the Almain Race, and so impart that the name to the Empire also. And for the mans naturally and properly to fall (of whom we shall speak more when we come to Suevia) I see no Etymology more agreeable to true Antiquity, than to derive the name from Mannus, the Son of Tuisco, one of their Gods, and a principal Founder of this Nation, (Tuisco nem Deum & filium Mannum, originem gentis conditoremque), as it is said by Tacitus: the people being called Alemanni (with a double n) in all ancient Writers, as men that did derive themselves from this Mannus, the Son of Tuisco. In like sort as (I think) the Marcomanni inhabiting the Countries of Moravia, were so called, abating the Manni of the Marches or outborders of Germany, and not the Markmans, as if they were men of mark, the only men of fame and honour of all those Nations; we might as well be pressed from the Dutch originals that of All-man in the meaning by them pretended, and unto this opinion I am Iwayed the rather because I find the Dutch Nation generally so much inclined to derive their Original from Tuisco, (from whom the Tentius, inhabiting about Brandenburg, may well fetch their pedigree;) the name of Dutchland or Dutchmen coming near in found to Tuisco-land and Tuisco-men. In which I shall subscribe to erfegani's opinion, though for the most part I look upon him but as the second part of Goupin Becanus.

But being the Etymologies of the names of most ancient Nations are very uncertain, and for the most part founded on Conjectures only; let us leave the Name a while, and survey the Country: the length whereof (according to the truest and exactest measurement) from East to West, that is to say from Vistula or Wesell to the Rhene, is estimated at 840 Italian miles; the breadth from North to South, that is to say, from the Ocean to the Town of Bruxen in Tyrol, 740 of the same miles. So that the Figure of it being near a Square, it may take up 3160, miles in compass, or thereabouts. Situate in the Northern temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the sixth and tenth Climates, the longest day in the most Southern parts, being 19 hours and an half, and in the most Northern 17 hours and a quarter.

In this compass and extent of ground are supposed to live 10 millions of people. The men of the poorer sort are laborious painful, and of a sincere and honest carriage; the Nobles for the most part either Scholars or Souldiers, and true lovers of Honour; though Tacitus hath otherwise resolved it, affirming that the Gauls fight for Liberty, the Belgians for Honour, and the Germani for Gain. Which yet is true enough of the common Souldiers, who, if they fail fail of Pay, fail in Courage presently. Of both sorts they are generally tall and big, of great Bones, much Flesh, and large Sinews, but commonly of such a phlegmatic constitution, that they have not spirit enough to manage such a mass of flesh as they bear about them. Which want of natural heat to concoct that humor makes them for the most part to be men of a bright or light brown Hair, and fair Complexions. They are little addicted to Venus, and very much to Bacchus; whence the Proverb, Five Germanorum est bibere, and the old Verfes, Germani possunt cultos tolerare labores.

The Dutch themselves to labour well endure.

O would they Thirst could half so well endure.

This love unto their Liquor, together with their natural Temper; maketh them fat and corpulent. Whereupon Pope Julius the second, styling the Spaniards Birds of the Air, because of their Ambition, the Venetians and Genoveses Fishes of the Sea, because so much accustomed to Navigation, called the Germani by the name of the Beasts of the Field. And when Augustus was resolved to take unto himself the supreme Government of Rome, he was advised by Agrippa to chuse a Guard of Germani to attend upon him. The reason was, (as Dion giveth it) Because in those great Bodies there was little Malice hidden, and little Subtily; and that they were a people that took more pleasure to be commanded than to command. In matters of War this people have been formerly in a measure famous; yet not so much by the valour or conduct of their Captains, (for they have had but few such) as by their own hardiness. They withstood the Romans 210 years, allying and troubling them more in that space than either the Carthaginians, Spaniards, Gauls, or Partians; and even at the last (saith Tacitus) Triumphati magis sunt quam victi. In our times the Rutters and Lans-knights of Germany, (for so they call their Horse and Foot) have been much employed: but more by reason of their numbers, easily raised out of so large a Country, than any opinion of their Valour; being slow of motion, dull of apprehension, fearful of putting any thing to the chance of War. By reason of which fearfulness, as they are very cruel upon all advantages, not sparing either age or sex when they get the Victory, so are they apt to run upon any alarm, not to be rallied, if once routed, upon any persuasions. Infomuch as Charles Count of Mansfield, General of an Army of 50000 fighting men, but most of this Nation, was forced to suffer a small Army of 10000 Turks to pass by his Trenches, being then strongly encamped before Sirginium, (now Gran) a Town of Hungary, and to victual the Town before his face; not daring to set upon them or disturb their purpose, for fear least, being lustily charged his Germani would give back and endanger all. And yet besides these weaknesses, they have some great faults. One of which is a custom, if their wages be not duly paid, (though it be in the very midst of a Battle) to cry Guel, Guel, throw down their weapons, and suffer themselves to be cut in pieces by their Enemy. And so they served Frederick the Electour Palatine at the Battle of Prague. The other is an extreme humour of Spoil and Plunder: on which they are so bent whosoever they come, that such an entertainment them have just cause to say, that they receive more damage by them than they do by their Enemies. Two undecivable notes of mercenary Valour.

The women are of a good Complexion, but by reason of their intemperance in eating and drinking, much given to Corpulency; women of a good carriage, (as the saying is) good Bearers, and as fruitful Breeders; fervently obsequious to their Husbands, whom many of good rank serve at the Table with Trenchers and other necessaries, and take a way when he hath done, eating the residue apart with and amongst their Maids, scarce sitting down with him once a week, and then too at the lower end, or at some such distance. And though the Women by their Laws have a property in their Goods, which they bring with them at their Marriage, or are given them after, (so as the Husbands hath but the use of them only) and may dispose of them by their last Will at the time of their death; yet is their condition thereby little better, the Husband being no less cruel and imperious than he would be otherwise. Which made Cavacalli to say often, that only that Nation knew how to rule their Wives, which added the Feminine Article to the Sex, and the Male to the Sex, as the Germani do. Most of them, as well Wives as Virgins, (except persons of Honour) use to go bare-footed within doors, and seldom put on Shoes or Stockings, but when they are to go abroad on their occasions. A thing that seems the more strange in regard of the extreme coldness of the Country, which is so fierce that generally they lodge between two Feather-beds, both in Summer and Winter: and in the most houses have their Stoves, of which the doors and windows are kept very close, as well to retain the heat, as to keep out the cold. Which though they may be usefull and inoffensive in Gentlemen's houses; yet in the common Inns, where all sorts of people are necessitated to throng together, the ill smells never purged by admitting any fresh air, are ready to stifle and choke up the Spirits of raw Travellers, not accustomed to them.

The Diet of Germany, France and Italy, is by a Traveller thus censured: The Germani have much meat, but fluttishly dress; the French little, but neatly cooked; the Italians neither the one nor the other: And so to say truth, the Germani have meat enough; by nature or by custom excessive both in eating and drinking, seldom rising from the Table till they have consumed all which was set before them. Infomuch that in some places it is provided by Law, that in their feasts they shall not sit above five hours at the Table. During which time, if by Intemperance either in eating or drinking a man disgorge his foul stomach in his fellow's Lap, or piss under the Table, it is no disgrace to him, nor at any time taken notice of in his reproach. Which humour of gormandizing and excessive drinking is not only cherished among the Vulgar, but even amongst their greatest Princes, who besides what they do in this kind themselves, have their drinking Champions, as well to answer all Challenges, as to challenge all comers, contending with each other, as a point of State, whose Celler shall afford the greatest and most capable vessels.

The Title of the Father defends to all the Children; every Son of a Duke being a Duke, and every Daughter a Dutchesse: a thing which the Italians hold to ridiculous that they put it in the fore-front of this factious Satyre, The Dukes and Earls of Germany, the Dons of Spain, the Monarchs of France, the Bishops of Italy, the Nobility of Hungary, the Lords of Scotland, the Knights of Naples, and the Tempter Brethren of England, make a poor Company. For by this common assuming of the Father's Honour, and the parting his Lands among all the Brethren, the Nobility is beyond reason multiplied, and no less impoverished, their being not few, since seventeen Princes of Anhalt, and twenty seven Counts of Mansfield, to molest of which their Arms have been the best part of their Riches, & nihil nisi arma & manus & in his omnia, as Tacitus once said of the ancient Britanni. And yet there is not one of this poor Nobility that will vouchsafe to marry with any of the Daughter of the wealthy Merchant, or suffer any of their Sisters to be married married to any under the degree of a Nobleman; nor any juster cause of a Differing their Children than ignoble Marriages: they never permitting the Issue of such a Bed to succeed in any of their Fees, Estates or Titles: by means whereof, though they debar themselves of such accutions of wealth as Marches of that kind might bring them; yet, to the great honour of their generosity in this particular, they preserve the pure Stream of their Blood from running into muddy Channels, and keep the Spirits of brave men though they want the Fortunes.

The Languages here spoken are, the French in Lorraine, and in some Towns of the Bishop of Triers; the Italian in the highest part of Tyrol, which lie next to the Commonwealth of Venice; the Sclavonian spoken in Bohemia, Moravia, and some parts of Lusatia; and the high Dutch, the general Language of the Country. A Language very ancient doubtless, (though I am not so much a German as to think it spoke in Paradise, or before the Flood) and such as, by reason of the little or no impression which the Roman Armies made upon this Country, hath less commixture with the Latine than any which is used in these Western parts, (the Welfs excepted) and is very harsh by reason of its many Consonants.

This Country was esteemed by Tacitus to be rude and barren, containing nothing but uncultivated Forests, unprofitable Heaths, and unhealthy Pools. Germania informem terris, alteram caelo, fristem cultu aspectuque, as he farther addeth. And such no doubt it was in those times wherein Tacitus lived; the people not being civilized, nor the Country cultivated, nor any means found out to rectify the sharpness of that Northern Air. But he who doth observe it now, cannot but confess that there is no Country in the World either better planted, or replenished with more goodly and gallant Cities, being also in most parts both pleasant, healthy and profitable; abounding with Mines of Silver and inferior Metals, plentiful in Corn and Wines, with which they supply the defect of other Nations, as also with Fisk, Fish, Linen, Quicksilver, Alum, Saffron, Armour and other Ironworks. The Arable Lands are so spacious in the Eastern parts, that the Husbandman going forward with his Plough in the morning, turneth not back again till noon; so making but two Furrows for his whole daies work. For this Verger was my Author; and if it be not credible, let him bear the blame.

Souldiers of most eminency in the elder times were 1. Arminius, the Prince of the Cheusici, who overthrowed Quintinus Varus and the Roman Legions. 2. Witkind, the last King of the Saxons. For the middle Ages, 3. Otho the first, 4. Frederick Barbarossa, 5. Rudolph of Habsburg, Emperours and Kings of Germany. 6. Henry, turnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony. And in the last Century of years, 7. Frederick the second, Elector Palatine, who made good Vindicta against the Turks; 8. Albert of Brandenburg, of whom more hereafter; 9. Ernst Earl of Mansfeld, 10. John George of Saxony; 11. Albert Wallenstein Duke of Friedland, and divers others of late days.

Scholars of note the elder times afforded none, nor the middle many; Learning being here so rare in the middle of the eighth Century, that Vigilius Bishop of Salzburg was condemned of Heric, for holding that there were Antipodes. In the next Age there flourished Rabanus Maurus, Haimo of Halberstadt, Walafridus Strabo, men learned for the times they lived in. And in the following times, Ockam, a stout defender of the Rights of the Empire against the Enroachments of the Pope, Orho Frisingensis the Historian, Albertus Magnus the Philosopher; of which last it is said, that he made the Salm of a Man, which with the help of artificial Engines could speak articulately, and was the work of 70 years. Then in the days of our Grandfathers we have 1. Martin Luther, that great instrument of the Reformation. 2. Philip Melancthon, his Cadjutant in that work, but of more excellent parts, and far better temper; these called the Phoenix of that age. 3. Johann Camerarius, a great friend of Philip. 4. Martin Commisarius, a solid and laborious Writer. 5. Flacius Illyricus, the chief Author of the Magdeburgian Centuries, and Father of the Rigid Lutherans. 6. Sebastian Munster, an industrious Cosmographer, and a learned Linguist. 7. Silvius, and 8. Buxtorfius, as great Linguists as he. Not to descend to farther instances in those who have so filled the Marts of Frankfort in these latter times.

But the greatest excellency of this people lieth in the Mechanical part of Learning, as being eminent for many Mathematical Experiments, Iron & Water-works, Medicinal Extractions, Chymistry, the Art of Printing, and inventions of like noble nature, to the no less benefit than admiration of the World. Amongst which I cannot chuse but instance in that work of Regiomontanus, an excellent Mathematician, and a cunning Artizan, spoken of by Koekerman; who at the coming of the Emperor Maximilian to the City of Nuremberg, made a wooden eagle, which flew a quarter of a mile out of the Town to meet him; and being come to the place where he was, returned back of its own accord, and so accompanied him to his Lodging. A thing if true, (as the Relator was a man too much gravity to abuse the World with an untrue) exceedingly beyond that Miracle of a flying Dove, for which Archytas is so famed amongst the ancients. Exceeded only by himself in a like invention, which was that of an Iron Fly, (the greater Miracle of Arch, because less in quantity) which at a Feast, to which he had invited some of his special Friends, flew from his hand about the Room and returned again, as is affirmed by Peter Ramus; expressed thus by Divine Du Bartas.

Once as this Artill, more with mirth than meek, Feasted some Friends, whom he esteemed great,
From his learn'd hand an Iron Fly flew out,
And, having flown a perfect Round about,
With wearied wings return'd unto her Master,
And as judicious on his arm he plac'd her.
O divine Wit, that in the narrow Womb
Of a small Fly could find sufficient room
For all those Springs, Wheels, Counterpoise and Chains, Which stood instead of life, and spur, and reins!

And amongst these I reckon Bertholdus Swart a French Friar, the Inventor (though by accident) of that fatal Instrument, the Gun. Studious in Chymistry, he mingled dried Earth, Sulphur, and some other Ingredients, which he had put into a Mortar covered with stone, and striking fire to light a Candle, as the night came on, a spark by chance fell into the Mortar, and catching hold of the Sulphur and other Minerals, with great violence blew up the stone wherewith it was covered. Amazed at which, he made trial severally of these Ingredients, to find out which of them it was that produced that effect: which having discovered, he caused an Iron Pipe to be made, crammed it with Sulphur, Saltpetre and Stones; and putting fire to it, saw with what violent noise and fury it discharged itself. This Invention he is said to have first communicated to the Venetians; Anno 1330; of theseabouts, who having been often vanquished by the Genoeses, and driven almost to a necessity of yielding to them, by the help of their Guns (Bombards they were then called) gave unto their enemies a notable discomfiture. And this was the first Battle that ever those warlike Pieces had a part in; which not long after put to silence len ce all the Engines and Devices wherewith the Ancients were wont to make their Batteries. The next that made use of this instrument were the Inhabitants of the Baltick Sea; and not long after them the English, at the Siege of Calice, Anno 1347; about which time they began also to be used in France. The French, it seemeth, learned the use of them from the English, and the first benefit received by them was the death of that famous Leader, Thomas Montacute, Earl of Salisbury, who at the Siege of Orleans was slain with a great shot, An. 1425. Twenty years after this, An. 1446, they were first used in Spain, at the Siege of Saragossa, a Town of the Kingdom of Aragon; by the Castilians; and after by degrees made common to the rest of that Continent. And being grown common in this Continent, as well unto the Jews and Mooras unto the Christians, it was not long before they taught it to the Turks. For the Jews being forced to abandon Spain, Anno 1492, betook themselves to Greece and other parts of the Turky Dominions, to whom they shewed the Art of making Ordnance, Gunpowder, Harqueballe, sufficiently since used by that people to the hurt of Christendom. But somewhat before this the Turks had been in part beholden for them to the Wars they had with the Venetians; when at first, yet afterwards growing expert in managing of them, they gave unto Uffian Cassian and Himilam, two of the most mighty Emperours of Perfia, two memorable Overthrows by the help of their great Ordnance only. The Portugals were in this Art the Tutors to the Perfians; for, as Solyman the Turkish Emperour objected against them, they not only aided Tamas the Sophi with certain Harquebushers, but also lent him weapons to shew him the use and making of Artillery. These great Pieces at the first invention were rude unwieldy, and charged with Stone-bullets only: but by degrees they came to that perfection, both for the wall and the hand, which they now have. Whether now Archery or Gunning be to be preferred, I stand not here to determine; only this I am sure of, that Victories have been of late purchased with less expence of blood and life than ever formerly. For of this Ticam more perhaps hereafter, when we shall come to take the Parthian Archery into consideration.

The Religion of this Country it is not easy to name, considering so many are here allowed, Jews being intermixt with Christians, and these divided into Papists and Protestants; the latter also divided into Lutherans, Calvinists, &c. The Christian Faith was first planted here, if Dorotheus Bishop of Tyre be of any credit, by St. Thomas turnamed Didymus, one of the Twelve. But being there is little trust unto his Relations, the best were to say with the Magdeburgians and the Martyrologies, that the Germans had not all the same Apostle; that the Go-spell was first preached amongst the Rhetians and Vindelici by S. Lucius of Cyrene, amongst those of Noricum by S. Marcellus, Crescentius at Mentz, S. Clement at Metz, in Lorraine, all of them Apostolical men, and of the number of the 70. after thatby S. Maternus at Colen, and by S. Eusebius at Triers. That the Faith was planted very early in these Countries, Irenaeus, the renowned Bishop of Lyon, An. 170, is sufficient evidence, who takes notice of it; and that it prospered very well and took very good root, appeareth by the Bishops of Mentz, Triers, Worms, Spire, Basil, and Strasbourg, subscribing to the Council of Colen in the Reign of Constantine the Son of Constantine the Great, An. 347. But the light hereof being extinguished for a time by those barbarous Nations who fell upon these out-parts of the Roman Empire, began to shine again on the Conversion of the French in all parts of this Country; the Conquests and example of this Piousant Nation giving great encouragement thereunto. In which as taste of other Countries do not want their honour, for the greatest part thereof belongs to the English-Saxons; Willibrod the first Bishop of Orebeck, Willibrod of Aichstet, Swinbert of Verden, Willibrod of Breme, and especially Boniface the Archbishop of Mentz, who most gloriously fortunate in that sacred service. The Moravian, Bohemian, and others further off, came not in till afterwards. Not fully converted to the Faith, they began to suck in the Corruptions of the Church of Rome; discerned and opposed by J. Huss and Hieronymus Prague, Bohemian Divines, who, by reason of the Marriage of King Richard the second of England with the Daughter of Wenceslaus Emperour and King of Bohemia, had opportunity to be acquainted with the Preachings of Wicliffe, the Point of whose Doctrine they approved and propagated. But the two being burnt at Constance, by the decree of that Council, their followers in Bohemia would not give over, but after many sufferings and much blood-shed, obtained at last a Toleration of the Emperour Sigismund their King, more able to make good his word in his own Dominions, than he had to have done the two Martyrs from the fire at Constance, to whom he had granted his safe Conduct for their coming and going. In this condition they remained under the name of those of the Sub uraque or Calistini, because of their admitting the Sacrament in both kinds, till the rising of Luther; who justly offended at the impious and unwarrantable Assertions of Frier Toke, and others of the Pope's Pardon-mongers, first opposed their doings, and after questioned their Authority by which they acted, falling from one Point to another, till he had shaken the Foundations of the Roman Fabrick. Of the success of his undertaking we shall speak but little, as in a thing well known to all men of knowledge. Suffice it in this place to say that his Doctrine was not only received in Germany, but generally embraced in the great Kingdoms of Denmark and Swetland, with the Provinces and Islands appertaining to them, in great part of Poland, Hungary, and Transylvania, as far almost as to the banks of the Euxine Sea, but for the progress of it here (which we are more especially at this time to enquire into) it was so well approved of, that the Dukes of Saxony, Brandenburg, Wirttemberg, Mecklenberg, and Pomerania, the Marquises of Brandenburg, the Langraves of Hassia, and most of the free Imperial Cities did adhere unto, who from their Protection made at Spire (the Imperial Chamber) to that effect, An. 1529, had the name of Protestants. The next year following they delivered in the Confession of their Faith at Ausburg, a City of Suevia, thence called Confessio Ausburgica, authorized, or tolerated at least, after a long War, with variable success on both sides, by the Emperour Charles the fifth, at the Pacification made at Paffaw, An. 1552, and afterwards more fully at Ausburg, where their Confession had first been tendered, Anno 1555.

But not to pass over this matter in these generals only, we may know once for all, that in the year 1530, the Protestant Princes having tendered their Confession at Ausburg, (as before is said) and finding it not so well received as they did expect, entered into a Confederation at the Town of Smalcald (belonging to the Duke of Saxony) for defence thereof, and for the Defence of one another in pursuance of it. Into this Confederacy first entered John Frederick the Duke of Saxony and his Son, Ernest, and Francis Dukes of Lunenburg, Philip the Landgrave of Hassia, George Marquise of Brandenburg, the Cities of Strasbourg, Neurenberg, Heilbrun, Kintling, Ulm, Landau, Constance, Memmingen, and Campden. Afterwards, Anno 1555, there entered into it Berninus and Philip Princes of Pomerania, Ulrich Duke of Wirttemberg, Ro- bert Duke of Zweibrücken, (or Bipont, as some Writers call him) William Earl of Nassau, George, and Joachim Earls of Anhalt, the Cities of Frankford, Hamborough, Ausburg, Hanover, and not long after Passgrave and King of Denmark. But this Confederacy was like to have dashed the business. For Charles the fifth looking upon it as a matter of dangerous consequence to the power and safety of the Empire, and withal instigated thereunto by the Popes of Rome, whose interest was no less concerned in it, considering that he could not otherwise untie this Gordian knot, resolved to cut it with the Sword. At first the War succeeded luckily with the Protestant Princes, who armed themselves upon the noise of his Preparations: But there being an equality of Command between the Duke John Frederick and Philip the Landgrave, the one sometimes not approving, otherwhiles thwarting the other projects, the end proved not answerable. Besides, the politic Emperor knowing full well that the Forces of confederate States are oftener broken by Delays than Battle, avoided all occasions of fighting, and thereby wearied out this great Army, which without performing any notable exploit disbanded it self, every man halting home to defend his own. But none had more reason for to do than the Duke Elector: For in his absence his Cousin Maurice (forgetting the Education he had under him, and how formerly the Duke had conquered for him and elevated him in those parts of Münster (maugre all opposition of the Popish party) which formerly had belonged to Duke George his Uncle) combined himself with the Emperor, and invaded the Elector's Country; who notwithstanding recovered not only all his own, but a great part also of those Lands and Territories in which he had before lost his ungrateful Kinsman. But while he was in the Career, the Emperor suddenly falls upon him not far from Münster, (where the Duke was then hearing a Sermon) and by the suddenness of his coming routed his timorous unprovided Army; the Duke himself with some few resolute Gentlemen making head against him, till the most of them were slain, and the Duke taken Prisoner. The next morning he was condemned to lose his head, but pardoned at the last upon some Conditions: amongst which it was none of the least, that he should surrender his Estates, and resign the Electoral dignity to be disposed of by the Victor, as also that he should without ransom release Marquess Albert of Brandenburg, (a abusive and unquiet man) who was then his Prisoner. This done, the Emperor fraudulently intrappeth the Landgrave, as he shall show more at large hereafter in another place; and carrying on the Wars from one free City to another, compelled them to receive the Mass, and to submit to such Composition as he pleased to grant them; inasmuch as it was thought that the Emperor gained in this journey a Million and 600000 Crowns, and 500 pieces of great Ordnance. But these Successes were too great and too unjustly grounded to continue long. For Maurice, the new Duke Elector, who had married the Landgrave's Daughter, and engaged himself unto his Children both by Word and Bond (and that too at the Emperor's instance) for the safe returning, conceived himself unworthily dealt with for to be made the instrument of his Father's thralldom, and therefore that he was obliged both in love and honour to leave no way untried which might gain his liberty. And withal, finding cause to fear that the course of the Emperor's great Successes might end at last in the subversion of the common Liberty, he secretly by an under-hand practice called in the French and raising Forces under colour of the Emperor's service, gained Marquess Albert before mentioned (who had then a running Army in the field to associate with him, and fell so suddenly on the Emperor lying then at Innsbruck, that he compell'd him to run away in post-hast by torch-light, and the Prelates to break of the Council off Trent, where at that time they were assembled. Upon which turning of the balance a Peace soon ensued, which brought forth the Edicts of Passaw and Ausburg, spoken of before, the best and surest Pledges of the Peace of Germany.

In the mean time, while the Lutherans thus played their game, there started up another party, begun at first by Zuinglius amongst the Switzers, of whose both Doctrine and Success we have spoken there. These not communicating Councils went two several ways, especially in the Points of Substantiation and the Real Presence; not reconciled in their times, nor like to be agreed upon amongst their followers. For Calvin, rising in to the esteem and place of Zuinglius, added some Tenets of his own to the former Doctrines touching Predication, Free-will, Universal Grace, Final Perseverance, (Points fitted for the Schools than a popular Auditor), which the Difference were widened, and the Breach made irreparable: the Cause being followed on both sides with great impatience, as if they did not strive too much for Truth, as Victory. And of the two, those of the Lutheran party seemed more violent, (though the other was altogether as irreconcilable) who could not chuse but smother it, to see themselves under determined and blown up by a new form of Doctrine not tolerated in the Empire, but under colour of Conformity to the Confession of Ausburg. For Zuinglianism being entertained amongst the French, a busy and active people, spread it self farther in few years than it was propagated by the Switzers (men of the same temper with the Dutch) in all times before. Inasmuch as it did not only prevail in France, but by the reputation of Calvin, and the diligence of his Followers was wholly entertained in the Kingdom of Scotland, the Netherlands, in many parts of the Kingdom of Poland, and even in Germany it self, in which it got footing in all the Territories of the Counts Palatines in the Rhine, in some of the Landgraves of Hassia, in the Imperial City of Strasbourg, many of the Hanse-Towns, and amongst their Princes and free Cities of inferior note. The rest of Germany, containing the Patrimonial Estates of the House of Austria, the Dukedoms of Bavaria and Lorain, the Territories of the three Spiritual Electors, and of all the other Bishops in the hands of the Clergy, some of the Marquesses of Baden, part of the subjects of Cleves, and but three of the Imperial Cities, (and those small ones too) that is to say, Gernund, Ueberlingen, and Dinkels-Spyell, (unless some more be added by the great Successes of the House of Austria) remain in their Obedience to the See of Rome, all which together will hardly make up one fifth part of this spacious Country, the other four being in the power and possession of the Protestant party: yet so that there be many Protestants in Bohemia, Austria, &c. in other the Estates of the Popish Princes; as there be Papists in the Free Cities of Frankford, Nuremberg, Ulm, Augsburg, and some other places, besides the late increase of them in both the Palatinates. Off such a speedy growth was the Reformation, that within the space of 40 years it was not only received in all those Countries which do now profess it, but had also got some footing both in Spain and Italy.

And here perhaps it will not be improper to look upon the means which were chiefly used for the Promoting of this Work; by which it came to spread so far in so little time, and next upon the Stops and Hindrances which were given unto it, by which it was restrained from spreading farther. 1. For the means used in the Advancement of his Work, (next under the Almighty power of the most wise God) they were these especially. 1. The translating of the Scripture into Vulgar Languages, which easily discovered the Corruptions of the Church of Rome both in Doctrines and Forms of Worship. 2. The diligent Preaching of their Ministry, both in Towns and Villages, for the expounding of the Scriptures, and fitting them to the Capacities of the meanest Auditors; which gained exceedingly both on the judgment and affections of the common people; the course of preaching, having been formerly neglected by the Parish Curate, and turned off wholly in a manner to the Begging-Friars. 3. The publishing of Books of Practical Piety and Devotions, which might inflame the hearts of all sorts of men; accustomed before to no other Duties than to tell over their Credo's and Pater-nosters, and that most common of their Ave-Maries, and that most common in a tongue which they understand not. 4. The Education of youth, especially in Catechisms containing the whole body of Christian Religion; which once well planted in their minds, could not so easily be pulled up and removed thence by any contrary persuasion. 5. Their continual offers of disputation with the adverse party in a publick audience; which being denied (as generally at the first it was) gave great assurance of the truth and soundness of the one side, as of the falsehood and weakness of the other. 6. Their compiling of Martyrologies and Histories of the Church, which could not but produce an admirable Zeal and Constancy both in the Readers and the Hearers animated thereunto by those brave Examples which therein was presented to them. One point of Prudence hath been wanting, which is the calling of a General Council of all the Protestant and Reformed Churches, for the composing of the Differences which have grown between them. And this I look on as the first and greatest stop to the Reformation from proceeding farther; many men (not improbably) thinking there must be some want of truth in the Foundation of that Building, which had such wide and open breaches in the Superstructures. The Tyranny and Terror of the Inquisition, by which it is kept out of Spain, and kept down in Italy and all other parts of the Pope's Obedience, together with those other Policies both to discountenance and suppress it, (which we have spoken of in our description of the Papacy) may come next to this. The addition of these cares and diligence of the Jesuits and Seminary Priests, in applying themselves to all those means which they found so effectual on the other side, thereby not only countermine their endeavours, but fighting them up, on even ground with the self-same weapons. And last of all, the Pious and Practices of the Papal Ministers in working on the humours of the opposite parties, thereby engaging them not only into Tongue-combats and ventuations of the Pen, but even to try it out by blows in an open War, once I am sure. By these means they have not only stopped the Progress of the Reformation but would fain give themselves some hopes to destroy it utterly, and thereby to restore the Pope to that power and splendour which formerly he had attained unto in these parts of Europe. But of these and such like self-flatteries I shall say with Seneca, or rather in his words apply to my own Intention,

— He manas Torjam erigent?
Torjam habet spes Troja, si tales habet.

That is to say

Shall these small Jars restore the ruin'd Pope;
Small hopes be hath, if this be all his hope.

As for the Government of their Churches, those that continue in obedience to the See of Rome are under the old form of Archbishops and Bishops, coeval in all Germany (as in most places else) with the Faith it self. The Calvinists (by which name the Zuinglians now also passef, if not eaten out) submit themselves for Doctrine, Discipline and forms of Worship, to Calvin's Model; whereof we have spoke more at large when we were in Geneva. And for the Lutherans, they have divided the Episcopal Fundion from the Revenues; giving these last to some of their younger Princes, with the Title of Administrators of such a Bishoprick; the Fundion or Jurisdiction to some of the more eminent Clergy, with the title of a Superintendent, assigning to them a priority both of place and power before other Ministers, which they enjoy for term of life, together with some liberal maintenance: as in proportion to it. In other things, as Order, Habit, and Title of dignity, they differ not at all from the other Ministers. And over them, in the place of Archbishops, they have their general Superintendents; all of them of each sort accountable to the supreme Ecclesiastical Consistory, (as formerly to the Provincial or National Synod) made up of Counsellors of State and the Heads of the Clergy. So that the form seems to be much the same as in elder times, but is indeed more different than it seems to be; a great part of the alteration being in the Names, and that no other in a manner than by changing the old Greek word Episcopus into the new Latine word Superintendent, both signifying an Overseer, though in different Languages. And so Ex Græcis bonis Latine fecere non bonis, in the Poet's words. Which brings into my mind the Story of a people of Africa, who having received much hurt by Tigers, made a Decree that no man from thenceforth should call them Tigres, but give them a more harmless or less hated name, and then all was well. And as they do conform thus far to the elder times in form of Government, do they also come up to them in their forms of Worship; retaining still a ferted and prescribed Liturgie for all their Churches, most of the Holy-days observed in the former Ages, the Cross in Baptism, kneeling at the Communion, and many other in use and significant Ceremonies, commended to the Church by most pure Antiquity. In point of maintenance they are as defective as the Calvinists are; few of their Ministers having Tithes, most of them Pen-sions or Stipends, and those small ones also, seldom exceeding two or 300 Guilders, besides Wood for fuel, Corn, and some other necessities.

Now because mention hath been made of the Hanse-Towns and Imperial Cities, we are to understand that the Cities of this Country are of three sorts. 1. Such as are holden in possession by some of the Princes in way of inheritance, part of their Patrimony and Estates; as Heidelberg, Vienna, Munich, Wittenberg, &c. 2. Such as are held originally of the Empire it self: which are called Free Cities, for their great Prerogatives of Convoyning money, and Governing themselves by their local Ordinances; Imperial, in regard they know no Lord or protector but the Emperor only, to whom they pay two third parts of such Contributions as are assessed in the Assemblies or general Diets, and 1500 Florens yearly for themselves and their Territories. They are in number about 60, many of which are of a fair and large Estate; such as are Nuremberg, Ausburg, Innsbruck, Spire, Wormes, &c. Or which thus Guiccardinus: Those, faith he, are called Free Cities, which acknowledging by a certain determinate Tribute the Authority of the Empire, do notwithstanding in all other things govern themselves after their own Laws, not seeking to amplify their Territories, but defend their Liberties. 3. The third sort is of those which are called Hanse-Towns, or Hanse-Cities, that is, (say some) An see stedem, Towns upon the Sea, such as those were who first entered into this Confederacy; but at this time the name extends to many in-land Cities, and of no great Trading, joynd with them in a League for their common common defence and preservation. A League made first against the Danvs and the Earls of Holftein by some of the Maritime Towns bordering next unto them, that is to say, Lubeck, Hamburg, Rostock, Wismar, Straßburg, and Lüneburg; but afterwards many other of the Imperial Cities and Towns of Trade associated with them in an offensive and defensive League against all enemies whatsoever. In number about 75, those of Livonia and Prussia being taken into the reckoning: many of which are able to put to Sea 150 good Sail of Ships; such is like more within the Land contributing in money or otherwise to the common charge. First handled by Waldemar the 3. of Denmark, whom they vanquished in a Naval Battle. After that growing into credit, and driving a great Trade in most parts of Christendom, they enjoyed many large and ample Privileges wherefore they came to be called amongst us sometimes by the name of Eastlanders, from their Easterly dwelling, and Merchants of the Steel-yard, from the place where they stowed their Commodities; and Guilda Teutonicorum, in regard of their Nation, for the most part Dutch. But the Englifs learning too much wit at the last as to make use of their own Shipping, they began here by little and little to decay, and are now almost worn out of memory with us, though still of good esteem and credit in other Countries.

The principal Rivers hereof are, 1. Danubius, or the Danow, which rising out of Nigra Sylva, or Schwarzwald, as the Germans call it, at a little Village of Schwaben called Don Eßingen about two Dutch miles from the shores of the Rhene passing through Schwaben, Bavaria, Austria &c. by the Cities of Ulm, Regensburg, Passau, Vienna, Rad, Buda, and Belgrade, beyond which it becometh to be called Ister, by that name most generally known amongst the Grecians; and receiving into its Channel, from the long Tract of the Alps, the Sarmatian and Carpathian Mountains, about 60 navigable Rivers, besides lesser Brooks, disgorgeth his full stomach by several mouths (the names whereof we shall find in Dacia) into the lap of the Euxine Sea; the whole length of his course 1500 miles: Incomuch as we may say with a Modern Poet,

O even mouth'd Nile, I plainly see,
Danow will scarce give way to thee.

2. Rhene, (of whose original and course we have spoke more fully when we were in Belgium) which running from Switzerland through Germany and Belgium, after a course of 800 miles, emptieth it self into the German Ocean. All which shall here be added is, that it gives the Title of the Rhine-grave, to some Princes as of good Blood as the best in Germany, whose Possessions and Estates bordering near unto it they were from thence so called; but of late times decayed (almost to nothing) in their Estates and living for the most part on the entertainment of other Princes, whom they serve in their Wars; the Palgrave of the Rhene, and two at the least of the three Bishops Electors raising themselves upon the ruin of this House. 3. Elbe (Albis) which springing out of the Mountain of Reisenberg in the skirts of Bohemia, runneth a course of 400 miles and passeth by the Cities of Dresden, Meissen, Torgau, Wittenberg, Magdeburg, and Lauenburg, Cities of the Electoral and ancient Saxony, and so betwixt the Dukedom of Holfstein (now part of Denmark) and the rest of Germany. 4. Oder, which hath its Fountain in the highestmost parts of Moravia; and after it hath run its course through Brandenburg and Pomerania, of some 500 miles in length, falleth at last into the Baltick Sea. 5. Wurgis, or the Weser, which issuing out of the Hills of Thuringia, runneth through Hessia and Westphalia, to the City of Breme, not far from which it falls into the German Ocean. 6. Vistula, or the Weysst, which ri-ling out of the Carpathian Mountains betwixt Poland and Hungary, first passeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Pole, then betwixt Pomeran and Prussia and so into the Baltick Sea; the ancient Boundary of this Country, dividing it from Sarmatia Europaea. 7. Moselle, which rising out of the Mountain Vage, in the Confines of Lorrain and the County of Burgundy, passeth directly through Lorrain, and the District of Triers, by the Cities of Toul, Metz, and Triers it self, beyond which last it falleth into the Rhene, at the Town called Confluentia. 8. Salva or Saia, which rising in the Mountains of Fitzelberg in the Borders of the Upper Palatinate, and passing by the skirts of Misia and Saxony specially so called, falleth into the Elb beyond Wittenberg, having first watered the Cities of Naumburg, Merzburg, and Jene, very observable for being the most Eastern Bounds of the Saxon Conquests, by this River parted from the Slaves. 9. Maina, or the Maine, which hath its spring in the Mountains of Bohemia, and passing by the Cities of Bamberg and Wurzburg, is received into the Rhene beneath Frankford. 10. Amisus, or the Emis, which hath its Fountain near Paderborn in Westphalia, and passing between the two Frislands, falleth into the German Ocean not far from Emden.

Chief Mountains of this mighty Country, besides the Alps spoken of before, which run in a long tract betwixt it and Italy, are 1. Alpiba, now called Schwarzwald, (the present name both of this Mountain and the Forest of Martiana, which doth overshadow it) out of which rise the springs of Danow and the Necar, two principal Rivers of this Country. 2. The Sudeta, incircling Bohemia, covered with the Woods called anciently Garia and Luna, now called the Woods, of Passau and Bamberger, from the places adjoining. 3. Cetus in Austria, now called Culemburg, the ancient Bounds betwixt Pannonia and Noricum, two Roman Provinces. 4. Vogels, commonly called Vage, and by some French Writers the Monte de Faucities, which encircling Lorrain, divideth it on the East and South from Elfsa and the County of Burgundy. As for the Forests of this Country, besides those spoken of already, that of most note was the Forest of Hercynia, (of which all the rest were but Limber branches) the beginning whereof was about the Borders of Switzerland and Assatia, from thence running Eastward along the course of the Danow unto Transylvania, and thence declining on the left hand through the vast Countries of the Lithuanians, Moscovites, and Russies, in which last there are still many vast Deserts of it; the greatest part thereof in Germany being long since consumed, in place whereof are many goodly Corn-fields and well-built Cities. A Wood so formidable to the Romans, that they durst never venture to search the end of it; the length thereof after the end of 60 days Journey being undiscoversable, and the farther search into it quite laid aside.

These Boundaries and Land-marks being thus described we shall the better follow the Chorography of this great Continent, according to the several Principalities and Estates therein; having first taken a survey of the ancient condition of it, with so much of the Story as concerns the whole, before it came to be divided into so many hands. The Country was first planted by the Posterity of Gomer, who, descending from the Mountains of Albania, their first Seat, in memory thereof first called Gomerini, after Cimmerin, by that name known to Pliny, Ptolemy, and others of the ancient Writers, removed into the more fruitful Plains of Phrygia, and there built the City Cimmeris, which Pliny speaks of. But that small Province proving too narrow a compass to contain his Offspring, and the adjoining Countries being taken up in the former Plantations, they removed unto the North-west of the Euxine Sea, where we find a City of their building called Cimmerium, mentioned both by Pliny and Strabo, and the adjoining Streight or Fretum, called by the name of Bolporis Cimmerius by the Greeks and Latines. Driven from these Dwellings by the more powerful Scythians, they spread themselves into the West, where they began to be called Cimbri, and by that name, and under those of the Ambrones and Teutones, several Branches of them, intended an Invasion and Conquest both of Gaul and Italy: wherein they had prevailed in all probability, Missi seculo Marius contigisset, had not Marius happened to have lived in that Age, by whom they were discomfited and destroyed. That these Gomerians or Cimbri were the first Inhabitants of Gaul, Germany, and all the Nations of the North and West of Europe, is generally agreed upon by all the Learned. Divided they were into several Nations, and those also subdivided into lesser Tribes, and more obscure Families; amongst which those of Teutones or Tuiscones, from which the Dutch do so affect to derive themselves, might be some of the principal. There settled, and not pleased with that desert dwelling, such of them as dwelt nearest to the Rhene passed over that River, and beating the Gauls farther up into the Country, possessed themselves of their Dwellings, enjoying them (till conquered by Julius Caesar) without any Rival. But Cæsar, moved with the complaints of the Gauls, and the insolencies of Arivovis a King of the Germans, (for by that name for the reasons aforesaid the Romans called them) marched into their Quarters: the Roman Legionaries being so afraid of this dreadful Enemy, ut testamenta passim in principibus scriberentur, (saith the Historian) that many of them made their Testaments at the Gates of their Camp, before they fell upon the Enemy. Vanquished by Cæsar, and Arivovis being fled over the Rhene, the Romans, by command of their General made a Bridge over the River, and rather terrified than conquered the neighbouring Germans; who were more fully brought into subjection by Drusus, the adopted Son of Augustus Cæsar, from thence called Germanicus, by whom not only the Rhati and Norici, then lying out of the bounds of Germany, now included in it, were subdued in fine, and brought into the form of Roman Provinces; but the whole Country in a manner to the very Ocean was forced to yield obedience to the Roman Empire. But this was for so short a time, that it was both won and lost during the Reign and Government of Augustus Cæsar. So that the whole established Conquests of the Romans upon this Country, as it is now bounded, contained no more than the Provinces of Germania, and Belgica Prima, with part of Germania Secunda, belonging unto the Dioceses of Gaul; the greatest part of the two Rhati being under the Dioceses of Italy; Noricum Mediterraneum and Ripensis, with some parts of Pannonia, parts of the Dioceses of Illyricum. But none of these (as lying on the West side of the Rhene, and the South of the Danow) did ever pass in the account of the ancient Germany, the Germans not enduring the yoke so long as to be brought within the number of the Roman Provinces. Provoked with the Lust and Insolencies of Quintilius Varus, who succeeded Drusus in that charge, they set upon him under the conduct of Arminius, a chief Prince amongst them, kill him, and utterly cut off three Legions; as we shall see more particularly when we come to Brinwick, the ancient Seat of the Cheerni, by whom the Forces of that Emperor were driven over the Rhene. After which defeat Augustus laid aside the Affairs of Germany, confining his Empire within the Rhene, which Drusus had extended to the banks of the Ocean. Hæc clade factum, ut Imperium quod in litore Oceani non petierat, in ripa Rheni summis flaret, saith the Historian. Nor did the Romans any farther to revenge this Loss by making a new War upon them, but seemed more careful to defend themselves against their Invasions, than to incur the hazard of a new Defeat, quattering chief Legions with their several Wings and Aids on the shores of the Rhene, and four upon the banks of the Danow, to keep these people from inchoating on the Roman Provinces. But the fatal period of that Empire drawing on apace, the French, Burgundians, Almans, and other Dutch Nations break through those Guards, dispossess the Romans of all Gaul, Rhætia, and Noricum, which they share amongst them; till in the end the French, prevailing over the rest, extend their Empire over all the modern Germany; chiefly performed by the valour of Charles the Great, created Emperor of the West by the people of Rome, and crowned with the Imperial Crown by Pope Leo the 4. on Christmas day, Anno 801. So that now the old Prophecy of the Druides, concerning the removing of the Empire into the West, came to be accomplished; though Tacitus in his time accounted it for a vain and idle Prediction. For when Civilis raised a Rebellion amongst the Batavi (the Hollanders and parts adjoining) against Vespasian, then newly made Emperor, possessionem rerum humanarum Transalpina gentibus portendi Druidæ cæbantur, the Druides prophesied of the translation of the Empire to the Transalpine Nations: accomplished, as before is said, in the person of Charles the Great, King of France and Germany. By whom it was divided (for the better ordering or Governance of it) into West-France, or West-riek, in the barbarous Latine of those times called Westralia, containing the modern France, and to much of the Netherlands as lieth on the French side of the River Maes, and Offen-riek, (i.e. the Eastern Kingdom) in the Latine of those times Austrasia, containing so much of the modern Germany and Pannonia as was possessed by the French, with the rest of the Netherlands. This was afterwards subdivided into the Kingdoms of Lorrain and Germany: whereof the first contained all Germany within the Rhene, together with the Belgick Provinces before described, the Counties of Flanders and Artois excepted only; the Kingdom of Germany taking up the rest. For in the time of Ludovicus Pius, the Son of Charles, the great Empire of his Father was parcelled out into many members, as Italy, France, Burgundy, Lorrain, and Germany, distributed amongst his Sons and Nephews with the Title of Kings: by means whereof the Kingdoms of Germany and Lorrain, united in the person of Lewis the Ancient, in little time were alien'd from the House of Charles, and left off to be French, possessed by the great Princes of Lorrain, Saxony, Schwaben, and Bavaria; by them distributed into many Principalities and inferior States, all passing under the account and name of the Dutch or Germans. The Kings and Emperours of which here follow.

| A.C.H. | 1. | Charles the Great, Emperor, King of France and Germany .  |
| 801    | 2. | Ludovicus Pius , King of France , Germany , and the Emperor of the Romans .  |
| 815    | 3. | Lewis , furnished the Ancient, second Son of Ludovicus Pius , King of Germany , to which Anno 876, he united that of Lorrain also.   |
| 841.   | 4. | Charles the Great, Son of Lewis the Ancient, reigned at first jointly with Carloman and Lewis his elder Brethren, after their deaths sole King of Germany , Anno 880. he succeeded Ludovicus Balbus in the Title of Emperor, continued unto his Successors; and during the minority of Charles the Simple |

by a Faction of the French Nobility was chosen King of France: the whole Estate of Charles the Great becoming once again united in the person of one Sovereign Prince.

891 5. Arnulph, the natural Son of Carloman, the Brother of Charles, King of Germany, and Emperor.

903 6. Lewis or Ludovicus IV. (Lewis the Brother of Charles and Carloman being reckoned for one) King of Germany, and Emperor, the lawfully begotten Son of Arnulph.

913 7. Conrade, the Son of Conrade, the Brother of Lewis the 4. the last Prince of the matiline issue of Charles the Great. After whose death the Francones and Saxons, seeing Charles the Simple, King of France, overlaid by the Normans, or embroiled by the Princes of the House of Anjou, took that advantage to transfer the Empire to themselves: and they made choice of Henry Duke of Saxony to be their Emperor. A worthy Prince, by whom some Nations of the Slaves, the Hungarians and part of Lorraine were subdued or added to the Empire.

929 8. Henricus, furnished Auceps, or the Fowler, Duke of Saxony, elected by the German Princes, but designed by Conrade, as being eldest Son of Otho Duke of Saxony by Luitgardis Daughter to the Emperor Arnulph, and consequently a branch of the Caroline Stock.

938 9. Otho, furnished the Great, the Son of Henry, Emperor and King of Italy. 36 years.

974 10. Otho II. Son of Otho the first, Emperor and King of Italy. 10.

984 11. Otho III. Son of Otho II. Duke of Saxony, and the last of that House which had the title of Emperor and King of Italy. After whose death, all right of Succession being disclaimed, the Emperours became elective; but for the most part the Election was ingroled or monopolized (since the Failure of the House of Saxony) by the Dukes of Franconia, Suevia, Bavaria, and Austria, notwithstanding the liberty or freedom of Election pretended to by the Electors. The business was first projected in the Court of Rome, to make the Emperours less powerful, and distract the Germans, whom they feared, into Sides and Factions: confirmed by a Decree of Pope Gregory the fifth, being a Native of that Country.

1002 12. Henry II. furnished the Saint, Duke of Bavaria, the first Emperor elected according to the Constitution of Gregory the fifth, but so elected, that he challenged it in a manner by the right of Blood, as being the Grand-child of Henry furnished Riccius, the first Duke of Bavaria of the Saxon race: the second Son of Henry the first, and consequently by the next Heir male of that House after Otho the 3. compelling some of the Electors, who opposed his Title, by the force of Arms to yield unto it. So that the first Emperor who came in by a clear Election, but not without presentation of a Title also, was

1040 14. Henry III. furnished Niger, the Son of Conrade.

1056 15. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third, in whose days the Popes began to usurp Authority over the Emperours; inasmuch as Leo the ninth, having received the Popehood at the Emperours hands, repented himself of it, put off his Papal Vestments, went to Rome as a private person, and was there new chosen by the Clergy. This was done by the persuasion of a Monk called Hildebrand, who being afterwards made Pope by the name of Gregory the 7. excommunicated this Henry, the first Prince that was ever excommunicated by a Pope of Rome. From which time till the year 1254. there were continual Wars and Thunder betwixt them and the nine following Emperours, some of them being excommunicated, some forced to put their Necks under the Feet of the Pope, others to quit the care of the Commonwealth, and betake themselves unto the Wars of the Holy Land, leaving the Pope to do what he list in Germany.

1106 16. Henry V. Son of Henry the 4. armed by the Pope against his Father, whom he had sooner succeeded in the Empire, but the Pope excommunicated him, for being too full in the business of Investitures, and raised up the Saxons against him; by whom being vanquished, and otherwise afflicted by the Pope's practices, he was forced to submit unto his commands, and was the last Emperour of the House of Franconia.

1125 17. Lutharius Duke of Bavaria, seizing upon the Empire without any Election, was reconciled unto the German Princes by the means of St. Bernard. He settled the Affairs of Italy in two Journeys thither. 13.

1139 18. Conrade III. Son of Frederick, the first hereditary Duke of Sueve or Schweben, and Stefen's Son unto Henry the fifth, vanquished Henry furnished the Proud, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, and going to the Holy Wars, with Lewis King of France, discomfited the Turks near the Banks of Mander. 15.

1153 19. Frederick, furnished Barbarossa, Duke of Sueve, crowned at Rome by Adrian the 4. and not long after excommunicated by Pope Alexander the 3. to whom he was faithful at last to submit himself, the Pope insolently treading on his Neck. He went after to the Holy Land, where he died, having discomfited the Turks in three great Battels. 37.

1190 20. Henry VI. Son of Frederick, and King of Sicily, in right of Constance his Wife, crowned by Pope Celsine, who employed him in the Wars of the Holy Land, in his Journey towards which he died at Messina. 8.

1198 21. Philip, Duke of Sueve, Brother of Henry the 6. excommunicated by the Pope, (who loved not this Family) by whose means Otho, the Son of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, was set up against him. The occasion of great Wars among the Germans, reconciled by Marriage of Otho with a Daughter of Philip. 9.

1207 22. Otho IV. Son of Henry furnished the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, crowned at Rome by Pope Innocent the 3. by whom not long long after he was excommunicated, for taking into his hands some Towns of Italy which belonged to the Empire: vanquished in Erabant by the Faction raised up against him, he relinquished the Empire to his Competitor.

1212 23. Frederick II. King of Sicily and Naples, Son of Henry the 6. having settled Germany, disposed himself for the Wars of the Holy Land, where he recovered the possession of the Realm of Jerusalem. He was excommunicated by the Pope at his return into Italy, and not long after poisoned.

1250 24. Conrade IV. Son of Frederick, the last Emperour of the House of Schwaben. After whose death the Empire being distracted by the Pope's practices into many Factions, each Faction chose an Emperour or King of the Romans: so that at one time there were elected Henry Earl of Tourainia, William Earl of Holland, Alfonso King of Castile, the renowned Author of the Alfonso Tables, and

1254 25. Richard Earl of Cornwall, Brother of Henry the third of England, the best monied man of all his time, supposed therewith to buy the Suffrages of the Archbishop of Colen and Elector Palatine, by whom he was elected and crowned King of the Romans, An. 1254: and after he had dealt in the affairs of the Empire 6 years, he returned into England, where he died. After whose death, or an Interregnum of 12 years from his Exit rather, the Title was at last accepted by 1273 26. Rodolph Earl of Habsburg, a petit Prince, (others of greater Estates and Fortunes not daring to take up the honour) the Raifer of the present Austrian Family.

1292 27. Adolph Earl of Nassau, who served in person under King Edward the 1. of England against the French, for which being discredited by the Germans, he was encountered and slain near the City of Spire.

1298 28. Albert Duke of Austria, Son of Rodolph the Emperour, to whom Pope Boniface the 8. gave the Realm of France, of which he had deprived King Philip the Fair. But Albert would not meddle out of Germany, and did nothing in it.

1308 29. Henry, Earl of Luxemburg, who made a Journey into Italy to recover the Rights of the Empire, (where an Emperour had not been seen in 60 years) supposed to be poisoned in the Chalice by a Friar at Benevent, a Town of the Pope's. 6.

1314 30. Lewis, Duke of Bavaria, crowned at Aix in the wonted manner; opposed by Frederick Duke of Austria, chose by another Faction, and crowned at Bonna, a Town of the Archbishop of Colen: but he being defeated, Lewis remained sole Emperour, and was excommunicated by Pope John 22. 33.

1346 31. Charles IV. Son of John King of Bohemia, and Grand-son of Henry the 7. crowned with the Iron Crown at Milvain 1354; the framer of the Golden Bull. 32.

1378 32. Wenceslaus, King of Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, deformed and vicious; deposed by the German Princes. 22.

1400 33. Rupertus, Elector Palatine, passed into Italy for the recovery of the Dukedom of Milvain, sold by Wenceslaus, but was well beaten by John Galeazzo, and so returned. 10.

1410 34. Jodocus Barbatus, Marquess of Moravia, Uncle to Wenceslaus.

1411 35. Sigismund Brother of Wenceslaus, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Earl of Luxemburg, crowned at Rome on Whitsunday 1432. He travelled exceedingly for establishing the Peace of Christendom, distracted at that time with three Popes at once; and was a great promoter of the Council at Constance.

1439 36. Albert II. Duke of Austria, Son-in-law of Sigismund, whom he succeeded in all his Estates and Titles, excepting Luxemburg. 1.

1440 37. Frederick III. Duke of Austria, the Son of Ernest of Austria, and next Heir of Albert the 2. He procured the calling of the Council of Basil for the Peace of Christendom, travelling for that cause to Rome, where he was declared Emperour, Anno 1442. 54.

1494 38. Maximilian Son of Frederick, Duke of Austria, who first united the Estates of Burgundy to the House of Austria. A Prince that undertook many great Actions, but went through with none. 25.

1519 39. Charles V. King of Spain, Son of Philip King of Spain, and Archduke of Austria, Son of Maximilian by the Lady Mary of Burgundy. A puissant Prince, who had Prisoners at the same time the French King and the Pope of Rome. He ruined the League made by the Protestants at Smalcald, took Prisoners the Electour of Saxony, and the Landgrave of Hassia, drove the great Turk from Vienne, won the Kingdom of Tunis, and in the end resigned all his Estates, and died in a Monastery. 39.

1558 40. Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, the Brother of Charles, King of Hungary and Bohemia, elected King of the Romans by the procurement of Charles, Anno 1531. Upon whose Resignation he was chosen Emperour, Anno 1558. 7.

1565 41. Maximilian, the Son of Ferdinand, elected King of the Romans in the life of his Father, Anno 1562, succeeding the Empire after his decease.

1577 42. Rodolphus, the eldest Son of Maximilian, had great Wars against the Turks, with whom in the year 1600 he concluded a Peace, but being undermined by his Brother Matthias, was forced to surrender to him the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia, and to content himself with Austria and the Empire only. These eight last Emperours were all of the Order of the Garcer.

1612 43. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, King of Hungary, Bohemia, and Archduke of Austria, in whose time were sown the seeds of that terrible War which had almost destroyed the Empire. Having no children of his own, he procured Ferdinand of Gretz to be declared Successour into his Estates. 7.

of the Protestant Religion, occasioning thereby that long and bloody War in the Empire of Germany, not yet fully ended.

1637 45. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the 2. broke the great power of the Swedes, (called in for the support of the German liberty, and against the violent resolutions of his Father at the Battle of Norlingen) the twelfth Emperor of the House of Habsburg, and the ninth of the House of Austria without intermission. The cause of which is to be attributed to Charles the 5. who procured in his life-time that his Brother might be chosen Rex Romanorum, as his Successor in the Empire: a policy which hath been ever since continued by his Successors. And the Germans are the more willing to hearken to it, because the Austrian Princes are not only Natives of this Country, but better able to back out the Empire in its complete Majesty than any of the rest of that Nation are.

And to say truth, it is but need that some great Prince or father be entrusted, it who by the power and reputation of his own Estate may preserve the Honour of the Empire, confined in a manner within Germany, and there so weakened by the alienating of whole Countries from it, (some Titular acknowledgment excepted only) that it is nothing in effect but magni nominis umbra, the shadow of a mighty body, a meer empty Title. For if we look upon the present state and condition of it, we shall find it otherwise too weak to support the great and swelling Title of the Roman Empire. For as for the Empire itself, it hath some Countries reputed as parts of it, which yet acknowledge no Subjection; as Belgium, Switzerland, and Denmark: Some do acknowledge a kind of Subjection, but the Princes of them come not to the Imperial Diets; as the Dukes of Savoy and Lorraine, and some of the Italian Potentates: Finally, some both confess the Emperor to be their Sovereign, and that they owe Service to his Courts, which are the Princes and Cities of Germany only; but those so privileged, so exempted from his commands, so absolute and uncontrollable in their own Estates, that they care little for his power, and not much (if any thing) for his person; of which we shall speak more hereafter, when we come into the form of the publick Government. In the mean time, if we would know by what occasions the Empire became so infested, it may be said, that the reasons and occasions of it have been very many. As first, the weakness and improvidence of the Caroline Race, dismembering from it many powerful and wealthy Provinces, reserving only a bare Homage and some slight acknowledgment. 2. The Cunning of the Popes, who from the time of Henry the 4. to Rodolph of Habsburg had by their Excommunications and other practices so exercised the Emperours with intestine troubles, that they forced them in a manner to abandon Italy: insomuch that the said Rodolph finding the inconvenience of it, sold most of his Estates there to the fairest Chapmen. 3. This done, and the Popes knowing well enough that they could not wax strong in Italy, it they did not weaken the Emperor's estate in Germany, they first wrested out of their hands the Investiture of the Bishops, Abbots, and other Ecclesiastical Prelates, who being now made their own creatures, were so encreased both in Revenue and Power by little and little, and fortified with so many Immunities, that some of them grew in time to be Free Estates, all of them Princes of the Empire. 4. But fearing that this might not bring the Emperours low enough, they bated them with continual Factions and perpetual Riots: which put them to a necessity of making what Friends they could, though they paid very dearly for them; and taking up what monies they could of the wealthier Cities, paying them in Exemptions and Royal Privileges, which they could not otherwise cancel or discharge the Debt. And unto this, the making of the Empire Elective gave no little help, few of them looking on the Empire but as Tenants for term of life, and therefore were more likely to discharge such Debts by impairing the publick Patrimony, which they had no hold in, than to diminish any thing of their own Estates. 6. But being the Title of Emperor was the greatest Honour which any of that Nation could be capable of, and such as by good husbandry might be made beneficial unto their posterity, (as we see what good uses have been made of it by the Austrian Family, ever since the time of Rodolph of Habsburg;) who would not part with some of the Imperial Rights, to advance his own House to an equal greatness? And herein many of the Emperours were exceeding faulty, who, to get the Empire to themselves, or leave it after them unto their posterity, dismembered from the same many Towns and fair Possessions, given by them to the Electors for their Votes and Suffrages. 7. A thing which the Electors understood sufficiently, and therefore were resolved to make the best of the market, knowing that the Commodity could be wanted of none but themselves: as in the Election of Wenceslaus Son of Charles the 4th. of whom it was but Ask and have what they have a mind to, by means whereof the Princes grew in time so strong, that there were few of them who durst not undertake a War against their Emperours. And this appeared by the Story of Charles the fifth, who, though the most puissant Emperor which had reigned in Germany since Charles the Great, yet found himself so over-matched by the ruffling Princes, that he was willing to resign the Empire to his Brother Ferdinand.

But to proceed: By these and every of these means the Body of the Empire came to be divided into many Estates, and those Estates to be made absolute and independent, as before is said. The principal wherof, which being described will make up the Chorography of this great Continent, are those of 1. Cleveland, 2. the Estates of the three Spiritual Electors, 3. the Palatinate of the Rhine, 4. Alsacia, 5. Lorraine, 6. Saxonia or Schweben, 7. Bohemia, 8. Austria and its Appendices, 9. the Confederation of Wederaw, 10. Francia, 11. Wintenberg, and 12. Baden, 13. the Palatinate of Northgyn, or the Upper Palatinate, 14. Bohemia and the incorporate Provinces, 15. Pomerania, 16. Mecklenburg, 17. the Marquissate of Brandenburg, 18. Saxony; and the Members of it, 19. the Dukedoms of Brunswick and Lunenburg, 20. the Langravendome of Hesse, 21. Westphalia, 22. East-Friesland. Such lesser States as, being absolute and free, are of lesser moment, shall be reduced (together with the Imperial Cities) to those several Provinces in which they are included, or out of which they were taken. As for the Province of Hollstein, or Holland, though it be Imperial, and in this respect by some accounted as a Province of Germany; yet being under the command of the King of Denmark, and by all Writers reckoned as a part of that Kingdom, I shall therefore speak of it. Some of these are thus censured by Antonius, a late Writer. They of Saxonia (saith he) are Whores, they of Francia Ravishers and Buggerers, they of Bohemia Hereticks, those of Bavaria Thieves, they of Saxony Drunkards, they of Friesland and Westphalia Swearers, and they of the Palatinate Gluttons. But I hope more charitably of them all than so. I know there is another division of this Country, made by the Emperor

MANT.

Maximilian at the Diet at Colen, Anno 1522. who, for the better raising both of men and money for all publick services, caused it to be divided into the ten Circles of service, Saxony, 2. Upper Saxony, 3. Westphalia, 4. Of 1. Lower Saxony, 5. Of the four Electors of that part. 6. France, 7. Saxonia, 8. Bavaria, 9. Austria, and 10. Burgundy. But that before proposed being the more particular, I shall follow that, according to the order before laid down; beginning first with those which, together with the Belgick Provinces and the Dukedom of Lorraine, contained anciently the Provinces of Belgica and Germania Prima, and some part of Germania Secunda, and made up the Kingdom of Austrasia strictly and specially so called.

1. CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND or the Estates of the Duke of Cleve, before dismembered and divided betwixt the Competitors for the Dukedom on the death of the late Duke heretofore, Anno 1609, contained the Dukedoms of Cleve, Gulick, and Berg, and the Earldom of Mark or March, all lying in a ring together. And though these two last lie on the other side of the Rhene, and not so properly within in the old Precedents of the Kingdom of Lorraine, or any of the Roman Provinces before named, yet being they belonged all to the same Prince, not parted by the interposition of other Countries, they shall be handled here together as the same Estate.

1. The Dukedom of CLEVE, properly and distinctly so called, hath on the East the Countries of Mark and Berg, with some part of Westphalen, on the West Gelderland and some part of Limburg, on the North the Earldom of Zutphen and the Land of Over-Yssel, and on the South Gulick, and the Land of Colen. So called from Cleve the chief Town of it.

The Country is very fruitful both for Corn and Pasturage, well stocked with Cattel of all sorts for necessary use and pleasure; hath good store of Fowl, both tame and wild; is blessed also with an healthy Air, and, in a word, with all things needful for the life of man, well watered with the Rhene, the Roor, the Dijssel, the Esar, and the Nijss, common to this and the rest of the incorporate Provinces.

The places of most importance in it are, 1. Cleve, (in Latine Clevo) so called, because built on the fides of three little Hills (which the Latines call Civi) gently descending towards the Banks of the Rhene, which not far off divides it self into several Chances. An ancient Town, and of great note in former time, as appears by many old Foundations and other monuments of Antiquity continually digged up in the Fields adjoining; but chiefly by an old four-square Tower built on the highest of the three Hills, of great height and state, Founded by Julius Caesar as a Bulwark against the Germans inhabiting the farther side of the River. For proof of which, besides the old Tradition constantly maintained, there is an Inscription on the Gates of the Duke's Palace, near adjoining to it, which faith, Anno ab Urbe DCXCIII. C. Julius Dictator, his partibus subactis hanc Arcem fundavit, i.e. that in the year 698, from the building of Rome, Julius Caesar the Dictator, having subdued those parts of the Country, caused this Tower to be built. 2. Santen, on the banks of the Rhene, a Town of great Antiquity, as the Ruines of it do declare; supported by Pignius to be the Trajana Colonia of the Ancients. 3. Wesel, (in Latine Vesalia) a fair and rich Town, seated on the Confluence of the Rhene with the River of Liippe, which, rising in Westphalia, doth here lose it self: of great note for a College of Secular Canons built here by Eberard the 9th

Earl, Anno 840, or thereabouts, and an Hospital liberally endowed for old impotent persons. Founded by Henry de Baers, the Dukes Chancellor. A Town not subject to these Dukes, though within the Dukedom, being reckoned an Imperial City, and one of the Hanse-Towns; now neither so Imperial nor so free as formerly: possessed first with the Spaniards, with a Garrison of 3000 men (at the beginning of the War of Cleve) by D. Lewis Valasco, and from them taken by the States of the United Provinces, Anno 1628. 4. Burick, on the French side of the Rhene, over against Wesel, amongst goodly Corn-fields and pleasant Pastures. 5. Duyburch, or Tuitcheburg, in Latine called Tentoburgum, a Town of the ancient Germans, (as the name importeth) situate on the Rhene, betwixt the Angra and the Roor, two noted Rivers. A Town formerly of great Trading, and notably well built; Imperial, and one of the Hanse: but ceased to be Imperial when sold by Rodolph of Habsburg to Theodorick the ninth of that name, Earl of Cleve, together with 6. Cranenburgh, another Town of this Dukedom, but of lesser note. 7. Emmerich, on the Rhene, a well-frequented Town, remarkable for a very fair School. 8. Rees, 9. Griet, and 10. Griethusen, all upon the Rhene. 11. Calcar, a Town more within the Land, but not far from the River; grown wealthy by the trade of Cloathing, and the best Beer or Ale in these parts, sold thence abundantly into the Country round about. Not far from whence, at a place called Auff de Baern, it is supposed that Caesar Germanicus built his Bridge over the Rhene, when he went from Petra Castra against the Maris, a Nation of Germany. 12. Gennep, upon the Niers or Nijss, not far from its influx into the Maas: which together with Duffels and Rixewald were bought of Sigismund, the Emperour, by Adolph the first Duke of Cleve, for a great sum of money.

South of the Land of Cleve, betwixt it and Colen, lieth the County of MUERS, extended all along on the banks of the Rhene; a distinct State, the Earl of which is subject to no other Prince but the Emperour only; so called from Muers, the chief Town of it, situate on the French side of the Rhene, over against Duyburch. Next Towns to which are, 2. Orfey, 3. Angur; of which little memorable. A small Territory, but in a very fruitful Soil. The neighbourhood whereof to the Land of Colen (to which it serveth as an Outwork upon that side) preferred it in former times from the Dukes of Cleve, who otherwise, no doubt, either by Arms or Marriage had been masters of it, as they were of the adjoining Provinces on both sides of the River.

2. GULICK-LAND, or the Dukedom of Gulick, hath on the East the County of Muer, and the Land of Colen, on the West Gelderland and Limburg, on the North Cleve, and on the South the rest of the Land of Colen. The Air and Soil are much of the same nature as in Cleve; save that here is a greater plenty of Wood for dying, and a better breed of Horses than in the other, The Seat of the Menapii in the times of old.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Gulick, in Latine Juliacum, (whence the French call it Jaliers) known by that name in the Itinerary of Antoninus, sufficient proof for the Antiquity thereof, but not otherwise famous, seated upon the River Roor, the chief Seat heretofore of the Dukes of Gulick, before the uniting hereof with Cleve; and, since the dissolution of that Estate, possessed sometimes by the States of the United Provinces, and sometimes by the Spaniards, called in by the Competitors to assert their Titles. 2. Dueren, on the same River, the Marcedurum of the old Writers; and of late memorable for the long Siege which it held against Charles the fifth

the Town and Territory of Soest; and finally by John the 3. the Dukedoms of Berg and Gulick, as Heir thereof by his Mother Mary, sole Daughter and Heir of William the fifth and sixth, the last Duke thereof. To which great height this ancient and noble Family had not long attained, and thereby made themselves and their Sons and Daughters fit Matches for the greatest Princes, but it pleased God to bring to its fatal end, and by that means to dissipate this brave Estate in the hands of Strangers, as shall be shewed in the conclusion of this Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of CLEVE.

 717 1. Elias Grallius, Companion in the Wars of Charles Martel.
 732 2. Theodorick Earl of Cleve, and Lord of Teiservant.
 755 3. Rainold Son of Theodorick Earl of Cleve, and Teiservant.
 767 4. Conon, of great fame in Arms under Charles the Great.
 778 5. John Son of Conon, married the Daughter of Michael Czaropates Emp. of Constantinople.
 790 6. Robert, the eldest Son of John.
 798 7. Baldwin, the Brother of Earl Robert. After whose death, Anno 830. the Earldom of Teiservant was taken out of it, and made the portion of Robert a younger Son, from whom descended the two Houses of March and Berg.
 830 8. Ludowick Son of Baldwin.
 834 9. Eberhard Brother of Ludowick; who gave Teiservant to A.Cb. his Brother Robert.
 843 10. Luithardus Earl of Cleve.
 878 11. Baldwin II.
 918 12. Arnold.
 968 13. Wignan Son of Arnold.
 1004 14. Conrade, made an Earl of the Empire in the life of his Father.
 1045 15. Theodorick II.
 1088 16. Theodorick III. Companion of Godfrey of Bonillon in the Holy Land.
 1114 17. Arnold II. Brother of Theodorick the third.
 1161 18. Theodorick IV. Brother of Arnold III.
 1205 20. Arnold IV.
 1218 21. Theodorick V.
 1229 22. Theodorick VI.
 1247 23. Theodorick VII.
 1255 24. Theodorick VIII.
 1271 25. Theodorick IX.
 1290 26. Orbo Son of Theodorick.
 1309 27. Theodorick X. Brother of Orbo.
 1325 28. John Brother of Theodorick, and Canon of Colen; the last of the masculine issue of

29. Adolphus the VII. of March, Son of Adolph the 6. of March and Mary of Cleve, first Archbishop of Colen, (as fix of this House of March had been (almost) successively before him) succeeded on the death of his Uncle John to the Earldom of Cleve, inaugurated thereunto by Charles the Fourth.

- 1389 30. Adolph II. of Cleve, and VIII. of March, created the first Duke of Cleve by the Emperor Sigismund at the Council of Constance, Anno 1417.
 1443 31. John III. Son of Adolph, Duke of Cleve, Earl of March, and Lord of Ravenstein.
 1481 32. John II. of the rank of Dukes, and the IV. of the Earls.
 1521 33. John III. Duke of Cleve, and Earl of March, &c. by descent from his Father; and Duke of Gulick and Berg in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of William the last Duke thereof.
 1539 34. William Son of John the 3. and Mary his Wife, Daughter and sole Heir of William the last Duke of Gulick and Berg, Father of the Lady Anne of Cleve, one of the Wives of Henry the 8. of England. He contended very strongly against Charles the fifth for the Dukedom of Geldres; but, being too weak for so great an Adversary, made his Submission to him at Venlo, and so saved his Estates.
 1584 35. John-William, Son of the former William, during the life of Charles Frederick, his elder Brother, was Bishop of Munster; on whose death Anno 1575. he resigned that dignity, and in the end succeeded his Father in his whole Estates, which he managed with great piety and prudence till the year 1610. and then died issueless; the last of that ancient and noble Family of the Dukes of Cleve. After whose death much quarrel and contention grew about the Succession betwixt the several Competitors and Pretenders to it: of which the principal were, 1. Leopold, Archduke of Austria, pretending an Investiture from the Emperor Rudolphus in the Dukedom of Juliers, to whom, for want of Heirs-males, the Estate was said to be inherited. 2. John-George, Duke of Saxony, descended from Sibyll, Daughter of Duke John the third; at whose Marriage with John-Frederick the Elector of Saxony, Anno 1535, it was said to have been solemnly agreed upon, that on the falling of the Heirs-males of Cleve, the Issue of that Marriage should succeed therein. 3. George-William, Duke of Prussia, Son of John Sigismund the Elector of Brandenburg, by the Lady Anne his Wife, eldest Daughter of Albert of Brandenburg, Duke of Prussia, and of Maria Eleonora, the eldest Sister and next Heir of the Duke deceased. 4. Wolf-gangus-Gulielmus, Palatine of Newburg, Son of Magdalen, the younger Sister of that Mary, who claimed the Estate as nearest Kinsman by one degree to the said last Duke. And though the right seemed most apparently on the Duke of Brandenburg, the Estate in fact, pretended by the Duke of Saxony, being formerly cut off by Imperial authority; and that pretended to by the Duke of Newburg not of force in Germany; yet yet being that Leopold was in Arms, and had already forced a possession of Juliers and of most parts of that Countrey, the two Princes of Brandenburg and Newburg soon agreed the controversy, and by the help of the Protestant Princes their Confederates recovered the greatest part of it from the hands of Leopold. But the Palatine of Newburg, not content with his Partage, first married with a Daughter of the Duke of Bavaria, then reconciled himself to the Church of Rome, and called in the Spanish Arms, under the command of Marquess Spinola, to abate his Quarrel: which made George-William, Son of the Elector of Brandenburg, and the Lady Anne, to call in the Forces of the State, under the command of Maurice Earl of Nassau, after Prince of Orange. The Issue of which War was this, that Spinola possessed himself of Wesel, Aken, Mulheim, Duffeldorp, and most other places of importance in Berg and Gulick; with Rees and Emmerich in the five Towns of Cleve, and almost the whole County of March. And though most parts of these Estates have been delivered since to the rightful Owners, yet other places of importance are detained from them. Which notwithstanding that they both pretend to keep for the use of those Princes in whose cause they stood; yet when such long parties will win the Game; such Alterations as have happened in the chance of War, by the reciprocal winning and losing of some Towns on both sides, not much conducing to the benefit of the rightful Owners.

The Arms of these Princes were, 1. Gules over an Escabeau in Fesse Argent, a Caruncle pierced, pommelled and flowered Or, for the Dukedom of Cleve, a Or, a Lion Azure, armed Gules, for the Dukedom of Gulick. The Arms of Berg and March I have no where found.

2. The Estates of the Three ELECTOR-BISHOPS.

As pertaining to the Estates of Cleve are those of the Spiritual Electors of the Empire of Germany, Colen, Menz, and Triers; not so contiguous and continuous as those of Cleveland, and therefore to be laid out severally by their Metes and Boundaries. And first for

COLEN-Land, or the Estate of the Archbishop and Elector of Colen. It is bounded on the East with the Dukedom of Berg, divided from it by the Rhene, on the West with Gulick, on the North with Cleve it self, and the County of Munster, and on the South extending to the Land of Triers. The ancient Inhabitants heretofore were the Chibi, in former times possessed of the Countries of Berg and March; but, being warred on by the Germans bordering next upon them, they were by the clemency of Agrippa, then Lieutenant of Gaul, received into protection, and as well by placed along the French side of the Rhene, as well for defence of the Borders of the Roman Empire, as for their own security against that Enemy. Won from the Romans by the French in the Reign and under the conduct of Childeric, An. 412, or thereabouts; and from the French by the Emperor Orbo the first, An. 949. By Orbo the 2. made a part of the Dukedom of Lorraine, or at the least given by him unto Charles of France, the first Duke thereof. After whose death, deceasing without Issue-male, the Town of Colen and many other pieces upon the Rhene were seized on by Orbo the 3. and by him restored to the Empire. Since that time the City of Colen hath remained Imperial, and of late times incorporated amongst the Hanse-Towns; but the Territory near unto it, and a great part of Westphalia, subject immediately to the Bishop. The Bishop's See was first founded here by S. Maternus, one of the Disciples of S. Peter, as hath been constantly affirmed by old Tradition: but howsoever it was an Episcopal See, without all question, in the time of Constance, Maternus, Bishop heretofore, subscribing amongst others to the Council of Arles, Anno 326. And being Colen was in those times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Secunda, the Bishop had the power of a Metropolitan; according to the rule and observation so often mentioned. Afterwards when the Empire was made Elective, these Bishops, with their brethren of Menz and Triers, were made three of the seven which were to nominate and elect the succeeding Emperor: after which time it is no wonder that they grew both in Power and Patrimony.

Places of most importance within this Electorate are, 1. Bonn, situate on the banks of the Rhene, in the most pleasant and fruitful place of all the Country; the ordinary Residence of the Archbishop, whose House or Palace here is said to be one of the fairest in all Germany. By Tacitus it is called Bonna, and sometimes Castra Bonna, the Wintering-camp in his time of the Sixth Legion. 2. Nuy, by the same Writer called Novesium, (Novesium by Antoninus) seated on the Elp, not far from its fall into the Rhene; the break-neck of the glories of Charles Duke of Burgundy, who being resolved to get this Town into his hands, as a convenient pass into Germany, lay for long before it, that he left the opportunity of joining with King Edward the 4. of England, whom he had purposely invited to the War of France, and yet was slain so without it. By means whereof he grew so low in reputation, that he was undermined by the French, defied by the Swissers, and at last overthrown and slain by that beggarly Nation. 3. Ernae, or Adenach, by Marcellinus called Antenacum, one of the ten Garrisons erected by the Romans on the banks of the Rhene, to secure their Province from the Germans; the other nine being Confluentes, Boppard, Worms, Bing, Zabern, Altrip, Seltz, Strasbourg, and Wassleben. 4. Lintz, seated on the same River also. 5. Sonnin, a Town of good repute. 6. Zulp, now a Village of no esteem but for the Antiquities of it, by Tacitus and Antoninus called Tollacum, most memorable for the great Victory which Clevis the first Christian King of the French (upon a Vow made in the heat of the Fight to embrace the Gospel) never obtaining against the whole power of the Almans, never precluding after that to invade his Territories. 7. Rhinberg, commonly called Bereck, the chief Northern Town of all the Bishopricks, situate on the Rhene, (as the name imports) there where the Lands of this Bishop as also of the Dukes of Cleve and the Earls of Munster meet upon a point. A Town which for these 60 years hath been of little use or profit to the right Owner, possessed sometimes by the Spaniards, sometimes by the Confederate States; for each commodiously feared, as opening a passage up the River, and receiving great Customs on all kind of Merchandise passing to and fro. But having finally been possessed by the Spaniards from the year 1606 till 1633, it was then regained for the State by Henry of Nassau, Prince of Orange, with the loss of no more than 60 men: there being found in the Town 30 brass pieces of Ordnance, 750 barrels of powder, with Vituals and Ammunition of all sorts thereunto proportionable. 8. Colen, situate on the Rhene, first built by the Chibi before mentioned, and by them called Oppidum Ubiorum; afterwards, in honour of Agrippa (Daughter of Germanicus, and Wife of Claudius) who was here born, made a Roman Colony, and called Colonia Agrippina, and sometimes by way of eminence Colonia only; thence the name of Colen. A rich, large, populous and magnificent City, containing above five miles in compass, in which are numbered 19 Hospitals, 37 Monasteries of both Sexes, 30 Chapels of our Lady, 9 Parishes, and 10 Collegiat Churches, besides the Cathedral, being a Church of vast greatness, but of little beauty, and not yet finished: the Metropolitan whereof is Chancellor of Italy, the second of the three Electors, and writes himself Duke of Wesphalen and Angriaria. Nigh to this Town did Cæsar with incredible expedition make a Bridge over the Rhene, which more terrified the barbarous enemy than the reports of his valour. So powerful is laborious industry, that it overcometh all diftaters, and maketh the most unpassable waters void to heriack resolutions.

In this Town also is said to lie the bodies of the Three wife men which came from the East to worship our Saviour, vulgarly called the three Kings of Colen. The whole Story is at large written in Tables which are fastened unto their Tombs; the pith whereof is this: The first of them, called Melchior, an old man with a large Beard, offered Gold, unto a King; the second, called Caspar, a beardless young man, offered Frankincense, as unto God; the third called Balthasar, a Blackmore, with a spreading Beard, offered Myrrhe, as unto a Man ready for his Sepulchre. That they were of Arabia, the Table faith is probable. 1. Because they came from the East, and so is Arabia in respect of Hiernsalem; and 2. because it is said in the 72 Psalm, The Kings of Arabia shall bring gifts. As for their Bodies, there are there said to have been translated by Helena the Mother of Constantine, unto Constantinople, from thence by Eusebius, Bishop of Milain, removed unto Milain; and finally brought hither by Rainold, Bishop hereof, Anno 1164. This is the substance of the History, which for my part I reckon amongst the Apocrypha, (except it be their coming from some part of Arabia) but have not leisure in this place to refel the Fable.

As for the temporal Estate of the Bishops of Colen, it came unto them specially by the munificence of the Emperours of the House of Saxony; the Dukedom of Engern, containing a good part of Wesphalen, being acquired unto this See by Bruno, once Archbishop hereof, one of the younger Sons of the Emperor Henry the first, furnished the Fowler, with the consent of Orto the first, his elder Brother. To which was added not long after the whole Land of Colen (as we have formerly described it) by Orto the 2. which being formerly a part of the Kingdom of Lorrain, was taken out of it, and settled on the Bishops hereof, at such time as the Dukedom of Lorrain was erected by him; such pieces only as are found on the other side of the Rhene (neither great nor many) being added by the Wit and Industry of the following Bishops: exceedingly increased both in Power and Patrimony by the addition of Liege to this Electorate; it being of late the constant custom of the Canons of Liege to chuse the Archbishop of Colen for their Prince and Pastor.

Next to the Bishoprick of Colen lieth the Land of TRIERS, extended all along the course of the Moselle, from the Dukedom of Lorrain on the South, beyond the Influx of that River into the Rhene at the City of Confluentz, where it bordereth on the Land of Colen. It is bounded on the East with Luxemburg, as on the West with that part of Franconia which lieth below the confluence of the said two Rivers, and is now called Rhineweg; more Southward on that side with the Country of West-riech and the Dukedom of Zweibruck, parts of the Palatinate of the Rhene. The Country towards Lorrain and Luxemburg is somewhat wild and barren, more fruitful about Triers it self and the bank of the Rhene; in all parts generally more pleasant than profitable, the greatest Riches of it lying in Woods and Minerals. The Bishop's See was here first erected by Encherius, a Disciple and follower of S. Peter. The reality whereof is not only testified by the Martyrologies, but by Methodius, a Writer of approved credit, who adds Valerius, and Maternus for his next Successors; the line Episcopal continuing till the Council of Arles, Anno 326. Agittius Bishop of Triers subscribing to the Acts thereof. From this time forwards, and before, the Bishop had the reputation and authority of a Metropolitan, the City of Triers being anciently the Metropolis of Belgica Prima, within which it stands. It increased exceedingly by being made one of the three Electors of the Spirituality, though the last in order, and Chancellor to the Emperor for the Realm of France: the Fortunes of which Realm it followed, till wrested from it, with the rest of the Kingdom of Lorrain, by the German Emperours.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Confluentz, or Coblentz, the Confluens of Antoninus, so called because seated on the Confluence or Meeting of the Rhene and the Moselle; the Station anciently of the first Legion. A populous and well-built Town, and seated in a pleasant and fertile Country. 2. Erenbrefheim, over against Coblentz, on the other side of the Rhene, beautified with a strong Castle of the Bishop's, mounted upon a lofty Hill, which not only gives a gallant prospect to the eye, but commands both the Town and River. 3. Boppard, seated on the Rhene, and called quæsi Bonport, from the commodiousness of the Creek (upon which it standeth) for the use of Shipping: one of the Forts (as Confluentz before mentioned) also was erected by the Romans on the Rhene for defence of Gaul against the Germans; occasioning in time both Towns. It was once miserably wasted by Richard Earl of Cornwall and King of the Romans, because the Bishop of Triers agreed not unto his Election, but soon recovered of those hurts. The ancient name hereof in the Itinerary of Antoninus is supposed to be Idobriaca. It was pawned to the Bishops of Triers by Henry the 7. and not yet redeemed. 4. Sarbrucken, on the edge of Lorrain, (by Antoninus called Pons Sarnæ) seated on the River or Brook called Sar, (whence it taketh the name) at the fall thereof into the Moselle; possessed at the present by a Branch of the House of Nassau, (but Homagers of this Elector) entituled hence, according to the Dutch fashion, Counts of Nassau in Sarbruck. 5. Veldentz, and 6. Beiffeln, on the Moselle, of which nothing memorable. 7. Treves, or Triers, in Latine Augusta Trevirorum, the principal City of the Trevis, who possessed this Tract; seated upon the Moselle also; the Metropolis of the Province of Belgica Prima, and honoured with the Residence of the Vicar or Lieutenant-General for the whole Diocess of Gaul; by consequence the Seat of a Metropolitan when it fulfilled to the Gospel. Of such antiquity is it, that it is said to have been founded 150 years before the City of Rome: of no great beauty of it self, and as little Trading; the River not being capable of Ships of burthen, and the Air generally cloudy and inclined to rain, that it is by some called merely Cloaca Planetarum. It passed sometimes among the number of Imperial Cities, but now acknowledged the Elector for the Lord thereof; by whom it was made an University, one of the ancientest in all Germany, and of as much repute for the Study of good Arts and Sciences as the best amongst them. 8. Ober-Wesel, or Valsala superior, (so called to distinguish it from Wesel in the Dukedom of Cleve, which is Valsala inferior, or the Under-Wesel) the farthest place of this District, seated on the Rhene, not far from Baccarbach a Town of the Palatinate; of no great note, but that it is accounted for a Town Imperial.

This Country anciently was part of the great and famous Earldom of Moselle, denominated from the River Moselle, along the Course whereof it was first erected; an an Estate founded by the diherited Sons of Cledian, second King of the French, at the same time (and on the same occasion also) in which the Earldom of Ardenne was erected by them, of which we have already spoken when we were in Belgium: this of the two the more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Metz, as lying nearer to the Court, and so more in light the other being farther off, in Countries far less cultivated, but more defensible. This Earldom comprehending, besides this of Triers, the Countries of Zweibrucken and West-riech, and so much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the French side of the Rhene, occasioned the Princes of it to be much looked after; and they maintained their Port to the very last: in the time of the Emperor Henry the first, furnished the Fowler, was thought by him a fit Husband for his Daughter Gerborg, married after his decease to Lewis furnished Transmarine, King of France; and Gertrude, Daughter of Theodorick, who came after Gilbert, was married to Henry surnamed Gozelo, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, and by him made the Mother of another Henry, Successor unto Orto the 3. in the Roman Empire. Impoverished not a little both in Power and Patrimony by the erection to the Dukedom of Lorrain, there grew some Feuds between those Houses, occasioning the death of Albert, another of these Earls, slain (as it is said by Lactius) by Godfrey, Son of Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrain; more probably by some other Prince of the House of Ardenne, it not being founded in any other approved Author, that Godfrey of Bouillon was the Father of any Children. But this Difference being reconciled by the Marriage of Bertha, Daughter of Simon Earl hereof, with Thierrie the 9. Duke of Lorrain, and the Family of these Earls expiring in a short time after, this part of the Estate was seized on by the Bishops of Triers; that part of the Palatinate which lieth on the Gallick side of the Rhene, by the Bishops of Metz, Spire, Wormes, and the Princes Palatine; the rest being taken in by the Dukes of Lorrain, who did still enjoy it: the Emperours of those times being either willing to it, or not able to help it.

3. The Bishoprick of MENTZ is not laid out by Bounds and Limits, as the other, because the Patrimony and Estate thereof doth not lie together, dispersed for the most part among Franconia, intermixed with the Lands & Towns of the Princes Palatine, the Bishops of Wormes, Spire, and others. So that the Temporal Estate of this Elector is every way inferior unto those of Triers and Colen; superior unto both in place and dignity, he being the first in rank of the whole Electoral College, Chancellor for the Empire, and in all Meetings sitteth at the right hand of the Emperor. The Bishop's See was first placed here, as some report by S. Crescens, one of the Disciples of S. Paul, of whose being sent by him into Gallia (for so the Ancient Writers understand Galatia) the Apostle speaketh 2 Tim. 4. Though others with more probability feat him at Treves in Daulphine. But whether it were here or there, certain it is, that anciently this City was a See Episcopal; Marinus, the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. And if a Bishop, certainly a Metropolitan Bishop, this City being in those times the Metropolis of the Province of Germania Prima. But Christianity being worn out of these parts of Germany by the Conquest of the French, Almans, and other Infidels, was again restored in this Tract by Boniface, an Englism, man, the first Archbishop of Metz, of this new Plantation, (in and about the time of Pepin furnished the Grass, Major of the Palace to the French Kings, and Father of Carl), who, for the Orthodoxy of his Doctrine, and the number of Churches planted by him, hath been deservedly honoured with The title of the Apostle of Germany.

Towns of most note belonging to the Bishops hereof are, 1. Metz, it self, the Magnificence of the Ancients, so called from the River of Maine, formerly Mogus and Mogonia in the Latine, (now better known by the name of Maine) opposite to the fall whereof into the Rhene it was built of old, so having the command of both Rivers; and for that cause made the Seat of a Roman Officer, commonly called the Duke of Metz, who had a charge of the Frontiers, and especially of those ten Garrisons planted on the banks of the Rhene, spoken of before. It is stretched out in great length on the River's side, but not of arduous breadth; well built, and populous towards the water, in other parts not well inhabited. The publick Buildings generally are very large and beautiful, the House built according to the old Roman Model; the most magnificent whereof is the Bishop's Palace, who is the Immediate Lord both of the Town and Territory, extended on both sides of the Rhene, fruitful in all natural Commodities and abounding with most excellent Wines. Of good note also for an University here founded by Theodorick, one of the Electors, but especially for the Art of Printing, which was here invented, or perfected at the least, and made fit for use. 2. Bing, seated on the Rhene, another of the Garrison-Towns erected by the Romans on the Banks of that River. In a small Island of which, not far from this Town, is a Tower or Callet called the Mons-turm, i. e. the Tower of Mice, built by one Hatto (or Hanno) Archbishop of Metz, Anno 900, or thereabouts, who, in a year of great scarcity, pretending to relieve the poor people oppressed with Famine, caused them to be gathered together into an old Barn, where he burnt them all, saying, They were the Rats, and Mice which devoured the Corn. After which barbarous act he was so persecuted by these Vermine, that to avoid them, he was fain to build a Palace in the midst of the Rhene, whither the Rats and Mice followed him, and at last devoured him. 3. Lantfeld, 4. Haford, 5. Oxenford, 6. Alderberg, 7. Middleberg, 8. Corlofsadt, the Birth place of Carolfus, of great note in the time of Luther. 9. Bischoffstein, 10. Königsberg, (Mons regius in Latine) the Birth place of Joannes de Monte, a famous Mathematician, as appears by his Comment upon Ptolemy's Almagest. Most of which Towns being in Frankland, though of his Electorate, were not gained in gross by these Electors, as were the Land of Colen and District of Triers, but piece-meal in a manner, and by retail; partly upon the failure of the House of Schwarben, Dukes of Franconia also, partly by the munificence of the German Emperours, but specially by making the best use of their Votes and suffrages in the Choice of the Emperours, which they did not part withal for nothing. Such Towns hereof as lie on the French side of the Rhene were gained by like means upon the expiration of the House of Moselle.

3. The PALATINATE of the RHENE.

THE PALATINATE of the RHENE is bounded upon the East with the Dukedom of Wirttemberg and some part of Franconia, with the refidue thereof and the River of Maine on the North, on the South with Elffers or Alfatia, and on the West with the Land of Triers; extended in length from Conft to Gernersheim, North and South, 72 miles, and in breadth from Zweibrucken to Lauden, East and West, 90 miles.

It is called the Lower Palatinate, to difference it from the Palatinate of Bavaria, which is called the Upper; the Palatinate name of the Rhene, because lying on the banks of that famous River. The whole Country is said to be the most pleasant part of all Germany, stored with all sorts of Fruits and Metals, abounding with those cool Wines which growing on the banks of the Rhene, have the name of Rhenish; adorned with many goodly Towns, both for strength, populousness, and beauty; and finally, watered with the famous River of the Rhene, and the Neccar.

The Religion of this Country, and that of the Upper Palatinate, which depends upon it, hath much varied since the first Reformation established by Frederick the second according to the Form and Doctrine of the Confession of Angiward, the Doctrine and Discipline of the Lutheran being introduced by Frederick the third, the Lutheran Form restored again by Lewis of Ludowick the fifth, after his death exchanged by the ends of some needy Statists, who could not otherwise raise their Fortunes than by invading the Tithes and Glebe, and other poor remainders of the Church's Patrimony; of which the Clergy being universally deprived throughout this Country, and reduced to miserable poor stipends, by the name of a Competency, became so contemptible, and neglected by all sorts of men, that at the last the Church of the Palatinate was in the same condition with the Church of Israel under the Reign of Jeroboam, when Priests were made out of the meanest of the people. And for the Government of the Churches, though moulded to the Geneva Plat-form as near as it might be, yet were those Princes loth to leave too much power in the hands of the Elderships, and therefore did appoint four superior Officers to have an eye on them, whom they called Inspectores & Presbyteri, their Power being much the same with that of the particular Superintendents amongst the Lutherans; and over them a standing Consistory consisting of three Ministers and as many Counsellors of State, of the Prince's nominating, who in his name were to take care of all things which concerned the Church. A Temperament for which they were beholden to Erasmus, a Doctor of Physick in the University of Heidelberg, who made this Pill, to purge Presbytery of some Popish humours which secretly lay hid in the body of it. But this whole Model and Religion of the Country is much changed of late, and the Religion of the Church of Rome restored in most parts thereof since the Conquest of them by the Spaniards and Bavarians, which before we speak of.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Mosbach, a pretty neat Town on the banks of the Neccar, and a Prefecture, not far from the borders of Wurtemberg; 2. Ludenberg, near the influx of the same River into the Rhene; the moiety whereof was brought by Rupertus, the Emperor, and Palatine of the Earls of Holstein, An. 1571, the other moiety belonging to the Bishop of Wormes; 3. Weinheim, a small Town not far from Ludenberg, belonging once to the Arch-Bishop of Mentz, but on some controversy arising about the Title, adjudged unto the said Rupertus and his Heirs for ever. 4. Sieffelen, in the same Tract, well seated but not very large, laid with the Castle of Stralburg to the said Rupertus by Sigfride (or Sigfride) of Stralburg, the said Heir bequeath, An. 1547. 5. Heidelberg, on the right shore of the Neccar, (going down the water) compassed on three sides with Mountains and lying open only towards the West, which makes the Heir thereof to be very unhealthy. The chief Beauty of it lieth in one long Street, extended in length from East to West: on the South-east side whereof is a fair & pleasant Market-place, and not far off a very high Mountain called Königsstuhl, (that is to say, the King's Seat) upon the middle ascent whereof is the Castle, where the Princes Electors use to keep their Courts, and on the very Summit or top thereof, the ruins of an old Tower blown up with Gun-powder. A Town of no great bigness, nor very populous, there being but one Church in it, which was used in the time of my Author for Prayer and Preaching: the rest being either ruined, or employed unto other uses, if not repaired again, since the Spaniards became masters of it, for more frequent Masses. However, it had the reputation of being the chief Cities of this Palatinate, not long since furnished with a great and gallant Library, which for choice and number of Books (especially Manuscripts) was thought not to be followed in all Europe; (sic) matched if not over-matched, by the famous Bodleian Library of Oxford. Most of them to the great prejudice of the protestant Cause were carried to Rome, and other places of that party, when the Town was taken by the Spaniards, Anno 1620. Finally for the Town it self, it was once part of the possessions of the Bishop of Wormes, from whom it was taken by the Palatines; and it is now famous for being the Seat of the Palgrave, the Sepulchred Rodolphus Agricola, and for a University founded by the Emperor and Palatine Rupertus, An. 1346. 6. Bacharach, on the Banks of the Rhene, so called quasi Bach ara, for the excellent Wines. 7. Coblenz, on the other side of the water; near unto which is the old and fair Castle called Pfalz, from whence the name Pfalz-grave, or off-grave seemeth to some to have been derived. 8. Oppenheim, a strong Town, which together with Kesferslautern an Ingelheim were given to the Palatines by Wenceslaus, and after settled on them by Rupertus the Emperor and Palatine for 100000 Florens, Anno 1421. 9. Creutznach, called anciently Staronsus. 10. Frankendale, lately a Monastery only, but being well served by such of the Netherlands, who to avoid the fury of the Duke of Alva fled thither, is now a Town of principal strength. 11. Gernersheim; and 12. Mannheim, a well-fortified Town, seated on the Confluence of Rhine and Neccar.

On the Eastern part of the Country standeth 13. Ladenburg, situate on the little River Tauber, the farthest bound of the Palatinate towards the North-east, there adjoining to the rest of Frankendale. And on West side the Towns of 14. Neustadt, 15. Kesferslautern, in Latin called Cæsarea Lutra, once a Town Imperial, from which, and from its situation, on the River Lauter, it received this name. 16. Zweibrücken, inveighed with a large and ample Territory round about, called the Country of Zweibrücken, the Patrimony and Title of a younger House of the Pfalgrave, whom the Latin Writers call Principi-Bipontani, the French the Princes of Denzpont, 17. Simmeren, on the North-west point of it, where it meets with the district of Trier; the Title of another Branch of the Palatine Family, called the Duke of Simmeren, situate in that part of the Country which is called Wischgraben, of which Zweibrücken is also part. In all there are contained within the Palatinate 24 walled Towns and 12 fair Palaces of the Prince: most of which they have added to their Estates within little more than 400 years. Such excellent managers have they been of their own Estates, so potent in ordering the affairs of the Empire both in War and Peace, and so ingrafted themselves into the most notable Families of Germany, that I may well say with Terentius, Non est alia Germaniae Familia cui plus debeat Nobilitas.

Within the Limits of this Country, and Intermixed with the Lands of the Princes Palatine, are the Bishopricks of Spire and Wormes; both ancient of great Revenue, but Feudatories for a great part of their Estates to these Electors. Of these more towards the head of the Rhene, and on the Gallic side thereof stands the City of Spire; by Ptolemy called Nemagus, from the newness of the building when that name was given by Antoninus, Civitas Nemetur, from the Nemetes, who possessed this Tract; and sometimes Spira, by which name it doth still

continue. A Town Imperial, and anciently a Bishop's See. Tiffi the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen, Anno 347. A neat Town, and very delightably seated; of great repute, by reason of the Imperial Chamber, the Sovereign Court of Judicature of all the Empire, capable of Appeals from the Tribunals of all Princes and free States thereof. A Court which first followed the Emperor in all his Removes, (as anciently the King's Bench in England) but by Maximilian the Emperor first made sedentary, and fixed at Frankfurt; removed after to Wormes, and finally to this City by Charles the fifth. Sufficiently famous in that the name of Primates was here taken up, given to the Princes and free Cities following the Reformed Religion, upon their legal Protestation here exhibited. More down the water and on the same shore thereof, stands the City of Wormes, one of those built upon the Rhene for defence of Gaul against the Germans; by Ptolemy called Borbetomagus by Antonine Civitas Wormensis, whence the modern name; but generally Civitas Angionum, from the Angiones, the old Inhabitants of that town, whose chief City it was. A Town Imperial as the former, and a See Episcopal as that is, and as ancient too; Viktor the Bishop hereof subscribing to the Acts of the Council of Colen before mentioned. A Town to be observed for the first appearance which Luther made before Charles the 5. (the Imperial Chamber then being holden in this City) who, being dissuaded from that journey by some of his Friends, returned this resolute Answer, That go he would, though there were as many Devils in the Town as there were Tiles on the Houses. Chief Towns belonging to this Bishop are, 1. Udenheim, a Town belonging to the Bishop of Spire, whose Residence it sometimes is; conveniently seated for the command of the Country, and therefore upon some design which was then in hand fortified strongly by the Bishop. But this new Fortification, being begun in a time of Peace, gave great occasion of distrust to the neighbouring Princes, who interposed with Frederick the fifth, then Prince Elector, (of whom it was held in chief) to cause the Bishop to desist from the finishing of it. Which when he had refused to do, pleading a Placart from the Emperor Matthias to complete the work, the Prince Elector with the rest of the Confederates beat it down by force. For this contempt they were cited to Spire, the Imperial Chamber, in which it was also resolved to proceed suddenly and severely to their condemnation. One of the chief motives which occasioned that unfortunate Prince to entertain the offer of the Crown of Bohemia, and consequently a chief cause of the German Wars. In managing whereof this Town was thought so commodious, that Marques Spisla caused the works to be raised again, made it the strongest Hold in all those Countries, and caused it to be called by the name of Philipsburg. 2. Rottenberg, originally belonging to the Bishops of Spire, but of late times possessed by the Princes Palatine. Others of lesser note I forbear to mention.

The first Inhabitants of this Country on the French side of the Rhene were the Nemetes and Angiones spoken of before the other side of the Intervi. That on the West side of the River was first conquered by the Romans, and from them by the French, of whose Empire it remained a part, but so that it was subject more immediately to the Earls of Moselle, first under the Sovereignty and Vassalage of the Kings of Metz, and after of the Kings of Lorraine. In the dividing of which Kingdom between the Emperors of Germany and the Kings of France, it became subject to the Empire, but still possessed by those of Moselle as it was before. Elcheating to the Empire on the expiration of that Family, partly by force of Arms, partly by paying down ready Money, and partly too by filling of their Voices, as they saw occasion, it was gained by the Electors Palatine: and so also that part of it which lies on the Dutch side of the Rhene, which being anciently and properly a part of Frankendale, followed the fortunes of that Country, till the failure of the House of Schwaben, and then devolved unto the Empire, as the other did. By little and little it got into the hands of the Princes Palatine, who being originally Officers of the Emperor's Household, (such as the Maiores of the Palace to the French Kings at the first institution) had first the honour of Counts Palatine bestowed upon them, and afterwards the place of an Elector in the choice of the Emperor. But where their Estates then lay, where they fixed their dwelling, and what Provinces or people they had subject to them, nullo inventi scriptum, I could never find any good Record to build on, saith the learned Munster; their habitation and possession in and of these parts (acquired for the most part by Arms and Money) not being above 450 years standing at the utmost. Likely it is, they had their Residence for the most part in the Emperor's Palace, living upon their Rents, (as others great Officers of Court in these late times) the Dignity and Authority of so great a place seeming sufficient to content them: but were called Comm Palatines of the Rhene, because their Jurisdiction and Authority lay most especially in those parts of the Empire which were towards that River. Afterwards, on the Marriage of Otto, the second of that name, Duke of Bavaria, with Gerrude, the Daughter of Henry the Elector Palatine, this Office with the Electoral Dignity fell into that House, possessed at that time of those parts of Francia and the Earldom of Moselle, who not long after, on the dividing of that Estate betwixt Rodolphus and Ludovicus, the Sons of Ludovic the 2. Elector Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, made up this Palatinate. A State which suddenly received a great augmentation, partly by the care & good husbandry of Rupertus, Emperor & Elector Palatine, partly by the weakness and ambition of Wenceslaus, Emperor and King of Bohemia, and partly by the valour of Frederick the Prince Elector. Of these the first brought in the Towns of Weinheim, Ladenburg, Sieffelen, and the Castle of Stralburg, with their lands and Territories. The second gave unto the Palatines, for their Voices in his Election, three strong Towns of the Empire, viz. Kesferslautern, Ingelheim, and Oppenheim. And the last took in Battel, An. 1452, the Earls of Wirtemberg, the Marquises of Baden, the Bishop of Spire, and the Archbishop of Mentz, and ransomed them on what condition he pleased. More particularly the Earl of Wirtemberg (for it was not yet erected into a Dukedom) paid for his ransom 100000 Florens: the Bishop of Mentz redeemed himself for 40000 Florens. The Bishop of Spire gave for his liberty the Towns of Rottenberg and Wersau. And the Marquises of Baden yielded up in lieu of his freedom the Country of Spanheim, of which Creutznach is a part, the Towns of Beßken and Binheim, the right which he pretended to Eppingen, a Town over against Gernersheim and his Royalties between this Gernersheim and Seltz, a Town of Alsacia, in Filling and Hunting. So having brought these Princes unto their Estates, let us next take a view of those who have succeeded jointly both the State and Title, as far as we can go by the light of Story.

1. Henry, Count Palatine in the time of Otto the third, by him ordained to be one of the six Electors.
2. Sigfride, the Son of Adelheid, Wife of the fix Henry the Elector, by a former Husband.

3. Ezelino

3. Ezeline and Conrade, Sons of Sigefride.
 4. Ludolphus, Son to Ezeline.
 5. Conrade, Elector Palatine in the time of Henry the fifth.
 6. Frederick, Son to Frederick Duke of Schwaben, Nephew to the Emperor Conrade the third.
 7. Henry II. surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria.
 1195 8. Henry III. Son of Henry the Lion, and Husband of Clémence, Daughter of Conrade, D. of Schwaben and Elector Palatine.
 9. Henry IV. Son of Henry the third, in the life of his Father, the last Elector Palatine of the nomination and appointment of the Emperor, the Dignity from hence-forwards becoming hereditary.
 10. Otho, Duke of Bavaria, of that name the second, Elector Palatine of the Rhene in right of Gertrude his Wife, Sister and next Heir of Henry the fourth, whom he succeeded in the Electoral Dignity, confirmed therein by the Emperor Frederick the second.
 1269 11. Ludovicus, Elector Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, the Son of Otho.
 1294 12. Rodolphus, the eldest Son of Lewis or Ludovicus, succeeded his Father in the Palatinate and Electoral Dignity; Northgöia, or the Palatinate of Bavaria, being added to his part, to make even the scale; his younger Brother Ludovicus succeeding in Bavaria.
 1315 13. Adolphus, surnamed the Simple, resigned the Electoral Dignity to his Brother Rodolphus, as the fitter man to undertake it.
 1327 14. Rodolphus II. on the Resignation of Adolphus.
 1337 15. Rupertus, the Brother of Rodolphus the second, Founder of the University of Heidelberg, Anno 1346.
 1386 16. Rupertus II. Son of Adolphus the Simple.
 1398 17. Rupertus III. elected Emperor in the place of Venceslaus King of Bohemia, Anno 1406, made Knight of the Garter by King Henry the fourth.
 1410 18. Ludovicus II. surnamed Cæcus and Barbatus, the eldest Son of Rupertus the Emperor, married Blanch, Daughter to K. Henry, the fourth of England.
 1439 19. Ludovicus III. Son of Lewis the second.
 1451 20. Frederick, Brother of Ludovicus, during the Minority of Philip his said Brother's Son, succeeded in the Electoral Dignity, and added much to that Estate by his personal Vertue.
 1478 21. Philip, the Son of Lewis the third, pretended to the Dukedom of Bavaria in right of Margaret his Wife; but, after a long and bloody War, was forced to go without it.
 1508 22. Ludovicus IV. Son of Philip.
 1544 23. Frederick II. Brother of Lewis the fourth, who first introduced the Reformed Religion into the Palatinate.
 1556 24. Otho-Henry, Son of Rupertus, the Brother of Frederick and Lewis, the last of the direct Line of this House of Bavaria.
 1559 25. Frederick III. Duke of Simmeren, descended from Stephen Palatine of Zweibrück or Bipont, younger Son of the Emperor Rupertus, succeeded on the decease of Otho-Henry without Issue.
 1576 26. Ludovicus V. Son of Frederick the third, a

- munificent Benefactor to the University of Heidelberg.
 1583 27. Frederick IV. Son of Lewis the fifth, married Ludovica, or Louisa, Daughter of William, and Sister of Maurice, Princes of Orange.
 1610 28. Frederick V. Son of Frederick the fourth, married the Princess Elizabeth, Daughter of James King of Great Britain. In danger of being proscribed for demolishing the Works of Udenheim, he accepted the Crown of Bohemia. But worsted at the Battle of Prague, and warred upon by the Bavarians and the Spaniards, he lost both that and his own native Estates and Dignities, of which he was deprived by Ferdinand the prevailing Emperor; the Lower Palatinate being assigned over to and conquered by the King of Spain, the Upper Palatinate, with the Electoral Dignity, bestowed on the Duke of Bavaria. Restored to the possession of the most part of his Country by the power of the Swedes, he died at Mentz, November 29, 1632. the whole Country falling again not long after under the power and Government of the former Conquerors.
 1631 29. Charles-Ludovicus, the Heir both of his Father's Estates and Misfortunes too; not yet admitted to his Honours, (contrary to the Fundamental Constitutions of the Empire, by which the Sons of the Electors and other Princes are not involved in the guilt of their Fathers offences) but in fair hopes to be restored thereto in part, by the Pacification made at Münster this present year 1648: which I pray God to prosper, for the peace of afflicted Christendom.

Now to proceed to the Civil State, and the Concernment of these Princes. The Palgrave hath many Privileges above the Electors of either Fort. He taken place of the Duke of Saxony and Marquess of Brandenburg, because Henry the Palatine was defended of Charles the Great: for which cause he is also, in the Vacancy of the Empire, Governour of the Western parts of Germany. In which Office he had power to alienate or give Offices, to take Fealty and Homage of the Subjects, and which is most, to sit in the Imperial Courts, and give Judgment of the Emperor himself. And look whatsoever shall in the Vacancy of the Empire be by the Palatines enacted, that the new Emperors are by Oath to confirm and ratify.

The Revenues of these Princes were conceived to be about 100000 l. per annum; nor could they be supposed at less: the Silver mines about Amberg only in the Upper Palatinate yielding 60000 Crowns a year, and the passage of one Bridge over the Rhene about 20000 Crowns more, besides the Demesne Lands, and the Lands of the Church, incorporated (since the Reformation) into their Estate.

4. ALSATIA.

ALSATIA (or ELSAZ, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the East with the Rhene, which parteth it from the Marquise of Baden, and some parts of Schwaben; on the West with the Mountain Fangs or Vogeses, which separateth it from Lorraine; on the North with the Palatinate; on the South (where it groweth very very narrow) with a point of Switzerland. A Country for the Pleasants and fertility of it inferior to none in Germany: called therefore Elfsaz, (as some think) quasi Edilsaz, that is to say, a noble Seat; derived more probably by others from the River Il, the only River of note in all this Tract, and called so, quasi Ilfsaz, the Seat or situation on the River Il.

It is divided generally into the Lower, and Higher, to which the Country called Sungow may come in for a third. The LOWER ALSATIA is that which bordereth on the Palatinate, so called because farther off from the Mountains, and down the water in respect of the course of the Rhene. A Country so abundantly fruitful in Wine and Corn (with which it furnisheth some parts of Germany, and not a few of the neighbour-Countries) that it is generally called Germania Nutrix, or the Nurse of Germany, by Winpbelegius, the Epitome, or Abstract of it. Chief Towns therein are, 1. Straeßburg, so called from the multitude of Streets, (the Dutch call them Stræts) anciently Argentoratum and then Argentaria, from the Roman Exchequer or Receipt, here kept in the time of their Greatness; or from some Mines of Silver which were found about it. A lately, rich, and populous City, well stored with publick Garners and Cellars of Wine against times of Dearth; situate on the two Rivers Il and Brusels, where they both fall into the Rhen; by which, and by the helps of Art, it is very strongly fortified: designed from the first foundation for a Town of War, this being another of the Towns which the Romans built to defend the Rhene against the Germans; now an Imperial City, and a See Episcopall, the Bishop whereof is Lord of the Lower Alsatia. The Church Cathedral is one of the fairest in all Germany, much famed for a clock of most admirable workmanship, and a Steeple as curious a frame as that, mounted 574 foot in height, the highest of any in Christendom, higher (if the measure of it be not mistaken) by 40 foot than the Steeple of St. Pauls in London before the firing of it. Of this thus saith the Poet in Adrianns,

 Maxima cui celsæ meuiuntur mania turris,
 Straßburg on Rhene's inamell'd Banks doth lie, Whole Tower even bids defiance to the Skie.*

2. Zabern, or Elfsaz Zabern, the Taberna of Antonine and Marcellinus, another of the old Roman Garrisons, destroyed by the Almans, and repaired again by Julian the Apollate, then Emperor; now the chief place of Residence for the Bishops of Straeßburg, and well frequented in regard of the Courts of Justice kept by his Officers in this City for the Lower Alsatia. 3. Altrip, so called from Alta ripa, from the high banks of the River on which it is seated; another of the Towns or Forts which the Romans, like politic Conquerors, built on the West side of the Rhene, to prohibit the Incursions of the barbarous Nations. And so was 4. Seltz, seated on the Rhene betwixt Straeßburg and Zabern. And 5. Wiesbaden, more towards the Palatinate, now a Town Imperial, but seated on the River Lutra, not far from its fall into the Rhene; encompassed with little Hills and delightful Groves, the River gently washing the Walls thereof, and adding much to its both of strength and beauty. 6. Hagenau, between Seltz and Straeßburg, but not so near unto the Rhene as either of them, first walled by Frederick Barbarossa, Anno 1164, and since that time of great importance for command of the Country, but seated in a sandy and unfruitful Soil; frequented chiefly heretofore by the old Landgraves of Elfsaz for the commodities of hunting. More from the Rhens, 7. Stechels, corruptly so called for Steffels, from the Monastery of S. Stephen there founded 18. Haut, on the Brusels, &c.

Places of the most importance in the HIGHER ALSATIA are, 1. Ruffach, on the River Ombach, belonging to the Bishops of Straeßburg, of old called Knechtum, from the red colour of the earth, well built, environed with a double Suburb; in ancient times of great repute by the Roman Nobility, much taken with the fruitfulness and pleasures of it, and well inhabited at this day, as is all the Country round about it; by reason of their vigorous proceedings against Thieves; from whence the Germans have a Proverb, that the old Gallies at Ruffach is made of Oak 2. Eupheim, or Ensfloem, on the River Il; anciently the Station of the Tenth Legion, and then called Aruncis; now of most note for the Supreme Court of Justice there held for Brisgow, Sungow, and this part of Alsatia, by the Archdukes of Austria, the chief Lords thereof, 3. Colmar, an Imperial City, raised out of the Ruines of old Argentaria destroyed by Attila and the Huns; well built, and situate almost in the very Navel of Alsatia, not above an hour's journey from the foot of the Mountains, but in a fruitful and rich Soil both for Corn and Pasturage, the Country herabouts being very well watered with the Lauch, Daro, Fech, and Ill. 4. Schlestadt, in the modern Latine, Sellestadium, but by the ancients called Eleuther, the Station at that time of the 19 Legion; afterwards of great fame for a Church here built by Hildegardis Dutches of Schwaben, Anno 1044, according to the pattern of the Temple of Jerusalem, which in tract of time became the richest Monastery in all these parts. It is situate in a very fertile and delightful Soil, having the Rhene on the one side, and some furlongs of the Mountain Vange, shadowed with Groves of Chestnuts, upon the other; walled in the time of Frederick the second, about the year 1216, and on the East defended with impassible Fens. 5. Göwiler, and 6. Warwick, both seated near the aforesaid Mountains, and both subject to the Abbat of Murbach. 7. Kesersberg. 8. Turckheim, two Imperial Towns, but not otherwise memorable, as neither are many of the rest, but for name and number: there being reckoned within this small Province of Elfsaz, (not including Sungow) 46 Cities and Towns begirt with Walls, besides Castles, Forts and Villages, almost innumerable; and amongst them more Free and Imperial Cities than in any one Province of the Empire, except Schwaben only.

The Southern part of Elfsaz, bordering on the Canton of Basle, is commonly called by the name of SONGOW, in Latine Sungovia and Sungöia, but in former times the Dukedom of Pfirt, from Pfirt the chief Town of it, and the Duke's Seat. The Country is very plentiful in Corn and Wine, (as the rest of Elfsaz) affording good store of each to the neighbouring Switzers. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Mulhausen, on the River Il, heretofore under the command of the Bishops of Straeßburg, as were also Kesersberg and Colmar; but being taken in by Rodolph of Habsburg, after his advancement to the Empire, it was made Imperial, and is now confederate with the Switzers. 2. Bifort, remarkable for a Collegiate Church there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, in which lie buried 12 Earls and as many Countesses. 3. Mals, munster, so called from a Monastery of Nuns there Founded by Mals, a Prince of the old Almans. 4. Thann, a neat Town, beautified with the fair Castle of Engelburg, mounted upon the top of a lofty Hill. 5. Mors, munster, so named of an ancient Monastery there founded by the Earls of Pfirt, most of them great Builders of Religious Houses. 6. Altkirk, not far from the head of the River Il; 7. Pfirt, it self seated on the Il, not far from Altkirk; in a Country heretofore overgrown with Woods and Forests, whence it had the name, called by the French Pais de Ferrette, (corruptly for le Pais de Ferfist) by the Dutch moulded into Pfirt; by which name (of the County of Ferrette) it is called by Philip de Comines and other French Writers; and by that name panned by Sigismund the Archduke to Charles Duke of Burgundy, made by that means too near a neighbour to the Switzers, as is proved in fine.

Westward hereof, betwixt it and the County of Burgundy, lyeth the Town and Earldom of MONT-BEL-GARD, (Montis Belgardium in the Latine) united by the Marriage of Henrica, Daughter and Heir of Henry the first Earl hereof, Anno 1396, to the Countess of Wirttemberg. Chief Towns whereof are, 1. Clarewang, 2. Paffewang, 3. Grans, all anciently beautified with Castles; and 4. Montbelgard, a Town of great strength, proud of a Cattle-Royal on the top of a fair and lofty Mountain, whence it took that name: once the Seat of its proper Earls, as after of the Princes of the House of Wirttemberg; but now both Town and Castle in the power of the French, who after their good luck in the Dukedom of Lorrain, caused a good Garrison of their own to be put into them, Anno 1633, under pretence of keeping them for the children of a Brother of the Duke of Wirttemberg, to whom the Inheritance belonged.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Tract were the Tribochi, with parts of the Nemetes and Rauraci; first conquered by the Romans, then subdued by the Almans, after by the French, and by them made a part of the Kingdom of Lorrain; in the fall of which Kingdom it was reckoned for a Province of the German Empire. Governed for the Emperors by Provincial Earls, in the Dutch language called Lantgraves: at first officary only, and accountable to the Emperors under whom they served; in the end made hereditary, and successional to their posterities. The first hereditary Lantgrave is said to be Theodorick in the Reign of Otto the third: after whose death the Empire being made elective, gave the Provincial Governors some opportunities to provide for themselves. In his Male-Issue it continued till the Reign of Frederick the 2. who began his Empire, Anno 1212, and died Anno 1250, during which interval this Estate was conveyed by Daughters to Albert the 2. Earl of Habsburg, Albert Earl of Hohenburg, and Lewis Earl of Oettingen. Rodolph of Habsburg, Son of this Albert, afterwards Emperor of the Germans, marrying with Anne the Daughter of the Earl of Hohenloe, became possessed also of his part of the Country; which added to his own, made up the whole upper Elfs, continued since that time in possession of the House of Austria, descended from him. The third part, comprehending all the Lower Alsatia, was not long after sold by the Earl of Oettingen to the Bishop of Strasbourg, whose Successors hold it to this day; assuming to themselves the title of the Lantgraves of Elfs. But as for Samog, or the County of Pfirtz, that belonged anciently to the Princes of the House of Schwaben: in the expiring of which potent and illustrious Family, by the death of Conradine the last Duke, Anno 1268, that great Estate being scattered into many hands, it was made a distinct Earldom of its self. And so it continued till the year 1324, when Ulrich the last Earl dying without Issue-Male, left his Estate betwixt two Daughters: whereof the one, named Anne, conveyed her part in Marriage to Albert Duke of Austria, surname the short, Grandchild of Rodolph the Emperor before mentioned; the other, named Ursula, sold her moiety to the said Albert for 8000 Crowns. Since that it hath been always in the possession of the Dukes of Austria, (I have only for the time in which it was pawned or mortgaged, together with Alsatia, to the Duke of Burgundy) governed in Civil matters and points of Judicature by the Parliament or Court of Eusheim in the Upper Elfs.

S. LORRAIN.

THE Dukedom of LORRAIN is bounded on the East with Elfs, and that part of the lower Palatinat which passeth by the name of West-reich; on the West with the River Meuse, or Mas, with part of the Country of Barrois in France, (belonging to the Duke hereof) and part of Champagne; on the North with Luxemburg and the Land of Triers; and on the South with the County of Burgundy, from which, and from the Province of Elfs, it is parted by the Vogeses or Vangs, wherewith it is encompassed on those sides. Assigned unto Lotharius, second son of Lotharius the Emperor, (who was eldest Son of Lewis the Godly) with the style of a Kingdom; from thence called Lor-reich by the Dutch, Lot-reigne by the French; from which the modern name of Lorrain, and the Latine Lotharingia are to fetch their Pedegree.

The Country is in length about four dayes journey, almost three in breadth, much overgrown with Forests, and fuelled with Mountains, the spurs and branches of Vogeses, and the once vast Wilderness of Ardene; yet so sufficiently stored with all manner of necessaries, that it needeth no supply out of other places. Some Lakes it hath which yield great quantity of Fish; one more especially 14 miles in compass. The Fish thereof yields to the Duke's Coffers 20000 l. yearly. It affordeth also divers Metals, as Silver, Copper, Tin, Iron, Lead, in some places Pearls: Chalcidians also of such bigness, that whole Drinking-cups are made of them, and a matter of which they make the purest Glasses, not to be paralleld in Europe. They have also a goodly breed of Horses, equal to those of Barbary, or the Court of Naples.

The people, by reason of their neighbourhood to and commerce with France, strive much to imitate the French in garb and fashion; but one may easily fee that it is not natural: they have much in them also of the Dutch-mour of Drinking, but far more moderately than the Dutch themselves. Generally they are a politic and hardy Nation; not otherwise able to have held their Estate so long against the French Kings, and the Princes of the House of Burgundy. They lived very happily in former times under their own Dukes, not being at all oppressed with Taxes; which made them very affectionate towards the Prince, and useful unto one another. Their Language is for the most part French, as in Artois, Luxemburg, Triers, and other of the bordering Provinces, members of the French Monarchy in former times: not so refined and elegant as is spoke in France, nor so corrupt and coarse as that of Montbelgard and the County of Burgundy.

I know that many, in respect of the French language, spoken here among them, account this Country among the Provinces of France, and usually describe it to inherit Charts and Writings; but I have placed it with more reason (as I conceive) amongst those of Germany; first, in regard that a Duke hereof is a Prince of the Empire; but especially because that, in the division of the Kingdom of Lorrain betwixt the Emperours of Germany and the Kings of France, whatsoever lay on the East side of the River Meuse (as this Dukedom of Lorrain for the most part doth) was reckoned in the share or portion of the German Emperours.

The Rivers of chief note are, 1. Murta, or the Meurte, which receiving into it many Rivers, and passing with a swift stream by the walls of Nancie, glides along so fairly for a good space within sight of the Moselle, which at last it falls near Conde, 2. Mosle, the Metz, or or Mas; whose spring and course hath been already described in Belgium. 3. Moselle, famous for the design which Lucius Varenus, Governor for the Emperour Nero, had once upon it. For whereas it ariseth in the Mountain Vange, not far from the head of the River Saône, and disjunctureth it self into the Rhone at Confluent; he intended to have cut a deep Channel from the head of this into the other, so to have made a passage from the Ocean to the Mediterranean, the Saône emptying it self into the Rhone, a chief River of France, as the Moselle doth into the Rhine. 4. Selle, which minglet with waters with the Moselle not far from Metz. 5. Sar, 6. Martane, 7. Vaisy, with others of less note: all of them plentiful of Salmon, Perches, Tenches, and the best sorts of fish, as in their Lakes are great store of Carps, some of them three foot long, and of excellent taste.

Principal Cities in it are, 1. Metz, by Protolmy called Divodurum, Metis and Civitas Mediomatricum by Antoninus; the chief City of the Mediomatrices, who possessed this Tract. It is seated in a pleasant Plain at the confluence of the Selle and Moselle, the Royal See, in former times of the French Kings of Austrasia, hence called Kings of Metz, long before that a Bishop's See, as it still continueth. 2. Toul, the Tullum of Protolmy, the Civitas Leucorum of Antoninus, so called from the Leuci, the Inhabitants of it and the Tract about it, pleasantly seated on the Moselle and anciently honoured with a See Episcopall. 3. Verdun, an ancient Episcopall See also, the Civitas Verodunensium of Antoninus, seated on the Moselle or Mas.

The Town and Territory adjoining in preceding times belonged to the great Princes of the House of Ardene, and at before the time that they attained the Dukedom of Lorrain: but whether they had it in right of their Patrimonial Estate, as lying in the North part of this Country towards Luxemburg, as it well might be, or that it came to them in the right of Marriage with some Daughter of the house of Moselle, or other Heirs thereof, I have no where found. But howsoever it came to them, it gave unto this House the Title of Earls of Verdun, used in their Style, till swallowed with the rest in that of Lorrain. The Bishop whereof, as also those of Metz and Toul, (being the only ones of this Country of Lorrain) acknowledge the Archbishop of Triers for their Metropolitan. All of them were in the number (heretofore) of Imperial Cities, possessed of large and good Territories and of great Revenue; but taken by the French King Henry the 2. Anno 1552, during the Wars between Charles the fifth and the Protestant Princes of Germany, under colour of aiding them against the Emperor. And though Charles tried all ways to recover them to the Empire again, and to that end maintained a long and desperate Siege against the City of Metz; yet was the Town so gallantly defended by the Duke of Guise, that he was fain to raise his Siege, and go off with dishonour. Since that, they have been always under the subjection of France, a Parliament being erected at Metz for the ease of the people, as in other Provinces of that Kingdom.

Of such Towns as immediately belong to the Duke of Lorrain, the principal are Nancie, not great, but of a pleasant and commodious site, well watered by the River Meurte or Marta, and fortified better than before, in the year 1587, on occasion of a great Army of the Germans passing into France to aid the Protestants; most commonly the Duke's Seat, and famous for the Discomfort which Charles Duke of Burgundy here suffered, with the loss of his life. 2. S. Nicolas, a Town so populous, well seated, and neatly built, that were it walled, it would hardly yield precedence unto Nancie it self; so called from a Church here built to the honour of S. Nicolas, Bishop of

Myra in the lesser Asia, whose Body they pretend to be buried here, or at least some part or Relick of it to be here inshrined, occasioning a great resort of Pilgrims and other People. 3. Pont a Moufion, about leagues from Nancie, so called from a Bridge on the River Moufion upon which it standeth of especial note for a small University lately founded in it, and for giving the Title of a Marquis to the eldest Son of the Dukes of Lorrain, accounted commonly and contractually Marquess du Pont, Marchio Mense-Pontanus by our modern Latinists. 4. Vancoleur, the Birth-place of Joan the Virgin, to whose Miracles and Valour the French attribute the delivery of their Country from the power of the English. But being at last taken Prisoner, she was by the Duke of Bradford, then Regent of France, condemned and burnt for a Witch. Of which crime, I for my part do conceive her free. Nor can I otherwise conceive of her and her brave exploits, than as of a lusty Laïs of Lorrain, tutored and trained up by the practice of the Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Bastard of Orleans, and so presented to Charles the seventh, French King, as if sent immediately from Heaven. A project carried on of purpose, (as the most intelligent of the French Writers say) pour faire venir la couraige aux Francois, to revive the drooping spirits of the beaten French, not to be raised again but by help of a Miracle. Upon the fight of her Statue on the Bridge of Orleans, a friend of mine did adventure on a Copy of Verses in her commendation, too long to be inserted here, but they ended thus,

She dy'd a Virgin: 'Twas because the earth
Bred not a man whose valour and whose birth Might merit such a Blessing. But above
The Gods provided her an equal Love,
And gave her to Saint Denis. She with him Protects the Lillies and their Diadem.
You then about whose Armies the doth watch,
Give her the honour due unto her Match:
And when in field your Standards you advance, Cry loud, Saint Denis! and Saint Joan for France!

Next these we have, 5. Vaudemont, which gave the Title of an Earl to a younger Branch of the House of Ardene, succeeding at the last in the Dukedom of Lorrain, in person of Duke Rene 2. and since a Title of the younger Son of the Dukes hereof. 6. Nenf-Chattisam, on the edge of the Country towards Barrois. 7. Amante, seven leagues on the South of Metz, sometimes the Chancery of Lorrain. 8. Riche Court, near the Lake called Garde-lake, out of which floweth a River which runs into the Meurte. 9. La Mothe, seated on a River which falls presently into the Moselle. 10. Charmes, seated on the Moselle, the place of Treaty between the Duke of Lorrain and the Cardinal Richelieu; the result whereof was the surrender of the Town of Nancie, and by consequence of all the Dukedom, into the hands of the French, September 1633. 11. Stenay, in the extrem North of all this Country, a well fortified Town, and of great consequence and importance to the Dukes hereof; but whether properly belonging to the Dukedom of Lorrain, or wrested from the Sovereignty of Sedan, upon which it bordereth, (as Jamais near unto it was) I have no where found. Of less note there are, 1. Saint Die, 2. Saint Hippolite, 3. Bouquennon, and 4. Saverden; the first Towns of this Dukedom taken by the Swedes, Anno 1633, in the War against Lorrain. 5. Saint Miel, 6. Odene-Chateau, 7. Morcourt; all taken the same year by the French, in the prosecution of that War, before the Treaty at Charmes. 8. Remberville, 9. Espinell, 10. Gerbenillier, &c.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Mediomatrici and the Lewii spoken of before, together with the Furidenfes; all of them conquered by the Romans, under whom this Country and the District of Triers, made up the whole Province of Belgica prima. From them being taken by the French, with the rest of Gaul, it was made a Kingdom; the Provinces of Germania prima and secunda (containing all the parts of Germany before described, and so much of the Netherlands as lie on the West side of the Rhene) being added to it: called first, from the Eastern situation, by the name of Obenweich, or Austrasia; the portion of Theodorick, the fourth Son of Clovis, the first Christian King of the French, from the chief City of his Kingdom called the King of Metz, whose Successors follow in this order.

The Kings of AUSTRASIA, or METZ.

- 514 1. Theodorick, the base Son of Clovis the Great, vanquished the Thuringians, and extended his Kingdom as far as Hollia and Thuringia, as we call them now.
- 537 2. Theodebert, the Son of Theodorick, repulsed the Danes infesting the Coasts of the Lower Germany, and added Provence (taken from the Goths of Italy) to his Estates.
- 548 3. Theobaldus, the Son of Theodebert, subdued the Almans, and added much of their Country to his own Dominions.
- 555 4. Cloaire, King of Soissons, the youngest Son of Clovis the Great, succeeded Theobald in this Kingdom, as afterwards his Brother Childeric in the Kingdom of France, Anno 560, uniting in his person the whole French Dominion.
- 565 5. Sigebert, the Son of Cloaire, vanquished the Huns, then falling into his Estates: killed in his Tent by the practices of Fredegond, the Wife of Chilperick King of France.
- 577 6. Childeric, the Son of Sigebert, Successor to his Uncle Grimmar in the Realm of Orleans.
- 598 7. Theodebert II. the Son of Childeric, vanquished and outed of his Kingdom by Cloaire the second of France, from whose eldest Son Sigebert descended the illustrious Family of the Earls of Habsburg.
- 617 8. Cloaire II. King of France, on the death of Theodebert King of Austrasia, and his Brother Theodorick King of Orleans, the sole King of the French.
9. Dagobert, in the life of his Father King of Metz, or Austrasia, whom he succeeded at his death in the Realm of France.
- 645 10. Sigebert II. the eldest Son of Dagobert, made choice of this Kingdom for his part of the whole French Empire; therein preferring it to West-France, or France it self, which he left to Clovis the 3. his younger Brother. He brought the Suevians to obedience, and subdued the Slavens.
- 656 11. Childeric II. Son of Grimwaldus, Maior of the Palace to Sigebert, was by the power of his Father made King of Metz, Dagobert the Son of Sigebert being thorn a Monk, and sent into Scotland.
12. Clovis the 2. King of the French, having vanquished and beheaded Grimwald, dispossessed Childeric of the Kingdom, which he took to himself.
- 662 13. Childeric, the 2. Son of Clovis, after the death of Cloaire his elder Brother, succeeding in the Kingdom of France, united all the French Dominions into one Estate. In which condition it remained (but with some enlargement of the Bound's) till the Partition made by and amongst the Children of Lewis the Godly, the name of Austrasia, or East-France, being extended by Charles the Great over all Pannonia, and so much of Germany as was under the command of the French. In which division, Lewis the second Son, furnished the Ancient, being invested in the Kingdom of Germany, or so much of East-France or Austrasia as lay on the East-side of the Rhene; Lotharius, the eldest Son, had for his share the Title of Emperor, and there with Italy, Provence, Burgundy, and so much of Austrasia or East-France as lay on the French side of the River. Afterwards being subdivided into three Estates, Lewis with the Title of Roman Emperor, was given to Lewis the eldest Son, to Charles, the youngest, Provence, with the Kingdom of Burgundy, and to Lothaire, the second Son, Austrasia on this side of the Rhene, from hence called Lothreich, Loth-reigne, and Lotharingia, as before was said. But Lothaire dying without issue, the Kingdom of Lorrain, containing all the Netherlands, (except Flanders and Artois) and all the parts of Germany before described, became divided betwixt Charles the Bald Emperor and King of France, and Lewis furnished the Ancient, King of Germany, the one calling himself King of Lorrain on that side, the other King of Lorrain on this side of the Meuse; the River Meuse or Mos parting their Possessions. But this Partition held not long amongst their Successors: For Lewis and Carloman King of France (the Sons of Ludovicus Balbus) resigning their part thereof to Charles the Gros, Emperor of the Roman and King of Germany, the said Charles, Ansrump, Lewis and Carloman, successively Emperors of the Roman and Kings of Germany, together with Zwentbold the Ruffian Son of Ansrump interloping in the very middle of them enjoyed it wholly to themselves. And so did also Charles the Simple King of France, on the death of Conrad, who forced thereto by Henry the first, (who succeeded Conrad in the Empire and Kingdom of Germany) began way to the old Partition (spoken of before: the German after that encroaching more and more on that part of which of right belonged unto the French, till in the end (after much vicissitude and interchangeableness of affairs) both Princes laid aside the Title of Kings of Lorrain, incorporating so much as they held thereof into the rest of their Estates; Orto the third of Germany and Lewis the fifth of France being the last that pleased themselves with that broken Title. In the mean time this Country of Lorrain it self, as it is now bounded, together with the Country of Luyck-Land, a great part of Brabant, some parts of the Land of Triers, Colen, and as some say, the Country of Gulick also, (but in this of Gulick I demur, as before was said) being taken out of it, were by Orto the Second made a Dukedom, Anno 981, and by him given with the Title of Duke of Lorrain to Charles of France, Son of Gerberge his Aunt by Lewis the 4. of France furnished Tranmarine, Son of Charles the Simple, Charles thus advanced by his Cousin, and forgetting that he had been made Duke of Brabant not long before by Lothaire the French King, his Brother, shewed himself so alienated from the French, and wedded to the German, that the French, after the death of his Nephew Lewis the fifth, (whose next Heir he was) rejected him, and accepted Hugh Capet for their King. Orto, the Son of this Charles, dying without issue, left his Estate to Godfrey Earl of Ardenne, Bonillon, and Verdun, his near Kinsmen by the Mothers side, from whom the present Dukes of Lorrain do derive themselves. From Hermingrade, one of the Daughters of this Charles, married to Albert (some call him Charles, and others Godfrey) Earl of Namur by Alice their Daughter, married Baldwin the 5. of Hainault, descended Baldwin Earl of Flanders and Hainault, the Father of the Lady Isabel of Hainault, Wife of Philip the 2. King of France, thereby uniting the Blood of Peppin and Hugh Capet, to the great content of Lewis the 9. her Nephew: of whom it is said, that being a man of a tender Conscience, he never joyed in the Crown of France, till it was proved that he was lineally descended by his Grandmother from Charles of Lorrain, whom Hugh Capet had so unjustly dispossessed. But to return again to the Dukes of Lorrain, I find not any great improvement made of the Estate by any of them, more than the accession of the remaining Patrimony of the Earls of Ardenne in the person of Godfrey or Geoffrey the 3d Duke hereof, and the adding of the Dutchy of Bar in France by Rene Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples; but on the contrary a great weakening and distraction of it by the Dukes hereof: Luyck-Land and the Dukedom of Bonillon being sold unto the Bishops of Liege by Godfrey firnamed of Bonillon after King of Hiersusalem; Brabant torn from it by Geoffrey Earl of Lovain, in the time of Baldwin Brother of Godfrey, and Gulick-Land by Eustace the Brother of Baldwin; the Bishop of Triers not being negligent all this while of the opportunity. Besides which, somewhat had been done by the Emperor Orto the 3. to the diminution of this Estate, seeing that Orto the Second Duke, Son of Charles of France, had no issue-male, and thinking this Estate, to be great enough without those Additions, and some other pieces on the Rhene, by him restored unto the Empire. The rest of this Estate was conferred on Godfrey of Ardenne, and not without good reason neither being probable enough that as it was first given by Orto the II. unto Charles of France with reference to his Mother Gerberge that great Emperour's Aunt, so Orto of Lorrain Son of Charles might look on Godfrey of Ardenne as most capable of it, with reference to his Mother Mailde, the same Emperour's Daughter. And unto this he might be moved not only in a noble gratitude to the blood of Orto, from whom his Father had received so great a benefit, but on the solicitation of the Emperour Henry II. (a Prince of the same House of Saxony) to whom the Alienation of it from the Daughters of Charles is ascribed by some. Which said, we have no more to do, but to present the Reader with the Catalogue of

The Dukes of LORRAIN.

A.C.

- 981 1. Charles of France, took prisoner by Hugh Capet, in which state he died. He married Bona, Daughter of Ricaine, and Sister of Godfrey the elder, Earls of Ardenne.
- 1001 2. Orto, Son of Charles and Bona.
- 1004 3. Godfrey, Earl of Ardenne, Son of Godfrey the elder, and Cousin of Orto by his Mother, confirmed herein by the power of the Emperour Henry II.
- 1019 4. Gozelo of Bonillon, the Brother of Godfrey.
- 1044 5. Godfrey II. Son of Gozelo.
- 1070 6. Godfrey III.
- 1078 7. Godfrey IV. of Bonillon, Son of Eustace Earl of Boulogne in Picardie, and of Ida his Wife, the Daughter of Godfrey the 2. created King of Hiersusalem Anno 1099.
- 1100 8. Baldwin, Brother of Godfrey, Duke of Lorrain, and King of Hiersusalem.
- 1119 9. Thierrie, Son of William the Brother of Baldwin.
- 1128 10. Simon, Son of Thierrie.

- 1141 11. Mattheu Son of Simon.
- 1176 12. Simon II. Son of Mattheu.
- 1207 13. Frederick, Brother of Simon.
- 1213 14. Theobald, Son of Frederick.
- 1219 15. Mattheu II. Son of Theobald, no great friend of the Pope.
- 1259 16. Frederick II. Son of Mattheu.
- 1307 17. Theobald II. Son of Frederick.
- 1311 18. Frederick III. Son of Theobald.
- 1339 19. Rodolph Son of Frederick.
- 1346 20. John, Son of Rodolph.
- 1382 21. Charles, Son of John.
- 1430 22. Rene, Duke of Anjou and King of Naples, &c. in right of Isabel his Wife, the Daughter of Charles.
- 1452 23. John II. Son of Rene and Isabel, succeeded on the death of his Mother.
- 1470 24. Nicholas, Son of John.
- 1473 25. Rene II. Son of Frederick Earl of Vaudemont, and of Violant or Toland, Daughter of Isabel and Rene the first, the Vanquisher of Charles of Burgundy at the Battle of Nancy.
- 1508 26. Anthony, Son of Rene the 2.
- 1544 27. Francis Son of Anthony.
- 1545 28. Charles II. Son of Francis.
29. Henry, Son of Charles, married Katharine, Sister to Henry the 4. of France.
- 1624 30. Francis, Brother of Henry.
- 1630 31. Charles, Nephew to Francis by his Brother the Earl of Vaudemont, and Son-in-Law to him by the Marriage of his Daughter and Heir, succeeded by a mist Title of Descent and Marriage. Being resolved to hold it in his own right, he put away his Wife the Daughter of Francis, and took another to his Bed, which he better satisfied. Punished not long after by the loss of his whole Estate: For immediately he engaged himself in the Wars of Germany in behalf of Ferdinand the 2. but being beaten by the Swedes at the Battle of Pfaffenhofen in the County of Hanaw, he lost a great part of his Country to the Victors, who pursued him home. And on the other side, Lewis the 13. of France, picking a quarrel with him for receiving the Monsieur his Brother, and the Marriage of the Monsieur with the Lady Margaret the Duke's Sister, deprived him of the Dutchy of Bar, and falling into Lorrain with a puissant Army at such time as the Swedes were there, compelled him to put into his hands the City of Nancy, and by consequence all the rest of his Estates, Septemb. 1633. Since which time the Duke hath never been restored thereto, nor hath any thing left him in it, for ought I can hear, but the Town of La Mothe, (if that) together with a good Cause, many hearts, and an invincible courage.

The Revenues of this Prince are said to be 700000 Crowns, whereof 200000 arise from the Customs of the Salt made in his Country, and the other 500000 from his Coronet-lands. He is an absolute Prince, and given for his Device an armed hand coming as it were from Heaven, and grasping a naked Sword; to shew that he holdeth his Estate by no other Tenure than God and his Sword, the only hope at this time, of the present Duke. For though he be accounted a Prince of the fifth Circle thereof, which is called the Circle of the Rhene; yet he neither comes unto the Diets, nor holdeth himself bound by any of the Orders and Decrees which are made therein, as do the rest of the great Princes of Germany; his neighbourhood to the French formerly securing his Estate against any force which the Empire durst bring against him for those neglects.

The Arms of Lorrain are O, a Bend Gules charged with

3 Larks Argent. But herein I find Barn, an old French Herald, to differ from Paradine, the most exact Genealogist of the French Nation. For Barn a chertish the Bend not with 3 Alouettes Larks as Paradine doth, but with 3 Altrions, which are in Blazon small Birds wanting beaks, feet, and legs. Of this last opinion is the most worthy Antiquary Camden Clarendinus; who withal telleth us, that when Godfrey de Bouillon was at the Siege of Hiersa-falem, shooting at S. David's Tower there, he broaded three feeble birds called Altrions upon his Arrow, and thereupon assumed this Arms.

6. SOEVLIA, or SCHWABEN.

THE Dukedom of SOEVLIA or SCHWABEN, according to the antient limits and extent thereof, was bounded on the North with Frankland and the Lower Palatinate, on the South with Switzerland and the Alps of Tyrol, on the East with the River Leck, parting it from Bavaria, and on the West with the Rhene dividing it from Sungow and both Alsatia's. But now the Dukedom of Wittenberg, the Marquitate of Baden, and other lesser Estates being taken out of it, it is contracted and restrained within narrower Bounds, having on the East Bavaria, on the West the Dukedom of Wittenberg, and so much of the Rhene as serveth to divide it from Sungo and the Upper Elfas, on the North Francia of Frankland, and on the South a little of the Rhene, with some part of the Switzers.

The County for the most part is mountainous and hilly, overpecked with some spurs of the Alps, and the woods of Negra Sylva or Swartzwald, accompanied notwithstanding with great plenty of Springs and Rivers (and amongst them the Neccar and the renowned Danubius) which do issue from them: which makes the Vales hereof to be very fruitful, sufficiently stored with all necessary provisions. Nor are the Woods and Mountains so unprofitable, but that besides the great plenty of Fowl and the pleasures of Hunting, they do afford some Mines of Iron and other Metals.

The people in regard of their mountainous situation are more fierce and warlike than the rest of the German's, and so accompanied by Plutarch in former times, industrious in several Trades and Manufactures, especially in the weaving of Linen-cloth, which is made here in great abundance: and by reason they have so much in them of the South, they are supra modum in Pencerem prout, as Ambrosius tells me, at least more given to Frout than the other of the German's; are the women also being said to be very forwards in this kind, as tractable and easy as the men could wish them.

The whole is generally divided into the Hegow lying next to the Lake of Constance; the Algow extending to Bavaria; Brisingow, upon the West of the River Rhene; and North Schwaben, on the Northern side of Danubius. Principal Cities in the HEGOW are, 1. Lindau, situate like an Island in the Lake of Constance, encompassed all-most with the waters thereof, but joined to it with a Causeway of 290 paces long: one of the Free or Imperial Cities, made 10, for money, by the Emperour Frederick Barbarossa, Anno 1166. 2. Buchorn, and 3. Überlingen, on the same Lake; both Imperial also. 4. Seckau, situate on both sides of the Rhene, not far from the cillux thereof out of the Lake Cell, (so called from a Town of that name belonging to the Arch-dukes of Austria, but anciently known by the name of Lacus Venetus) and near those dreadful falls or Cataracts of that River no less than 90 Cubits downwards, with great noise and violence. For which cause all Vessels that go down the Rhene are faine to unlace themselves, and by Carts to carry their goods to this Town, where they im-bark them again. Which as it yieldeth great benefit to the Town by Tolls and Impacts, so doth it always keep it stored with abundance of Banks and other Vessels: whence it hath the name of Seckau, that is to say, the house of Skiff, or the Town of Skp boats. The Town is conveniently seated amongst rich Pastures and sweet Groves on both sides of the River; not without some pleasant Hills, and the few well planted with Vines, near adjoining to it. Imperial once, but now a Canton of the Switzers, as hath there been hitherto. 5. Arbon, upon the Lake it self, (the Arber Felix of Sirado) belonging to the Bishop of Constance. 6. Meersburg, the ordinary Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Constance, Lord of the most part of this Tract, on the same Lake also. 7. Constance it self, situate on both sides of the Rhene, where it issueth out of the Lake, coming from hence the Lake of Constance, but by the Dutch Boden-see, from the Castle of Baden, by Plin and other Antients Lacus Arconis, and Brigantius, made by the Confluence of the Rhene, and some other Rivers falling out of Switzerland. The Town is Imperial, an Episcopical See, and a flourishing Empire: famous for the Council here holden Anno 1144, of great renown as well for the multitude & quality of the people which were there assembled, as for the importance of the matters which were therein handled. The people of most note there assembled were, Sigismund the Emperour; 4 Patriarchs, 29 Cardinals, 346 Archbishops and Bishops, 564 Abbots and Doctors, 10000 free Priests and Noblemen, 450 common Barons, 1600 Bishops, and 320 Minstrels and Jesters. The business there handled was, first the pacifying of a Schism in the Church, there being at that time 3 Popes, (or rather Anti-Popes) Gregory the 12. resident at Rome, John the 22. at Bononia, and Benedict the 13. in Spain; all three deeply by the Council, and Marinus the 7. made sole Pope by the unanimous consent of the Council, declaring both by matter of fact, and by a public Constition here made and ratified, that a Council is above the Pope. The other main business was the proceeding against John Hu and Hierome of Prague (spoken of before) both withstanding the Emperour's safe conduct; were heretaken of Heretic, degraded and burnt. Now the manner of degrading a Priest is this: (I hope to be excused in this Digression) The party to be degraded is steeled in his Priestly Vestments, holding in the one hand a Chalice full of wine & water, and in the other a gill-pate (or Patten, as they call it) with a wafer. Then kneeling down, the Bishop's Deputy, 1. taking from him all those things commands him to say no more Masses for the quick and dead. 2. Scraping his Fingers ends with a piece of Glasse, he commandeth him from that time forwards not to hallow any thing. And 3. stripping him of his priestly Habit, he is clothed in a Lay attire, and so delivered over to the secular magistrate. But to return again to the City of Constance, being proscribed by Charles the 5. for refusing the Interim, and not able to withstand such Forces, were raised against them, they put themselves under the protection of Ferdinand, then King of the Romans, and Brother of Charles. But herein they fell out of the Frying pan into the Fire, as the saying is: For Ferdinand being possessed of the Town, seized on the common Treasury, and upon all Records and Writings which belonged unto them; set out an Edict, that all the Ministers within eight daies should depart the City, and that no Citizen from thenceforth should wear any Weapon. And instead of a Protector he became their Master.

eth over the River Ach running by it in a bed so narrow that not able to receive the waters which fall down from the Hills, it much endangeth all the Country by frequent Inland-floods. 3. Wangen, (the Nemavia of Antoninus) Imperial also. 4. Kempten, (the Campodunum of Sirado, and the Memmingen of Proton), both Imperial Cities, the last about 3 miles in circuit, populous, rich and very well traded. 5. Pfullendorf, 7. Zürcher, 8. Brissach, all three Imperial; the last supposed to be the Brigantium of the Ancients. 9. Augsburg, on the River Lech, looking into Bavaria, first made a Roman Colony by Augustus Caesar, and by him called Augusta Vin-dictio, a potent People of this Tract. A City of great wealth and late, containing about 9 miles in circuit, and very strongly fortified by Nature on the East and North, where the ground lies low and under water, and on the West and South by Art. The Buildings for three parts of it are of Clay and Timber; but on the West part, seated on an Hill, built of Free-stone, six or seven Stories high, in which are many fair Houses of the principal Citizens, and many stately Palaces, which belong to the Fuggers, a Family of very great (almost Princely) Revenues, possessed of many goodly dwellings both in the City and the Suburbs, and adjoining Territories; who though they have of late obtained the honour of Barons, in regard of their Wealth, still keep themselves (contrary to the custom of Germany, where Traffick is counted a disgrace to a Noble-man) to the trade of Merchandise. The publick Edifices of it are very decent, especially the Cathedral Church, a majestic Building; the other Churches, being ten in number, and the Religious Houses, correspondent to it. Of old time Ceres was here worshipped, from whence (or from the fruitfulness of the soil) the City gives a Sheaf of Corn for the Arms thereof. Since their Conversion unto Christianity it was made a Bishops See. Destroyed by Attila and his Huns, it was after built more beautifully than it had been formerly, at last made Imperial, and the Mithers of as large a Territory as most Cities of Germany. Famous for the Confession of Faith exhibited in this place to Charles the 5. by the Protestant Princes; hence called Confessio Augustana, Anno 1530. 2. For the Interim, or mixt form of Doctrine, containing some Points of Protestantism, but most of Popery, there tendered to both parties by the said Emperour (but received by neither) to be subscribed to and observed till the Differences could be settled by a General Council. And 3. for the publick allowance here given by Decree of all the States of the Empire to the Protestant party, to profess openly their Religion without any impeachment, Anno 1555. A Limitation only laid on the Ecclesiastics, that if they changed their Religion, they should lose their preferments; which were to be bestowed on others more addicted to the See of Rome.

In the third part hereof, called BRISINGOW, lying on the East of the River Rhene, and the West of Wittenberg, and on the South closed in with the Canton of Basel. Places of most importance are, 1. Friburg, upon the Trieff, and other Streams descending from the Mountains of Swartzwald, under which it lieth: founded by Berchtold the third, Earl or Duke of Zeringen, (the Castle of Zeringen, founded by Berchtold the first, Son of Gehaz, the youngest Son of Guentram, the second Earl of Habsburg, once the chief Seat of those Princes, being then near adjoining to it) in the reign of Henry the Fifth Emperour, Anno 1112, or thereabouts. Famous in those days for Silver mines, now for an University here established Anno 1459, and being in present estimation the chief of the Country, of which more anon. 2. Offenbach, 3. Gengenbach, both upon the Kintzich, and both Towns Imperial: the first so named from Offa an English Saxon, the Apottle of these parts of Germany. 4. Hochberg, which gives the Title of a Marquess to the Marquesses of Baden, who are Lords thereof. 5. Zel, once Imperial, but of late times belonging, as doth also 6. Badenwiller, to the Marquess of Baden; this last accruing to them by the Marriage of Rodolphus the sixth of that name, Marquess of Hochberg, with a Sister of John Earl of Friburg, the then Lord thereof. 7. Waldshut, upon the Rhene, in a barren, cold and mountainous Country, but well stored with Woods. 8. Brissac, by Antoine called Mons Brissacus, a Garrison in his time against the encroaching Almans, and situate at that time on the French side of the Rhene, the course of the River being since turned on the other side, where now it runneth. It is built Castle-wise on the top of a round Hill, in which there is also a strong Tower or Fortresses, raised by Berchtold the third for defence of the place; otherwise strong enough by its own natural situation, and might be made impregnable; but for want of water, which is all drawn from one deep Well in the heart of the Town, or brought with great charge and trouble from the Rhene which runs underneath it. The Town is fair, populous, and well built; once of most note in all the Country, from hence called Brissac-gow, or Brissac-gow; but after the building of Friburg by Berchtold the 4. it grew by little and little to be less frequented, the other being seated more conveniently for Trade and business: Here also, not far off from the Castle of Zeringen, stood that of Kiburg, somewhat the ancestor of the two; of such authority and repute in those elder times, that the Emperours do still retain the Title of Earls of Kiburg in the Style Imperial: defended on the House of Habsburg by the Marriage of Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir of Harmann the last Earl thereof, to Eberhard of Habsburg, Cousin-german to the Emperour Rodolphus on the expiring of which Line, Anno 1376, it fell together with many fair Estates among the Switzers, to Albert Duke of Austria, furnished the Short.

Finally, in the fourth and last part hereof, called NORTH-SCHWABEN, because on the North-side of the Danow, the places most observable are, 1. Gemund, on the Rheims. 2. Dinkel-Spyel, on the Warmitz, two Imperial Towns; which with Überlingen or Werlingen, (all three but mean in building, Territory, or estimation) (spoken of before, are the only three Imperial Cities in all Germany which totally adhere unto the Doctrines of the Church of Rome. 3. Bopfingen, on the Egga, an Imperial City. 4. Norlingen on the same River, but in a low and moorish ground, yet of great repute, populous, and well traded; most memorable for the Decree here given the Swedes by Ferdinand the third, now Emperour, at his first entrance on the Government; in which Bannier, one of the principal Commanders of that Nation, was slain on the place, Guthaus Horn, another of as great eminence, taken Prisoner, their whole Forces routed, and thereupon to strange an Alteration of the Affairs of Germany, which they had almost wholly conquered, (though not for themselves, that the Palatinate, not long before restored to its proper Owner, was again possessed by the Spaniards, Frankland by the Imperialists, and the remainder of the Swedes forced to withdraw into their Holds on the Baltick Seas, Anno 1637. 5. Rotweil, not far from the head of the Neccar, an Imperial City, and a Confederate of the Switzers. 6. Donauwert, seated on the Confluence of the Donaw and the Werda, whence it had the name, most commonly called only Werda, an Imperial Town, the habitation of John de Werda, once a Brewer herein, but afterwards a ch. of Commander of the Forces of the Duke of Bavaria in the late German Wars. 7. Völklingen, on the Bregentz, a small River falling into the

the Danow; a Town belonging to the Princes of the House of Austria. Not far from which stands 8. Furfberg, an ancient Castle. The Earls hereof are Princes of the Empire, and Lords of a great part of the Country, descended lineally from Egino, or Eggon, the youngest Son of the Lady Judith, Sister and Heir of Berthold the fifth, the last Duke of Zerigen, and consequently a Branch of the Illustrious House of Habsburg; exceedingly increased both in power and Patrimony, by the Marriage of Frederick Earl hereof (in the time of Charles the fifth, under whom he served in his Wars against the Protestants) with Anne the Daughter and Heir of Christopher the last Earl of Werdenberg, possessed of many fair Estates amongst the Switzers and the adjoining parts of Schwaben. In a Village of this Earl, called Den Eschingen, is the head of Danubius. 9. Ulm, an Imperial City, situate on the meeting of the Blawe, the Iler, and the Danow, the principal City of North Schwaben; about six miles in compass, rich, populous, well fortified, and stored with an Army for Ordnance and all manner of Ammunition, not inferior to any in Germany. The Town is but new taking its first rise from a Monastery here founded by Charles the Great, which after grew to be a great City; and took the name of Ulm from the Elms about it. At first it belonged unto the Monks, of whom having bought their Freedom in the time of Frederick the third, it became Imperial. The Danow hereabouts begins to be navigable, having so violent a Stream, that the Boats which go down the water use to be held at the place where they land, it being both difficult and chargeable to bring them back again. Not far hence on the banks of the Danow lie the Suevian Alps, and amongst them the old Castle of Hohenberg, the Lord whereof, on the Ruine of the House of Schwaben, became possessed of a great Estate here and in Upper Elsass, fold afterwards to Rodolph of Habsburg, the Founder of the now Austrian Family.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Brizentes, Suanetes, Rugifci, and Calcones, who, together with the Vindelici (of whom more hereafter) and other Tribes of the Rheii, (of whom somewhat hath been said before in the Alpine Provinces) possessed themselves of that Country which lieth betwixt the River Imn and the head of the Rhene, East and West, Danubius and the Alps of Italy, North and South. Within which compass are the greatest part of the Grifons, the Dukedoms of Schwaben and Bavaria on this side the Danow, and part of the County of Tyrol, and not a few of the Cantons of Switzerland. Subdued by Drius and Tiberius Nero, Sons in law of Augustus, they were made a Province of the Romans: divided into Rhetia prima, taking in all the Countries from the Rhene to the Leck, or Lycus; and Rhetia secunda, lying betwixt the Leck and the River Imn, which by another name was called Vindelicia. By which account all Schwaben on the South side of the Danow was part of the Province of Rhetia prima, continuing to till vanquished and subdued by the Almans in the time of Valentinian the third, Emperor of the Western parts. As for the Almans who succeeded in possession hereof, they were originally some Tribes and Families of the Suevi, the most warlike Nation of the Germans, inhabiting upon the Banks of the River of Albis; who jealous of Cæsars great Successes, brought against him 430000 fighting men, of which 80000 were slain, and many drowned. They used to flay at home and go to the War by turn; they flayed at home till the Land, to whom the rest returning brought the Spoil of the Enemies. But after this blow we hear little of them till the time of Caracalla the Son of Severus; during whose Reign, defending towards the Banks of the Rhene and the Danow, and mingling with other Nations as they passed along, they assumed first the name of Almans; either from that promiscuous mixture of all sorts of men, or (as I rather think) from Mannus the Son of Tuisco, one of the great and national Gods of the Germans. And though they were well beaten by him at their first coming down, near the River Marus, and afterwards more broken by Dioctian, who slew at least 60000 of them at one time in Gaul, yet never left to infect the Provinces of the Empire, which lay nearest to them, till in the time following the track of the Huns who had gone before them, and beaten down many of the Forts and Garrisons which were in their way, they made themselves Masters of Rhetia prima, Germania prima, and part of Maxima Sequanorum, containing besides the Countries Florea of Belore, Alatia, and so much of the Lower Palatinate as lies on the French side of the Rhene. But quarrelling with the French, their next neighbours, (of whose growth and greatness they began to be very sensible) they were first vanquished by Clevis the first Christian King of the French in that great and memorable Fight at Zulp near Culen, and afterwards made wholly subject to the Conqueror, who appointed them with an heavy and lasting Servitude. About this time they returned again to their old name of Suevians, their Estate being erected into a Dukedom, called many times the Dukedom of Almain; and when so called, divided into the Upper Almain, comprehending the Country of the Grifons, with some parts of Switzerland and Tyrol, and the Lower or the proper Almain, which contained the rest of the Estates of the ancient Almans, called for the most part by the name of the Dukedom of Suevia or Schwaben, and finally transmitting that name to its Province only, the best part thereof. These Dukes were at first officary only, removable at the will of the Emperor, and accountable to him; not seldom many times one time, especially while under the command of the French, some of them being Dukes of the Upper, and others of the Lower Almain. So that there is great certainty of their Succession, nor much care betwixt in searching after it; though otherwise men of great Authority and command in their several Times. The most remarkable amongst them was Rodolph, Earl of Roufflen and Duke of Schwaben (descended from the Earls of Habsburg) in the Reign of Henry the fourth, against whom he was chosen Emperor by the practice and procurement of Pope Hildebrand, but overcome and wounded at the Battle of Elster, he died not long after of his wounds, with great reverence for rebelling against his Sovereign. After his death, some Provinces being divided from it, and other lesser Estates first erected out of it, it was made hereditary in the person of Frederick Baron of Hohenstauffen, furnished the Ancient by the munificence and bounty of the said Henry the fourth, whose Daughter Agnes he had married. His Successors follow in this order.

The Dukes of SCHWABEN.

1. Frederick the Ancient, the first hereditary Duke of Schwaben.
2. Frederick with one eye, Son of Frederick the Ancient.
3. Frederick III. surnamed Barbarossa, Son of Frederick with one eye, Duke of Schwaben, and Emperor: he succeeded the Emperor Henry the fifth in the Dukedom of Francia, and left the same unto his Successors.

1901: Frederick IV. second Son of Barbarossa, his elder Brother Henry succeeding in the Empire by the name of Henry the fifth.

f. Conrad

5. Conrade, Brother of Frederick the fourth.
6. Philip, Brother of Conrade, after the death of Henry the 6. elected Emperor.
- 1207 7. Frederick V. Son of Henry the fifth, elected Emperor by the name of Frederick the second, King of Naples and Sicily also in the right of his Mother.
- 1250 8. Conrade II. Son of Frederick the fifth, King of both Sicilies, and Emperor of Germany after the death of his Father; poisoned, as was supposed, by his base Brother Manfred, who succeeded in his Kingdom of Sicily.
- 1254 9. Conradine, the Son of Conrade, pursuing his Right unto the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, was overcome and taken prisoner by Charles of Anjou, Successor unto Manfred in those Estates, and by his command beheaded at Naples Anno 1268. After whose death (being the last of that powerful and Imperial Family) this vast Estate was brought unto a second dismembring, and divided amongst the Bishops, Princes and Free Cities hereof: of which last there are more within the old Precincts of this Dukedom than in all Germany besides. So that beholding it in the first and second Dilapidation, we find many goodly Patrimonies and fair Estates (besides what belongeth to the Cities and Episcopal Sees) to have been raised out of the Ruines of this great Dukedom: that is to say, the Dukedoms of Zerigen and Wirtenberg, with the Marquisate of Baden, dismembring from it when conferred on Frederick of Hohenstauffen, the Barldoms of Pfirt, Hohenberg and Friburg, (besides a great improvement of the Earldom of Habsburg) advanced out of the second Ruine. Now Pfirt and Hohenberg were united to the House of Austria hath been shewn already; and what becomes of Wirtenberg and Baden shall be shewn hereafter. Here it is only to be noted, that the Family of Zerigen, possessed of almost all Brifgow and a great part of Switzerland, owe their Original to Berthold, the Son of Gebizo, a younger Son of Gunnram the 2. Earl of Habsburg. Which being extinguished after a Succession of seven Princes only in the person of Berthold the fifth, (who died the same day in which the Emperor Rodolph of Habsburg was born) Anno 1218, the Rights hereof descended on the Earls of Friburg, the principal City of that Country; unto the first that bare the Title of Earl of Friburg, being the eldest Son of Judith, Sister and Heir of Berthold the last Duke of Zerigen, Eggon, the last Earl of which House, being overlaid by his undutiful and rebellious Subjects, sold his Estate therein for 12000 Ducats to Albert and Leopold Dukes of Austria, Sons of Albert the Short, whose Successors enjoy all Brifgow to this very day.

The Arms of Schwaben were Argent, 3 Leopards Sable, as is said by Bara; but Paradine will have them to be three Leopards Sable, crowned Gules, in a Field Or.

7. BAVARIA.

BAVARIA is bounded on the East with Austria, on the West with the River Leck or Lycus, which parts it from Schwaben, on the North with Noravia, or the upper Palatinate, and on the South with the Earldom of Rhetia and Carinthia. It containeth the whole Province of Rhetia secunda, and so much of Noricum mediterraneum as now maketh up the Bishoppick of Salzburg; and by a distinct name was called Vindelicia, as being the ancient habitation of the Vindelici; so named from the two Rivers of Vindis and Lycus, (now the Werd and the Leck) upon which they lived. According whereunto it is thus verified by a German Poet.

Miscentes Undas, & nomina Littoris, unde
Antiquam Gentem, populumque, Urbemque vocerunt Vindelici.*

In English thus,

Vindis and Lycus, Floods of noted Fame,
He next beholds, mingling their Streams and Name;
To which the old Vindelici do own
The name of both their Nation and their Town.

Meaning by their Town, as I conceive, Augusta Vindelicorum, their Metropolis or Capital City. But after such time as the Botti or Boiarians had driven out the Romans, and got possession of this Country, the name of Vindelicia and Rhetia secunda grew into disuse, that of Bavaria succeeding in the place thereof, mollified or corrupted into Bavaria, the present name of the Country amongst the Latines; but by the Dutch called Bayern, by the French Bavie.

The whole is divided into three parts: the Higher, lying towards the Alps of Tyrol, the Lower, extending all along the banks of the Danow; and the District of Salzburg, situate betwixt the Imn and the Dukedom of Austria: a third much over-spread with Woods and Forests, remainders of the Herucian Forest, described before. But more particularly the Higher, lying towards the Alps, is cold and barren, affording no Wines, and but little Corn: the Lower being more fruitful, and better planted, for some parts (especially about Regensberg and Landshut) inferior unto none in Germany for Richness and pleasantness of the situation. Of the District of Salzburg we shall speak by itself, because by some not reckoned as a part hereof. In all the three great quantity of Fewel for the fire, and of Timber for Building, no less of Swine fattened in the Woods, and sent away by numerous Herds into other Countries.

The Christian Faith was first preached here amongst the Boiarians by Rupertus Bishop of Worms, driven from his See by Childebert King of the French, Anno 540, or thereabouts, and here made the first Bishop of Salzburg: corrupted at this time with the Leven of the Church of Rome, to which this Country (settling aside the Imperial Cities) is more entirely devoted than any other in all Germany.

Principal Cities in the HIGHER are 1. Munchen, (in Latine Monachium) the Duke's Seat, seated on the Isar, or Isara, in a very sweet and delightful Soil, among Ponds and Groves, daintily interlaced with pretty Rivers, and enriched with many excellent Gardens; that of the Duke being hardly to be paralleled in all this Continent: first founded by Henry Duke hereof in the time of Orbo the first, Anno 972, now grown a large and populous City, the publick Buildings as Churches, Turrets, Libraries, the Senate House, or Guildhall, and common Market-place, of such excellent Structure, that they serve not only for Use and Ornament, but for Admiration. Amongst them none is more eminent than the Library in the Ducal Palace, wherein are conceived to be 11000 Volumes, the most part of them Manuscripts. A Town made choice of by Maximilian, the now Duke of Bavaria, to be the receptacle of the Spoils got by him in the Wars of Germany: he being found (at such time as the Town was taken by the King of Sweden) 140 Brass Pieces (besides other great Guns) hidden under the ground, one of the which was charged, instead of Powder and Shot, with 30000 Crowns in Gold. 2. Landshut, upon the Leck or Lycus, near the Alps of Tyrol: once of great strength, because a Frontier towards Schwaben; but proving a dangerous neighbor to the Swed & Garrisons planted in these parts during that War against the Duke of Bavaria, was by them taken and dismantled, and is now an open Village only. 3. Martenwald, now a place of no note or beauty, heretofore the Inimicus of Ptolemy seated near the Alps. 4. Fridberg, well fortified, by Duke Ludowick, or Lewis the second, for a Bulwark against those of Augsburg. 5. Here stood also the old Castle of Scheyr, built by Arnulph 2. Son of Arnulph the first, Duke of Bavaria, the Seat and honorary Title of his posterity, (Dynasty Scheyrsen in the Latine) till Otho of Wittelsbach, by the favour of Frederick Barbarossa and his own good fortune did attain that Dukedom.

In the LOWER Bavaria there first offers it self to consideration the Town of Rain, seated on the Leck, not far from the fall thereof into the Danow; memorable for the Skirmish near to it betwixt the Swedes and Bavarians at the first passing of the Swedish Forces over that River, in which John Earl of Tilly, so famous for his long and fortunate Conduct of the Imperial Armies, received his death's wound, of which he died at Ingolstadt within few weeks after. 2. Newburg, upon the Danow, not far from Rain; the first Town of Bavaria taken in by the Swedes after the said defeat of Tilly. 3. Ingolstadt, said to be built by a Tribe or Nation of the Sueves called Angeli, and thence called Angelstadtum; or Angelslade; first made City by Ludowick of Bavaria Duke and Emperor, and in the year 1410 made an University, much privileged by Duke Lewis or Ludowick the fifth, and Pope Pius the second. A Town so strongly fortified both by Art and Nature, that it seems impregnable, and indeed proved so to Gustavus the late King of Sweden, who here found the first check to his prosperous Fortunes, being forced to raise his Siege without endangering it, and find work elsewhere. 4. Regensburg, (in Latine Ratisbona) on the Danow also, where it receives the River Regen, whence it hath its name: built in the place of Tiberina, or Augusta Tiberii, so called of a Colony brought hither by Antony Cesar about the time of our Saviours Passion, afterwards called Rhetopolis, or the City of the Rhetians, the chief of Rhetia secundæ. At this time it is a fair rich, and populous City, beautified with an infinite number of Churches and Religious Houses: anciently an Episcopal See, and of late made the ordinary place for the general Diets of the Empire. In former times it was the Seat of the Kings and first Dukes of Bavaria, then made Imperial, and now mixt, or both: for being first Imperial, at the least in name, it was seized on unexpectedly by the now Duke of Bavaria, when the Swedes first got footing within his Dominions; held by him with a very strong Garrison, after the loss of Manchen his chief place of Residence, till at last won from him by the Swedes, Anno 1633. 5. Passau, by the modern Latins Patavia, but by some thought to be the Boadormus of Ptolemy, then a Roman Garrison: seated on the Danow, where it meeteth with the Inn and the Ilz, by which it is divided into three Towns, Passau, Infstadt, and Ilstadt: the whole Compositum being a rich, fair, and well traded City: a See Episcopal, and subject immediately to the Bishop as chief Lord thereof, who hath his dwelling in the Castle of Oberhausen, adjoining to that part hereof which is called Ilstadt. A place remarkable for many Meetings and Consultations of the German Princes, especially for that of the year 1552, in which, all former Quarrels being laid aside, the Protestants were first permitted the free Exercise of their Religion, by the consent and Edict of Charles the fifth, who had most laboured to suppress it. More in the land is 6. Frising, on the swelling of a fine round Hill near the River Ambray, which runs beneath it, called anciently Fraxinum; conceived to be built by some of the Pretidents or Lieutenants for the Roman Emperors, honoured with an Episcopal See about the year 710. One of the Bishops whereof, commonly called Otho Frisingensis, was the best Historian of his time. 7. Landshut, upon the River of Iser, in the richest and most pleasant Country of all Bavaria; a beautiful and well built City, the work of Lewis Duke hereof, in the year 1208 adorned with a Church of most curious building for the service of God, and a magnificent Palace for the use of the Duke. 8. Freising, the only Imperial Town, (except Regensburg) in all this Dukedom. The whole number of Cities and great Towns in both Bavaria's is supposed to be 80; that is to say, 34 Cities, and 46 great Towns, of which there are the principal.

The Bishoprick, or District of SALTZBURG, being the third part of Bayeren or Bavaria, (according to our former division of it) extendeth from the Inn or Oenus towards the Confines of Austria. The Soil hereof is rocky, dry, and barren, excepting some few Valleys only, as seated in the midst of the Julian Alps, the habitation heretofore of the Norici mediterranei, of whom more hereafter. The principal Town hereof is Saltzburg, seated upon the River Saltzach, whence it had the name; raised of the Ruines of Julavia, placed herabouts by Antoninus, the Station of a Cohort of Roman Soldiers belonging to the first Legion. An Alpine City, strongly situate among the Mountains; but no less beautiful than many of the lower grounds. The Royal Seat of some of the Bavarian Kings, after the Archbishops hereof, the most powerful Princes for Revenue or Jurisdiction of any in Germany. The See was first fixed here by Rupertus or Kubertus, the first Apostle of their parts, spoken of before; whose Image or Impres is stamped to this day on the Coins of this Bishoprick. At the time when Luther first endeavoured a Reformation, Cardinal Matthæus Langius was Bishop here, who did ingeniously confess, that the Mats did not want his faith, that the Court of Rome was much corrupted, and the lines of Priests and Friars fit to be reformed: sed quid mirum Monachus omnia reformet, id non esse tolerabile, but that such a sorry fellow as Luther should attempt the work, was by no means to be endured. 2. Newkirch, on the same River, near the head thereof. 3. Rosenburg, on the East-side of the Inn, bordering on Bavaria, 4. Trunschheim, upon the Traun, rising out of the Lakes. 5. Wilhelmsberg, one of the farthest Northwards, and 6. Bischofsberg, one of the most Southern in all this Trade.

The first Inhabitants of Bavaria (excluding the District of Saltzburg) were the Vindelici, as aforesaid; a people so resolutely bent to maintain their Freedom against the incroachment of the Romans, that when Drusus, the Son in Law of Augustus, and Father of Germanicus Cesar, made War upon them, the very Women thereof took the Alarm; et desideribus telis, Infantes in oraculum adversa miserunt, and when their Darts were sent, threw the young Infants (saith the Historian) at the heads of the Romans. After that, in the declining of the Empire, succeeded the Boiarii, some of the many Tribes of the Boii, the most diffused and multitudinous Nation of Gaul and Germany. Originally they were of Gaul, inhabiting the Dukedom of Bourbon, from whence some of them passed with the Senones and others of the Gauls to the farther side of the Alps (in respect of them) where they took up the Country between the Appennini and the Po. Wearied with many Bickerings, at last with sharp and bitter Wars against the Romans, and by them deprived of half their Country, some of them passed into Germany, and mingled themselves with the Taurisci, then dwelling in those parts which we now call Saxony; others advancing further, thrust themselves into the Norici (of whom more anon), and some retired themselves into the helters and fast places of the Hercynian Forest Forest. Driven from this last by the Marcomanni, they fell into the Countries of the Hermunduri and Norici, (now the Upper Palatinate) who, mingled into one Nation with them, took the name of Boiarii, and were by that name first known in the time of Clovis the 5. King of the French; by whose perfwasion, in the 17 year of Anastasijs Emperor of the East, they passed over the Danow, and possessed themselves of Vindelicis, or the second Rhetia, with some part of Noricum, to which they gave the name of Boiaria, as before was signified. They were governed first by Kings, (as all Nations were) of whom we meet with none but Aldigerius, (and he the last of that Race) slain fighting on the side of the Almans against the French, at the great Battel of Zulp near Colen. After which they were made subject to the Conquerors, as their neighbours and Confederates the Almans were, but suffered to live under the command and Government of their own Princes by the name of Dukes. Of these, from Theodo the Son of Aldigerius, to Tassilo the last Duke, outed of his Estate and Honours by Charles the Great, for conspiring with the Lombards against him, are reckoned 11 Dukes in all; whose names (for there remaineth little of them but the empty names) we shall subjoin in the ensuing Catalogue of the

Dukes of the BOIARIANS.

- 493 1. Theodo, Son of Aldigerius the last King, from whose younger Brother Orilo descended Pepin the Father of Charles the Great.
- 511 2. Theodo II. firnamed the Great.
- 537 3. Theodebert.
4. Theodo III. the first Christian Prince of the Boiarii.
- 565 5. Tassilo, Son of Theodebert.
- 598 6. Garibaldus.
- 612 7. Theodo IV.
- 630 8. Theodo II.
- 650 9. Theodo V.
10. Theodebert II.
11. Theodo VI. Son of Grimoldus, the Brother of Theodebert the second.
- 703 12. Grimold.
13. Hugobert, Brother of Grimold.
- 735 14. Orilo.
- 765 15. Tassilo III. the last Duke of the Boiarii, of whom more anon.

Amongst these, few were of any note but 1. Theodo the first Son of Aldigerius, who abandoning the name of King, because less pleasing to the French, who had newly conquered them, assumed that of Duke, and passing over the Danow, extorted the whole Province of Rhetia secundæ from the Romans, Anno 508. or thereabouts. 2. Theodo the second, named the great, for his great and many Victories against the Romans, whom he outed of all Noricum and Vindelicis, and whatsoever they held on the Dutch side of the Alps. 3. Theodo the third of that name, and the fourth in number of the Dukes, converted with his people to the Christian Faith by the preaching of Rupertus before mentioned, Anno 80. 4. Tassilo the third of that name, and the last of their Dukes of the Race of Aldigerius, or of the old Boiarii blood, who being deposed by Charles the Great, the whole Country became immediately subject to the French, governed at first by their Lieutenants. Disinherited from the French Empire by Lewis the Godly, it was made a Kingdom, (Pannonia being added and united to it) by whom it was conferred on Lotharius his eldest Son, who was afterwards Emperor of the Romans: after his death possessed by the Kings of Germany, but as a distinct Kingdom both in name and Title, till the decease of Lewis the Son of Arnulph, the last of the direct Line of Charles the Great. He being dead, and the Bavarians loth to be made a subject Province to the Kingdom of Germany, one Arnulph of the Issue of the said Charles, with the general liking of the Boiarii, took upon himself the Title of King, but being opposed therein by Conrad the Brother of Lewis, Emperor and King of Germany, and also by Henry the first who succeeded, he changed the Title of King into that of Duke: the Founder of the present House of

The Dukes of BAVARIA.

1. Arnulph, of the House of Charles the Great, first Duke of Bavaria.
2. Eberhard, Son of Arnulph, deposed by Otho the first.
3. Berechbold, the Brother of Arnulph, confirmed in the Estate by the said Emperor Otho. After whose death it was conferred on Henry the Brother of Otho the 1. who had married Judith, Daughter of Arnulph the first Duke, and Sister to Eberhard.
4. Henry, Brother of Otho the first, firnamed Rixius, or the Quarrellom.
5. Henry II. Son of the former Henry, firnamed Hezzelo.
6. Henry III. firnamed the Saint, Son of Henry II. the first Emperor who came in by Election, according to the Order made by Pope Gregory the 5. After whose coming to the Empire this Dukedom was transferred for 14 Successions from one great Family to another, according to the power and pleasure of the present Emperor, in manner following.
7. Henry IV. furnamed Hezzel, Brother to Conrad, the renowned Wife of Henry the Saint, by whom he was preferred to this Dukedom, and by him deposed.
8. Henry Guelpo, Son of Robert Earl of Altorff in Schwaben, (of the strange Original of which Family we shall speak in Brunswick) made Duke by the Emperor Conrad the 2.
9. Guelpo, Son of Henry Guelpo or Henry the 5.
10. Ernest, created Duke hereof by the same Conrad the 2, and by him deposed again for conspiring against him.
11. Henry VI.
12. Ceno, accused of conspiracy, and displaced by Henry the 3. to make room for
13. Henry VII. Son of the said Emperor Henry the 3, whom he succeeded in the Empire by the name of Henry the 4.
14. Agnes, the Mother of the said Henry the 4, by the gift of her Son.
15. Otho, by the gift of the Emperress Agnes, deposed not long after by Henry the 4.
16. Welpo III. Son of Coniza, the Daughter of Guelpo the 2, by Axon an Italian Marquess, made Duke hereof by the said Emperor Henry the 4.
17. Welpo IV. Son to Welpo the 3.
18. Henry VIII. firnamed the Proud, Brother of Guelpo the 4, by the Marriage of Gertrude Daughter of Lotharius the second, Duke of Saxony also. Deprived of both by the Emperor Conrad the 3.
19. Leopold, Son to Leopold the 4. Marquess of Austria.

- Austria*, made Duke by the said Conrad the 3.
 20. Henry IX. Brother of Leopold, after Marque's, at last Duke of Austria.
 21. Henry X. surnamed the Lion, Son of Henry the Proud, restored by the Arbitrement of Frederick Barbarossa, (the Duke of Austria being otherwise satisfied) by whom he was not long after prohibited, and deprived of both his Dukedoms. After which this Estate became fixed and settled in the person and posterity of 1180 22. Orto of Styria, so called from the place of his birth or dwelling, defended lineally from Arnulp the Lord of Sebyr in the Upper Bavaria, and 2. Son of Arnulp the first Duke hereof, advanced upon this honour by Frederick Barbarossa, in fable of the too great power of the former Dukes: the whole extent of this Estate being reduced by this time to the limits of the modern Bavaria, and the Palatinate of Northgria.
 1183 23. Ludovick, or Lewis Son of Orto.
 1231 24. Orto II. Son of Lewis, who by marrying Gertrude, the sole Daughter of Henry Count Palatine of the Rhene, brought the Electoral Dignity into the House of Bavaria.
 1290 25. Henry, Duke of Bavaria and Count Palatine of the Rhene, the Son of Orto the 2.
 1294 26. Ludovick or Lewis II. Brother of Henry Duke of Bavaria and Elector Palatine of the Rhene.
 1321 27. Ludovick or Lewis III. second Son of Lewis
 the 2. succeeded in the Dukedom of Bavaria, Radolph, the eldest Son, succeeding in both Palatinates and the Electoral Dignity. He was afterwards elected and crowned Emperour, known commonly by the name of Luodovickus Bavarius.
 1347 28. Stephen, the eldest Son of Ludovick the Emperour, William and Albert, his two Brethren, successively enjoying the Earldoms of Hainnault, Holland, &c. in right of their Mother.
 1375 29. Stephen II. Son of Stephen the first, his Brothers, Frederick and John, sharing with him parts of the Estate.
 1413 30. Ludovick II. surnamed Barbatus, deposed and imprisoned by his own Son Ludovick, who yet died before him without Issue.
 1447 31. Henry II. Son of Frederick, the second Brother of Stephen the 2. succeeded on the death of Ludovickus Barbatus.
 1450 32. Ludovick V. surnamed the Rich, the Son of Henry the 2. banished the Jews out of his Estates and seized their goods.
 1479 33. George, surnamed the Rich also, the Founder of the University of Innsbruck: whose sole Daughter and Heir was married to Rupertus
Prince Elector Palatine, with the Dukedom of Bavaria for her Dowry. But Maximilian the Emperour, not liking so much greatness in the German Princes, confirmed the same on.
 1503 34. Albert III. Son of a former Albert, Nephew of John surnamed by his Son Ernstus: which John was youngest Brother to Stephen the
 2. who by the power and favour of Maximilian the Emperour succeeded unto George the Rich: the cause of a long and unhappy War betwixt the Electors of the Rhene and Dukes of Bavaria, the worst whereof, besides the loss of this Estate, fell upon the Palatines, prohibited and outed of their Country upon this quarrel; but, upon their Submission, restored again.

- 1508 35. William, the Son of Albert the 2.
 1577 36. Albert IV. a great Champion of the Dr Artes and Traditions of the Church of Rome; and so extremely affected unto the Jesuits, that he built Colleged for them at Landsberg, Ingolstadt and Munich, his three principal Towns.
 1579 37. William II. Son of Albert the 4. as zealous as his Father in the cause of the Church of Rome, therein exceeded very much by 38. Maximilian, eldest Son of William the 2. who chiefly cut of the same zeal sided with Ferdinand the 2. in the Wars of Germany, An. 1620. and took upon him the conduct of the Armies of the said Emperour against Frederick Count and Elector Palatine, chosen King of Bohemia: in which having done great service to the Imperial and Romish Interest, he was by the said Ferdinand invested in the Upper Palatinat, called anciently (but not more properly than now) the Palatinat of Bavaria, together with the Electoral Dignity. This last was conferred at first upon him but for term of like the Diet at Regensburg, 1623. the Electors of Mentz, Saxony and Brandenburg then protesting against it; but afterwards, in the Diet at Prague, Anno 1628. conferred upon him and his Heirs for ever, to the great prejudice of the Princes of the Palatine Family, who by reason of their si-multaneous Investiture with the first of their House not to be deprived of their Estates and Dignities for the offence of their Fathers; the punishment not being extended beyond the person of the offender. But notwithstanding their Pretensions and Allegations, the Duke is still possessed of the Title and Dignity, and confirmed thereby the Conclusions of the Treaty of Munster, a new Electorate being to be erected for the Palatine Princes.
 The Arms of this Duke are Lozenges of 21 pieces Bend, Argent and Azure.

8. The Archdukedom of AUSTRIA.

THE Archdukedom of AUSTRIA, reckoning in the incorporate Provinces and the Members of it, is bounded on the East with Hungary and part of Sil-vania on the West with Bavaria, and some parts of the Switzers and the Grisons, on the North with Bohemia and Moravia, and on the South with Africa and some part of Frindl in Italy. Within which circuit are contained the several Provinces of Austria properly so called, Siria, Carinthia, Carniola, and Tyrol. The quality of the whole will be best discerned by the Survey of particulars.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole were the Norici of the Romans, parted into the lesser Tribes of the Seuces, Alauni, Ambisontii, Ambilici, and Ambirantii: savaged by Drusus, Son-in-law to Augustus Caesar, and made a Province of the Empire. After by Constantine the Great divided into Noricum, Mediocranum, comprehending the Countries of Carinthia, Carniola, Stiria, and some parts of Tyrol, with the Bishopric or District of Salzburg, of which Solva was the Metropolis or capital City; and Noricum Ripense, containing only Austria, and those parts of Bavaria which lie Eastward of the River Inn: extended all along on the banks of the Danube. It was known by no other names well possessed by the Romans, from whom being conquered by the Avars and other Nations, it gained those several names and appellations precised before.

1. AUSTRIA properly so called hath on the East the Kingdom of Hungary, on the West Bavaria, on the North the Bohemian Mountains towards the West, and on the other side the Teys, which separates it from Moravia, on the South Stryia, or Stiermark. It is called by the the Dutch Osterreich, and contracted Ofrich, that is to say, the Eastern Kingdom, (a part assuming to it felt the name of the whole) this being the extreme Province of East-France, or the Eastern Kingdom of the French, in the barbarous Latine of those times called by the name of Austrasia, whence the modern Austria.

The Air is generally very healthy, and the Earth as fruitful, yielding a plentiful increase without help of Compost or other Soiling, and of so easy a Tillage to the Husbandman, that on the North side of the Danube it is Ploughed and managed by one Horse only. Exceeding plentiful it is of Grain, and abundant in Wine; with which last it supplieth the defects of Bavaria; it hath great store of Saffron, some provision of Salt; and at the foot of the Mountains, not far from Hainburg, some Gen-gers. Nor wants it Mines of Silver in a large proportion. It is divided by the River Danube into the Lower, and the Higher: that lying on the North side of the River, towards Bohemia and Moravia; this on the South side, towards Stiermark.

Places of most importance in the HIGHER AU-STRIA are, 1. Gmund seated on a Lake called Gmundsee, bordering on Bavaria, at the Efflux of the River
Drava, which ariseth out of it. 2. Lintz, seated on the Confluence of the said Danube with the famous Danuv;
 the Arciduc of Ptolemy: a Town before the late Wars almost wholly Protestant; but then being put into the hands of the Duke of Bavaria, began to warp a little to the other side. 3. Walgensein, on the Enns or Ansfus, near the borders of Stiermark. 4. Enns, on the fall of that River into the Danube raised out of the Ruines of Laureacum sometimes the Metropolis of Noricum Ripense, the Station at that time of the 2. Legion: afterwards an Arch-bishop's See, made such in the first planting of Christianity amongst this people by S. Severinus. An. 464. On the River whereof (suppressed by the Huns, Boiarians, and others of the barbarous Nations) by the diligence and preaching of S. Rupertus, the Metropolis dignity was fixt at Salzburg. 5. Weidoboven, near the head of the River Ipi.
 6. Ipi, seated at the Influx of that River, and from thence denominated; the Gefodunum of Ptolemy and other Ancients. 7. Newsidle, on a great Lake so named. 8. Wels, on the main stream of the Danubius. 9. Hainburg, on the Confluence thereof and the River Mark. Near to which, at the foot of the Mountains now called Hainburgberg, (from the Town adjoining) but antiently named Mons Cognatus, is some fane of Ginger: a wonderful great rarity for these colder Countries. 10. Newfahr, first called so from the newness of it, being built of late. 11. Vienna, by the Dutch Wien, the principal of all these parts; by Ptolemy called Iulobona, Vindobona, by Antonine; the Station in their times of the tenth Roman Legion; of whose being settled here there are many Monuments both within the City and without. Seated it is on the banks of Danubius, well built, both in regard of private and public Edifices; each private house having much store of Cellarage for all occasions, that as much of the City seems to be under the ground as is above it. The Streets for the most part are spacious, and all paved with Stone, which makes them very clean and sweet in the midst of Winter. It is fenced with a mighty Wall, deep and precious. Ditches on all parts of it, and many Bulwarks, Towers and Ramparts in all needfull places. The Walls hereof were first raised with some part of the money paid unto Leopold Duke of Austria, for the ransom of K. Richard the first of England, taken Prisoner by him as he passed homeward through this Country from the Holy Land: Elected to this day the strongest hold of Christendom against the Turks; and proved experimentally so to be in that most notable and famous Repulse here given them

An. 1526. at what time 100000 of them, under the conduct of Solyman the Magnificent, besieged this City; but by the valour of Frederick the second, Elector Palatine of the Rhene, and other German Princes, were gallantly resisted and compelled to retire, with the loss of 80000 Souldiers. Nor doth the strength hereof so diminish the Beauties of it, but that it is one of the goodliest Towns in all the Empire; the Residence for these last Ages of the Emperours: made an University by the Emperour Albrecht
der second; revived and much advanced by an Episcopal Duke of Austria, An. 1356. adorned with an Episcopal See, many magnificent Temples and stately Monasteries;
 but above all, with a most sumptuous and princely Palace;
 wherein the Arch-dukes and Emperours use to keep their Courts; built by Ottacar, King of Bohemia during the little time he was Duke of Austria. In the middle Ages, as appears by Orto Frisingensis, it was called Fabiana, was but being ruined by the Huns, and again re-edified, was first called Biana, (the first syllable omitted by mistake or negligence) from whence the Dutch Wien, and the Latine Vienna.

We should now take a view of the Towns and Cities in the LOWER AUSTRIA. As there were any in it which were worth the looking after. The Country having never been in the hands of the Romans, hath no Town of any great Antiquity; nor many new ones built or beautified by the Austrian Princes, since it came into their possession: the only one of note being Cremis, or Cremia, on the left hand shore of Danubius, going down towards the waters. 2. Rezz, on the River Teys, bordering on Moravia; and 3. Freistat, at the foot of the Mountains on the skirts of Bohemia.
 4. STIRIA, or STIERMARK is bounded on the North with Austria, on the South with Carniola on the East with Hungary, and on the West with Carinthia; extendeth in length 110. miles, but in breadth not above 60.
 or thereabout. For the most part mountainous and bar-ren, as being overtopped with the Spurs and branches of the Alps, and rich only in Minerals. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

Towns of most consequence are, 1. Gratz, seated upon the River Mar, and the chief of the Province, from which the third Branch of the House of Austria (since the time of Ferdinand the first) was called de Gratz, and had the Government of the Country for their part of that Patrimony.
 A Town once full of Protestants, and those so strong, that they could neither be forced out, nor hindered from the free exercise of their Religion, till the year 1598. in which
Margaret the late Queen of Spain, Sister to the Archduke
Ferdinand de Gratz, was by the Citizens solemnly entertained; with whom entered so many Souldiers, that the City was taken, and 14 Ministers of the Reformed Religion presently banished. 2. Rachelpurg; and 3. Pruck both situate also on the Mar. 4. Stachow, an Episcopal See, seated on the Drav or Dravus, a well-known River, not far from the fall of the Mar into it. 5. Petaw, the Paravia of Antonine, seated somewhat higher upon the Dravus.
 6. Lambach, the Ostibus of Antonine; on the Dravus.
 also. 7. Voitsberg, upon the River Kainach. 8. Coley, the Celcia of Pliny, of great antiquity, as appears by many Roman Inscriptions and other evident signs of Age which are upon it; for this cause thought by some to be that Celia, or built at least out of the Ruines of it, which Ptolemy placeth in this Tract: it is situate on the River Savus, and hath a large jurisdiction over the adjoining Countries. 9. Cavisch, seated in a Marsh on the edge of this Country: a place of great strength both by art and nature; once one of the strongest Bulwarks against the Turks; and proved experimentally so to be in that most notable and famous Repulse here given them

The whole Country being mountainous and hilly, generally over-spread with the spurs and branches of the neighbouring Alps, and rich only in Minerals, as before was said, was anciently the Inhabitation of the Taurisci, (part of the Norici) from whom it took the name of Stiermark, the Germans calling that a Stier which the Latins call Tauriscus, or a little Bullock. By which account Stiermark is nothing but the Borders or Marches of the Taurisci, the utmost Bounds of their possessions; as indeed it was, laid to Pannonia in the distribution of the Roman Provinces, it was called Valeria, in honour of Valeria the Daughter of Diocletian. But once dismembered from the Empire, it fell into the name of Stiermark, with reference to the Taurisci spoken of before. First made an Earldom in the person of one Ottacarus, advanced unto that Honour by the Emperor Conrad the 2. Leopold the 4. from this Ottacarus (two other Ottacars intervening) was made Marquess of Stiermark; and his Son, Ottacar the 4. was made Duke hereof by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa. But being without hope of Issue, and infected with the incurable disease of the Leprosy, he sold his Country to Leopold the fifth of Asfria; who bought it with some part of that vast sum of money which he extorted for the Ransom of King Richard the first. It hath continued ever since in the possession of this potent Family, but so, that it hath many times been assigned over for the Portion of the younger Brethren: as, namely, to Leopold the ninth of that name, one of the younger Sons of Albert the Short; Ernest the youngest Son of that Leopold; and lastly, to Charles the youngest Son of Ferdinand the first, called Charles of Graz, Father of Ferdinand the Second, Successor to Matthias in Asfria it self and all the rest of the Estates incorporate with it: not likewise to be so impolitically dismembered from the chief of the House, as in former times.

3. CARINTHIA, by the Dutch called Karnten, is bounded on the East with Stiermark and the River Lavand, on the West with the District of Salzburg and the River Salzach, on the North with Asfria it self, and on the South with Carniola, and the River Dravus, which having its original in the skirts hereof, passeth through these Asfrian Provinces into Hungary, and falls at last into the Danuv. The Country, being situate in the worst part of the Alps, is generally poor and barren, except only in Minerals; extending all along the Dravus for the length of 100 English miles, and 47 in breadth, betwixt that River and the Mur, by the which it is bounded.

Places of principal note in it are, 1. S. Veit, or S. Viti, the chief Town of the Country, situate at the meeting of the Glan and the Winnies, two small Rivers adorned with a spacious Market-place and a beautiful Convent. 2. Filzbach, seated on the Dravus, in a pleasant Valley encompassed about with Rocks, the Houses thereof adjoined on the out-side with painted Stories, very delightful to behold. 3. Gurk, a small Town, but an Episcopal See. 4. Gluggenfurt, on the Lake called Wera-See, a well-fenced place, called antiently by the name of Claudia. 5. Wolffperg, upon the Lavand, so near to Stiermark, that it is by some reckoned for a Town thereof. 6. Lavamund, on the same Border an Episcopal See, situate at the influx of that River into the Dravus. 7. Friesach, a Town of much antiquity, seated on the Oleza. 8. Spirat, &c. The Story and Succession of the Dukes hereof, before the uniting of it to the House of Asfria (this Province and Carniola making but one Estate between them) we shall leave anon.

4. CARNIOLOA, by the Dutch called Kraen, is environed with Salweenia East, Friuli West, Carnithia and part of Stiermark North, and Asfria South. It is in length from East to West, (extended along the River Savus) 120 Italian miles, and about 76 in breadth. The Asps here being lower and less cold and rocky than more towards the West, maketh it to be the more rich both in Corn and Wine, and other the productions of nature, than it would be otherwise.

The chief Towns are, 1. Newmark, 2. Elling, 3. Marpurg, 4. Poggenack, and 5. Saxenfeld, all upon the Savus, which, arising in this Country, runneth through the very middle of it, and after falleth into the Danuv. 6. Laibach, seated on a small River of the same name; by Ptolemy called Pamportus, but by Pliny Naupertus; famous in old Mythology for the transport of the Ship called Argo, wherein Jason and his Comrades brought the Golden Fleece: who coming out of Pontus, so into the Savus Sea, took their course up the Danuv, so into the Savus, then into this Town; hence carried their Ship over land into the Adriatick, and from thence sailed into Greece, where they first began the undertaking. 7. Goritz, called antiently Noricia, or seated in the place where Noricia stood, is situate on the River Lisnona, an Italian water, which not far off falleth into the Adriatick. A Town of so much note, that antiently it was an Earldom, and in the division of the Estate of Mainard Earl of Tyrol, (to whom it formerly belonged) was given to Albert his second Son, with the Title and Title of Earl of Goritz, continuing in his House till the year 1500, when on the death of Leonard the last Earl hereof, it descended upon Maximilian the first, as next Heir unto it; whose Successors, not only in the Estates of Asfria, but the Empire also, do still retain the Title of Earls of Goritz, in their usual Style.

The first Inhabitants of both these Provinces of Kraen and Karnten, were the Carni of Pliny and other Antients, who made them part of Venetia, the Tenth Region of Italy; but afterwards, in the distribution of the Roman Provinces, they were cast into Noricum, and made a Member of the Diocese of the Western Ilyricum, but (subject or subordinate rather, to the Presidius of Pratorio of Italy) from them not only the *Alp*idjoyning had the name of Carnica, but these two Countries had the names by which now they go. They were united along time in the persons of the Dukes of Karnten, of whom the first mentioned upon good Record was Henry, Son to Berchtold, a Nobleman of Bavaria, in the time of the Emperor Otto the third, by him advanced unto this Honour and Estate; disposed of in succeeding times at the Will of the Emperours, and given from one Family unto another, as their fancies served them; not fixed in any House till it came to Henry the Son of Engelbert, President or Prefect of Asfria; in which Family it continued under this Henry, and his Brother Engelbert, Ulric the first, Henry the third, Herman, and Ulric the second, the last Prince hereof, who by his Marriage with Agnes, Sister and Heir of Otto the second, Duke of Meran, added that Estate to his former Patrimony. But being old, and without Children, he sold his whole Estate to Ottacarus, King of Bohemia and Duke of Asfria; by whom these Countries were surrendered unto Rudolphus of Habsburg, on the conclusion of the Peace which was made between them. And although Rudolphus gave Carnithia to Mainard Earl of Tyrol (in right of whose Daughter Elizabeth Albert of Son of Rudolph was possessed of Asfria); yet on the death of Henry the Son of Mainard without Issue male, it fell (according to the Contract) unto Albert the Short, younger Son of Albert, and Grandchild of Rudolphus; continuing ever since in that Family, though not always in the chief House of the Dukes of Asfria.

The strange and observable Ceremonies with which the Archbishops of Asfria are acknowledged Dukes of Carnithia

Carnithia take here out of Monster. In the Meadows adjoining to the Town of S. Veit a certain Country-man, to whom that office by inheritance belonged, sitteth on a Marble-stone there being, holding in his right hand a Cow with a black Calf, and in his left hand a Mare as lean as a Rake. Then cometh the new Duke attired in a plain rustick Habit, his Courtiers attending him in their rustick Apparel: at whose approach the Country-man above mentioned demandeth, What is he that so majestically cometh hitherward? And the people answer, that it is the future Duke. He again asketh, whether he be a just Judge, and one that will maintain the liberty of the Country, and purity of the Religion. The people answer, He will. Then he asketh, by what right he will displace him of his Marble-Seat. To whom the Steward of the new Duke's House replyeth, He shall give thee 60 pence in Silver, his Cattel now standing by thee, the Clothes which he hath at this time on, and thy House shall ever be free from Tax and Tribute. The fellow upon this taking the Duke by the hand, and bidding him to be a good Prince, giveth him a gentle cuff on the ear, setteth him on the Marble-stone, and taking away the Cattel departeth. This done the new Duke goeth to S. Veit's Church, and having done his Devotions, putteth off his rustick weeds, and dresseth himself in Clothes befitting a Prince: for such after their Ceremonies he is acknowledged.

The Arms of these Dukes were Argent, 3 Lions Leopards Sable.

5. TYROL is bounded on the East with Friuli and Marca Trevigiana, by the interposing of which, or some parts thereof, disjointed from Carniola, so on the West with the Grisini and some part of Switzerland, and on the North with Bavaria, and on the South with Lombardy. It is extended over the greatest parts of the Alpes Rhodica, and some part of the Jule, yet intermixt with many rich and fruitful Vallies, those especially which lie on the banks of the Inn and the River of Adige. Nor are the Hills so void of profit unto the Inhabitants, but that they afford good store of Metals digged out of them, especially of Brass and Silver; which last have yielded to the Arch-duke 230000 Crowns yearly.

Towns of most note are, 1. Onepont, or Innsbruck, so called from a Bridge on the Inn or Oenus, which gave denomination to the second branch of Asfria, descended from Ferdinand the second Son of the Emperor Ferdinand, the House of Graz issuing from Charles the III. Son of that Emperour. Most memorable for the hasty Flight of Charles the V. upon the news that D. Maurice, whom he had lately made Elector of Saxony, was coming against him with his Forces, which so terrified him, that he fled away by Torch-light with some of his followers; the residue of his Court, (most of which were persons of great eminency) trudging in the dark on foot, with the black Guard and the Scullery. The Town hath been many times the Residence of the Dukes of Asfria; who have there a very Royal and magnificent Palace. And to say truth, the Town doth seem to be so honoured, amongst pleasant Meadows, spacious Corn-fields, and shady Mountains sweetly seated: the Houses fairly built of Stone, enriched by the Courts of Judicature here settled for all the Country, and provided of a gallant Armory. 2. Trent, (Fridemunt it is called in Latine) situate in the Confinnes of Germany and Italy; for which cause the Inhabitants speak both Languages: built on the banks of the River Adige of Adige; honoured with an Episcopal See; but made more famous by the Council which was there begun by Pope Paul the third, An 1545, against the Lutherans. It was for 22 years together before their meeting dashed by one Pope, and animated by another; advanced by Charles the V. upon worldly Policies, and for as worldly Policies retarded by the Court of Rome: for 18 years after this first Convention of it, at sundry times assembled, suspended, and dissolved: and finally, when fixed here seriously by Pope Pius the fourth, Anno 1562, managed with so much art and cunning by the Papal party, that nothing was determin'd among the Prelates but what had been formerly resolved on in the Roman Conclave, and certified accordingly by especial Posts, occasioning that most bitter Jest of one of the Hungarian Bishops who was present at it, that the Holy Ghost was sent unto them in a Clock-bag from Rome. The effects of which Council, so artificially carried on by the strength of wit, I cannot better describe than in the words of the History of it, which are as followeth. "This Council, desired and procured by godly men, to re-unite the Church which began to be divided, hath so established the Schism, and made the parties so obdurate, that the Discords are irreconcilable, being managed by Princes for Reformation of Ecclesiastical Discipline, hath caused the great Deformation that ever was since Christianity did begin; and hoped for by the Bishops themselves to regain the Episcopal Authority, for the most part usurped by the Pope, hath made them lose it altogether, bringing them into greater servitude: on the contrary, feared and avoided by the See of Rome, as a potent means to moderate the exorbitant power thereof, mounted from final beginnings, by divers degrees, to an unlimited excess; it hath so established and confirmed the same over that part which remained subject unto it, that it was never so great nor soundly rooted. So far the words of the History. The next note is, 3. Falkenstein, remarkable for Mines of Brass; as 4. Hall upon the Inn for Salt-works, and 5. Schmas, for the richer Mines of Silver. 6. Maln, near the head of the River Adige. 7. Pollen, upon the borders of Italy, by the people thereof called Bolzano, and Bolsano. 8. Tyrol, an ancient Castle, the first Seat of the Earls or Governors hereof, and giving name for that reason to the Country adjoining. 9. Meran, neighbouring the old Castle of Tyrol, which gave the Title of Dukes to a branch of the Caroline Race, descended from Rathboldus, a base Son of the Emperour Arnulph, possessed of many large Estates in these Alpine Countries, now appertaining to the Princes of the House of Asfria. From one of which Dukes, called Otto of Meran, married to Beatrice, Heir of the Country of Burgundy, the Earls of Burgundy (since that time) do derive themselves.

The Earls hereof were at the first no other than Provincial Officers: when made Proprietaries, I am yet to seek. The first of whom we have any certainty was Mainard, Earl of Tyrol and Goritz, who died in the year 1258, leaving his Earldoms to that Mainard who by Rudolphus Habsburgensis was infeoffed with the Dukedom of Karnten. But Henry the second Son of this last Mainard dying without Issue male, his Daughter Margaret by the consent of all her people, settled her Estate therein on the Sons of Albert called the Short; which continues ever since in the House of Asfria, though sometimes made the Portion and inheritance of the younger Princes. By Ferdinand the first it was given in Appenago to his second Son of Ferdinand, surnamed of Innsbruck for that reason, who by marrying with Philippina, a Burger's daughter of Augsburg, so displeased his Brethren, that to buy his peace of them, and enjoy his own content with her, it was finally agreed upon amongst them all, that Tyrol should not descend upon his Children of that Venter. In pursuance whereof, after his decease, Tyrol fell to the House of Graz; his eldest Son Charles being made Marquess of Burgundy, and Andrew his youngest Cardinal of Brixia. Who were the old Inhabitants of the Roman Asfria we have seen seen already. The old inhabitants of the other part are supposed to be the Quadi, in that part which lieth next to Bohemia; the Marcomanni, in those parts which are next Moravia; who intermingled with the Boii, and united with them into the name of Boiarii, was from the Romans the whole Province of the Second Rhaetia, and so much of Noricum as lieth betwixt the Inn and the Enns, leaving the rest to the Avars, who possessed that and the two Pannonia's, extorted also from the Romans in the fall of that great and mighty Empire, as we shall here more fully when we come to our description of Hungary.

But these Boiarii were conquered by Clovis the Great, and the Avars driven out of Pannonia by Charlemagne, both Provinces became members of the French Empire, till the subduing of Pannonia by the Hungarians. To oppose whom, and keep in peace and safety these remoter parts, some Guardians, or Lords-Marchers, were appointed by the Kings and Emperors of Germany, with the Title of Marquesses of Opferich; at first officary only, but at last hereditary, made so by the Emperor Henry the first, who gave this Province to one Leopold, furnished the illustrious, the Son of Henry Earl of Bamberg, of the House of Schmaben, and therewithal the Title of Marquess, Anno 980. This Marquessate was by Frederick, Barbassia raised to a Dukedom 1158; Henry being the first Duke, whose Nephew Leopold took Richard the first of England prisoner, in his return from Palestine for whose Ransom he had so much money, that with it he bought Stiermark, together with the Counties of Neuburg and Lintz, and walled Vienna. His Son Frederick, furnished the Warlike, was made King of Austria by the Emperor Frederick the second, Anno 1255. Eleven years he continued in his Dignity; at the end of which he was spoiled of his Royal Ornaments by the same hand, for denying his appearance at the Emperors Summons, unto whom for some Outrages he had been complained of. Finally, he died in the year 1246, discomfited and slain in Battle by the King of Hungary. Leaving no Issue of his body, this Estate of right should have descended on Frederick, Son of Hermannus, Marquess of Baden, and of Gertrude his Wife, the Niece of this Frederick the Warlike by his Brother Henry, who was afterwards beheaded at Naples by Charles of Valois, Anno 1268. But Ottacar, Son of Primslaus King of Bohemia, pretending to it in the right of Margaret his Wife, one of the Sisters of the said Frederick the Warlike, by a strong hand possessed himself of the Dukedom of Austria, which he increased by the addition of Carinthia and Treugiana, all which he held, together with the Kingdom of Bohemia till the year 1278, in which he was vanquished and slain by Rodolphus of Habsburg, not long before advanced to the German Empire. Rodolphus thus the Eldest Son, who had then married Elizabeth, Daughter of Manard Earl of Tyrol by Elizabeth (or Agnes) his Wife, the Daughter of Gertrude, and Sister and sole Heir at last of Frederick, so cruelly murdered at Naples, as before was said; By means of which Marriage and Investiture Albert was quietly possessed of the Dukedom of Austria, Stiermark, Carinthia, Carniola, together with Moravia Treugiana, to which the Earldom of Tyrol and many other fair Estates in Schmaben and Alsatia were added. By whom it was first raised to the Title of Archduke is not yet agreed. Some attribute it to Rodolphus of Habsburg, at the Investiture of his Son Albert into these Estates, Anno 1288. Other to Rodolph the Ingenious, Anno 1360. Some make it to be first given to Albert Duke hereof, in the year 1430; and others post it lower to the Marriage of Philip, Son of Maximilian of Austria and of the Lady Mary of Burgundy, with Joan Princess of Spain. But by whomsoever given at first, it is now the constant and hereditary Title of all this Family; the successive Princes whereof from the first Investiture follow in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Marquesses, Dukes, Kings, and Arch-dukes of AUSTRIA.

- 926 1. Leopold of Bamberg, the first Marquess.
- 983 2. Henry, Son of Leopold.

- 1283 13. Albert II. Son of Rodolph of Habsburg, by his Father made Duke of Austria, married Elizabeth, the lineal and direct Heir of Gertrude, one of the Nieces and (on the death of that Frederick, who was slain at Naples) the next Heir of Frederick King and Duke of Austria, after his Fathers death chosen Emperor also.
- 1308 14. Rodolph the Ingenious, his other Brother sharing with him in the Estate.
- 1315 15. Albert, furnished the Short, the youngest and surviving Brother of Rodolph, succeeded in the whole Estate; a great advancer of this House.
- 1358 16. Albert IV. Son of Albert the Short.
- 1365 17. Albert V. Son of Albert the fourth.
- 1404 18. Albert VI. Son of Albert the fifth, King of Hungary and Bohemia in right of Elizabeth his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Sigismund the King thereof.
- 1439 19. Ladislaus, Son of Albert & Elizabeth, King of Hungary and Bohemia, and Duke of Austria.

9. VETERAVIA

VETERAVIA or WETERAW, is bounded on the West with the Bishopric of Colen, on the East with Frankenland, on the North with Haffia and Westphalen, and on the South with the Lower Palatinat. It containeth a Combination of many small Estates, which being joined in a common League for defence of each other in the preservation of their Laws, Liberties and Religion, are called the Confederation of the Weteraw. The principal of the States which are thus confederated are the Earls of Nassau, 2 Hanaw, and 3 Solms; 4 the Lords of Liechtenberg, and the Imperial Cities of 5 Eriberg, and 6 Werzlar.

The County of NASSAU (for fruitfulness of Soil and delightfulness of situation not inferior to moist parts of France) lieth at the foot of the Mountains which divide Haffia from Engern and Westphalen, anciently called Melibocus; a branch of the long ridge of mountains which were called Abnobi. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Nassau, situate on the South-side of the River Lon, not far from the fall into it from the Rhene; the first Seat and honorary Title of this famous Family, and still in the possession of the Princes of Orange, the first branch hereof. 2 Dillenburg, the usual Seat of the Earls of Nassau before their settling in the Low Countries; whence they are named the Earls of Nassau of the House of Dillenburg, to difference them from others of the same Family. 3 Cassel, which gives the Title of an Earl to the owners of it; in Latine Cattii Meliboci, which shews the name to be compounded of the Catti, anciently possessed of these parts of Germany, and the mountainous parts of Melibocus, then inhabited by them. The possession of this Town is much controverted between the Earls of Nassau and the Landgraves of Haffia. Concerning which we are to know, that Henry the second son of Lewis Landgrave of Haffia furnished the Mild, married with Anne, Daughter and Heir of Philip the last Lord hereof, and by her had a Son called William, who died without Issue, and a Daughter named Elizabeth, married to John the third of Nassau, to whom the brought Henry and William Earls of Nassau. Elizabeth on the death of her Brother William laid claim to the Estate, as the next Heir to him; followed in the pursuit thereof by William Count of Nassau, her surviving Son. Against which William the 2. of Haffia did alledge a grant or donation of it from his Cousin William, the Brother of Elizabeth as before is said, and having Possession of the Town, and the members of it, was made thereby the better able to defend his Title. But at the last it was surrendered by Count William of Nassau (Father of William Prince of Orange) unto Philip the Landgrave, in the time of Charles the fifth, for the sum of 600000 Crowns; the House of Nassau notwithstanding retaining it amongst their Titles.

3 Herborn, a small University, or Schola illustris, founded of late by the Earls of Nassau in which Piscator was Divinity-Reader, and Aldreus (both famous in their times) Professor for the Arts and Sciences. 4 Idstein, lying South to Cassel, and 5 Wiesbad, directly South to Idstein, betwixt that and the Maine; these being the Title and possessions of the second branch of this Family. 6 Weilburg, on the Lon, not far from Werzlar; which gives Title to the third branch of this House, called the Earls of Nassau in Sarbruck and Weilburg.

As for the Princes of the House of Nassau, they are very ancient; Orbo of Nassau being made Earl of Gelderland in the year 1079. Another Orbo of this House, but proceeding from a different Branch of it, died Anno 1190, the Founder of the present Family of the Princes of Orange.

The Arms of these Princes are Gules, a Fess Argent; assumed by Marquess Leopold at the Siege of Acon or Ptolemais in the Holy Land, because his whole Armour being covered with blood his belt only remained white. The Arms thereof in former times have been six Larks Or, in a Field Argent; supposed to have been taken by the first Marquess, because they possessed those six Provinces, for defence of which the Tenth Legion, called Alexandria, had been fixed at Vienna.

And now we are to take our leave of the Roman Empire, which we shall meet withal no more till we come to Hungary; the Countries on the north-side of Danubius and the East-side of the Rhene being almost as soon abandoned as conquered by them. So that in our survey of these Northern Countries we are not like to find such matter of Antiquity as we have before; but must content our selves both with Towns and Villages of a later date, and a lesser continuance. In which we shall begin with those Countries which lie on the other side of the Rhene bordering on the Estates of Cleveland and the Bishops-Electors; and so proceed on Eastward till we come to the farthest parts of Germany, and the Confines of Hungary; afterwards turning to the North, till we meet with Danubius; which is next of all to be considered.

Orange, and of the House Wisbad and Idstein, out of which descended Adolphus Earl of Nassau, chosen Emperor in the year 1292. by the Marriage of Engelbert, the seventh Earl of this House of Dillenburg, with Mary Daughter of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, they came first to be possessed of Estates in the Netherlands: and by the Marriage of Henry, great Grand-child of this Engelbert, with Claude of Chalons, they got the Principality of Orange in France. A Family as much honoured for the personal Merit of the Princes as any other in Europe, of some of which although we have already given a Catalogue, (in the description and story of Provence) as Princes of Orange, yet take here the whole Succession of them as

The Counts of NASSAU.

1. Orto, the Son of Henry, and Nephew of Waleran, the first Earl of Nassau of this Line.
- 1190 2. Henry, the Son of Orto, who added Dillenburg Wisbad and Idstein, unto his Estate; Grandfather, by Waldradus his 2. Son, to Adolphus the Emperor.
3. Orto II. Son of Henry.
4. Henry II. Son of Orto the 2.
5. Orto III. Son of Henry the 2.
6. John, Son of Orto the 3.
- 1362 7. Engelbert, the Son of John by Mary his wife, Daughter and Heir of Philip, Lord of Breda in Brabant, added that Town, with many other fair Estates in the Netherlands, to his former Patrimony.
8. John II. Son of Engelbert, Earl of Nassau, and Lord of Breda, &c.
- 1475 9. John III. Son of John the 2.
- 1516 10. Henry III. Son of John the 3. Knight of the Golden Fleece, married Claude of Chalons, Sister of Philibert Prince of Orange.
- 1536 11. Rene, Son of Henry the 3. and of Claude of Chalons, Successor to his Uncle Philibert in the Principality of Orange, Anno 1530, and to his Father in the Earldom of Nassau, Anno 1536.
- 1544 12. William, the Son of John the 3. by Elizabeth his Wife, Daughter of Henry Landgrave of Hassia, and of Anne Daughter and Heir of Philip Earl of Catzenbogen, reformed the Religion in this Country according to the Lutheran Doctrines.
- 1559 13. William II. Son of William the first succeeded Prince of Orange by the Will of Rene his Cousin-german, An. 1544. and Earl of Nassau by the death of his Father, Anno 1559. What else concerns this Prince, we have had before. I only add, that William the first besides this William had three other Sons: that is to say, Count John, the Father of William of Nassau, Governour of West Friesland; Count Ludowick, of great renown in the first Wars of the Netherlands, in the course whereof he lost his life, Anno 1574; and Count Adolphus, slain in the same Wars also, Anno 1568.
- 1584 14. Philip, eldest Son of William the second and of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Maximilian of Erghem, Earl of Buren, succeeded Earl of Buren on the death of his Mother, Anno 1551, Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau by the death of his Father.
15. Maurice, Son of William the 2. and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Maurice Duke-Ele-ctor of Saxony, Prince of Orange and Count of Nassau: at the age of 10 years made General of all the Forces of the United Netherlands, which place he managed for the space of 37 years both with great courage and success.

- 1625 16. Henry IV. Brother of Maurice (but by another Venter, the Daughter of Gasper Coligny, Admiral of France) Count of Nassau, Prince of Orange, and General of the forces of the States United.
- 1648 17. William III. Son of Henry the 4. Successor to his Father in all his Honours and Commands. A Prince of great hopes and expectations.

The Arms of the Earls of Nassau are quarterly, 1. A Zure, a Lion Or, Armed Gules; 2. Or, a Lion-Leopard Gules, Armed and Crowned Argent; 3. Gules, a Fels Argent; and 4. Gules two Leopards Or, Armed and Membered of the first.

Bordered on Franconia or Frankenland lieth the County of HANAU, so called from the chief Town of it: in which the places of most note are, 1. Hann itself, in Latine called Hanovia, honoured with a Schola illustis also, and much enriched by the trade of Printing, with which they use to furnish annually the Marts of France, distant from hence about ten Dutch miles, 2. Pfaffenhofen, of no note formerly, but like to be remembered in the Stories of succeeding times, for the great Defeat there given to the Duke of Lorraine, July 31. 1613, who lost his whole Forces, all his Ordnance, Ammunition and Baggage, and, which was worst of all, his Country; taken in part from him by the conquering Swede, who followed him close unto his home; but wholly by the French King upon that advantage. 3. Lichtberg, which gives Title to a second Branch of the House of Hann, called the Lord of Lichtberg. A Family of good esteem, since the time that Orto of Hann was ennobled with the Title of Earl thereof which was about the year 1399. Before that, Princes of the Empire; and after that advanced unto great Fortunes, by the addition of the Bann of Mintzberg in the person of Philip the first Earl, of the County of Rheinick, in the person of another Philip, the third of that name, great Grandchild of the former Philip; and finally, of the Lordships and Estates of Lichtberg, accruing to this House by the Marriage of a third Philip, the youngest Son of Reinard the first Earl thereof, with Anne the Daughter and Heir of Ludowick, Lord of Lichtberg; the Title and possession of the second branch of the House of Hann, called Lords of Lichtberg and Hofensteyn, and Earls of Bischof: this last being an Estate in Lorraine accruing to them by the Marriage of a fourth Philip, (the fifth in name and order of the House of Lichtberg) with Margaret sole Daughter and Heir of Ludowick the last Earl thereof.

Between the Countys of Nassau and Hannau both sides of the River Lon, lies the Earldom of SOLDANIA, the first Earl whereof (of whom there is any good Consent) was Henry honoured with this Title, Anno 1220. But being I find them in the Catalogue of the Counts Imperial made before that time, I must conclude that to be ancienter than the date aforesaid; though that be sufficient to ennoble a far greater Family. By the Marriage of Conrade the ninth from Henry, first with Elizabeth, one of the Daughters of William of Nassau, Prince of Orange, and after with the Widow of the Earl of Eymond, they came to be of such authority amongst the Netherlands, as to be privileged with a place and Suffrage in the Council of the States General: there settled at the present in their greatest honour, especially since the Mar-age of Henry of Nassau, Prince of Orange, with a Daughter of Earl Conrade by his second Wife, the Mother of William of Nassau, now Prince of Orange, and Husband to the Princess Mary, the eldest Daughter of Great Britain. But besides their Estate there, they are possessed in this Tract of 1. Braunfels, which gives Title to the first Branch of the House of Solms; 2. Croneberg, the possession of the second Branch of this Family; and 3. Solms on the North-side of the Lon, the Root of both.

Of the Imperial Cities in this Confederation, the first is Friburg called for distinction sake Friburg in Weterau, to difference it from another Town of that name in Brifgen; situate in the middle of delicious and most fruitful fields, and memorable for the stout resistance which it made to Adolphus of Nassau, at that time Emperor; who, when he could not get it by Force or Famine, obtained it by Fraud, and put to death no less than 40 of the chief Nobility, whom he found in the Castle. So hated he was for that bloody fact, that he was shortly after deprieved of the Empire, and slain in fight by Albert of Austria, his Competitor. The second of the two is Wetzlar, seated on the Lon, where it meets with the Dille, which rising near Dillenburg, a Town of the Earl of Nassau doth here lose its name into the greater. A Town Imperial, confederate with Friburg and the Princes before mentioned, for maintaining their common Liberties, and the Religion publicly professed amongst them, being that of the Reformed Churches of Calvin's Platform.

10. FRANCONIA.

FRANCONIA, or FRANKENLAND, is bounded on the East with the Upper Palatinate, and part of Foissland, on the West with the Confederates of Weterau and part of the Rhene, on the North side with Hassia and Thuringia, on the South with the Palatinate of the Rhene and some part of Schwaben: So called from the French, Franci, or Francones, in whose possession it was when they were first known unto the Romans; the Residence of their Dukes or Princes in this noble Province appropriating the name unto it. Called also Francia Orientalis, to difference it from the Realm of France which lay more towards the West. At that time of a larger extent than it is at the present, comprehending so much of the Lower Palatinate as lieth on the same side of the Rhene; since subdued from it and made a Province of it self in these later Ages.

The Country, on the out-parts overgrown wholly in a manner with Woods and Forrests, and environed almost with Mountains; Part of the old Hercynian Woods, is within pleasant, plain and fruitful, sufficiently plentiful both of Corn and Wines, but abundantly well stored with Rape and Licoras, and yielding good pasture for Cattel. So that we compare it to a fine piece of Cloth, wrought about with a coarse Lint; or an excellent fine piece of Lawn, with a Canvas Selvage.

Chief Rivers of it are, 1. The Maine, or Menus, which running through the midst of it, is received into the Rhene below Frankfort. 2. The Sala, whence the adjoining French had the name of Salii, and Conrade, Emperor of the Germans, the surname of Salicus. 3. Radenia. 4. Sinna. 5. Tabero. 6. Astus, &c.

The people of it are ingenious, patient of labour, strong of body, and very industrious, not suffering any to be idle that can earn his living, of what sort soever. The offspring of the ancient French, who, having over-mastered Gaul and the parts adjoining, left here the seminary of their strength, and a stock of their ancient Princes; Mar-

comir, Brother of Pharamond the first King of the French, governing in these parts as Duke, and leaving the Estate and Title unto his Posterity. The Catalogue of which Princes take in order thus.

The Princes of the FRANKS, and Dukes of FRANCONIA, of the old French Race.

A. Cb.

- 326 1. Genebalus; the Son of Dagobert, descended from the old Regal stock of the Sicambri, united with other Dutch Nations about 60 or 70 years before, in the name of Frank, having subdued those parts which lay towards the River Mannus, became the first Prince of the Eastern Franks; or Lord of Francia Orientalis.
- 356 2. Dagobert, the Son of Genebalus, who added the District of Triers unto his Estates.
- 377 3. Glodowius, or Ludowicus, the Son of Dagobert.
- 398 4. Marcomir, the Son of Glodowius, who extended his Dominion Eastwards towards Bavaria and Bohemia.
- 402 5. Pharamond, or Waramond, the Son of Marcomir, the first of this Line which took upon himself the Title of King of the French: on the assuming whereof (aiming at matters of more importance) he left Francia, or East-France, with the Title of Duke, to his Brother Marcomir.
- 419 6. Marcomir the Brother of Pharamond.
- 423 7. Prunmesser, by some called Priamus the Son of Marcomir.
- 435 8. Genebalus II. the Son of Prunmesser.
- 455 9. Sumo, the Son of Genebalus the second.
- 478 10. Clodomirus, or Lutemarus, the Son of Sumo.
- 515 11. Hygebalus, the Son of Clodomirus, who became a Christian and added Wormes and Mentz unto his Estates.
- 541 12. Helenus; by some called Hermericus a Christian also, who passing over the Rhene, subdued that Tract bordering betwixt Triers and Lorraine, which the Dutch call Welf-reich.
- 571 13. Gotofridus, the Son of Helenus, a Christian also, but not able to persuade his people to the same belief.
- 595 14. Genebalus III. the Son of Gotofride.
- 615 15. Clodomir II. the Son of Genebald the third.
- 638 16. Heribert, the Nephew of Clodomir the second.
- 668 17. Clodowius, or Clovis II. the Cousin-german of Heribert.
- 680 18. Gosbertus II. the Son of Clovis the second.
- 706 19. Gosbertus II. Son of Gosbert the first.
- 720 20. Hetavus, the Son of Gosbert the second, the last Duke of Franconia of this Line. He dying without Issue-male, Anno 740. bequeathed it at his death to Pepin, who afterwards was King of France, Father of Charles the Great, according to a former Contract made between those Princes. And Charles no sooner had it in his possession, but he bestowed the greatest part of it on Burchard, the first Bishop of Wurtzburg Anno 752. made Bishop of that City by Boniface, Arch-bishop of Mentz, (the first Apostle of this People) but a year before. The Bishop of Wurtzburg by this Grant were possessed hereof as long as any of the House of Charles the Great did possess the Empire. But his posterity

Herity failing in the person of Conrade, Anno 910. Orho the first (who next but one succeeded Conrade) invested Conrade, Husband to Luithgardis his Daughter, with this Country, giving him withal the Title of Duke of Francia. Four Princes of this House possessed it, and it is to say, this Conrade, firmated Salicus, and after him three Henries, Father, Son, and Nephew, successively enjoying the Imperial Dignity, by the names of Henry the third, fourth, and fifth. This Henry, the last Prince of the male Line of Conrade, dying without Issue, Francia fell to Frederick Barbarossa, Duke of Schweben, as next Heir to Henry by the Lady Agnes his Sister, married to Frederick the Antient, Duke of Schweben, the Grandfather of Barbarossa. But that House being also extinct in the person of Conradine, Anno 1268, and no one Heir pretending to the Rights thereof, the Bishop of Wurtzburg challenged it on the former Grant; content to let some great ones have a part of the spoil, that he and his Successors might enjoy the rest. By means whereof it came to be divided betwixt the Bishops of Wurtzburg, Bamberg, Mentz, the Elector Palatine of the Rhine, (for antiently so much of the Palatinate and the Bishoprick of Mentz as lay on the Dutch side of the Rhine were but parts of Frankenland) the Marquess of Onaldsbach, the Earls of Swartzenburg, Henneberg, and Hohenlohe, and as many of the Free or Imperial Cities as are seated in it. Thus every one did gather sticks when the great Oak fell: the Title of the Duke of Francia remaining notwithstanding to the Bishops of Wurtzburg.

1. WURTZBURG, the Metropolis of Francia, the Seat and Residence of the Bishop, who is Titular Duke hereof, is situate on the Maine or Main, in a pleasant Plain environed with Meadows, Gardens, and fruitful Mountains; and very well fenced with Walls, Trenches, Bulwarks, and other Arts of modern Fortification; well peopled, and for the most part handsomely and neatly built. Passing over the Bridge built of Free-stone on many large and spacious Arches, you come into a fair and pompous (though antient) Castle the ordinary dwelling of the Bishop; and yet so strong, that the many vain attempts of the Bishops and Citizens, apt to pick quarrels with their Prince, made it thought impregnable, to which the situation of it on the top of an Hill added some advantage: but it proved otherwise when besieged by the King of Sweden, Anno 1631, who after a short, but stout resistance took it by assault. Other Towns of most note which belong to the Bishops of Wurtzburg are, 2. Forsheim, where it is said that Pontius Pilatus was born. 3. Gmund, at the meeting of the Maine and the Salza, or Sala. 4. Bretta upon the Salza or Sala, not far from Gmund; remarkable enough, if for nothing else, for being the Birth-place of Melanchthon that renowned Scholar, the Phoenix of Germany, as some call him, and that not unjustly. 5. Chronach. 6. Saffenstein. 7. Hickelbad, of which little memorable.

But to return unto the Bishop as chief Lord of all. He is called in the refined Latine of these times Herib. Littanus, but commonly Wurtzburgensis; differing in sound, but not in sense: for Wurtzburg is no other than a Town of Wurtz, situate among plants and Gardens, as before is said; and Heribolis, made up out of several languages, doth signify no more than a City of Herbs. By whom the Episcopal See was here first created, and how the Bishops hereof came to be entituled unto their Estates hath been shewn already. The manner how the new Bishop is admitted, and the old interred, may be worth our knowledge. On the decease of the former Bishop, the Lord Elect, attended with a great train of horse, is to make his entrance. As soon as he comes within the Gate, he a-lights of his Horse, and putteth off his Rides, and being attired in a poor and despicable Habit, legit abcut with a Rope, bare-headed also and bare-footed, he is conducted by the Earls of Henneberg, Castel, Wertham, and Rheineck, to S. Savicurs Church, being his Cathedral. The Dean and Canons there meeting him, ask him what he would have: to which he modestly replies, that though unworthy, he is come to discharge the Office unto which he is called. Then the Dean thus, I admit thee in the name of this Chapter, committing to thy caritative Church of Saint Savicurs, and the Dekedon thereto belonging, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Which done, he putteth on his Episcopal Habit, wears Maſs, and from thence passeth to the Castle, where he gives entertainment to all the Company. The living Bishop thus invested, proceed we next to the Burial of the dead: whose Body being imbowelled, is kept in the Chapel of his Castle, his Heart preserved in a vessel of Glass. The next day he is carried to the Monastery of Saint James, holding a Crozier-Staff in his right hand, and a Sword in his left; buried with them the next day after in the Church of S. Savicurs. As for the Revenue of the Bishop, they must needs be great: The Bishop hereof in the time of Charles the fifth compounding for his peace with Albert, Marquess of Brandenburg, at the price of 210000 Crowns in ready money, and entering into a Bond to pay all his Debts, which amounted to 350000 Crowns more. By which we may partly guess at the richness of his Exchequer, and partly at the greatness of his Intrado.

2. The second great Lord of Francia is the Bishop of B. A. M. B. E. R. G., a City seated on the Main, not far from Wurtzburg, the little River Rednitz falling there into it: supposed by Mercator to be the Bravoniarum Ptolemy, and to have took this new name from the Hill Baba (so called from Baba Daughter of Orho Duke of Saxony, and Wife of Albert once Earl hereof) upon which it is situate, the right name being Babenberg. Remember that Berg in Dutch signifies a Hill and contractedly Bamberg. A City delightfully seated amongst Mountains and pleasant Gardens, and in a soil exceeding fruitful in all necessities, and yielding Lycoras in great plenty: the Birth place of Joachimus Camerarius, one of the great Lights of Germany; and a See Episcopal, the Bishop of which is exempt from the power of the Metropolitan, subject immediately to the Pope, and Lord of many fair Towns and Territories in this Country; but much diminished since the time of Charles the fifth: the Bishoprick thereof then being given to Marquess Albert, above mentioned, for a Cession from Arms, Anno 1530, no less than 60 of his Lordships (most of which fall into the share of the Marquess of Onaldsbach (besides the Tutelage or Guardianship of his Wards and Clients. Of those which are remaining in the hands of the Bishops the principal are, 1. Bravinglitz. 2. Schleislat.

3. The third great Lord to be considered is the Marquess of ONALDSBACH, or Onsbach, who is Master of no small part of this Country: but his Estate (as those of the other German Princes) confused and intermixed with his Neighbours. His chief Towns, 1. Onaldsbach, or Onsbach, the usual Residence of these Marquesses, and the Birth-place of most of their Children. Hallbrum, on the edge of Wirttemberg, walled in about the year 1085, and honoured with some publick Schools there founded by Marquess George Frederick, Anno 1482. 3. Plainsitz, not far from Nuremberg. Such places as they held in Poland, we shall meet with here.

These Marquesses are of the puissant Family of Brandenburg, by whom this fair Estate was wrestled from the female Heirs of Wolffram, the last Lord thereof. The first first who did enjoy this Estate and Title was Marquess George Frederick, the Son of Albert Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg called the Achilles of Germany, and the Father of Albert the first Duke of Prussia, and of George the first Marquess of Sagendorff, and the Grandfather of that Marquess Albert who in the days of Charles the fifth harassed this Country. But his Male-issue by John his eldest Son failing in that Albert, Anno 1557 (as was returned to the Electoral House, and by Sigismund, a late Elector was given to Joachim Ernestus, one of his younger Brethren, who by the Princes of the Union for defence of the Palatinate was made chief Commander of their Forces, Anno 1620. A charge in which it was supposed that he carried himself neither so faithfully nor so valiantly as he should have done, being much condemned for suffering Spinola with his Army to pass by unopposed, when he had all advantages that could be wished for to impede his march: the greatest part of the Palatinate being lost immediately upon that Neglect, and by degrees the rest of the United Princes either taken off from their Engagement, or ruined for adhering to it with too great a constancy. To him succeeded his Son Christian, now possessed hereof.

As for the other secular Princes which have any considerable Estates in this Country, they are the Earls of Henneberg, Hohenlohe, Rheineck, Castel, Wertham, Hornbach, and Swartzenburg, together with the Lords of Limmberg and Rheinscheid, all of them named for the chief Town of their Estates, and all those Towns enriched with some suitable Territory. Of these the Earls of Henneberg, Rheineck, Castel, and Wertham, are Homagers to the Bishop of Wurtzburg, and are to do him service at his Inthronization: the Earldom of Rheineck being now united to that of Hanau, as was shewn before, and that of Henneberg most famous, in that one of the Earls hereof was Father of that incredible increase of Children (as many as there be days in the year) produced at one birth by the Lady Margaret his Wife, Sister of William Earl of Holland, and King of the Romans. A Family of as great Antiquity as most in Germany fetching their Pedigree as high as to Charles the Great, without help of the Heralds. But they of greatest power and Parentage amongst them are the Earls of Swartzenburg, deriving themselves from one Wittikindus of the House of Saxony, who fighting for his Country against the French, Anno 1179, was taken prisoner, carried into France, and there baptized, at the persuasion of Lewis the Godly, Son of Charles the Great. Wittikindus, his Son and Successor, being baptized at the same time also by the name of Charles, was the first Earl of Swartzenburg, a Castle of his own building on the edge of Thuringia, Anno 796, whose posterity do fill hold the same, but much improved in their Estates by Marriages and other accretments. A race of Princes which have yielded many of great influence in the affairs of Germany: amongst them Gunter Earl of Swartzenburg, elected Emperor of the Romans against Charles the fourth, by Rodolph Elector Palatine, Ericus Duke of Saxony, Ludovic Marquess of Brandenburg, and Henry Archbishop of Mentz. By which last he was solemnly inaugurated at Aken (or Aquisgran) Anno 1349. But being unworthily poisoned by his Competitor, though he died not of it, yet he was made so weak and unfit for action, that he was forced to surrender his pretensions to his mortal enemy, receiving in compensation for his charges 220000 marks in Silver, and some Towns in Thuringia.

Of the Imperial Cities, which share amongst them the remainders of Frankenland, the principal are, 1. Frankford on the Maine, so called from its situation on the River Maine, to difference it from Francford in the Country of Brandenburg. It is divided by the River into two parts, joined together by a Bridge of Stone: the lesser part, situate on the right-hand shore of the River, being called Saxenhausen, the greater part, properly called Francford, seated on the other. Both are under one Magistrat, and both together make up a fair, rich, populous, and well traded Town; both of great riches and repute by reason of the famous Marts here held in the midst of Lent and September yearly, and the Election of the Emperor or King of the Romans, as occasion is. The City is of a round form, compassed with a double Wall, beautified with some Walks without the Town on the banks of the River, amongst Vineyards, Meadows, and sweet Groves: called thus as some say, from Francus the Son of Marcomir, supposed to be the Founder of it; or a Francum vade, as the Foord of the Franks, before the building of the Bridge. 2. Schweinfurt, on the Maine also, in a fruitful Soil. 3. Rotenberg, on the River Tauber. 4. Wipfheim. Here is also the Town of 5. Coburg, which belongeth to the House of Saxony, and gives Title to some of the younger Princes of it, called from hence Dukes of Saxon Coburg. And hereto may be added 6. the fair City of Nuremberg, conceived by most to be within the Upper Palatinate; but by the Emperor Maximilian made a member of the Circle of Francia, in regard most of the Estates and Possessions of it lie within this Country. Of which indeed they have plentiful a share, that when Maurice Elector of Saxony and his Confederates had driven Charles the fifth out of Germany, Marquess Albert, before mentioned, (whose Sword was his best Revenue) picking a quarrel with this City, burnt no less than an hundred Villages belonging to it, seventy Mannors and Farm-houses appertaining to the wealthier Citizens, 3000 Acres of their Wood; and after all this havoc made of their Estate, compelled them to compound with him for 200000 Crowns in Money, and six pieces of Ordnance. But being the City it self seems rather to belong to the other Palatinate, we shall there meet with it.

Amongst these Prelates, Princes, and Imperial Cities is the great Dukedom of Francia at this time divided; the Title still remaining in the Bishop of Wurtzburg and some part of the Country: but both the Country and the Title of Duke of Francia not long since otherwise disposed of. For the Swedes having taken Wurtzburg, Anno 1631, as before is said, together with the City of Bamberg, and all the Towns and Territories appertaining to them, conferred them upon Bernard Duke of Saxony, with the style and Title of Duke of Francia.

He was inaugurated therein in the Cathedral Church of Wurtzburg, July 19. 1633, the Nobility and Gentry of the Country doing Homage to him, and all the Magistrates and Officers of the several Cities taking the Oaths of Allegiance: the new Duke also making Oath, that he would carefully maintain them in their Rights and Privileges. In the solemnities of which day the first great Gun discharged in the way of Triumph broke in the going off, without any hurt done, but the wounding of one Soldier only. An Omen that all this Solemn Act would prove fire unto it. And so accordingly it did: the Victorious Bishops once more into their possessions, and leaving nothing to the new Duke but an hungry Title. And therefore leaving both the old and new titular Dukes, we will here add the Catalogue of those who were Dukes indeed, and had, together with the Title, the full Possession of the Country.

Dukes of FRANCONIA of the Dutch or German Race.

- 974 1. Conradus, surnamed Salicus, created Duke of Franconia by Otho the first, whose Daughter Luithgardis he had married: after the death of Henry the second elected Emperor, by the name of Conrad the second, Anno 1025.
- 1040 2. Henry, the Son of Conrad, Duke of Franconia and Emperor, by the name of Henry the third.
- 1056 3. Henry II. of Franconia and IV. of the Empire.
- 1106 4. Henry III. of Franconia, and V. of the Empire.
- 1125 5. Frederick II. (surnamed Barbarossa) Duke of Schwaben, Nephew of Frederick the Ancient, Duke of Suevia, and of Agnes his Wife, the Sister and next Heir of Henry, succeeded in the Empire after the death of Conrad the 3. his Uncle, Anno 1153.
- 1190 6. Frederick II. the Second Son of Barbarossa, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben.
7. Conrad II. Brother of Frederick the second succeeded in both Estates.
8. Philip, the younger Brother of Conrad, succeeded in both Dukedoms after his decease, and on the death of Henry the sixth his eldest Brother was elected Emperor, Anno 1198.
- 1207 9. Frederick III. of Franconia, and the V. of Suevia, Son of the Emperor Henry the sixth, whom he succeeded in the Kingdom of Naples and Sicily, An. 1202, and on the death of Otho the fourth, Anno 1212, was elected Emperor, of that name the second.
- 1250 10. Conrad III. of Franconia, the II. of Schwaben, and the IV. of the Empire, the Son of Frederick the third, whom he succeeded in all his Titles and Estates.
- 1254 11. Conradine, Son of Conrad the third, Duke of Franconia and Schwaben, dispossessed of his Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily by Manfred the base Brother of his Father, and finally beheaded by Charles of Anjou, who succeeded Manfred in those Kingdoms. Anno 1268. After whose death this Royal House being quite extinguished, the Bishop of Wurtzburg again regained the Title of Duke of Franconia, content to let some of the greater Lords and Prelates, which lived near unto him, to share in the possession of it, as before was noted.

The Arms of the ancient Dukes of Franconia, before they were incorporated with the House of Schwaben, were Azure, a Lion Barry of eight pieces Argent and Gules, crowned Or: which, why it is now born by the Landgraves of Hesse, we shall tell you there.

11. WIRTEMBERG, and 12. BADEN.

These I have joined together, though distinct Estates, because both of them were taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, created both about one time, and lie very close, in a round together; bounded upon the East and South with Schwaben properly so called, on the North with the Lower Palatinate, on the West with the Rhene, and that part of Schwaben which is called Brigow, parted asunder by the mountainous ridge of Hills called Swartzwald, Wirttemberg lying on the East-side thereof, and Baden betwixt it and the Rhene. And first for WIRTEMBERG. The Air thereof is very healthy, neither too hot in Summer, nor too cold in Winter: the Soil near Swartzwald lying on the West, and the Alps of Suevia on the South, of it felt barren and unprofitable; but in some places, by the industry of the Plough-man, made to yield good Corn. But in the middle parts thereof, which lie towards the Neccar, little inferior for fruitfulness both of Corn and Wine unto any in Germany, besides some Silver-mines near Wiltberg and about Pachlach, a small Town, whose abundance of Brass, the Foundations of the House seem to be laid upon it.

It took this name from the Castle of Wirttemberg, the first Seat of the Princes of it; as that did from the Teuturgi, inhabiting the Dutch side of the Rhene, or from the Virtungi, as Beatus Rhenanus thinketh, mentioned by Trebellius Gallus in the life of Aurelianus; to which the word Berg, being added for a termination, made it first Teuturgiberg, or Virtunberg, and after Wirttemberg.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Stungard, the Duke's Seat, a fair, rich and populous Town, and the chief of the Dukedom; seated in a pleasant and fruitful Plain, not far from the Neccar, yielding a quantity of Wine almost incredible, 2. Tubingen, on both sides of the Neccar, united into one with a fair Stone-bridge. A Town well built, situate in a very rich Soil, and finally adorned with an University here founded by Eberhard the first Duke of Wirttemberg, Anno 1477, in which Leonard Fuchsin that great Herbalist and Restorator of Physick, was once a Professor of that Faculty. 3. Caslar, upon the Neccar also, not far from which, on the Top of an Hill, stands the old Castle of Wirttemberg before mentioned. 4. Wiltberg, of great esteem for its Mines of Silver. 5. Archingen, inhabited chiefly by Jews. 6. Schneidorf, upon the Rhene, much resorted to by reason of the hot Baths there; as is also 7. Neuenburg, on the Entz. 8. Haidenheim, 9. Greiningen, 10. Marbach, of which little memorable. There are also within the limits of this Dukedom many Towns Imperial. As 1. Wimpfen, and 2. Hailbrun, on the Neccar. 3. Gopping, upon the River Vils. 4. Weil. 5. Reutlingen on the Neccar also made Imperial, by Frederick the 2. Anno 1240, otherwise of no great note but for the Paper-mills. 6. Epling.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Chamini of Prilemy, and part of the Intergri spoken of before. It was made subject with the rest of these parts to the Almani, after the French, and finally a member of the great Dukedom of Schwaben. From which dismembered in the time of Henry 4. after the dangerous War raised against him by Duke Rodolphus, advanced by the practice of Pope Hildebrand to the Throne Imperial, it came to have Princes of its own: the first Earl being Conrad, in the year 1100, by the grace and favour of the said Emperor Henry. Increased by the addition of the Earldom of Monteburg and many other Accruments, it was made a Dukedom in the person of Eberhard the 6. by Maximilian the 1. A. 1495. The Earls and Dukes follow thus in order.

The Earls and Dukes of WIRTEMBERG.

- 1100 1. Conrad, the first Earl.
2. Ulric, Son of Conrad.
3. John Son of Ulric.
4. Lewis, Son of John.
5. Henry, Son of Lewis.
6. Eberhard, Son of Henry.
7. Ulric II. Son of Eberhard.
8. Eberhard II. Son of Ulric.
- 1325 9. Ulric III. Son of Eberhard.

- 1344 10. Eberhard III. Son of Ulric.
- 1394 11. Ulric VI. Son of Eberhard.
- 1417 12. Eberhard IV. Son of Ulric.
- 1417 13. Eberhard V. Son of Eberhard the 4. by his Marriage with Henrica or Henrietta, Daughter of Henry Earl of Monteburg, added that Earldom to his House.
- 1419 14. Lewis or Lodowick II. Son of Eberhard the 5.
- 1456 15. Eberhard VI. Son of Lewis, Founder of the University of Tubingen, created by Maximilian the first, the first Duke of Wirttemberg, Anno 1495. He deceased without Issue, Anno 1496.
- 1496 16. Eberhard VII. Son of Ulric the younger Brother of Lewis the 2. succeeded on the death of Eberhard his Cousin-german.
- 1504 17. Henry II. the Brother of Eberhard the 7.
- 1519 18. Ulric V. Son of Henry 2. expelled out of his Dukedom by Charles the 5. for the sake of Reutlingen an Imperial City, and his Estate conferred on Ferdinand of Austria, the Brother of Charles; but after 15 years Exile, restored to his Dukedom by Philip Landgrave of Hesse, he Reformed Religion, and Liberally endowed the University of Tubingen. 31.
- 1550 19. Christopher, the Son of Ulric the 5, a follower of his Father's steps in Reformation of the Church, and advancement of Learning.
- 1568 20. Lodowick or Lewis III. Son of Christopher.
21. Frederick Son of George Earl of Monteburg, the Brother of Ulric the 5. made Knight of the Garter by Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1597.
22. John-Frederick, Son of Frederick the first.
23. John-Eberhard, eldest Son of the former Duke, now living, Anno 1648.

The Revenues of this Duke are supposed to be equal unto those of the Electors Palatine, spoken of before; and were more for the Silver-mines in Saxony, little inferior to those of that Duke. But for provisions of War, (excepting Powder only) he is meanly furnished. A main defect, considering the ill terms he stands in with the Imperial Cities, betwixt whom and the House of Wirttemberg there have been always open Wars, or secret jealousies.

His Arms are Or, 3 Attires of a Stag born Palatine, Sable.

As for the Marquifate of BADEN lying on the West-side of Swartzwald, betwixt it and the Rhene, it is for the most part, except towards those Woods, a very pleasant and fruitful Country, and much of the same nature with the rest of Wirttemberg; so called from Baden, a neat Town, where the Marquises keeps his Seat in Winter; and that so named from the hot Baths there, as is also Baden (called for distinction sake, the Upper Baden amongst the Switzers); in which respect the City of Bath in Somerfetshire had anciently the name of Caer-Baden also. Of these Baths it is supposed that there are in this City at least 300, profitable for many Distempers and exacerate Sores, drawing a great resort of people from the neighbouring Countries. This is the chief Town of this Marquifate, from whence the Princes have the Title of Marquises of Baden. The next to this is, 2. Durlach, or Turlach, which gives Title to a second Branch of this House; called also sometimes Marquises of Durlach only, but commonly the Marquises of Baden Durlach 3. Liechtenzell, amongst the Hills of Swartzwald, famous for hot medicinal Springs. 4. Liechtenau, remarkable for a Monastery, the Burial-place of the first Marquises. 5. Gerspach, in the very heart of that Mountainous tract. 6. Pfortzheim, adjoining to the Wood Hagensheim, a branch of Swartzwald called. 7. Koelen. 8. Badenwile, and 9. Sufenburg, all seated in the Upper Baden, being that part hereof which lies next to Brigow. 10. Milberg, beautified with a fair Castle, the usual Retiring-place of these Princes in the heats of Summer.

This Marquifate, being also taken out of the great Dukedom of Schwaben, was founded in the person of Herman of Verona in Italy, who deserving well of the Emperor Henry the V. was by him felled in some Lands about these parts, An. 1120, and after marrying with the Daughter of an Earl of Baden, was by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa created the first Marquise of Baden, Anno 1155. The Estate was after much encreased by the addition of the Earldom of Hochberg and the Appendices thereof in Schwaben, into which Christopher the 13. Marquise hereof, succeeded on the death of his Cousin Philip, the last Earl of Hochberg; both princes descended originally from two Brothers, of which the eldest, in right of the Lady Judith his Wife was Earl of Hochberg; the second by the favour of the said Frederick Barbarossa, was made Marquise of Baden. They were Masters also of many fair Estates in the Lower Palatinate; which the Palatines of the Rhene (as was there said) are since possessed of. Other particulars shall be shewn (if occasion be) in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Marquises of BADEN.

- 1155 1. Herman, the first Marquise.
2. Herman II.
3. Herman III.
4. Herman IV.
- 1281 5. Rodolph, Son of Herman the 4.
- 1295 6. Herman V. Son of Rodolph.
7. Rodolph II. Son of Herman the 5.
- 1356 8. Frederick, Son of Rodolph the 2.
9. Rodolph III. Son of Frederick.
- 1372 10. Bernard, Son of Rodolph the 5.
- 1431 11. James, Son of Bernard.
- 1453 12. Charles, Son of James, the first of the Mait quises which was possessed of the County of Spanheim in the Lower Palatinate, descending on this House by Anna Wife of Rodolph the 2.
- 1457 13. Christopher, Son of Charles, who after the death of Philip, the last Marquise of Hochberg, succeeded also that Estate.
- 1515 14. Bernard Son of Christopher, his Brother Ernest succeeding in that of Hochberg.
15. Christopher II. Son of Bernard, his elder Brother Philibert and Philip Son of Philibert, dying in the life of Bernard.
16. Edward Son of Christopher, intending the sale of his Estate to pay his Debts, was forcibly deprived of all by Ernest.
17. Ernest, Marquise of Hochberg, Nephew of Ernest above mentioned; who by that means not only preferred the Marquifate of Baden, but united that of Hochberg again unto it, and removed his ordinary Seat to Durlach.
18. George, Brother of Ernest, Marquise of Baden and Hochberg.
19. Frederick, the Son of George, born in the year 1504, succeeded his Father in both Estates; and (dying) hath a Son called also Frederick, to enjoy them after his decease.

into Bohemia by a certain Scholar who had been Student in the University of Oxford, which hapning into the hands of John Huss and Hierom of Prague, (two men whereof this Country doth much boast) wrought in their hearts a desire to reform the Church. A business which they prosecuted so earnestly, that being summoned to the Council of Constance, they were there condemned for Heretics and burnt, Anno, 1414; yet had their Doctrine such deep root in the hearts of the people, that it could never be destroyed by the Tyrannies of War or Persecution (though both were used) to this very day; multitudes of the Professors of it living in this Kingdom under the names of Calistini and Sub uraque, as before is said) but much both strengthened and increased by the Writings of Luther, Melancthon, Calvin, and such other of the Protestant Doctors as travelled in the Work of Reformation. But this increase of strength and number proved their greatest weakening. For growing insolent upon the sense of their strength and power, they formed themselves into a party, got many of the Romish Catholics to adhere unto them, under colour of asserting their Civil Rights, and in the heat of some disputes, caused certain of the Emperor's Council to be thrown out of the Windows of the Council-chamber; and finally about the latter end of the Reign and Empire of Matthias, they broke out into open Arms. In the course whereof the Calvinians being of most power, and having got a King of their own Opinions, to disoblige the Lutherans and more moderate Catholics, who had concurred with them at the first, that being invaded on the one side with a Lutheran Army under the command of the Duke of Saxony, and a Popish Army on the other by the Duke of Bavaria, they were in fine utterly suppressed and made inconfederable: the conquering and successful Emperor (Ferdinand the 2.) taking this occasion to extirpate the Protestant Religion out of his Dominions.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Budweis, (conceived to be the Marobudum of Ptolemy) a Town towards Austria. 2. Auss, near the head of the Elb. 3. Tabor, a strong Town built by Ziska, to be a Retreat for the Hussites. 4. Jaromir, and 5. Melnick, both upon the Elb. 6. Littomissel, an Episcopal See, bordering on Moravia. 7. Pilsen, the last Town of this Kingdom which yielded to the prevailing Imperialists in the late long War to that Crown: and then also was it betrayed to Count Tilly for a sum of money, by some of the Soldiers of Count Mansfield, who was then absent, and had so long defended it against the Enemy. 8. Elnbogen, much esteemed for the hot medicinal Bathes; situate on the River Egra. 9. Egra, so called of the same River, on which (near to the borders of the Upper Palatinate) it is strongly situate: a large, fair City, containing three miles in compass. Imperial cities, but sold by the Emperor Ludovicus Barbarus to John King of Bohemia, for 40000 marks of Silver: in compass less, for Sweetness of the place, Elegancy of the buildings, Pleasants of the site, and Richness of soil, superiour far to Prague it self. 10. Prague, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, situate in the midst thereof, on the River Muldau; consisting of four several Towns, each of which has its several Customs, Laws, and Magistrats. The principal is called the Old Town, adorned with many goodly Buildings, a spacious Market-place, and a stately Council-house. The second, called the New-Town, is separated from the Old by a Ditch of great depth and wideness. The third, called the Little Town, is divided from the Old by the River Muldau, joined to it by a beautiful Bridge, consisting of 24 Arches. And in this part thereof is the Hill Rozbine, on the sides of which are many fair and stately Houses belonging to the Nobility, over-looked by the strong Castle of S. Wenceslaus, (situate on the top thereof) a magnificent Palace, wherein the Bohemian Kings and the later Emperours have kept their Residence. The 4th Town is that of the Jews, who have here five Synagogues, and live according to their own Law. The whole City is rather large than fair, the Streets being in Winter very dirty, of ill smell in the Summer; the Buildings for the most part of Clay and Timber clapt together without Art, and of little beauty. And though encompassed with Walls and Ditches, it is conceived to be but an open Town, (so poor and weak are the Defences,) inasmuch that whosoever is master of the Field, will be master of the City also. And yet besides the honour of being the Royal Seat, it hath also of long time been an Archbishop's See, and was by Charles the fourth, Emperor and King of Bohemia, made an University. Near unto this Town was fought that memorable Battle between the Duke of Bavaria and Count Bucquy, Lieutenant for the Emperor Ferdinand the second, with 50000 men, on the one side; and Frederick, newly elected King of Bohemia, which the Prince of Anhalt, the Count of Turn, and 30000 men, on the other side. It was fought on the eighth of November style novo, wherein (such was the unfeared Will of God) the Victory fell unto the Imperialists; the young Prince of Anhalt, Turn, and Saxe-Weimar, with divers others, being taken prisoners; the Bohemian Ordinance all surprised, Prague forced to yield unto the Victor, and King Frederick with the Queen compelled to flee unto Silesia. A most lamentable and unfortunate Loss, not to this people only, but to the whole cause of the reformed Religion. Yet it is not unworthy of our observation, that this great Battle was fought upon a Sunday, the 8. of November, about the time of Morning-prayer, in the Gospel appointed for which day (being then the 23. after Trinity-Sunday) is that famous passage, Reddite CÆSARI, quæ sunt CÆSARIS, i. e. Render unto Cæsar the things which are Cæsars; which seemed to judge the Quarrel on the Emperor's side.

But whether of the two Pretenders had the juster Cause, may best be seen by canvassing the Records of that State and Nation, (for the success of War is no standing Rule for measuring the Equity and Justice of the Causes of it;) by which it will be clearly seen, that the erecting of that Kingdom by the Slaves or Franks, it hath been evermore disposed at the Will of the Emperor, or by Election of the States and People. But intend not at present to dispute that Point, but only lay down the Story of the Kings and People; as in other places, since the first coming of the Slaves. A Nation not known by that name till the time of Julianus; at what time they inhabited on the Banks of the Ipsar, but on the farther side thereof, opposite to Ilyricum and Thrace, Imperial Provinces. Grown famous by their good Successes against that Empire, their name was taken up by the rest of the Sarmatians of Europe; who either wanting room, or not liking of their colder Countries, passed on more Westward, and by degrees possessed themselves of those parts of Germany which formerly had been inhabited by the Almans, Burgundians and Boiarians; but were then either quite forsaken, or but ill inhabited by the drawing down of those people to the Roman Provinces, which they better liked. They were divided 40, or after that their coming thus far West, into four main Bodies: that is to say, the Winithi, possessed of the (now) Marquis of Brandenburg, Misia, and Lusatia, as also of the Dukedoms of Mecklenburg and Pomerania; the Moravians, inhabiting in Moravia, the Lower Anstria, and the Upper Hungary; the Poles, possessed of Poland, and the Dukedom of Silesia; and finally the Bohemian Slaves confined within the limits of that Kingdom only. Under what what form of Government they lived at their first coming hither, is not certainly known. But being settled in these Countries of Poland and Bohemia, it was not long before they were erected into several Kingdoms; occasioned by the coming of a new body of Slaves, Croatians, and others of those scattered Nations, under the conduct of Zechinus, a great Prince amongst them, who about the year 640, together with his Brother Leches was banished Cratia, for a Murderer. He being very acceptable to the Slaves of Bohemia, who looked upon him as a Prince of their own original Extraction, one of the same Language, Laws or Customs that themselves were of, they admitted him to be their Chief or supreme Governour, by whatsoever name he was called at first: in honour and memory of whom, the Bohemians in their own Language do call themselves Zechians. After his death, the State relapsed again into a confused Anarchy, till the year 670; at what time, not respecting the Progeny of Zechinus, the Founder of their Commonwealth and first Estate, they fastned upon Crocius, a man of good esteem amongst them, and elected him to be their Duke. Crocius very just, and of great Bohemian opinion, Princes elected of, as Bertholdus telleth us. Crocius being dead, the Bohemians elected Libussa, his youngest Daughter, and of her Government soon wearied, they made choice of Primislaus for their Prince, and made him Husband to Libussa. A man taken from the Plough (as the Stories tell us) to espouse the Princess: it being ordered and agreed on by her many Suitors, that he (whoever he was) before whom an Horse, purposely let loose, did first make a stand, should be the Husband of the Lady, and have the Government of the State. The Horse first makes a stand before Primislaus, being then at Plough (having perhaps some Mare in his Team;) and he accordingly is received and admitted their Prince. There, with the other Dukes from the time of Crocius, the first Legislator of the Bohemians, take in order thus,

The Dukes of BOHEMIA.

1. Crocius, the Law-giver or Lychnus of Bohemia.
2. Libussa, youngest Daughter to Crocius, with Primislaus her Husband, (a second Quintinus) Founder of Prague.
3. Neramislaus, Son of Primislaus and Libussa.
4. Anstha, one of the Sons of Neramislaus, contemporary with Charles the Great.
5. Vencislaus, Son of Anstha.
6. Wenceslaus.
7. Bela.
8. Nagislaus, Son of Bela.
9. Borziwois, The first Christian Prince of the Bohemians, co-temporary with the Emperor Charl.
10. Sitigislaus, Son of Borziwois.
11. Wladislaus, Brother to Sitigislaus.
12. Wenceslaus II. firmaned the Saint, slain by his Brother Boleslaus.
13. Boleslaus, a wicked and ungodly Prince.
14. Boleslaus II. Son of the former, a great advocate of Christianity amongst his people.
15. Boleslaus III. one of the Sons of Boleslaus the second.
16. Jaromir, Son to Boleslaus the third.
17. Adalricus, Brother of Boleslaus the third, and Uncle of Jaromir.
18. Predislaus, Son to Adalricus.
19. Sitigislaus II. Son to Predislaus.

1061 20. Fratislaus, Brother of Sitigislaus, whom, for his manifold defects, the Emperor Henry the 4. created the first King of Bohemia, Anno 1086. Whose Successors take this cut of Bertholdus and Debravins.

The Kings and Dukes of BOHEMIA.

- A. C.
- 1086 1. Fratislaus, the Brother of Sitigislaus, Duke of Bohemia, was by Henry the 4. at Mentz created King.
  2. Conrade, Brother to Fratislaus, notwithstanding that his Brother had three Sons, was elected Duke of Bohemia.
  3. Breicislaus, Son to Fratislaus, the two Sons of Conrade being rejected, is by the Bohemians chosen Duke.
  - 1100 4. Borziwois, the 4. Son of Breicislaus, is chosen by the Bohemians his eldest Brothers then all living.
  - 1109 5. Sitopulcis, Cousin-german to Borziwois, by the consent and favour of the people, deposed Borziwois; and caused himself to be elected in his place.
  6. Wladislaus II. Brother to Borziwois, preferred by the people to the Throne before Orto the Brother, and Henry the Son of Sitopulcis, the last Prince.
  - 1159 7. Sobeslaus Brother to Wladislaus, promoted to the State before the Son of Wladislaus.
  8. Wladislaus III. Son to Wladislaus the 2. (the four Sons of Sobeslaus omitted) is chosen and crowned the second King of Bohemia by Frederick the Emperor; but deposed by the States, because he was not by them formerly elected, according to their Privileges and Customs.
  9. Oldericus, the third Son of Sobeslaus, his elder Brethren yet living, was by the people elected in the room of Wladislaus and his Son Frederick, whom the Emperor Frederick had by force established in the Throne.
  10. Sobeslaus II. second Son of Sobeslaus, was by Frederick above named expelled; and he also by the Bohemians.
  11. Conrade, Grandchild to Orto, the Brother of Sitopulcis, elected by the Bohemians in place of Frederick; between which two Princes there was continual War.
  12. Wenceslaus, Uncle unto Conrade, and Son of Orto aforesaid, was preferred before many nearer the Succession. Him Primislaus expelled, but fearing his return, quitted Prague.
  13. Henry, Bishop of Prague, a Stranger to the Blood, was by a general consent elected Duke.
  14. Wladislaus IV. Brother to Primislaus, the Son of Wenceslaus being put by, succeeded Henry, and soon after reigned.
  - 1199 15. Primislaus, elected by the Bohemians, and by the Emperor Philip crowned the 3. King of Bohemia at Mentz, was Brother to Wladislaus the 4.
  - 1248 16. Ottocarus, notwithstanding that Wenceslaus his elder Brother had been crowned in his Father's life time, was acknowledged King. He was slain in Battle by Rodolphus the Emperor near the Marb, a River of Moravia, Anno 1278.
  - 1278 17. Wenceslaus II. Son to Ottocarus.
  - 1284 18. Wenceslaus III. Son to Wenceslaus the II. D d d the the last of the Bohemian Princes of the mafculine race.

- 1304 19. Rodolphus, Son to the Emperor Albertus, is by the Potency of his Father, and the election of the States, seated on the Throne, being otherwise a stranger to the Blood-royal of Bohemia.
- 1305 20. Henry, Duke of Carinthia, the Son of Meinard, Earl of Tyrol, and Husband to Anne, the second Daughter of Wenceslaus the 2. is chosen by the Bohemians: but being weary of his Government, they elect Earl of Luxemburg. Finally Henry was murdered by one of his Nephews.
- 1311 21. John, Earl of Luxemburg, Son to Henry the seventh Emperor, and Husband to Elizabeth, youngest Daughter to Wenceslaus the 2. is elected, the Lady Anne yet living.
- 1346 22. Charles, Son to John, and Emperor, of that name the fourth, the Author of the Golden Bull.
- 1362 23. Wenceslaus IV. Emperor also, in whose time the Troubles of the Hussites and the Valour Zisca was famous.
- 1418 24. Sigismund, Brother to Wenceslaus, maketh himself King by force; and at his death commendeth Albertus, Duke of Austria, the Husband of his Daughter Elizabeth, unto the States of the Kingdom.
- 1437 25. Albertus, Duke of Austria, elected upon the commendation of Sigismund by the Bohemian Lords.
- 1440 26. Ladislavus, Son to Albert, who being the Brother of two Sisters, commended yet one George Pogorabichus unto the States, as fittest to succeed him.
- 1458 27. George Pogorabichus, neither by Affinity or Consanguinity of the blood, succeeded. And he, though he had three Sons, yet, for the benefit of his Country, advised the Nobles, after his death to elect their King from Poland.
- 1471 28. Ladislavus II. Son to Casimire King of Poland, and to Elizabeth the younger Daughter of Albertus Duke of Austria, the Issue of Anne the Elder Sister still living, elected King of Bohemia.
- 1516 29. Ludovicus, Son to Ladislavus, elected and Crowned by the means of his Father, then living King of Hungary also.
- 1526 30. Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, Brother to Charles the 5. and Husband to Anne, Sister to Ludovicus, by his Letters reveral acknowledged that he was chosen King of Bohemia not of any right, but of mere free will according to the Liberties of that Kingdom.
- 1565 31. Maximilian, eldest Son of Ferdinand, was in his Father's life time, and at his death, elected King, Anno 1540, into which he actually succeeded on his Father's death.
- 1575 32. Rodolphus, Emperor of Germany, and the eldest Son to Maximilian, elected King.
- 1610 33. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, was at the joint suit of them both nominated and appointed King of Bohemia, by the general consent of the States, during his Brother's lifetime, viz. An. 1610, which nomination they both protest in their Letters reveral should not be to the prejudice of the Liberties and ancient Customs of that Kingdom.
- 1618 34. Ferdinand II. Archduke of Austria and of the House of Gretz, was by Matthias adopted for his Son, and declared Successor to the Crown of Bohemia, but never formally and legally elected; for which cause, a mongst others, he was by the States rejected, in like case as Vladislavus the 3. had formerly been.

- 1619 35. Frederick, Elector Palatine, the strongest German Prince of the Calvinists, and most potent by his great Alliances, was elected King of Bohemia, and Crowned at Prague, together with his wife, on the fifth day of November. This Prince derived his descent from the Lady Sophia, Sister to Ladislavus the 2. King of Poland and Bohemia; and married Elizabeth, Daughter to James King of Great Britain and Anne of Denmark, which Anne descended from the Lady Anne, Daughter of Albericus of Austria, and elder Sister to Elizabeth, Mother to Ladislavus the 2. above-named, from whom the Claim of Austria is derived.
- 1621 36. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the II. elected King of Bohemia during the life both of his Father and of Frederick the Prince Elector also; after whose death he succeeded in this Kingdom both in right and fact; King of Hungary also Archduke of Austria, and Emperor of Germany, now living, Anno 1648; more moderate in his Councils than his Father, Ferdinand, and more inclinable to Peace, (though honoured with a more signal Victory against the Swedes, in the Battle of Norlingen, than his Father was in all his life) which his Conclusions made at Munster are sufficient proof of.

Of the Revenues, Arms, and other things which concern this Kingdom, we shall speak hereafter, when we have taken a view of the rest of the Provinces which are incorporated into it.

2. MORAVIA is bounded on the East with Hungary, on the West with Bohemia, on the North with Silesia, and on the South with the Lower Austria and the River Teja; fenced on the west by the Woods and Mountains of Bohemia, part of the Hercynian Forest; on the North, by some Spurs or Branches of it, called Ardenne by Ptolemy; on the two other sides open like a Half-moon or Semicircle. It is the most fruitful place of Corn in all Germany, and hath no small force of Frankincense, which contrary to the nature of it, groweth not on a Tree, but out of the Earth; and that too (which adds much to the Miracle, if Dubravicus do report it rightly) in the shape and figure of those parts which men and women do most endeavour to conceal.

The former Inhabitants of this Province were the Marcomanni and part of the Quadi, against whom when M. Antoninus the Emperor made War, he had unwares run himself into such a Streight, that his Army was environed with Mountains one way, and Enemies the other. To this (as Calamities seldom go alone) was added the extraordinary heat and drought then being. The Emperor thus put to his plunges, came the Captain of his Guard, telling him, that he had in his Army a Legion of Christians (Militens he calleth them) which by Prayer to their own God could obtain any thing. The Emperor senteth for them, desiring them to make supplication for the Army; which they did, and God Almighty that never turneth a deaf ear to the prayer of his Servants, when when they are either for his Glory, the Churches or their own good, scattered and vanquished the Quadi with Thunder-shot and Artillery from Heaven, and refreshed the faint and dying Romans with many a gentle and pleasant Shower. This Miracle purchased to that Legion the surname of invictibilis, i. e. the Thunderer, and induced the Emperor to honour men of that holy profession, and to make an end of the Fourth Persecution, Act. Ch. 174. Thus Xiphilinus bath it in his Dion: which coming from the Pen of an Heathen, as this Author was, is of more credit in a matter of such concernment unto Christianity, than if it had proceeded from Socrates, Sozomen, or any other Ecclesiastical Writer.

Places of most note herein are, 1. Olmutz, on the River Mach (or Morava) the chief Town of the Country, and a small University; near which, out of the Hill Odunburg bordering on Silesia, springeth the great River of Odava, whose course we have before prescribed. 2. Brin, on the River Swarta, the Seat of the ancient Marques. 3. Hradisch, and 4. Cremser, both upon the Marb or Morava. 5. Znaim, on the Teja. 6. Niclasberg, (Mont Nicolai in the Latine) bordering on the Lower Austria. 7. Iglaw. 8. Newburg. 9. Wenkerchen. 10. Bolesitz, of which little memorable. 11. Cradisco, near to which (and in this place only) the Frankincense is found to grow in the shape and form before mentioned.

The old Inhabitants hereof (as before is said) were the Marcomanni and the Quadi: after them that Tribe or Nation of the Slaves, who, from their habitation on the River Morava, called themselves Moravians, and the Country which they dwell in by the name of Moravia, (the Dutch call it Merheren.) They were extended at that time over all the Lower Austria, to the banks of the Danube on the South; and as far as to the River Tibiscus (over-spreading a great part of the Upper Hungary) towards the East. Governed at the first by their own Kings, the first whose name occurs being Rasla, in the time of the Emperor Lewis the Godly; by him taken Prisoner, and his Realm made tributary to the Empire. After him succeeded Harmodurus, and then Suentopulcus; in whose time the Moravians and other Nations of the Slaves received the Gospel by the preaching of Cyrril and Methodius, two Gracian Doctors; officiating all Divine Services in the Slavonian or vulgar Language. For which when they made suit to the Pope then being, to whose Authority (as Patriarch of the Western Empire) they were made obnoxious, and that the Pope and Cardinals delaid the business; a voice was heard, as if it had come from Heaven, saying these words, Omnis Spiritus laudet Dominum, & omnis Lingua confiteatur ei. Upon which Miracle their Suit was granted at the last, and a Letter Decretal sent unto that elect from Pope John the 8. to Suentopulcus (or Szentopulcher, as some call him) above mentioned. A Privilege by them enjoyed full 200 years, and then reversed by Gregory 7. commonly called Pope Hildebrand, in his Letters to Vratislavus the first King of Bohemia, An. 1086.

But to return unto the Story Suentobegius, Son to Suentopulcus, succeeded next, deposed, or rather beaten out of his Country by the Emperor Arnulphus, for denying the accustomed Tribute. A Prince of great spirit, and of as great command; having at one time under him not Moravia only, according to the largest limits, but Silesia, Bohemia, and Polonia also. Arnulphus not able otherwise to effect his purpose, called in the Hungarians (though at that time Pagans) by whose help the Moravians was subdued, and his Kingdom shattered into pieces, seized on by the Hungarians, Poles, and other Nations, and finally reduced to the present Limits. Afterwards it was made a Marquitate, (but by whom we find not,) one of the Marqueses hereof being Jodocus Barbatus, elected Emperor An. 1410. After whose death, Sigismund, his next Heir, Emperor and King of Bohemia, gave it to his Son-in-law Albert Duke of Austria, Anno 1417, who in the end succeeded him in all his Estates; since which time it hath always gone along with the Crown of Bohemia.

The Arms of the old Dukes or Princes of it were Azure, an Eagle chequered Or and Gules, membered and langued of the same.

3. SILESIA, (or SCHLESIE, as the Dutch call it) is bounded on the East with Poland, on the West with Lusatia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Moravia. Wholly encompassed with Mountains, except towards the North, which lets in a sharp Air upon them: the north-land part being full of Woods, but wital of Minerals.

Chief Cities are, 1. Agendorff, or Jegerndorf, of late the Patrimony of John Georgius of the Family of Brandenburg, commonly called the Marques of Agendorff. The Lands and Estates in his possession were first given by Ladislavus King of Bohemia to George surnamed Pius one of the sons of Frederick of Brandenburg, the first Marques of Onphach of this House, for the many good Services he had done him. But his posterity being extinct, they fell to the said John Georgius, Brother to Sigismund the Elector; proscripted by Ferdinand the second, for adhering to the party of Frederick Prince Elector Palatine: A Prince of great note and adventures in the beginning of the late German and Bohemian Wars. 2. Munsterberg, which gives the title of Duke to the posterity of George Pogorabichus, once King of Bohemia, advanced by him unto this Honour and a fair Estate. 3. Glatz, or Gletz, the last Town of Bohemia which held out for Frederick the Elector against that Emperor. 4. Glogaw, a strong Town on the River Oder. 5. Neisse, on a River so named, an Episcopal See. 6. Breslaw, in Latine Vratislavia, so called from Vratislavius the Founder of it, once one of the Dukes of this Province; by whose procurement it was made an Episcopal See, An. 970, or thereabouts. It is situate on the River Oder, all the water wherein could not save it from being burnt down to the ground, Anno 1341, but it was presently re-edified with a fair Free-stone, and is now one of the prettiest Cities (for the benefits of it) in all Germany; fair, populous, and well contrived with open and even Streets, the chief of the Country. 7. Oppelen, on the Oder also, well fortified both by Art and Nature, barricaded by the River on the West, and on the East with good Out-works, strong Walls, and a fair Castle. 8. Seraten. 9. Reichenbach, both made Towns of War since the beginning of the Bohemian Troubles.

There are also within this Province the two Seigniories of Prignitz, and Crossen, so called from the chief Towns thereof, belonging to the Elector of Brandenburg, the two Dukedoms of Opwitz, and Zator, appertaining to the Crown of Poland, as also the Dukedom of Lignitz, and Sweinitz, all of them bearing the names of their principal Towns: of which two last, Sweinitz is in the immediate possession of the Kings of Bohemia; and Lignitz hath a Duke of its own, but an Homager and Tributary of that King.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Marfigni, Burri, Gothini, and some part of the Quadi. In the partition of the Eastern parts of Germany amongst the Slaves, it was laid unto the Dukedom or Kingdom of Poland, continuing a part thereof till the time of Vladislavus the 2. who, being driven out of his Kingdom by his Brethren, was by the mediation of Frederick Barbovis settled in this Country, to be held under the Sovereignty of the King of Poland, Divided betwixt his 3 Sons, and afterwards subdivided amongst their posterities, according to the ill Custom of Germany, it became broke at last into 14 Dukedoms, of 1. Breiflaw, 2. Oppelen, 3. Ratibor, 4. Ceflin, 5. Be-thom, 6. Glogaw, 7. Sagan, 8. Oleutzw, 9. Steinaw, 10. Falkenburg, 11. Sweinitz, 12. Lignitz, 13. Opfritz, and 14. Zator. Of all which only the two last do remain to Poland; the 5 first being made subject to the Kings of Bohemia; by Wenceslaus the II. the five next by King John of Luxemburg; Lignitz remaining in the possession of a Proprietary Duke (as before was said) and Sweinitz given to Charles the IV. Emperor and King of Bohemia, by the Will and Testament of Beleflaus the last Duke: all Silefia by this means (except the Dukedoms of Opfritz, and Zator) being added to the Crown of Bohemia, of which it is rather an incorporate than subject Province.

4. LUSATIA, by the Dutch called Lansitz, is bounded on the East with Silefia, on the West with Bohemia, on the North with Brandenburg, and on the South with Bohemia. The Country is rough and full of Woods, yet plentiful enough of Corn, and of such Fruits as naturally arise out of the Earth: it is populous and thick set with People, that though it be but a little Province, it is able to arm 20000 Foot as good as any in Germany. Most commonly it is divided into the Higher and the Lower; the first confining on Bohemia, the last on Brandenburg.

Places of most note in the Higher Lansitz, are, Bautzen, (Badissium the Latins call it) the first Town attended and taken in by the Duke of Saxony; when he took upon him the execution of the Emperor's Ban against Frederick Elector Palatine, then newly chosen King of Bohemia. The poor Prince in the mean time was in an ill condition, the Saxon being the head of the Lutheran, and the Bavarian chief of the Papist party, arming both against him. So jealous are both sides of the affair, and so little Calvinian spirit, as to leave no means unassayed for the suppressing of it. Seated it is upon the Spre, and for the most part is the Seat of the Governor for the King of Bohemia. 2. Gorlitz, upon the River Neisse, which gave the Title of Duke to John, Brother of Wenceslaus, Emperor and King of Bohemia, and Father of Elizabeth, the last Dutchess of Luxemburg, before it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Burgundy. A fine neat Town, well frequented, and strongly fortified; founded about the year 1231, and not long after so consumed by a mercile fire. An. 1301, in uicinia domus remansit, as my Author says, that there was not one House left of the old foundation. But it was presently re-built in a more beautiful situation. But it was formerly re-built in a more beautiful form, and of more strong materials, than before it was, both publick and private Buildings very near and elegant. 3. Zittau, on the same River, bordering on Bohemia. 4. Lauden, 5. Luben, 6. Camitz, of which little memorable, but that together with the former they may take together six Towns which are confederate together in a stricter League for the mutual Defence and preservation, but under the Protection and with the approbation of the Kings of Bohemia. Then in the Lower Lusatia there is 7. Spremburg, so named from its situation on the River Spre, which runneth through the whole Country, and in ancient times was called Suavia; supported by some (and not improbably) either to give name to the Suevians, or to take it from them; that potent Nation inhabiting originally betwixt this and the Elbe. 8. Tribel, upon the Neisse. 9. Cuthlitz, and the Spre, or Suavia, belongs unto the Marquesses of Brandenburg.

The first Inhabitants hereof are by some supposed (and but supposed) to be the Bacones of Tacitus; in the partition of these parts of Germany amongst the Slaves, made subject to the Winithi or Venedi, the greatest and most spreading Nation of all these People. When and by whom first made a Marquessate, I am not able to say for certain; but sure I am, it hath been very much given to the change of Masters. It had first a Marquess of its own; Conrade the Marquess hereof, who died in the year 1166 being by the Emperor Henry the fifth made Marquess of Misnia, added it unto that Estate; and it remained for some time united to it. After being seized on by the Poles, it was sold to Frederick the 2. Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg; who, keeping Cuthlitz and some other Towns bordering next upon him in his own possession, surrendered the rest on Composition to George King of Bohemia, claiming it from a Grant made by Henry the 4. to Vratislav the first Bohemian King, An. 1187. A Grant on which no Possession followed, unless it were the Homage and acknowledgment of the Princes off, holding it afterwards of that Crown as the Lord in chief.

Thus have we brought these four Provinces into the power and possession of the Kings of Bohemia, remaining still distinct in their Laws and Governments, (as several limbs of the great Body of the Slaves made up into one Estate) though joined together in the person of one supreme Governour, who is severally admitted and acknowledged by each Province distinctly for itself, and not by any one of them in the name of the rest. Out of all which so laid together there may be raised the sum of three millions of Crowns yearly for the King's Revenues, towards the defrayment of all Charges.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Mars, a Lion with a forked Tail Luna, crowned Sol. Which Arms was first given by Frederick Barbarossa to Vladislaus the third, made by him King of Bohemia, in regard of the good Service he had done him at the Siege of Milaun. And though Vladislaus was deposed by the States of that Kingdom; because never formally and legally elected by them; yet his Successors keep those Arms to this very day.

15. BRANDENBURG.

THE Marquissate of BRANDENBURG is bounded on the East with the Kingdom of Poland, on the West with the Dukedom of Saxony, on the North with Pomerania and part of Mecklenburg, and on the South with Misnia, Lusatia and Silefia. So called from Brandenburg, the chief Town of it, and because once the Marches of the Empire against the Slaves: divided afterwards into the Old, the New, and the Middle Marches, according as they were extended farther towards Prussia by little and little, as the Emperours were able to get ground of those potent people.

The Country contains in length from East to West 60 Dutch, or 240 Italian miles, and is of correspondent breadth; the whole compass making up 540 miles of the last account. Within which Tract are comprehended 55 Cities and walled Towns, 80 Towns of trade, (Mark-Statens, or Market-Towns, as they commonly call them) 38 Castles or Manſion-houses of Noblemen, 17 Monasteries, and 10 Parks well stored with Beasts of game: the Country otherwise (considering the Extent thereof) being but thinly inhabited, nor well provided of necessaries, excepting Corn, of which these North-East Countries afford very great plenty.

The Religion of this Country is for the most part according to the form and Doctrine of Luther; first introduced and authorized by Marquess Joachim the first. In which estate it continued till the Breach betwixt George-William, the Father of the present Elector, and the Palatine of Nenturg. At which time the Palatine, having married a Daughter of Bavaria, the most potent Prince of the Popish party, reconciled himself to the Church of Rome, the better to assure himself of the Aid of Spain: and this Elector, having married a Sister of Frederick the fifth, Prince Elector Palatine, the most potent Prince of the Calvinians, declared himself to be of that party and Opinion, the better to assure himself to the Aid of Holland, Anno 1614. But when on the pervasion of his Wife he set out an Edit for suppressing the Lutheran Forms, and authorizing the Calvinian only throughout his Dominions, (which was the year 1615.) the people of this Marquissate rose in Arms against him: the difference being thus composed, that the Lutheran Forms only should be used in all the Churches of the Marquissate of Brandenburg, for the contentation of the people; and that the Marquissate should have the exercise of his new Religion for himself, his Lady, and those of their Opinion, in his private Chapels.

1. ALTE-MARCK, or the OLD MARCK, so called because the antient Marches of the Empire against the Slaves, lieth betwixt Lunenbourg and the Elb, with which it is bounded on the East. The chief Towns thereof are, 1. Tangermünd, on the Elb, where it receives the River Tanagra or Angra; honoured sometimes with the Residence of Charles the fourth. 2. Steindall, the chief of these Old Marches. 3. Soltwedel divided into the Towns, the old and the new. 4. Gardeleben, fortified with the strong Castle of Eisbimp. 5. Ostberg, 6. Senften, laid by some, but falsely, to be so called from the Senones, whom they would make the old Inhabitants of this Country; (by all good Writers made to be originally a Gallick Nation.) 7. Werb, of which little memorable.

In the MIDDLE MARCHES or UPPER-MARCK, lying betwixt the Elb and the River Oder, the Towns of most note are, 1. Butzaw, a Commendatory of the Temples in former times. 2. Spandaw upon the Spre, a well-fortified piece. 3. Oderburg, called so from that River, on which it is situate; remarkable for a strong Castle built by Marquess Albert the second, at which all Passengers by water are to pay their Toll. 4. Brandenburg, on the River Havel, a Bishop's See, the Seat of the Lords Marchers in former times, taking name from hence: by some said to be built by Brennus, Captain of the Gauls; more truly by one Brando, a Prince of the Francians, Anno Ch. 140. 5. Frankford for distinction sake) named ad Oderam, on which River it is situate; the Soil about it being so plentifully stored with Corn and Wines that it is not easy to affirm whether Bacchus or Ceres be most enamoured of it. It was made an University by Marquess Joachim, An. 1506, and it is also a flourishing and famous Empory, though not comparable to that of the other Frankford, seated on the Maine. 6. Berlin, the ordinary Residence of the Marquess, situate on the River Spre, (or Suavia) which, rising in Lusatia, falleth into the Albi. 7. Havelburg, on the River Havel, a Bishop's See, who acknowledgeth the Arch-Bishop of Magdeburg for his Metropolitan.

3. In the NEW-MARCK, extended from the Oder to the Borders of Poland, and called so because last conquered, and added to the account of the German Empire, there is Custrin, a very strong and defensible Town, seated on the two Rivers Varta and Oder, fortified with great charge by John, Son of Marquess Joachim, and by him intended for his Seat. 2. Sonnenberg, and 3. Landsberg, both upon the Warta. 4. Soldan in former times the chief of this Marck. 5. Berlinch, or New Berlin: and 6. Falkenburg, a strong Town, and fortified with as strong a Castle, towards Pomerania.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were the Variis

and Naribones, part of the great Nations of the Suevians; and after them the Helvidi, Wili, Beirani, and other Tribes of the Winithi, the greatest Nation of the Slaves, who possessed themselves of it. But Brandenburg being won from them by the Emperor Henry the first, An. 620, (at what time the Gospel was first preached amongst it) the Country heretofore was given by him to Sigefride Earl of Rengelsheim, (eldest Son of Theodorick, the second Earl of Oldenburg, (a valiant Gentleman with the Title of Marquess or Lord Marcher, Anno 927, upon condition that he should defend those Marches (the Old Mark, as they now call it) against the Slaves. These Marquesses were from the first Officer, at the appointment of the Emperor, and to him accountable. Sigard, the fourth from Sigefride, governing here for Otho the third, was the first Elector of these Marquesses, and Udo the second of that name, and third from Sigard, the last that held this Honour at the Emperor's pleasure; that Dignity after his decease being made hereditary in the person of Albert of Anhalt, surnamed Ursus, by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa. Which Albert having very much enlarged his Border by the Conquest and extermination of the Slaves, caused the uncopied Country to be planted with the new Dutch Colonies out of Holland, Zeland, Flanders, and those parts of the Netherlands. The House of this Albert being extinct in John the fourth, it was given by the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria to Lewis his Son; by Otho the Brother of that Lewis, sold for 200000 Ducats unto Charles the fourth; by Sigismund, the Son of Charles, to Jodocus Marquess of Moravia; but afterwards being redeemed again, it was by the said Sigismund conferred on Frederick Burggrave of Nuremberg, in recompence of his faithful Service in the Wars of Hungary and Bohemia. In his posterity it remaineth, but much increased in power and Patrimony by the additions of the Dukedom of Prussia, Cleve, Gulick and Berg, the Marquissates of Onspack and Jagerndorff, the Earldom of Mark in Westphalen, now a part of Cleveland, the Lordships of Prignitz and Grossen in Silefia, the Towns of Hoff and Chimbach in Vorland, with the County of Raphin, and the Town and Territory of Cuthlitz in the Lower Lusatia, inasmuch that this is now the most powerful Family in all Germany. The Marquesses hereof from Sigefride to Albert, the Son of Ursus, &c. follow in this order.

The Marquesses of BRANDENBURG.

A. C.

1. Sigefride, Earl of Rengelsheim, made the first Marquess of this Border by the Emperor Henry the first.
2. Gero, by the appointment of Otho the first.
3. Bruno, Earl of Witthim, created Marquess hereof by the same Emperor.
4. Hugh the Son of Bruno, by the favour of Otho the third.
5. Sigard, the Brother of Hugh, made by the same Emperor the first Marquess-Elector.
6. Theodorick, the Son of Sigard, ousted of his Command by Misfronius one of the Princes of the Slaves named Obotriti.
7. Udo, Earl of Soltwedel, (the Slaves being beaten and expelled) created Marquess and Elector by Conrade the 2.
8. Udo II. Son of Udo the first, proscribed by Henry the 3. for joining with Rodolph Duke of Schwaben in the War against him.
9. Primsilant, King of the Obotriti, (the Ancestor of the Dukes of Mecklenburg) was advanced unto these Honors by the said Henry the 3. and held them unto his death. After which it was made

- made hereditary by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, in the person of Albert of Anhalt, the Son of Orfus.
- 1152 10. Albert of Anhalt, the first hereditary Marquess, Father of Bernard, who was created Elector and Duke of Saxony, in the place of Henry surnamed the Lion, by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa.
11. Otto Son of Albert.
12. Otto II. Son of Otto the 1.
13. Albert II. Brother of Otto the 2.
14. John, Son of Albert the 2.
15. John II. Son of John the 1.
16. Conrade, Brother of John the 2.
17. John III. Son of Conrade.
18. Waldemar, Brother of John the 3.
19. Waldemar II. Nephew of Waldemar the 1. by his Brother Henry.
20. John IV. Brother of Waldemar the second, the last Marquess of the House of Anhalt; the Marquise electing to the Empire for want of Heirs.

21. Lewis of Bavaria, created Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg by his Father, the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, on the said Elector.
22. Lewis II. surnamed the Roman, on the Renunciation of his Brother, succeeded in the Marquise and Electoral Dignity.
23. Otto, Brother to Lewis the first and second, who fold the Marquise and Electoral Dignity to Charles the fourth.
24. Wenceslaus, Son of Charles the fourth, afterwards King of Bohemia, and Emperor of the Romans.
25. Sigismund, Brother of Wenceslaus, Emperor of the Romans, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Earl of Luxemburg, who fold this Marquise to Jodocus Marquess of Moravia, and having afterwards redeemed it, conferred the same on

- 1417 26. Frederick, Burgrave of Nuremberg, solemnly invested herein at the Council of Constance An. 1414, for which Investiture he paid unto the Emperor the sum of 400000 Crowns.
- 1440 27. Frederick II. Son of Frederick the first, to whom the Emperor Frederick the 3. gave the Dukedom of Pomerania.
- 1470 28. Albert, Brother of Frederick the 2. called the Achilles of Germany, relinquished to Bugislaus the 10. the possession of Pomerania; but his Successors ever since have retained the Title and kept on foot their Pretensions to it. From Frederick his Son descended Albert the first Duke of Prussia, Frederick the first Marquess of Opisch, George the first Marquess of Sagendorff, and Albert called the Albionides of Germany, who fo harassed Francois in the days of Charles the fifth.
- 1486 29. John, Son of Albert.
- 1499 30. Joachim, Son of John, who founded the University of Frankford, Anno 1536, and authorized the Reformation of Religion in his time begun.

- 1535 31. Joachim II. Son of Joachim the first.
- 1571 32. Joachim-Georg, Son of Joachim the second.
33. Joachim-Frederick, Son of Joachim-Georg.
34. John-Sigismund, Son of Joachim-Frederick, who had to Wife the Lady Anne, Daughter of Albert-Frederick the second Duke of Prussia, and of Mary-Eleanor his Wife, eldest Daugh-

- ter of William the first, Duke of Cleve.
- 1620 35. George-William, Son of John-Sigismund and the Lady Anne, claiming in her right the Dukedoms of Cleve, Gulick and Berg, the Earldoms of Mark and Ravensburg, and the Seignior of Ravensstein; which he possessed a while, divided with his Cousin Wolfgangus Palatine of Newburg, Son of Maximilian the younger Sister of Mary-Eleanor. But falling out about their Partage, the Palatine of Newburg called in the Spaniard, and the Father of this Marquess, in behalf of his Son, called in the Confederate States of the Netherlands, to assert their Titles. After the death of Bugislaus the last Duke of Pomerania, he was to have succeeded also in that Estate, then possessed by the Swede. Of the Agreement made between them, and the great Accrument thereby following to the House of Brandenburg, we shall speak more there.
36. Frederick-William, Son of George-William, now Elector of Brandenburg.

The Territories of this Family are the greatest, as before is said, of any in Germany, but a great part thereof is very barren, and his Subjects in those parts as poor as the Country; much of his new accessions yielding little but the Title only. So that neither in Revenue or Power he is able to keep rank with the Duke of Saxony; his ordinary Revenue hardly amounting at the utmost to 200000 l. per annum, which is but half of the Receipts of the Duke of Saxony.

The Arms hereof are Argent, an Eagle Gules, membered and beaked Or.

16. POMERANIA.

POMERANIA is bounded on the East with Prussia, from which it is parted by the River Wesfel, or Vistula, on the West with Mecklenburg, divided from it by the River Baltica; on the North with the Baltick Sea, extended on the Coast hereof for the space of 100 English miles; and on the South with the Marquise of Brandenburg. So named from the Pomortzi, or Pomerani, a Nation of the Slavones, to whose share it fell from the situation of it on the Sea-shore, as the word in the Slavonian doth seem to import.

The Country is for the most part plain, abundantly fruitful in Corn, carried hence to Danzick, and transported thence to all parts of Christendom in their times of Scarcity; yielding also good store of Pasturage, and great Herds of Cattel; with plenty of Butter, Cheese, Honey, and some reasonable quantities of Flax. Populous it is, and those people of very strong Constitution, as living under a sharp and piercing Air. The whole is divided into the Continent, and the Islands: the Continent into 1. the Upper Pomerania, bordering upon Mecklenburg, extended from the Baltica to the River Oder; 2. the Lower, reaching from the Oder to that part thereof which is now called 3. Pomerania, betwixt it and Prussia, subject of long time to the Crown of Poland, and there we shall hear farther of it.

Chief places in the UPPER are, 1. Bard, at the mouth of the River Baltica, taking name from thence; a well-traded Town, and many times the Seat of the Dukes of this hitherto Pomerania. 2. Wolgast, upon the Baltick Sea, over against the Isle of Usedom, the chief of this part of Pomerania, from whence the Dukes hereof are called the Dukes of Pomerania Wolgast; the first Town taken in by Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, in his famous War for the relief of Germany, Anno 1630. 3. Straßland, a Town of great Trading and much resort, seated upon the same Sea also opposite to the Isle of Rügen; a Town of great name in the course of the German Wars. 4. Gripsholm, on the same Sea, betwixt Wolgast and Straßland, made an University, Anno 1436. 5. Anklam, upon the River Pone. 6. Trilbese, situate on a Lake out of which the said River hath its course.

Then in the LOWER Pomerania there is 7. Camin, an Episcopate. See, situate on the Baltick Shore, over against the Isle of Wollin. 8. Colberg, a strong Town on the same Shore also, at the fall of the Perjan into the Sea. 9. Casslin, the last Sea-Town of this Tract lying towards Prussia. 10. Stargard, on the Ina, more within the land; as is also 11. Griffenberg upon the Rega, and 12. Stron on the Oder, once a poor Fish-Town, now the Metropolis of this part of the Country; rising to this greatness (after the embracing of Christianity) by the aid of Vintia, formerly the chief Mart-Town of all these parts; the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of the Lower Pomerania; the Dukes of Pomerania-Stetin, as for distinction sake they are used to call them.

The Islands hereunto pertaining are those of Rügen, Wollin, Usedom, touched upon before, but now more particularly to be handled. That of most note is ROGEN, over against Straßland, from which it is divided only by a narrow Strait, in length seven Dutch miles, and as much in breadth; so that the Compass of it, if it were exactly round, would amount to 20 German, or 100 Italian miles; and yet it was once bigger than it is. But in the year 1309, by the force of an outrageous Tempest, a great part of it, lying towards the South-east, as far as to the Isle of Rügen, (then conjoined hereto) was torn away, and sunk to deep into the bottom of the Sea, that now the greatest Ships that be fall over it. The Island is plentiful of Corn, the Granary of Straßland, as they call it; and is reasonably well stored with Cattel; full of Bay Creeks, and winding Shores, with many and vast Promontories, thrusting into the Sea, which gives them great increase of Fishing. Anciently it belonged to the Crown of Denmark, till given by Waldemar the third to Bugislaus and Barinimus Dukes of Pomerania; continuing ever since part of that Estate. The chief Town of it is called As, or Asen, in the middle of the Island, but not containing above 400 Families. Others of less note and estimate being, 2. Sogart. 3. Wick. 4. Bugislaus, &c. small Towns compared with Villages upon the Continent, but the best they have. And yet so populous is the Island, that they are able to arm 7000 good fighting men if there be occasion.

The second of the three, in repute and bigness, is that of WOLLIN, situate over against Camin: so called from Wollin the chief Town, (Polonium it is called in Latine) made an Episcopate See by Wartislaus, the first Christian Prince of this Nation, which on the Sackage of this City was removed to Camin. A Town which once so flourished in Traffick, that it gave place to none but Constantinople; the Russians, Danes, Saxons, &c. having here their particular Streets. But being miserably sacked by Waldemar King of Denmark, Anno 1170, melt of the Trade hereof was removed to Lubeck, thence which time it never could come near its former glories.

The last in reputation is that of USEDOM, seated betwixt both, not far from Wolgast; so called from Usedom the chief Town in it, of which little observable. All three were of the Habitation of the ancient Angli, who under Odoacer King of the Hermi subverted the Western Empire, conquered Italy, and made themselves Masters of it, till subdued by the Goths. Those which remained in these Islands became after subject to the Slaves, and had once Kings of their own: the first whose name occurs in Story being Cring, the Son of Kanze, a pusilliant Prince, extending his Dominions into Helfin, Dinaburg, and the City of Lubeck, which he built about the year 1100, afterwards beautified and enlarged by Adolph the 2. Earl of Helfin, by some termed the Founder of it. But his Ill-fate failing in the year 1136, it fell by Compact made between them to the Dukes of Pomerania, to whom these Islands ever since have continued subject.

And as for Pomerania itself, the old Inhabitants thereof were part of the Regii before mentioned, the Reudigi, Longi-Navi, and Longi-Didami, with parts of the Petruhard Burgundians; into whose void rooms the Pomortzi and other Tribes of the Winithi (the most potent Nation of the Slaves) did in fine succeed, extending their Dominions to the Banks of the Vistula, the parts adjoining unto that, to difference them from Pomerania, were called Pomerellia. But that part of it being given by Mezowinus, the last Prince thereof, dying without Issue, An. 1295, to Primsilast Duke of Poland, the name and power of the Princes or Dukes of Pomerania became confined within narrower Bounds than at first they had. The first Prince of it whom we meet with on record, was Barinimus, of the noble Griffoniana Family, An. 933, whose Grandson Suaniborus commanded over all this Tract. But his Dominions being parted betwixt his Sons, Bugislaus, who had Pomerellia, retained the Language and old Customs of the Slavonians; Wartislaus, who possessed the residue, conformed himself to the Laws and Language of the Saxons: the Country being by that means accounted for a part of Germany, and added unto the Empire an account thereof in the time of Frederick Barbarossa, by whom Bugislaus and Casimir, Sons of Wartislaus, were made Princes of the Empire and Dukes of Pomerania. The Estate being afterwards divided betwixt Bugislaus and Otto, Sons of Barinimus the first, and the House of Otto failing, in the person of Otto the third, that part hereof was given by the Emperor Frederick the third to Frederick the 2. Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, the cause of much Contention amongst these Marquesses and the other House of the Dukes of Pomerania, which was thus agreed at last, That both Princes should continue the Arms and Title, the Possession of it to be yielded to the Duke of Pomerania, on the failing of whose Issue, male it should descend upon the Heirs of the House of Brandenburg. The Succession of these Princes follow in this order.

The Dukes of POMERANIA.

1. Wartislaus, the first Christian Prince of the Pomeranians, Baptized by Otto Bishop of Brandenburg, Anno 1124.
- 1128 2. Bugislaus, Son of Wartislaus, created by Frederick Barbarossa the first Duke of Pomerania.
- 1183 3. Wartislaus II. Son of Bugislaus, planted the void parts of Pomerania with Saxon Colonies.
- 1222 4. Barinimus, Son of Bugislaus the second: after whose death Pomerania was divided into two Principalities.

Dukes of WOLGAST.

- 1277 5. Bugislaus II. Son of Barinimus.
- 1319 6. Wartislaus, Son to Bugislaus.
- 1326 7. Barinimus II.
- 1363 8. Wartislaus II.

Dukes of STETIN.

- 1277 1. Otto, Duke of Pomerania-Stetin.
- 1345 2. Casimir, Son of Otto.
- 1368 3. Casimir II. Son of Casimir.

- 1594 9. Barnimus III.
 1405 10. Wartislaus III.
 1456 11. Ericus, Son of Wartislaus.
 12. Bugislaus III. commonly called the tenth, & the younger Prince of both Houses making up the tale, succeeded Orbo the third in that part of Pomerania, uniting for the whole into one Estate.
 1523 13. George, Son of Bugislaus the tenth.
 1531 14. Philip, Son of George, in whose time the Reformation made by Luther was admitted into Pomerania.
 1583 15. Bugislaus IV. but the 12. in the Dutch account, Son of Philip; his younger Brother Erycivus-Ludovicus, having that of Stetin for his share.

16. Bugislaus V. and 14. Son of Bugislaus the 4. born in the year 1580, succeeded in Pomerania of Wolgast; as Philip-Julius, Son of Ernestus-Ludovicus, did in that of Stetin. After whose death Bugislaus became Lord of all Pomerania in a fair way to have lost all to the prevailing Imperialists, had not the timely coming in of the King of Sweden stopped their violent Progress. But Bugislaus dying without Issue in the time of the War, and in him the Male-Issue of the House of Bugislaus the tenth being quite extinguished, George-William, Marquis and Elector of Brandenburg, put in his claim for the Estate, according to the compact and Agreement spoken of before. Betwixt whom & the Swedes (who under colour of aiding the last Duke had possessed themselves of all the strongest places in the Country) it was accorded and concluded at the Treaty of Munster, that all the Higher Pomerania, with the Isles of Rugen and Wollin, and the Town of Stetin should from thenceforth belong to the Crown of Sweden: Lower Pomerania to be enjoyed by the House of Brandenburg, so long as the male-Issue lasteth; on default whereof, that also to be added unto that Crown: the Arms and Titles to be used by both promiscuously. And in regard the Marquess of Brandenburg, was to part with the Upper Pomerania for the Contentation of the Swedes, (without which no firm Peace could be made in Germany;) it was also there agreed upon, that the Temporal Estates of the Bithoprick of Havelbergh, Minden and Cammin, together with that of Magdeburg, (after the decease of the present Bishop) should be for ever added to the possessions of that House; the Marquesses and Electors of it to be thenceforth intitled Dukes of Magdeburg, Princes of Havelbergh and Minden. But what will be the issue of these Conclusions future Times must shew.

The Arms of Pomerania are a Gryphon.

17. MECKLENBURG.

THE Dukedom of MECKLENBURG is bounded on the East with Pomerania, on the West with Holftein, a Province of the Kingdom of Denmark, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with Brandenburg and Saxony-Lauenburg. So called from Mecklenburg or Megalopolis (both names in the several Languages of the Dutch and Greeks, signifying a great City, a great Town of that name here being in the time of the Heruli and the Vandals, (the old inhabitants of these parts) whose chief City it was; but on their leaving of this Country decayed to nothing. The Country is of the same nature as Pomerania, and as rich in Corn. Places of most importance in it are, 1. Wismar, a noted Port, on a Creek or Bay of the Baltick Sea, raised out of the Ruines of old Mecklenburg before mentioned, about the year 1240. The Haven here is capable of the greatest Vessels, to which it gives a safe and assured Station, whence the name of Wismar, the word signifying, in the Scalvonian Language, idem ac certum mare, (as my Author hath it) as much as a quiet or safe Sea. Now one of the Hanse Towns, and being it lies conveniently for the use of the Swedes, allotted to that Crown by the Treaty of Munster; the Duke of Mecklenburg being in recompence thereof to have the Temporalities of the Bithopricks of Swerin and Ratzenburg. 2. Swerin, seated upon the South-side of the Lake to be named; an Episcopal See and honoured with giving the Title of a Baron to the Dukes of Mecklenburg. 3. Malchow, first walled by Nicolas Prince of the Vandals, Anno 1270. 4. Ratzenburg, an Episcopal See, spoken of before. 5. Ratzebock, the next in reputation of all the Hanse Towns to Lubeck and Danzick; large, rich, and most frequented by all sorts of Merchants, in compass almost fix English miles, situate on the River Warna, near the last thereof into the Baltick, honoured with an University, here founded by John Duke of Mecklenburg, Anno 1419, the first Professors in it being brought from Erfford in Saxony. 6. Stargard, which once gave the Title of Duke to the younger Princes of this House. 7. Sarantine, memorable for a Nuntery there founded by Duke Meagen the second. 8. Lanz, built and fortified by Duke Henry the second, as an Outwork to Roskow, which he had lately conquered of Christopher then King of Denmark, on the edge of a little memorable. 10. Fridland, on the edge of a little memorable. 11. Frischtel, both pleasantly and strongly seated on the edge of a Lake. 12. Dammmin a strong Town on the Marches of Brandenburg.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were the Vandals, with the rest of the Heruli and Burgundians. But the Burgundians, being reckoned as a part of the Vandals, were not much took notice of, till their Irruptions on the Borders of the Roman Empire made them more considerable: the Princes of these Nations using no other Title than Kings of the Heruli and Vandals. Of these the first is said to be one Ansvinus, Son of an Anatolian Lady, who learned his first Rudiments of Warfare under Alexander the Great. Out of his Loins descended a long Race of Kings, among whom Rhodogais, who together with Amaric the Goth invaded Italy, (I know not by what warrant) is accounted one. Gunderick, the seventeenth of these Kings, weary of to cold a Dwelling, passed towards the South; and, having harassed Gaul and Spain, shipped himself over the Straights of Gibraltar, and crept into the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africa; where his Successors we shall meet with there. By Titulian, the youngest Son of Gunderick, the Son of Gunderick, the youngest Son of Gunderick is continued, who after mingling with the Obotriti and other of the Scalvies, succeeding into the Obotriti and the Vandals, left off the Title of Kings of the Vandals, and called themselves Kings of the Heruli and Obotriti, continuing it to Pribislaw or Primislaw the second, who were himself, Pribislaw, Di gratia, Herulorum, Wagrorum, Cresporum, Palmorum, Obotritorum, Kislinorum, Fandulorum, Rex, making here in a general Muster of these Tribes of the Scalvies and Heruli, which remained under his command. But he being quilled by Henry surnamed the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, the Title of King was laid aside; his Successors contenting themselves with that of Princes. The Estate was divided betwixt Henry and Niclot, the Nephews of Pribislaw by his Son Henry, into two Estates, Henry assuming to himself the Title of Prince of the Obotriti, and Niclot that of Prince of the Vandals. But the posterity of Niclot failing in William the last of that Line, Anno 1439, his Title with the Lands thereunto belonging fell to Henry the Fat, the fourth Duke of Mecklenburg, to which Honour Albert and John, the Sons of Henry the fourth, descended from the elder House, had been advanced by the Emperor Charles the fourth at Prague, Anno 1348. The Succession of which Family from Pribislaw take in order thus:

The Princes of the HERULI, and Dukes of MECKLENBURG.

- 1158 1. Pribislaw, the last King and first Prince of the Heruli, after their Subjection to the Saxons, restored to this Title and his former Estate by the bountiful Conquerors, to be held under the Right and Homage of the House of Saxony.
 1179 2. Henry, Son of Pribislaw, baptised with all his people in his Father's life-time, by the perswasion of Hen. Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, by whom they were restored to their Estates.
 3. Henry II. Son of the former Henry, dividing the Estate with his Brother Niclot.
 1218 4. John, surnamed the Divine, so called because created Doctor of Divinity in the University of Paris, whither he was sent by his Father to learn good Arts.
 1260 5. Henry III. surnamed of Hiersuldem, because of his Expedition thither against the Saracens.
 1302 6. Henry IV. surnamed the Lion, for his Valour and undaunted Contancy.
 1319 7. Albert and John, the Sons of Henry, going to Prague with a Princely Train to attend on the Emperor Charles the fourth, were by him created Princes of the Empire, and Dukes of Mecklenburg, Anno 1348.
 1380 8. Magnus, Son of Albert.
 1384 9. John, Son of Magnus, the Founder of the University of Roskow, Anno 1419.
 1423 10. Henry V. surnamed the Fat, who, on the death of William the last Prince of the Vandals, succeeded into his Estate.
 1447 11. Magnus II. Son of Henry, Founder of the Cathedral Church of Roskow.
 1503 12. Albert II. Son of Magnus the second.
 1547 13. John, Son of Albert the second, endowed the University of Roskow with the Lands of some dissolved Monasteries, and authorized in his Estates the Reformation of Religion begun by Luther.
 1578 14. John III. Son of John Albert.
 1592 15. Adolph Frederick and John Albert, Sons of John the third, dispossessed hereby by the Emperor Ferdinand the second, Anno 1628, their Estates, with the Title of Duke of Mecklenburg, being conferred on Albert of Wallenstein, Duke of Fridland, who had not long enjoyed the Title, when Gustavus Adolphus, King of Sweden, the Assertor of the Liberties of Germany, restored it to the proper Owners. The Heir to whose Estates is Gu*stavus Adolphus*, the only Son and Heir of John Albert; the other of these two Brothers dying without Issue.

18. The Dukedom and Estates of SAXONY.

THE Dukedom and Estates of SAXONY (now reckoning those which now pass under other Names and shall hereafter be described in their several places) are bounded on the East with Bohemia, Lusatia, and part of Brandenburg, on the West with Holfstein, Brandenburg, and parts of Lunenburg and Holfstein, on the North with other parts of Brandenburg, and part of Mecklenburg; and on the South with Franconia, and some parts of the Upper Palatinate.

It is (we see) an aggregate Body, consisting of two general Limbs; 1. the Dukedom of Saxony, 2. the Estates of Saxony, or Saxony properly so called: the first containing the whole Provinces of 1. Ober-Sax, or the Upper Saxony, the proper Seat of the Duke Elector. 2. Misnia, 3. Poitland, and 4. Thuringia; the other the of 1. Anhalt, 2. Mansfield, 3. Meysenburg, and 4. Lauenburg. And as it is an aggregate Body, so it is comprehensive of all those honourary Titles by which the Princes of Germany are distinguished from one another, that is to say, the Electorship of Saxony, the Dukedom of Lauenburg, the Bithoprick of Meysenburg, the Principality of Anhalt, the Marquessate of Misnia, the Landgraveship of Thuringia, the Earldom of Mansfield, and the Seigneurie or Lordship of Poitland. Of these eight Provinces, the 4 first mentioned are wholly situate without the Limits and Precincts of the ancient Saxony; and yet none are, and have been called long before, the Dukedom of Saxony, because they make up the whole Patrimony and Estate of the Dukes Electors, who since the Prescription and Deprivation of Duke Henry, surnamed the Lion, Anno 1180, in some or other of these Countries have had their fixed Seat and Habitation. The four last, being parts of the ancient Saxony, and heretofore in the possession of the Dukes hereof, do still pass under the account and name of Saxony, though in the hands of several Owners; all which do acknowledge a Superiority in the Duke Elector, if not some great Relation to him and Dependence on him: so that we have an heterogeneous Body to discourse upon, and therefore must consider severally of the parts thereof, but so, that either first or last we shall find them all in the Succession and affairs of the Dukes of Saxony, 1. then.

THE DUKEDOM of Saxony is bounded on the East with Bohemia, Lusatia, and part of the proper Saxony; on the West with Holfstein, and part of the proper Saxony; on the North with the proper Saxony only; and on the South with Franconia, and the Upper Palatinate. So called because the proper Seat and Patrimony of the Duke-Elector: of very different nature both for Air and Soil; but the last especially, as we shall see by looking over the particular Provinces of 1. Ober-Sax, 2. Misnia, or Meyssen, 3. Poitland, 4. Thuringia, by the Dutch called Duringen.

1. OBER-SAX, or the Upper Saxony, is bounded on the East with the Marches of Brandenburg, on the West with Mansfield, from which it is parted by the River Saale, on the North with Meysenburg, on the South with Misnia. The reason of the name we shall see anon. The Air hereof is somewhat sharp and piercing, the Soil sufficiently fruitful, but therein not to be compared with Misnia, and much less with Duringen, being both of them of a richer and more liberal nature.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Torgau, by some placed in Misnia, but by Mercur in this Province, because on the West side of the Elbe, in form orbicular, and falling every way from the sides of a Mountain; beautified with a flatly and pleasant Castle belonging to the Elector of Saxony, who is Lord hereof, built by John-Frederick, the Elector, Anno 1535. Near to the City is a Lake of a mile in compass, for which the Citizens pay yearly to the Duke 500 Gulden. 2. Worlitz, upon the Elbe, once a Commandery of the Templars. 3. Weissenburg, lying towards Brunswick, 4. Kemberg, on the Elbe. 5. Buttelberg, between the Elbe and the Mulda. And 6. Wittenberg, on the Elbe, in an open Plain, but strongly fenced with Walls, Ramparts, and deep Ditches. The chief beauty of it lieth in one fair Street, extending the whole length of the City: in the midst thereof is the Cathedral Church, a large Market-place, and the Common-Council-house. In former times it was the Seat of the Dukes Electors, till the Electoral Dignity was conferred on the House of Meissen, who, liking better their own Country, kept their Courts at Dresden, but so, that Wittenberg is still acknowledged for the Head City of the Electorate, and was made an University for Divines by Duke Frederick, Anno 1508. It was called Wittenberg, as some conjecture, from Wittikindus, once Lord of Saxony, when the extent thereof was greatest: famous for the Sepulchres of Luther and Melanchthon, but chiefly for that here were the Walls of Popery first broken down, and the Reformation of Religion begun by Luther, of the wonderful success whereof we have spoke already.

Of the Affairs of this little Country we can say but little, more than the means by which it came into the hands of the Dukes of Saxony, and consequently to the name which it still retains. Concerning which we are to know, that on the Deprivation of Duke Henry, furnished the Lion, whose Greatness was grown formidable even to the Emperours themselves, the Dukedom of Saxony was dismembered into many parcels; Brunswick and Lunenburgh being given unto the Children of the Duke deprived, the lower Parts of Westphalen seized on by Philip Archbishop of Colem, the parts thereof about the Weser by the Bishop of Paderborn, Herman the Landgrave of Thuringia laying hold of that part of this Estate which was nearest to him, Lubeck and many other of the principal Cities made Imperial, or governing themselves as Free Estates, the Ancestors of the Princes of Anhalt and the Earls of Manifield endowed with large Possessions also out of this great Patrimony; the Emperour not only coming at it, but willingly consenting to that Dispartion, the better to reward and content those Princes who had assisted him in his Wars against the Duke. By which means there was nothing left of the ancient Saxony to be cleft upon Bernard of Anhalt, whom Frederick Barbarossa had created Duke Elector in the room of Henry so deprived. And though Duke Bernard for his many good Services to the Empire had been before gratified with the City of Wittenberg by Conrad the 3. and had conquered from Duke Henry the whole Country of Lauenburg; yet all being found too little to maintain the Port of a Duke Elector, it pleased the Emperour Frederick to bestow upon him all those Lands and Territories which lay between the Sala and the Elbe, on the North of Misnia to make Wittenberg the Electoral City and give unto the County thus united to it the name of Ober-Sax or Upper Saxony, which it continueth to this day.

2. MISNIA or Meissen, is bounded on the East with Lusitia, on the West with Duringen, on the North with Saxony (specially so called and some part of Brandenburg, on the South with Voitland and some part of Bohemia). The Country was once overpread with Woods, and full of Bogs, rendering the Air unwholesome, and the Soil unprofitable; both rectified by the care and industry of the people; now yielding fertile Mines of Silver, and great plenty both of Corn and Pasturage; well watered with the Rivers Sala, Pleffe, Elster, and Mulda.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Dresden, seated on the Albi, having continually on her Walls and Bulwarks 150 Pieces of Ordnance; in it a Stable of the Duke's, in which are 128 Horses of Service, and a Magazine, out of which 30000 Horse and Foot may be armed at a day's warning. The Town itself is situate on both sides of the River, by which it is divided into the Old Town and the New, joined into one by a Bridge of 800 paces in length. The Country round about it is very rich and pleasant, able to sustain great multitudes. For that cause it was made the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of Saxony, who have here a strong and flatly Castle. 2. Naumburg, 3. Mersburg, both seated on the River Sala, two Episcopal Sees. 4. Leipzig, as famous as University for Philosophers as Jene in Lorraine is for Physicians. It semeth the Scholars and Citizens will not suffer their Beer to perish, of which here is so much drunk and exported, that the very Customs of it due unto the Duke amounteth to 20000 pounds yearly; yet is this Town of no more than two Churches; but wealthy, populous, and built for the most part of fair Free-houses, and honoured with the Courts of Justice for all the Country. Though seated on the meeting of Pleffe, Parda, and Elster, 3 Rivers which lie almost on all sides of it; yet is it not strong, having been thrice taken by the Imperialists in less than 2 years during the late German Wars. Sufficiently famous (if for nothing else) for the great Battel fought near it between the late King of Sweden and the Count of Tilly: the honour whereof falling to the Sweden and Saxons, (with the death of 15000 on both sides, and the loss of all the Baggage, Arms and Ammunition of the Imperialists) freed all these parts of Germany from that civil and spiritual Bondage which was intended by the Emperour to be put upon them. 5. Melberg, on the Elbe, where John-Frederick the Elector was discomfited and taken prisoner by Charles the fifth, and by him deprived not long after of his Estate and Dignity. 6. Meissen, on the West-side of the same River, in a hilly and uneven ground, built by the Emperour Henry the first for defence of the Empire against the Slaves: a Bishops See, and the first Seat of the Marquesses of this Country, both which, together with the Burggrave of the Town, had their Palaces or Mansion-houses standing close together on the top of a Hill overlooking both the Town and Country. From this Town the whole Province had the name of Meissen. 7. Friberg, near the Mountains of Bohemia, rich in Mines of Silver. 8. Roelitz, not far from which are rich mines of Tin, discovered first in their parts by a Cornish-man spoken of before.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the Hermanians and Suabones, subdued or outed by the Sorabi, a great Tribe of the Slaves furnished Winthil: first conquered by the Emperour Henry the first, who built the strong Town of Meissen to keep them under, and to impede the neighbouring Slaves from any incroachments on the Empire. Being thus added to the Empire and account of Germany, it was a while governed by such Officers as by the Emperours were appointed to guard these Marches: the first proprietary Marquess being one Eckard, Son of the Earl of Osfnach, (descended from a younger Son of Wittikind, the last King of the Saxons) by the munificence of Otto the third, nor made hereditary till the time of Henry the fifth, who gave it in Fee to Conrad Marquess of Landsberg and Lusitia, whose Nephew Theoderich by his Son Otto, furnished the Rich, married Judith, Daughter of Herman Landgrave of Duringen; by which match Du-

gen accrued to the House of Meissen, Henry their Son succeeding in both Estates. To this Henry succeeded Albert his Son, and after him successively four Fredericks; the last whereof, on the fallure of the House of Anhalt, was made Duke by the Emperour Sigismund created Elector and Duke of Wassena, either because descended from the House of Wassena, or as most able to pay for the Investiture, or else to sustain the Estate and Dignity of a Duke-Elector, which had but weakly been supported by the former Family. In his posterity they all nor always in the possession yet continue; but neither all nor always in the possession of the Dukes-Electors. For in the Partage made between Ernestus and Albert, the Sons of Frederick (according to the ill custom of Germany) this Country, or the greatest part of it, was assigned to Albert, succeeded in the same by George and Henry His two Sons: which Henry was Father of that Maurice, who, being seized and confirmed herein by the Duke John-Frederick, did after most unworthily take up Arms against him, supplanting him, and finally possessed himself of this whole Electorate; of which more anon.

3. VOITLAND is bound on the East with Bohemia on the West with Frankenland on the North with Misnia or Meissen, on the South with the Upper Palatinat. So called, as some say, from the Voites or Vites, (some of that People, who together with the Saxons and Angles, conquered Britain) to whom it had the name of Vitland, that is to say, the Land or Country of the Vites. But being I find not that this name was given it by the Slaves, who finding it deserted, or but thinly peopled, at their coming thither, might call it by the name of Voiland; from which the alteration unto Voiland is both plain and obvious. It is the smallest Province of all Germany, and never of such repute as to have any particular Prince, as most others had; but always reckoned as an accessory to some greater Estate. Nor hath any Town of Cities of great estimation: the chief of those which are, being 1. Osfnitz, 2. Woritz, 3. Cornab, 4. Schnenberg, near the Mountains called Sudati by Ptolemy, famed for Silver-Mines. 5. Gutzberg, 6. Culmbach, and 7. Hoff, not much remarkable, but only for the Princes of it of the House of Brandenburg; called formerly Curia Pegnana.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were parts of the Nerretates and Dandati, succeeded to by the French and Slaves; as they severally defended Southwards into warmer Countries. Possessed and planted by the Slaves it obtained this name. But being a small Nation and a small Estate, it never had the honour of a particular Prince; but did most probably belong to the Lords of Meissen, upon which it bordereth, and now, in their right, to the Duke of Saxony. But so that the Duke of Saxony is not the sole Lord hereof: the Marquesses of Osfnach of the House of Brandenburg possessing the Towns of Hoff and Culmbach, and some other part of it: the Patrimony at present of Christian, Son of Joachim-Ernest the late Marquess of Osfnach, who now enjoyeth them, with the Title of Marquess of Culmbach.

4. THURINGIA is bounded on the East with Misnia and the River Sala, on the West with Hessia, on the North with the Wood Hartz, and the proper Saxony, on the South with the mountainous Forest of Duringenwald, by it parted from Frankenland: the Forest and the Country both so called from the Thuringians, the ancient Inhabitants hereof, communicating their name to the place they dwelt in.

The Country is environed round about with woody

Mountains, but within those Mountains plain and pleasant, fruitful in Corn, and very plentiful of Woods, which yield great profit to the people; not without some Mines of Gold and Silver, and rich pits of Salt; able to furnish out a Feast, but for wine only, which is the greatest want hereof. The whole length of it is not above 120 miles, and the breadth no more; yet is it so populous and well planted, that there are said to be in it 12 Barons, and as many Abbies, 144 Cities, and as many Market-Towns, 150 Castles, and 2000 Villages.

The principal of these are 1. Jene, on the River Sala, bordering upon Misnia, an University chiefly of Physicians, founded in the year 1555 by the Sons of John-Frederick the Elector, taken Prisoner and deprived by Charles the fifth. 2. Erfurt, on the River Gera, out of which are cut so many Chancels, that every Street almost hath the benefit of it. A rich populous, and well-built City, accounted amongst the best of Germany, and made an University in the time of the Emperour Venceslaus, Anno 1382. Many times burnt, but still reviving, as it Phoenix out of the Ashes, into greater glory. It was at first immediately subject to the Archbishops and Electors of Mentz, the first Founders of it, as being built by William, Son of the Emperour Orto the first, and then Archbishop of that City, of whom more anon: but having freed themselves from him, they have since governed themselves as a Free Estate, and are one of the Hanse-Towns, not subject to the Duke of Saxony as their Lord, but their Patron and good Neighbour only. 3. Mulden, and 4. Northen, two Imperial Cities, but else not observable. 5. Smalcald, famous for the League here made Anno 1550, between all the Princes and Cities which maintained the Doctrine of Luther, for defence thereof, and of one another in the pursuance of that work: by which famous Confederacy Luther not only kept his head on his shoulders, but the Religion by him reformed grew to that strength, that no force or policy could ever root it up. 6. Kella, or Hale, on the River Falza, of great repute for the exceeding quantity of Salt there made, and vendid in other places, at which Town Philip the Landgrave was treacherously taken Prisoner, as you shall hear anon. 7. Weymar, a Town which, together with the Castle of Gotha, were assigned for the Estate and maintenance of that religious, though unfortunate, Prince John-Frederick Duke of Saxony, after his Disfigurement and Imprisonment by Charles the 5. the ordinary Seat of the Dukes of Saxony Weymar, who live here in a barely and magnificent Castle made of polished Stone, most artificially contrived, and beautified with Orchards, Gardens, and other pleasures; but made more pleasant by the watering of the River Ima, upon which it standeth. 8. Gutha, upon the River Un, said by Rathemarus to be built by the Gothi, and by them thus named. A place not long since of great importance, and fortified with a very strong Castle, called Grummestein, that being made the Retiring-place of one Grummebach and other seditious persons under the Protection of John-Frederick, one of the Sons of the deprived Electors. It was taken after a long Siege by Augustus the Elector of Saxony, (to whom the strength of this piece being in the hands of the injured Family was a great Eye-sore) and by the command of the Estates of the Empire at the Diet at Regensburg, Anno 1567, demolished, and levelled with the ground.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Chosruis of Tritius, and after them the Thuringi, who, with the Herni, under the Conduct of Odaccer, conquered Italy, called by some Tercenting, by others supposed to be the Tirangeta of Ptolemy. Not heard of in this Country till the Reign of Childerick the fourth King of the French; then

Archbishop hereof was also by his procurement made the Primate of Germany, acknowledged to by all but the Bishop of Salzburg and the three Spiritual Electors. By the Administration of Justice in matters Criminal and Civil, the said Ordo did ordain an Officer, whom they called the Burggrave, conferring that Office first on Gero Marquis of Lutetia. Through many hands it came at last to Burchard Lord of Quernfort, and the Earls of Manfield, many of which enjoyed this Honour, settled at last by the Emperor Rudolph of Habsburg on the Dukes of Saxony, who by this means came to have great command and influence on the whole Estate. The Archbishops notwithstanding continued Lords of it, and the whole Territory or District adjoining to it, till the Reformation of Religion; when the Reverends, separated from the Jurisdiction, were given to Lay-Princes, (for the most part of the House of Brandenburg) with the Title of Administrator. Finally by the Pacification made at Munster, this fair Estate is to be settled for ever on the Electors of that House, to be possessed by them, and their Heirs and Successors, by the Title of the Dukes of Magdeburg, the better to content them for the Concession which they made to the Crown of Sweden of a great part of their right and Title to the Dukedom of Pomerania.

4. On the North-west of Magdeburg, and on both sides also of the Elbe, lieth the Dukedom of LAWENBURG, bounded on the North with Mecklenburg, on the West with part of Holftein, and on the South with the River Elbe and part of Lauenburg; so called of Lauenburg the chief Town thereof, and the seat of the Dukes. The Town was first built, as some conceive, by Henry Duke of Saxony, furnished the Lion, the better to assure his Conquests on that side of the River, by whom it was called Leopold, or Leoburgum, and Lauenburg for the same reasons by the Dutch or German: on the Proscription of which Prince, the Country being wasted and the Towns destroyed, Bernhard of Anhalt designed his Successor in the Dukedom of Saxony, liking the situation of it, caused it to be re-edified in stronger manner than before, a great part of the materials of the Town of Erdenburg being carried cross the Water to enlarge this place. Afterwards being razed by the said Duke Henry in the course of that War it was re-built again by D. Bernhard, the new Elector, who is therefore by some Writers made the Founder of it. Other places of note herein are, 1. Erdenburg a well-fortified place, opposite to Lauenburg, on the higher side of the Elbe; not so large now as heretofore, the Town of Lauenburg being made greater by the lessening of this. 2. Raczburg, an Episcopal See, founded here by Duke Henry furnished the Lion, upon his gaining of the Slaves to the Christian Faith, and of late times the Sepulchre of this Ducal Family. 4. Molne, on the farther side of the Elb, not far from Lauenburg, the cause of much Contentions betwixt the Dukes hereof, and the Town of Hamburg, who pretend a Title thereto.

This Country, being for the most part under the Command of the Slaves, was from them conquered (together with the whole Country of Mecklenburg) by Duke Henry the Lion, and by his care converted to the Christian Faith; but he being proscribed, and this Scigniority extorted from him by Duke Bernhard of Anhalt, his Successor in the Electoral Dignity, it was by Albert, Son of this Bernhard, conferred on John his second Son, from whom the Dukes of Saxony, commonly called Dukes of Saxon Lawenburg, do derive themselves, who being pretermitted by the Emperor Sigismund at the death of Albert the 3. the last of the direct Line of Bernard, or else not caring for a Title which carried with it too great Sail for so small a Vessel as the Estate of the Elector at the present was, have since contented the themselves with their ancient Patrimony. It is now time we should proceed to the Story of Saxony, the ancient Inhabitants of which Tract were the Langobardi or Lombards of Magdeburg, and part of the Cherischi about Mansfeld and Wittenberg. Overcome by the prevailing Saxons, they became part of their name and Country, which in the full extent thereof was once far greater than now it is, containing all the Countries between the Rhene and the River Eyder in the Cimbrick Cherischi, and from the River Sala to the German and Baltick Oceans. These are said by some to be a People of Asia, and there called the Sace, who, finding that small Territory (now a part of Tartaria) too narrow for them, forsook their Country, and at last fixed themselves in the Cimbrick Cherischi, where they first took the names of Sacifins (or Sac-fons) that is to say, the Sons of the Sata. The improbability of this we have there disputed. Observe therefore that and the like Originations of them, I conceive them (for my part) to be natural German, some Tribe of that most populous and potent People of the Suevi: but for the reason of the name, let every man enjoy the pleasure of his own opinion. Certain I am that in Ptolemy's time they were possessed of those parts beyond the Elb, and thence extended to the Eyder, part of which Tract is now known by the name of Holftein, and were accounted in that time to be no New-comers. Afterwards, as they grew in number, they enlarged their quarters, and passing over the Elb, in the time of the latter Roman Emperours, possessed themselves of the void places which were left by the French, then busied in the Conquest of more fruitful Countries; communicating their name to all the Nations which they overcame, as the French had formerly done before them. So that in time they stretch themselves from the River Sala on the East, to the German Ocean on the West, and took up the two Dukedoms of Holftein, Lunenburg, and Brunswick, the Bishopsricks of Bremen, Verden, Hildesheim, Hallerstadt, and Magdeburg, the Marches of Brandenburg, the Land of Mansfeld, Westphalen, both Friesland, Oost-Tijl, with as much of Gelderland and Holland as lay on that side of the Rhene. By which account the present Electoral Family hath not one foot of the old Saxony in their possession; the Seat and Patrimony of the Electors being removed into other Countries, upon the Alterations and Changes which have happened in that Estate, the name and Title of Saxony being given to the Country about Wittenberg, for no other reason but because it was the chief Seat of the Dukes-Electors. But to proceed, a stout and valiant Nation questionless they were, the Conquerors of the Isle of Britain; and the last People of the German which yielded up their Country unto Charles the Great, by his means gained unto the Gospel Ann 785. Their last King was called Wittkindus, from whom descend the Kings of France, since the time of Hug Capet, the present Kings of Denmark, of the house of Oldenburg, the Dukes of Burgundy and Savoy, the Marquises of Montferrat, besides many other noble and illustrious Families though of lesser note. The right or direct Line of the Male-issue of Wittkind (whom Charles the Great created, of a King, the first Duke of Saxony) terminating in the person of Orto the third, Emperour of Lunenburg, it was by him conferred on Bernard Lord of Guinea, (but the precise time I find not:) Henry, furnished the Saint, who succeeded this Orto in the Empire, the next in the collateral Line, being pretermitted, either because at that time settled in the great Dukedom of Bavaria, or because there was no hope of Posterity by him, or for some other private grudge, which I read by him. And it continued in this Line till, on the Fortnight of Henry the Lion, it was bestowed by Frederick Barbarossa upon Bernard of Anhalt, Ann 1180, whose Issue in the right Line failing, it was finally cleft by the Emperour Sigismund on Frederick Langrave of Thuringia and Marquis of Misna, Ann 1423. In his Family it hath since continued, but not without a manifest breach in the course of the Succession; which happened when John-Frederick his being deprived of the Electoral Dignity and Estate, his Cousin Duke Maurice was invested in them by Charles the fifth. For that religious, but unfortunate, Prince (if he may justly have the Title of unfortunate) who suffered in so good a Cause, for so good a Conscience) being discomfited and taken prisoner at the Battle of Mulberg before mentioned, was the next day condemned to die; but pardoned at the last, upon the intercession of some powerful Friends, upon condition that he should resign the Electoral Dignity, and all the rest of his Estates, into the power of the Emperour: Which done, the Emperour gave him back again of his own accord the Castle of Gutha and the Town of Weymar, with all the Lands and Territories thereunto adjoining, from which last place his Posterity are now called Dukes of Saxon-Weymar. It was also much insisted on, that he should relinquish his Religion, and reconcile himself to the Church of Rome; but thereto he opposed. These matters being thus transacted, the Emperour (with the general consent of the Electors) invested Maurice, Cousin-german to the Duke deprived, in the Electoral dignity, and all the Lands, Honours and Estates (the Signiories of Gutha and Weymar excepted only) which formerly had belonged to him: which though it were a great wrong both to the Person and Posterity of the Duke John-Frederick, yet it is observed by some grave Writers to have fallen out not unhappily for the advancement of the Reformation then contended for. 1. In regard of John-Frederick, whose Christian Patience and Magnanimity during the whole time of his Imprisonment added great reputation to the Cause for which he suffered. 2. In respect of Duke Maurice, who was a man of far greater parts to advance the work and every way as zealous in pursuing of it as the other was. And 3. in relation to the Children of the deprived Duke, men not to be relied on in a matter of such weight and moment; inasmuch as it was said of him after his decease, Quid Vilis reliquerit sui dissimilioris. It is now time we should proceed to the Investiture of the new Elector. And, because these Transactions of State be not ordinary, I will briefly relate the Cerimonies thereto used as I have collected them out of Slidan. There were at Wittenberg Scaffolds erected, on which fate the Emperour and the Princes Electors in their Robes. On the back-side of the State were placed the Trumpeters; right against it standeth Duke Maurice with two bands of Horsemen. The first in a full career run their Horses up to the Pavillion: out of the second issued Henry Duke of Brunswick, Wolfgang Prince of Bipont, and Albert Duke of Bavaria. These, when they had in like manner coursed their Horses about, alighted, ascended to the Throne, and humbly requested the Emperour, that for the common good he would advance Duke Maurice to the Electorship. He consulted with the Electors, made answer by the Bishop of Mentz, that he was content, so Duke Maurice would in person come and desire it. Then came forth Duke Maurice with the whole Troop: before him were born ten Ensigns bearing the Arms of as many Regions wherein he desired to be invested. When he came before the Throne, he kneeled down on his knees, and humbly desired the Emperour to bestow on him the Electorship of Saxony, and all the Lands of John-Frederick, late Elector. His Petition was granted.

Then the Bishop of Mentz, read unto him the Oath by which the Electors are bound unto the Empire: which Oath when Duke Maurice had taken, the Emperour delivered unto him a Sword, which was a sign of his perfect Investiture. Duke Maurice, now the Elector of Saxony, arose, gave the Emperour thanks, promised his Fidelity, made Obedience, and took his place among the Electors. This Solemnity was on the 24. day of Febr. Ann 1548. Which fact, we now proceed unto the Catalogue of

The Dukes of SAXONY.

- 785 1. Wittkind, the last King of the Saxons, vanquished, and created the first Duke by Charles the Great.
- 825 2. Bruno, the Brother of Wittkind.
- 843 3. Luitpluf, Son of Bruno.
- 855 4. Bruno II. Son of Luitpluf.
- 876 5. Orto, Brother of Bruno the second.
- 916 6. Henry, furnished the Fowler, Son of Orto, Emperour of the Romans and King of Germany.
- 937 7. Orto II. Duke of Saxony, and Emperour, called Orto I.
- 974 8. Orto III. Duke of Saxony, and Emperour, called Orto II.
- 284 9. Orto IV. Duke of Saxony, and Emperour, called Orto III.
- 1021 10. Bernard, Lord of Lunenburg, created Duke of Saxony, and the first Elector, by Orto the third, who was the last Duke of the Race of Wittkind.
- 1062 11. Bernard II. Son of Bernard the first.
- 1062 12. Oradolph, Son of Bernard the 2.
- 1073 13. Magnus, Son of Oradolph, who taking part with Rodolphus of Schwaben against Henry the fourth, was taken Prisoner and deprived.
14. Lotharius, Earl of Quernfort, created Duke of Saxony by Henry the fourth. He was also Emperour of the Romans.
- 1125 15. Henry Guelph, furnished the Proud, Duke of Bavaria the Husband of Gerrade, Daughter of Lotharius, by whom he was created Duke-Elector.
- 1139 16. Henry II. furnished the Lion, Duke of Saxony and Bavaria, Son of Henry the Proud by his first Wife Waldis, the Daughter of Magnus, added to this Estate the Countries of Mecklenburg and Lauenburg, which he had conquered from the Slaves, becoming by that means so great, that neglecting his Duty to the Emperour Frederick, furnished Barbarossa, and siding with the Pope against him, he was by him publicly proscribed, his neighbour Princes armed against him, and by their joint Forces out of all his Estates, every one laying hold on that which lay nearest to him, by means whereof this great Estate being parcelled and divided into many parts, the Title of the Duke-Elector of Saxony was given by the said Emperour to
- 1180 17. Bernard of Anhalt, Son of Albert Marquis of Brandenburg and Grandchild of Elieca, another Daughte of Duke Magnus: to whom for his Seat and Habitation, the Emperour gave the City of Wittenberg, the Head since that time of this Electorate.
- 1212 18. Albert, Son of Bernard, from whom the Dukes of Lauenburg do derive their Pedigree,

- 1273 19. Albert II. Son of Albert the first.
 1317 20. Rodolph, Son of Albert the 2.
 1356 21. Rodolph II. Son of Rodolph the first.
 1374 22. Wenceslaus, Son of Rodolph the 2.
 1389 23. Frederick III. Son of Wenceslaus.
 1419 24. Albert III. Son of Rodolph the third, the last Elector of Saxony of the House of Anhalt.
 1423 25. Frederick, Landgrave of Duringen, and Marquess of Misnia, (on the falling of the House of Anhalt, Anno 1423) created Duke of Saxony by the Emperor Sigismund, the House of Lauenberg permitted for want of putting in their Claim: by the advancement of which Prince, the Title of the Duke of Saxony, returned again to the House of Witt-kind, (the first King and last Duke heretofore) after it had been alienated into other Families for the space of 200 years.
 1428 26. Frederick II. Son of Frederick the first.
 1464 27. Ernest, Son of Frederick the second.
 1486 28. Frederick III. Son of Ernest.
 1525 29. John, Brother to Frederick the third.
 1532 30. John Frederick, Son of John the first; a great advancer of the Reformation of Religion, imprisoned and deprived of his Electorship by Charles the fifth.
 1547 31. Maurice, Cousin-german to the Duke John Frederick, (as being the Grandson of Nepheuw of Albert, the younger Brother of Ernestus the Duke Elector (created Duke Elector by Charles the fifth, whom afterwards he drove out of Germany; and was slain in the Battle of Musfelden, against Marquess Albert of Brandenburg.
 1553 32. Augustus, Brother of Maurice.
 1586 33. Christian, Son of Augustus.
 34. Christian II. Son of Christian the first.
 35. John George, Brother of Christian the second, who first sided with the Emperor Ferdinand the second against the Elector Palatine, and after with the King of Sweden against the Emperor.

The Revenues of this Duke are thought to be the greatest of any one Prince of Germany, (the Imperial Family excepted) amounting in the least to 400000 l. per annum; though in multitude of Vassals and greatness of Territory he come short of some of them. And to make up this (some or perhaps a greater) it is conceived that the profit which ariseth to him out of Silver-mines is no less than 130000 yearly; the Impost laid on Beer in Leipsick only, a City but of two Parish-Churches, (by which conjecture at the rest) being farmed at 20000 l. per annum. Then hath he the Tenth of all sort of Increase, as of Corn, Wine, &c. The Salt houses at Hall and some other places, very fair lands belonging unto his Domain; and besides this a standing and perpetual Tax laid upon the Subject towards the maintenance of the War against the Turks, granted at first in times of Danger and hostility, but gathered ever since in the times of Peace (as to that Enemy) under colour of being ready and prepared against him. According to the quantity of his Intrado he keeps his State, well served, and better attended than any other of the Electors: there being at one time in the Court of Christian, the Father of the present Duke, three Dukes, three Earls, and five Barons of other Nations, (besides the Nobility of his own) all Pensioners and Servants to him; one of the Princes of Anhalt and one of the Earles of Mansfield, both Homagers unto the Saxons, being two of the number.

The Arms of Saxony, are Barre-wise of six pieces Sable and Or, a Bend floured Verr. Which Bend was added to the Coat by the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, when he confirmed Bernard of Anhalt in this Dukedom, for Bernard desiring of the Emperor to have some difference added to the Ducal Coat, (being before only Barry Sable and Or) to distinguish him and his Successors from those of the former House; the Emperor took a Charlet of Rue, which he had then upon his head, and threw it cross his Buckler or Escutcheon of Arms, which was presently painted on the same.

19. BRUNSWICK, and 20. LUNENBURG.

THE Dukedom of BRUNSWICK and LUNENBURG, being both originally taken out of this great Dukedom of Saxony extracted both from the same Root, and many times united in the person of the same one Prince, shall be joined together in the Story, though severed in the Chorography or description of them; bounded on the East with Magdeburg and Mansfield in the upper Saxony, on the West with Westphalia, on the North with Denmark, on the South with Hassia. The Air in all parts heretofore is very cold and comfortable, but found and healthful: the Soil towards the old Marches of Brandenburg but meanly fertile, towards Duringen and Hassia mountainous and woody, in other parts very plentiful of Corn, and well provided also of such other Commodities as usually do grow in those colder Climates.

But to take the Chorography of them severally, BRUNSWICK is bounded on the East with the Earldom of Mansfield, on the West with Westphalia, on the North with Lunenbourg, on the South with Hesse. So called from Brunswick the chief City, and the Head of this Dukedom.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Goslar, upon the River Gase, whence it had the name; of a poor Village made a City by Henry the first, much beautified and enlarged by Henry the third, who founded here two Churches and a stately Palace; now one of the Imperial Cities. 2. Helmsfat, in the middle way betwixt Brunswick and Magdeburg, first fortified by Charles Son of Charles the Great, for a Bridge to the neighboring Slaves; and being after given to the Abbots of Verden, was by them sold to William the Duke of Brunswick. 3. Quadenburg, built also by Henry the first, much increased since by the neighbourhood of a very rich Nunnery, the Abbess whereof had formerly the Privileges of a Prince of the Empire. 4. Hildesheim, an ancient City, honoured with an Episcopal See by Charles the Great as the first conversion of the Saxons. 5. Gruenbagen, which gave Title to a younger branch of the House of Brunswick; a Principality, and a Member of the Empire. 6. Hannover, on the River Lein, well built, very strongly fortified, and not meanly traded. 7. Brunswick, upon the River Onacra, which passeth through it, passed over by many handsome Bridges; the Metropolis of the ancient Saxony, and at this time the chief of this Dukedom, though of it felt Imperial, and one of the Hanse. The City is of a quadrangular form seated in the midst of a plain very fruitful of Corn, in compass about two Dutch, or eight English miles, somewhat larger than Nuremberg, and less than Erfort; containing in that compass not above twelve Churches whereof two have Steeples covered with Lead, a third with Bricks, all the rest with Tile. It is rich, populous, and strongly fortified, on some sides with a double, on others with a treble Wall; within which walls are five Cities, distinguished by Privileges, but united by Laws. The whole first built by Brumo, Son to Ludolph Duke

Duke of Saxony, and Uncle to the Emperor Henry the first, about the year 861; from whence it had the name of Brunswick, or Brunens Vicus, by the more elegant Latinists Brunopolis. 8. Hamelen, on the East-side of the Weiser or Weser, encompassed with a deep Moat, (occasioned by a stream cut out of the River) round about which are divers Fortifications, and planted with Ordinance. Nigh unto this Town is the Mountain called also Hamelen, unto which the Pyd Piper (as they call him) led the Children of Halberstadt, where they all sunk, and were never more seen. But of this Story more hereafter, when we come to Transylvania, or Wolfsenbuttel, where the Duke doth keep his Court. For though Brunswick giveth him his Title, yet will it not yield him any Obedience, but reputeth it self amongst the Hanse Towns; for which cause there have been great Wars between the Dukes and the Citizens. 10. Halberstadt, a Bishop's See, the late Bishop (or Administrator of the Bishopric) being Christian Duke of Brunswick, that noble young Soldier, who had yowed his life and fortune to the service of Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, his Cousin-german; created by King James one of the Knights of the Garter. A Bishopric of great Revenue, and a very large Territory, since the alteration of Religion, given with the Title of Administrator to the Sons of Brunswick; but now, by the Conclusions at Munster, assigned over to the Elector of Brandenburg, with the Title of Prince of Halberstadt, the Family of Brunswick being to be recompensed with an alternate Succession in the Bishopric of Osnabrugge, and some other additions. 11. Hersfeld, the Seat sometimes of the old Palatines of Saxony, but not else observable. 12. Amelungsbame, another Town of the said Palatines, by one of which, called Sigefridus, it was beautified with a very fair Abbey; the principal Towns (in those days) of this Palatinate, which, bordering on that part of the Thuringians which is now called Hassia, was taken in by Herman, one of the Landgraves of that Country, on the Persecution of Duke Henry named the Lion; but on the failure of his Line, recovered for the most part by the Dukes of Brunswick, the right Heirs of Henry.

The Dukedom of LUNENBURG hath on the East the Diocese of Magdeburg, on the West the Diocese of Bremen and part of Westphalia, on the North the Elbe, and on the South the Dukedom of Brunswick. So called from Lunenbourg the chief City, once the Seat of the Dukes.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Lunenbourg it self, situate on the River Elmenaw, an Imperial City, and one of the principal of the Hanse; so called from the Moon here worshipped in the times of Idolatry. Of a round form it is, and seated in a pleasant Valley, but with Mountains near it: on one of which, called Calberg, is a very strong Castle, of right belonging to the Duke, but in the power of the Citizens, who without this Fort could not be masters of their Liberties. The walls about it are of Earth, high and broad, and the Ditches deep: the Buildings generally fair, (for the most part of brick) the chief whereof is the Common-Council-House; the Streets broad and long, with two spacious Market-places, but of no very pleasing smell: the whole about a mile and an half in length, half a mile in breadth, containing six Parish-Churches. But the thing most considerable in it is the Fountain of Salt, the greatest riches of this City) and the House in which the Salt is boiled, containing 52 Rooms, and in each Room 8 Leadens Pans, in which are boiled daily 8 Tuns of Salt, every Tun being sold for 8 Flemish shillings, bought by the Hamburgers, Lubeckers, and other Merchants; some part of the profits of it belonging to the Duke, some to the City, the rest to the Adventurers who employ their Stocks on it. 2. Celle, the Seat of the Duke of Lunenbourg. 3. Gethern, of no great signes or estimation, but for a strong Castle of the Dukes. 4. Oldendorf, situate betwixt the Fenaw and the River Elbe, memorable for the great Battle fought near unto it, Anno 1633, betwixt the Imperialists and the Swedes, the honour and benefit whereof fell unto the Swedes, who killed upon the place 5000 of the Enemy, besides such as were found dead in the fields and high-ways, all covered over with dead bodies, took 1500 of them prisoners, and got into their hands 13 pieces of Ordinance, good store of Ammunition, and three Mules laden with Silver for the pay of the Army: the reputation of this Victory drawing in Hamelen and other places of importance which stood out before. 5. Verden, an Episcopal See, but made a Lay-see, as most other Bishoprics amongst the Lutherans; the Profits thereof being received commonly by a Son of Denmark with the Title of Administrator, and lastly, by the Treaty of Munster appropriated for ever to the Crown of Sweden, the Kings whereof to be entailed Dukes of Verden, 6. Rodenburg, the chief Seat of the Bishops of Verden.

The ancient Inhabitants of these Dukedom were the Dugubini of Tacitus, with some parts of the Chancis and Chersini: the last of most fame for the Blow they gave to Quintilius Varus, Lieutenant in Germany after Drusus for Augustus Caesar, who, behaving himself with great Insolency towards the Natives, was set upon by these Chersini and their Confederates, under the Conduct of Arminius, a great Prince amongst them; himself slain, and his whole Army, consisting of three Legions, miserably cut off and desperately used: which Loss, and the Shame thereof, so distracted the Emperor, (not formerly accustomed to the like Misfortunes) that he was many times obliged to tear his Beard, knock his Head against the Posts and cry out in the bitterness of his Passion, Redde mihi Legiones, Quintili Varus. Having long time after this maintained their Liberty, (for the Romans kept themselves from that time forwards on the French side of the Rhene) they were at last subdued by the Saxons, continuing part of that great Dukedom till the time of the 3 Othos, Emperours of the Romans and Dukes of Saxony; who, looking on the Empire as a State of Inheritance, diminished both the Grandeur and Revenue of their ancient Patrimony, partly by the Donation or Endowment of many Bishoprics, and partly by the creation of many petty Seigniorities to be hidden under them as chief Lords of all. Amongst which that of Lunenbourg was none of the least, continuing as a State distinct, till such time as Bernard Lord of Lunenbourg was by the Emperor Otho the third made Duke of Saxony, and created the first Duke-Elector, whereby again it was united to the rest of that Dukedom, the greatest part whereof he held in his actual possession, together with a Superiourity or Jurisdiction over all the residue, (the great Bishoprics excepted only) which had been parcelled out, as before is said; and it continued thus united till the Proscription of Henry, firmament the Lion, spoken of before, whose Reconciliation being made by means of Henry the second of England, whole Daughter Maud he had formerly married, the Emperor Barbarossa restored to him again the Cities of Brunswick and Lunenbourg, with their several Territories, of which his two Sons Henry and William were first created Earls, then Dukes, the one of Brunswick, and the other of Lunenbourg, by the Emperor Frederick the second. Which Honours and Estates do still remain unto their Posterity. Before I come to the Successions of these Princes, I shall leave to speak of the Original of the Guelphian Family, Dukes at the same time of Bavaria and Saxony; of which they are at this time the sole remainder. A Family derived from one Guelphus, (whence it had the name) the Son of Ifenberdu, Earl of Altorf in Schwaben; whose Wife, called fermintrudis, having accused a poor woman of Adultery and caused her to be grievously punished for having 12 Children at a Birth, was afterwards delivered of the like number, and all of them Sons. Her Husband being absent at the time of her Delivery, the Commanded the Nurse to kill a 11 of them; fearing, it seems, the like shame and punishment as by her infatigation was inflicted on the other Woman. The Nurse going to perform this ungodly command was met by the old Earl then returning homewards; who asked her what she had in her Apron. She made answer, Whelps. He desired to see them: she denied him. Angry at this refusal, he opened her Apron, and there found eleven of his own Sons, pretty sweet Babes, and of most promising Countenances. Examining the matter, he found out the truth, and joining the old Trot to be secret in it, he put the Children out to Nurse. Six years expired, the Earl invited to a Feast most of his own and his Ladies Kindred, and attiring the young Boys all alike, presented them unto their Mother, who suspecting, by the number of them, what the matter was, confessed her offence, is pardoned by the good old Earl, and carefully educates her children: whom the Father commanded to be called by the name of Guelphs, alluding to the Whelps or Puppies which the Nurse told him she had in her Apron. From the eldest of these Guelphs or Guelphs succeeded that Henry-Guelph, Son of Robert Earl of Altorf, whom Conrade the second made Duke of Bavaria; many of whose posterity enjoyed that Dukedom: increased at last by the addition of the Dukedom of Saxony; in the person of Duke Henry firmated the Proud, Father of Henry called the Lion, and Grandfather of Henry and William the first Dukes of Brunswick and Lunenburg, whose Succession followeth in this Order.

- 1567 10. William III. eldest Son of Philip, succeeded in one moiety of the Estate, and resided at Cassels, the other moiety being divided betwixt his Brethren, Ludowick of Marburg, and George of Darmstadt, Father of Ludowick of Darmstadt before mentioned.
- 1590 11. Maurice, eldest Son of William the third.
12. William IV. Son of Maurice, now living, 1648.

The Arms of these Langtraves are Azure, a Lion Barry of eight pieces, Argent and Gules crowned Or, which being properly and originally the Arms of the ancient Dukes of Franconia, were given by Conradus Sadius, Duke of Franconia, and Emperor to Lewis of Orleans at such time as he invested him in the Langtravedom of Thuringia: on the expiration of whose line they were challenged and born by the Langtraves of Hassia, as the direct Heirs of Lewis the 6. and his Brother Henry, the last male Princes of that House.

21. WESTPHALIA.

WESTPHALIA is bounded on the East with Hassia, Branswick, and part of Lunenburgh, on the West with the Bishoppick of Colen, Cleve, Over-Tyffel, West and East-Friesland, and the German Ocean; on the North with the Elb, and the Dukedom of Holstein; and on the South with Westervaria, and some part of Hassia.

It was thus called of the Westphali, a Tribe or Division of the Saxons, distinguished heretofore into the Transalbinos, inhabiting beyond the Elb or Albis, in the County of Holstein, now a part of Denmark, the Ostphali, betwixt the Elb, the Ocean, with the River of Sala and the Wefer, taking up the Bishoppicks of Breme, Virden, Hildesheim, Halberstadt and Meydelburg, with the Dukedoms of Lunenburgh and Branswick; the Angriwarians, taking up the North-west part of the modern Westphalen, betwixt the Bishoppick of Breme and the Earldom of Oldenburg; and finally, the Westphali or Western Saxons, inhabiting the rest of the modern Westphalen with the Earldoms of Mark, Berg, Zippen, the Seignioury of Over-Tyffel, and some parts of Gelderland and Holland. But the Saxons being subjugated by the power of the French, and several new Estates created out of that old Stock, the remnant of the Westphali and Angriwarians (the Bishoppick of Breme being added unto the account) were comprehend and united in the name of WESTPHALIA.

The Soil according to the several parts of it, is of different natures: the parts adjoining to the Wefer being defart and barren; those towards the Earldoms of Mark and Bergen mountainous and full of Woods; the Bishoppick of Breme, except towards the Elb, full of dry Sands Heaths and unfruitful Thickets, like the wide parts of Windfor Forreft betwixt Stanes and Fernham. In other parts it is exceeding plentiful of Corn, and of excellent Pasturage; stored with great plenty of wild Fruits, and (by reason of the many Woods) abundance of Acorns; with infinite Herds of Swine (which they breed up with those natural helps) of so good a relish, that a Gamon of Westphale Bacon is reckoned for a principal Dish at a great man's Table.

The old Inhabitants heretofore were the Chauci majores about Breme; the Chamavi, Angriwarii and Bructri, inhabiting about Manfter, Ofsnabrug, and so towards the Land of Colen; and part of the Chefrici (before spoken of) taking up those parts which lie nearest unto Brinswick and Lunenburgh. All of them were vanquished by Drusus the Son-in-Law of Augustus, but soon restored to their former Liberty by the great Overthrow given by the Chefrici and their Associates to Quintilius Varus. Afterwards united into one name with the French, they expelled the Romans out of Gaul, leaving their forsaken and ill inhabited Seats to be taken by the Saxons, with whom the remainders of them did incorporate themselves both in Name and Nation. Of that great Body it continued a considerable Member, (both when a Kingdom and a Dukedom) till the Proscription and Deprivation of Duke Henry the Lion: at what time the parts beyond the Wefer were usurped by Bernard Bishop of Paderborn; those betwixt the Wefer and the Rhene, by Philip Archbishop of Colen, whose Successors still hold the Title of Dukes of Westphalen: the Bishoppicks of Breme, Manfter, Paderborn and Minden, having been formerly endowed with goodly Territories, had some acorments also out of this Estate, every one catching hold of that which lay nearest to him. But not to make too many Subdivisions of it, we will divide it only into these two parts, viz. Westphalen specially so called, and 2. the Bishoppick of Breme.

1. In WESTPHALIA specially so called, which is that part heretofore which lieth next to Cleve, the place of most observation are, 1. Gefke a Town of good repute; 2. Brala a Village of great beauty; 3. Arnsberg and 4. Fredeborch, honoured with the Title of Prefectures. 5. Wadenborch; 6. Homburg, Lording it over fair and spacious Territories. All which with two Lordships and eight Prefectures, more dispersed from the Dukedom of Engern and County of Sarland, belonging unto the Bishoppick of Colen, the titular Duke of Westphalen, and really of Angriwaria, (Engern) as he styles himself: the Title and possession of Duke of Engern being acquired unto this See by Bruno Archbishop heretofore, Son of Henry the first, Emperour and King of Germany, firmated the Power, with the consent of Otho the first, his elder Brother. 7. Mountabour, (perhaps Mont-Tabor) seated in that part heretofore which is called Westermale; a Town of consequence, belonging to the Elector of Triers. 8. Rhem, 9. Schamlat, and 10. Beckem; reasonable good Towns; all of the Bishoppick of Manfter. 11. Manfter it self famous for the Treaty, and Conclusions made upon that Treaty for the peace of Germany seated upon the River Em, and so called from a Monastery here founded by Charles the great, which gave beginning to the Town; supposed to be that Mediolanum which Ptolemy placeth in this Tract. A beautiful and well fortified City, and the See of a Bishop, who is also the Temporal Lord of it famous for the woful Tragedies here acted by a lawless crue of Anabaptists, who chose themselves a King (that famous Tailor, John of Leyden) whom they called King of Sion, as they named the City New Jerusalem, proclaimed a Community both of Goods and Women, cut off the heads of all that opposed their doings; and, after many fanatic and desperate actions, were by the care and industry of the Bishop and his Confederates brought to condign punishment. The Story is to be seen at large in Sliden, Mr. Hooker's Preface, and some modern Pamphlets; wherein, as in a Mirror, we may plainly see the face of the present Times. 12. Ofsnabrug, first built, as Julius Cæsar says, by the Earls of Engern; but neither so ancient as the one, nor of so late a standing as the others make it. Here is an Episcopal See, founded by Charles the Great, who gave it all the Privileges of an University, liberally endowed at the first erection of the same, and since so well improved both in Power and Patrimony, that an alternate Succession in it by the Dukes of Brinswick, hath been concluded on in the Treaty of Manfter, as a fair Compensation for the Bishoppick of Halberstadt, (otherwise disposed of by that Treaty) of late enjoyed wholly by that Family. 13. Quadenburg on the River Hafe. 14. Warendorp, and 15. Wildenbusch; Towns of that Bishoppick. 16. Paderborn an Episcopal See also, founded by Charles the Great at the first Conversion of the Saxons, more ancient than strong, yet more strong than beautiful. 17. Ringelnsheim, and 18. Ofsnabrug; belonging to the Bishop of Paderborn. 19. Minden, upon the Wefer, another of the Episcopal Sees founded by Charles the Great, and by him liberally endowed with a goodly Patrimony: converted to Lay uses since the Reformation, under colour of Administration of the Goods of the Bishoppick, and now by the Conclusions at Manfter, settled for ever on the Electors of Brandenburg with the Title of Prince of Minden, to Kintlen, a strong Town, conveniently seated on the Wefer, not far from Minden, to the Bishop whereof it doth belong.

Hitherto one would think that Westphalen had formerly been a part of S. Peter's Patrimony, belonging wholly to the Clergy; but there are some Free Cities and Secular Princes which have shares therein. As 1. Warburg, a neat Town, but seated on an uneven piece of ground, near the River Dinnla; a Town which tradeth much in good Ale, brewed here, and sold in all parts of the Country: heretofore a County of it self under the Earls heretofore, now governed in the nature of a Free Estate, and reckoned an Imperial City. 2. Brakel, accounted of an Imperial also. 3. Hervorden, a Town of good strength and note governed by its own Laws and Magistrates, under the Protection of Colen. 4. Lemgo, belonging heretofore to the Earls of Lippe; but by them so well privileged and enfranchised, that now it governeth it self as a Free Estate. Here is also 5. the Town and County of Revenberg, belonging anciently to the Dukes of Cleve, and now in the Right of that House to the Elector of Brandenburg: as also 6. the Town and County of Lippe, lying on the West side of the Wefer; the Pedigree of the Earls whereof come fetch from that St. Marlin who defended the Roman Capital again the Gauls, (they might as well derive it from the Geese which preferred that Capital;) others with greater modesty look no higher for it than to the time of Charles the Great; one of the noble Families of the ancient Saxons. 7. Here also stands the Town and Castle of Arnsberg, commanding over a large and goodly Patrimony, thereto adjoining; which being much encreased by the accession of Sedan in the neighbouring Belgium, was by the Heir-general of this House conveyed in Marriage to Engelbert, the 9. Earl of Mark, whose second Son, called Eberhard, (but the only one he had by this Venter) succeeded in his Mother's Estates and Honour; which were kept undivided, till Eberhard, the 6. Lord thereof of the House of Mark, contenting himself with the Titles and Estates of Arnsberg, left Sedan and the pieces which belonged unto it to his younger Brother Robert. The great Grandchild of this Eberhard, called also Robert, created the first Earl of Arnsberg, left his Estates and Titles to his Sister Margaret, married to John Lord of Brabant, a person of great note and power in the Belgick Provinces, and faithful to the last in the Cause and Quarrel of King Philip the 2. in which finally he lost his life, Anno 1568, leaving both his Estates and Title unto Charles his Son, frequently mentioned by the name of Charles Earl of Arnsberg in the Stories of the Belgick Wars, in which he was no less considerable for his eminent Valour, than his singular Fidelity to his Lord and Master. Some other Lords and Earls here are, but these most considerable: all of them Homagers of the Empire, but their Acknowledgments heretofore little more than titular; though since in danger of performing more real Services; the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. after the Surprise of Polstein and some part of Denmark, Anno 1627, gaining fo far upon this Country, that had not the King of Sweden come in so seasonably, he had made himself absolute Master of it, and by the opportunity of the situation of it on the back of the Netherlands, forced the United States to some great Extremities. As for the Title of Duke of Westphalen and Engern, it hath been long used (as before was said) by the Bishops of Colen; as also (but with better Right as to that of Westphalen) by the House of Lunenburgh, descended from the ancient Electoral Family, writing themselves in that regard Dukes of Saxony, Westphalen, and Angriwaria or Engern.

2. The Bishoppick of BREME lieth on the other side of the Wefer, extending as far as to the Elb and the German Ocean. So called of 1. Breme, the principal City, seated on the Wefer, there broad and navigable; the City by that means well traded, populous and rich, beautified with fair and even Streets, and very strongly fortified against all Invasions both by Art and Nature, the Town being so seated amongst Fens, occasioned by the Over-flowings of the River, that it may be easily drowned on all sides, to keep off an Enemy; adorned also with a spacious market-place, a fair Council-house, and a large Cathedral, the See of the Archbishop, who is the Temporal Lord of the Town and Territory. Other Towns of special note are 2. Ofenbride, not far from Byeme, from whence great quantity of Linnen is brought yearly to England and other places. 3. Wruften, on the Wefer also. 4. Otterndorp, on the River Bolla, not far from the fall thereof into the Ocean. 5. Boxtebude, on the Elb, not far from Hamburg, but on the higher side of the water. 6. Stode, Stade, or Stadium, seated on the River Zwinge, near the fall thereof into the Elb; accounted the ancientest Town of all Saxony, and one of the first which was enrolled amongst the Haufe, and by special Privilege had the pre-emption of all the Rheinish Wine that passed by them, and the Right also of Coining money. But being over-topped by the Power and Trade of Hamburg, (5. Dutch miles from it) it grew at length so poor and in such decay, that their yearly Revenues came but to 90 l. per annum, so that they were fain to sell their Privileges to the Town of Hamburg, and put themselves under the Protection of the Bishop of Breme. It revived again upon the coming thither of the English Merchants, who finding some hard measure from the Hamburgers, fixed their Staple hereby means whereof the Citizens in short time grew exceeding wealthy, the Buildings fair and and beautiful, the Town strongly fortified. It is situate in a place to easily overwhelmed with water, that the people, in citation of their Strength and Security, used to have Ordinance of Stone planed over their Gates. But the late German Wars have made them fertile of their folly; when, notwithstanding their new Works, and an English Garrison under Sir Charles Morgan, they were compelled to submit themselves to the Earl of Tilly An. 1627, recovered after by the Swedes, in the course of their Victories.

As for the Bishoprick of Bremen it was first founded by Charles the Great, in the person of Willibrod an English Saxon, one of the first Preachers of the Gospel in these parts of this Country. The Town, before that time a poor Village only, being made an Archbishopric See, and the Metropolis of all the Churches of the North, quickly grew up into esteem, as the Bishop did in Power and Patrimony, till they became Lords of this Tract. It was governed since the Reformation of Religion by Lay-Bishops, or Administrators of the Rents of the Bishoprick, which under that Title they inverted to their proper use. And now of late, by the Conclusions made at Munster, is held as an Inheritance on the Crown of Sweden, to be enjoyed, together with the Bishoprick of Verden, by the Kings thereof, with the Title of Dukes of Bremen and Verden: the ancient Liberties of those Cities, formerly granted by their Bishops, being still preserved.

22. EAST-FRIESLAND.

EAST-FRIESLAND is bounded on the East with the River Weser, by it parted from Westphalen, on the West with the River Ems, which parteth it from Groeningen and the rest of West-Friesland, on the North with the German Ocean; and on the South with the Earldom of Marck, and part of Cleveland. So called from the Frisii, who, casting out the old Inhabitants, possessed themselves of it, and called it by their own name, Friesland: divided by the Ems, or Amisus, into the Western, spoken of amongst the Netherlands, and the Eastern or East-Friesland, in which now we are.

The nature of the Soil we shall see anon, when we come to the Subdivisions of it. The chief Rivers (besides those of 1. Ems, and 2. Weser, spoken of elsewhere) are 3. Jade, which falleth into a great Bay or Arm of the Ocean, called from hence De Jade. 4. Dollaer, on which standeth the City of Embden. 5. Delm, and 6. Honta, neighboured by Delmenhorst and Oldenburg, Towns of this Country. The whole is divided into 1. The County of Embden, or East-Friesland, properly so called; and 2. The Earldom of Oldenburg.

1. EAST-FRIESLAND specially so called hath on the West the River Ems, on the North the Ocean, on the East and South the Earldom of Oldenburg, called also the County of EMDEN, from the fair Town of Embden, the chief City of it. The Soil hereof is very fruitful both in Corn and Pasturage, sending great store of Oxen, Horses, Wool, Swine, Butter, Cheese, and all sorts of Grain, into other Countries; all of them excellent in their kind, not easily to be bettered (if equalled) in any place whatsoever. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Embden, so called from the Ems, on which it is situate. Dollaer a small River falling here into it: a noted and well-traded Town, beautified with a Haven so deep and large, that the greatest Ships with full Sail are admitted into it. The people are rich, affirmed to have 60 ships of 100 tons apiece, and 600 lesser Barks, of other ships; besides 700 Busses and Fisher-boats, maintained for the most part by their Herring-fishing on the Coasts of England. The Buildings are generally fair, both private and publick, especially the Church, the Town Hall, and Earl's Palace. This last is a storrer and stately Castle, situate at the mouth of the Haven, and on all sides encompassed by the Sea, and yet not strong enough to preserve the Town from their due Obedience: who in the year 1595, taking advantage of the Absence of the Earl, kept him out of their Town, because he seemed not to approve the Calvinian humour; and have since governed in the nature of a Common wealth, confederate with the States of the United Provinces, for their better Establishment and support. So easily is Religion made a mask to disguise Rebellion. 2. Aurick, by some called Anseling, seated in the Islands, rich and well walled, of great repute by reason of the pleasure of Hunting, afforded very liberally in the Forests and Woods adjoining, drawing hither the Nobility and Gentry in great abundance. 3. Ejen, on the Sea-shore, which gives the Title of an Earl to the Lord thereof; as doth also, 4. Jever, situate on the West of the River Jade; but both Earls subject to the Earl of East-Friesland. 5. Uredeweg, (that is to say, the Free Village) so called from some Immunities granted by the Earls; possessed a while by those of Brunswick who fenced and garrisoned it for themselves, but in the end recovered by Eward the 2. Earl. 6. Broeck, the Seat and proper Government of the Ancestors of these Earls; from whence the parts adjoining are called Breckmarland. 7. Norden, another Prefecture or Captainship of the said Ancestors. 8. Duntorf, a strong Castle and retiring-place of the Earls. 9. Lingen, upon the Ems, a strong Town well fortified, and as well garrisoned; belonging to the King of Spain, as Vicar to the Empire over all Friesland, even to Dittmarsh and the Confines of Denmark. A Dignity procured by Maximilian, Grandfather to Charles the 5. of the Emperor Frederick the 3. in right whereof the King of Spain, as Heir of the House of Burgundy, hath some pre-eminence over Embden, in title to him since the falling off of the Belgick Provincies. More Towns of note I find not in it, but of Castles, stately Dwelling-houses, and well-built Villages, an incredible number; standing so thick, that in many places they join together: some of them being withal so large, so well peopled, and of Streets so spacious, that they may compare with many Cities in Germany. Of all which the most City-like is named Leere.

The ancient Inhabitant hereof were the Chanci, miners, described by Pliny, to be so barbarous a people, and so destitute of all necessary Provision for the life of man, that they had no drink but Rain water, preferred in great Troughs before the doors of their Cottages. They were outed or subdued by the Frisians, a neighbouring People possessing North Holland the District of Utrecht, with the Counties of Groeninge and West-Friesland, who, having once passed over the Ems, extending their Dominions as far as Denmark; governed by Kings, but intermingled with and over-powred by the Saxons, till the time of Charles the Great, by whom the last King Rodbold overcame in fight was perished to receive the Sacrament of Holy Baptism: but being told that his Friends and Kinsfolks were in Hell, because no Christians, Nathin will I (saith he) be of that Profession, for I love to be amongst my Kindred. After this, Friesland was a member of the French Kingdom, till the erecting of the Earldom of Holland by Charles the Bald, An. 893, at which time this Friesland on the West side of the Ems was conferred upon him; possessed, but not without much War and Bloodshed, by his Successors, the Frisians ever and anon retelling against them, and killing divers of them in the open field. Those parts of it on the other side of the Ems remained unto the German Empire: governed by Dukes, puties, Lieutenants, and Provincial Earls, accountable to the Emperors for the Administration, till the year 1453, in which Ulrick, Governour hereof for the Emperor Frederick, having got the Town of Embden out of the hands of the Hamburgers, was made Earl of East-Friesland, transmitting the Estate and Title unto his Posterity.

Earls of EAST-FRIESLAND.

- 1453 1. Ulrick, Son of Enno, the Son of Ewardus, Captains or Governours for the Empire in Broeck and Norden, made the first Earl of East-Friesland by the Emperor Frederick.
- 1466 2. Eward, the Son of Ulrick, who got Vredenberg from the Citizens of Brunswick.
- 1523 3. Enno, the Son of Eward, who regained Greet-ly, formerly usurped by the Dukes of Geldre.
- 1540 4. Eward II. Son of Enno, who married Katharine, Daughter to Guffavus the first of Sweden.
5. Enno II. Son of Eward the 2. and the Lady Katharine.
- 1586 6. Rodolphus Christianus, Son of Enno the 2. who, being well affected to the Lutheran Forms, (first introduced in the time of Enno the first) was by a Calvinian party grown up in Embden, dispossessed of that City, Anno 1595.
- 1608 7. Enno-Ludovicus, Son of Rodolphus-Christianus, succeeded in this Earldom on the death of his Father, and is still living, for ought I can hear unto the contrary.

The Arms of the Earls of East-Friesland are Argent, four Bendlets Azure, charged with ten Hearts Or, 4, 3, 2, 1.

2. The Earldom of OLDENBURG containeth that part of this Country which lieth on the West-side of the Weser, betwixt the Bishoprick of Munster and East-Friesland specially so called, and so extending Northwards to the German Ocean. So called from Oldenburg, the chief City of it, and the Head of this Earldom.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, but in Pastures specially, which breed them infinite Herds of Cattel, and furnish not this Country only, but some of their German Neighbours, and many of the more Northern Nations, with Horses, Beeves, Sheep, Swine, Butter, Cheese. Here is also good store of Pulse, Barley and Oats; plenty of Fruits, and Trees of all sorts; large Woods, and those well stored with Venison, which yield unto the Gentry the delights of Hunting. But the Air is cold and foggy in some extremity; especially in Winter, and night the Sea.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Oldenburg, on the River Honta, repaired, if not built, by Orbo the Great, who founded the Church of S. John Baptist. A Town of no great state or beauty; the Houses being generally of Clay, but the Castle (the Dwelling-place of the Earls) of well-hewn Stones; of an obnoxious form, with deep Ditches of water, the Town and Castle both being strongly fortified. 2. Delmenhorst, on the River Delm, a strong place and of great importance, built in the year 1247 by Orbo, Brother of Earl Christian the 2. and having been 67 years in possession of the Bishops of Munster, was suddenly surprized on Palm-Sunday morning by Anthony Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1477, continuing ever since part of this Estate. 3. Beckenfen, on a River which falleth not far off into the great Bay or Arm of the Sea which is called De Jade. 4. Egnard. 5. Ovelgagd, both seated on a long Languet or Demy-Island betwixt the said De Jade and the River Weser, called Butiada: both taken and the last well fortified by John Earl of Oldenburg, Anno 1520, belonging formerly to the Prefecture of East-Friesland, but never brought under the command of the Earls thereof. 6. Welferberg, the chief Town, of a spacious Territory. 7. Friedels, a strong piece on the River Jade, built by Earl Christian, one of the younger Branches of the House of Oldenburg, about the year 1400. 8. Mellum. 9. Jadelles, places of principal importance; the one on the River Jade, the other near the Ocean. Here is also within this Earldom the Province of Amersland, supposed by some to have been the Seat of the Ambroses, who accompanied the Cimbrici and Teutones in their Expedition towards the Roman Provinces, and were slain by Marins.

As for the Earls of Oldenburg, they derive themselves from Walpert, one of the Nephews of Wittikindus, the last King and first Duke of the Saxons, who having about the year 850, built a strong Castle on the Borders of Bremen, in the honour of his Wife Altheburg, (whom he dearly loved) called it Altheburgum, so called by the Latins to this day, by the Germans Oldenborch. But his Male-Issue failing in Frederick the 7. Earl, it came to one Elimar the Son of Haio, a Nobleman of the Frisian blood, who had married Richa, the Daughter of John, the fifth Earl of this Family. From him in a direct Line descended Christian or Christern, eldest Son of Theodorick, who, being fortunately advanced to the Crown of Denmark, Anno 1448, left his Estate in this Earldom (but reserving the Title, according to the fashion of Germany) to his Brother Gerrard, the better to take him off from his Pretensions to the Dukedom of Sleswick, and the Earldom of Holstein, in which he did pretend a share. The Patrimony of it was much improved by the additions of the Countries of Rostering, Ofringen, and Wangerland, all lying on the German Sea, bequeathed by the last Will and Testament of the Lady Mary, Countess of Jever in East-Friesland, to John Earl of Oldenburg, the third from Gerrard. The Succession of these Earls, in regard the Royal Line of Denmark, and by consequence of Great Britain, is descended from them, I have here subjoined in this ensuing Catalogue of.

The Earls of OLDENBURG.

- 850 1. Walpert, of the Race of Wittikind, the first Earl of Oldenburg.
- 856 2. Theodorick, the Son of Walpert.
3. Theodorick II. the Son of Theodorick the 1.
4. Orbo, the Son of Orbo, accompanied the Emperor Henry the 2. in his Wars against the Greeks and Saracens, Anno 1007.
6. Herno, named the Glorious, Son of John.
7. Frederick, Son of Herno, fortunate in his Wars against the Frisians; the last of the Male-line of this House.
8. Elimar, the Son of Haio, a Nobleman of the Frisian blood, and of Richa his Wife, the Daughter of John the fifth Earl.
- 1120 9. Elimar II. Son to Elimar the first.
10. Christianus, or the Warlike, a professed Enemy of Henry the Lion, Duke of Saxony, from whom he took the City of Brème.
11. Maurice, the Son of Christian, an Associate of Arnolph Earl of Holstein in his Wars with Denmark.
12. Christian II. Son of Maurice.
13. John II. Son of Christian the 2.
14. John III. Son of John the 2.
15. Conrad, the Son of John the third.
16. Christian III. Son of Conrad, a Student in Germany.

len, where he was initiated into holy Orders, which he relinquished, much against the will of his brother Maurice, on the death of his Father.

17. Theodorick, Son of Christian the 3. the fifth Earl of Delmenhorst of this Line, which fell to him at the death of Nicolas Archbishop of Breme, descended from a younger Son of John the second.
- 1440 18. Christian IV. Son of Theodorick, and of Hedwig, Sister and Heir of Gerrard and Adolphus, Dukes of Selwick and Earls of Holfstien, elected on the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus to the Crown of Denmark, Anno 1448.
- 1448 19. Gerrard, the Brother of Christian the 4. a Prince of an unquiet spirit, always in Wars, and always worsted. He lost the Town of Delmenhorst to the Bishop of Munster.
- 1500 20. John IV. Son of Gerrard, repaired the Ruines of his Estate, and settled the Distractions of it in the time of his Father, being then in Exile, and after very much enlarged it by the reduction of Buriana.
- 1526 21. Anthony, the Son of John the 4. by a sudden Surprise recovered Delmenhorst from the Bishop of Munster, Anno 1547, which he strongly fortified.
- 1573 22. John V. Son of Anthony, enlarged this Earl-dom with the Provinces of Rusfringen, Ossfringen, and Wangerland, bequeathed to him by the last Will of the Countess of Jeuer, in East-Friesland.
23. Anthony II. Brother of John the 5. in whose life-time he was Earl of Oldenburg also: still living, Anno 1648, for ought I can learn unto the contrary.

And thus we see the present estate of Germany, distracted and divided amongst many Princes, Prelates, and Incorporated Towns, the chief of which are herein mentioned and described. But besides these there are many others of less note and smaller Territories, which yet are absolute and free: inasmuch that in one days riding a Traveller may twice or thrice meet with divers Laws and divers Coins, every Free Prince and Free City (whose Laws the Emperours are sworn to keep inviolable) having power to make what Laws and coin what Money they will. And hence, in the Confusion of Kingdoms, the King of Spain is said to be Rex hominum, because of his Subjects reasonable Obedience, the King of France, Rex Asinorum, because of their infinite Taxes and Impositions, the King of England, Rex Diabolorum, because of his Subjects often Insurrection against and Deposition of their Princes: but the Emperour of Germany is called Rex Regum, because there is such a number of Reguli or Free Princes which live under his Command, or rather at their own Command, (for they do even what they list) as the Emperour Maximilian the first well noted.

And, to say truth, the publick Government thereof is nothing less than Monarchical, the Emperour being accompanied amongst the Princes but as the chief Officer of the Empire; not reckoned of, by Bodin and others of our great Statists and Civilians, as an absolute Monarch, such as the King of England, France and Spain, are confessed to be. For the Privileges of the Free Cities being made perpetual, the great Estates Hereditary, and the Empire Eligible, the Emperours were brought at last to such low condition, as to be made accountable to the States of the Empire; who if they were perverted in their Consciences, or but think they be so, that he is likely by his Male-administration to destroy the Empire, or that he will not hearken unto good Advice, ab Electorum Collegio Casaræ majestati private potest, (as my Author hath it) may be deprived by the Electors, and a more fit and able man chosen into the place, and that too, as the Emperour Jadocus Barbatus hath declared in one of his Constitutions, An. 1410, sine Infidelitatis vel Rebellionis crimine, without incurring the crimes of Treason or Disloyalty. So that the supreme Power and Majesty of the Empire seems to reside especially and contractedly in the Electoral Colledge; diffidely, in the Imperial Diets, by way of Execution, in the chamber of Spices, and other the supreme Courts of the several Circles. But that which makes that Body which they call the Empire, is the Assembly of the Prelates, Princes and Commissioners of the Free Cities in their Diets or Parliaments, the Emperour presiding in them: whom he that saw adorned in his Royal Robes, with the Imperial Crown and Scepter, with the Titles of Cesar and Augustus given at every word, would think that the whole Audium did take life from him; whereas, indeed, he hath not so much Privilege as a Negative voice, but is to put in execution final Decrees and Sanctions as these Estates assembled have thought fit to make; not able to do any act by his own Authority, which may speak him Emperour. But, on the other side, the Princes take power unto themselves of making Laws for, and imposing Taxes on, their Subjects, of raising War upon one another, or against a third; and doing many other acts of supreme Authority, which in the Emperour would be counted matter of Male-administration. Such Points as these, together with the appointing of Judges and the like chief Magistrats, (as they relate unto the Empire) are not to be concluded of but in general Diets; which may be summoned by or without the Emperour, as occasion serveth. And to this weakning of the Majesty and Power Imperial the neighboring Princes have afforded their best assistance; jealous of their own Interests and decrease of Power, if that vast Body so well limbed should be strongly jointed, and all the several Members of it united under the command of one supreme Head. Clear proof whereof we have in those solemn Leagues and Confederations made in their several times against Charles the fifth and the late Emperour Ferdinand the 2. as soon as they began to be in some possibility of settling the Imperial Majesty in its proper Splendour, and bringing down the Princes of it to a lower pitch.

As for the means by which the Empire is attained, it is, and hath of long time been, by the way of Election as before was noted. The business was first projected in the Court of Rome by Gregory the first, then Pope, who being a Native of this Country, thought it the most expedient course to continue the Imperial Title amongst those of his Nation. But whatsoever was pretended, the Design of it chiefly was to make the Emperours less powerful, and distract the German (whom they feared) into Parts and Factions, that so the Popes might have the better opportunity to grow great in Italy. And that the Emperour might be such as the Pope should like of, the matter was so ordered, that the one half of the Electors should be always of the Ecclesiasticks, who, being obnoxious to the Popes, and for the most part driving on their Interest, were very like to serve him on all occasions. The Electors only fix in number: that is to say, 1. The Archbishop of Mentz, Chancellor of the Empire, 2. The Archbishop of Colen, Chancellor of Italy, 3. The Archbishop of Trier, Chancellor of France, 4. The Count-Palatine of the Rhene, Arch-Sewer, 5. The Duke of Saxony, Lord Marshal, and 6. the Marquis of Brandenburg, Lord Chamberlain. Upon equality of Voices the Duke of Bohemia (now King) was to come in for a Seventh; who by Office is to be chief Cup-bearer in all great Solemnities. For upon days of great Solemnities, as Elections, Inaugurations, the first days of the Imperial Diets, and the like to these, these Offices are performed only; and then performed in this manner following, either in person or by Proxy. Before the Palace-Gate stands an heap of Oats, so high that it reacheth to the breast of the Horse on which the Duke of Saxony rideth, having in his hand a silver Wand and a silver Measure, both which together are to weigh 500 Marks. The Duke, still sitting on his Horse, fill up the Measure with Oats, then ticks his Wand in the remainder of the heap, delivereth the measure of Oats unto some of his Servants who stand nearest unto him, and so attends the Emperour into the Court. The Emperour being entered and fate down at the Table, the three Spiritual Electors, standing orderly together, say the Grace before him. Then cometh the Marquis of Brandenburg on Horse-back also, with a Basin of Water in his hand, (the Basin being of the weight of 12 Marks of Silver) and a fine clean Towel on his Arm; which, a lightening from his Horse, he holds to the Emperour till he wash. Next comes the Palatine of the Rhene mounted on his Horse, with four Silver Platters full of Meat, every one of the weight of three Marks of Silver, which, descending from his Horse, after due reverence made, he carrieth and placeth on the Table. And finally the Duke (or King) of Bohemia, entering the great Hall on Horse-back as the others did, with a Napkin on his Arm, and a covered Cup in his Hand of the weight of 12 Marks in Silver, alighteth from his Horse, and presenteth the Cup unto the Emperour. But we must know, that of late times these Offices are seldom or never performed by the Electors in their own persons. It is enough if they tend their Ambassadors, or substitute some one or other of the Emperours Court to do it for them.

The Election is usually celebrated at Frankford on the Main, to which place the Electors or their Deputies are to make repair on the day appointed by the Archbishop of Mentz, whose Office it is (as being Chancellor of the Empire) to issue out the Summons for this Assembly. In their passage unto Frankford they are to be sufficiently guarded by every Prince through whose Territories or Dominions they are to travel; their Attendants not to exceed the number of 200 Horse, of which 50 only to be armed. When they are met, they go into S. Bartholomew's Church, the most Capacious of that City; where, after the High-Mass is said, the three Spiritual Electors laying their Hands upon their Breasts, and the Temporal Princes on the Book, make Oath to chuse a fit Temporal Head for the People of Christendom. Upon equality of Voices, as it sometimes happeneth, the Bohemians hath the casting Voice, and concludes the business. If in the space of 30 days they have not agreed upon a man, then must they have no other allowance but of Bread and Water, nor be suffered to go out of the City, till that necessity compelleth them unto some Agreement. Which being at the last resolved on, and declared accordingly, the Prince so elected is presently saluted by the Title of King of the Romans; the Title of Emperour being not properly to be given unto him, until he have received the Imperial Crown at the hands of the Pope: though since the time of Charles the fifth, without any such trouble to themselves or the Popes of Rome, the Title of both Emperour and Imperial Majesty is usually conferred upon them from their first Election. The Election being finished, and signified to the party chosen, the Inauguration was held anciently at three several places: viz. 1. at Aginsburg, or Augsburg, in the Land of Swabia, where he received the Silver Crown, for the Kingdom of Germany, 2. at Millain, by the Archbishop whereof he was crowned with the Iron Crown, for Lombardy, for the Realm of Italy, 3. at Rome, where, at the hands of the Pope himself, he was crowned with a Golden Crown, for the Roman Empire. But since, those Journeys unto Rome and Milain have been long laid by, the Emperours holding their Elections to be strong enough to make good their Title to that Dignity, being merely titular, and their Inauguration at Augsburg as effectual as if they had also visited the two other Cities. The form of which Elections, the Privileges of the Electors, and other fundamental Constitutions of the German Empire, we find summed up together in the Golden Bull of Charles the 4. by him first promulgated, An. 1359. But we must know that, since the publishing of that Bull, the business of Election hath received some change as to the number and the persons of the Parties interested. For, it pleased the Emperour Ferdinand the 2. on the Proclamation of Frederick the first Elector Palatine, to transfer the Electoral Dignity, with the Office of Arch-bishop, or Arch-Sewer, from that House to the Duke of Bavaria, the Title of Elector of Bavaria, with all the Powers and Privileges which belonged unto it, to be inrolled upon him and his Heirs for ever. Which action of the Emperour being protested against by some of the Electors in favour of the Palatine Family, and in due care unto themselves, in not admitting such a dangerous precedent for the time to come, it was at last concluded and agreed on by the Pacification made at Munster, Anno 1648, That the Duke of Bavaria and his Heirs enjoying the said Electoral Dignity with the Upper Palatinate, according to the Translation of it from the Palatine Family spoken of before; an Eighth Electorate should be added to the former number, to be enjoyed together with the Lower Palatinate by Charles Ludowick, the now Prince Elector Palatine, and his Heirs, who also, on the failure of the Line of Bavaria are to be repossessed of their ancient Rights, the Title of Arch-Treasure being given unto them at the present instead of that of Arch-bishop, or Arch-Sewer, which they had before.

Now as a step unto the Empire, and for the better assurance of the Imperial Dignity to the Austrian Family, it was cunningly projected by Charles the fifth, (having received the Imperial Crown from Pope Clement the 7.) that his Brother Ferdinand should be chosen King of the Romans; whilst himself was living, and by that means be certain of the Empire after his decease. Which Policy being followed by all his Successors, the Title of Rex Romanorum, or King of the Romans, is grown to be the Title of the Heir apparent, or designed Successor, in the present Empire of the German; as that of Cesar was from the time of Adrian, in the Empire of the ancient Romans. Inasmuch as Rex Romanorum is now defined to be one who is already far elapsed in the Empire, that on the Death, Deposition, or Renunciation of the present Emperour, he is immediately to succeed. And so accordingly it hath happened since this Act of Charles; who though he laboured under-hand to leave the Empire unto Philip his Son and Heir, whom he found capable enough of so high an Honour, yet he could not do it: it being thought by many understanding men, that on notice of this under-hand practice, his Brother Ferdinand, who had the like mind to transfuse the Empire to his own Posterity, did secretly lend Duke Maurice his helping hand to drive him out of Germany, as in brief he did. As for the reasons, or, to say better, the pretences, upon which Charles did institute this Rex Romanorum, (for questionless the true reason of it was to perpetuate the Empire in the Austrian Family) they were these that follow. 1. Because that, having the command of many Nations, he could not always personally attend the Affairs of Germany. 2. The troubled Estate of Christendom, of the Empire especially, occasioned by the Preachings and Works of Luther. 3. The late rural War raised by the Boors of that Country, on the coming out of these new Doctrines, and not yet thoroughly extinct. 4. The violent power of the Turk, who, by his Conquest of a great part of Hungary, was grown too near a neighbour to them. And 5. the imminent Disobedience in all parts of the Empire. All which conjunctly seemed to require some Prince both of Power and Title to assist him in the bearing of so great a Burthen. And by these and the like suggestions he effected his Design herein, though thereby he changed in a manner the Imperial Style. For whereas the first Emperours of the House of Charles the Great were Emperours of the Romans, and Kings of Germany; the later Emperours of the House of Charles the fifth may not improperly be called Emperours of Germany, and Kings of the Romans. It is true indeed, that the wife and understanding Duke of Saxony saw farther through these Pretences than the rest of the Electors either did or would, and that the main Plot was no other, than to make Germany (as Galba said in his Oration unto Piso of the Empire of Rome) unus quasi Familia Hereditatem, hereditary in times following to the House of Austria; and thereupon did openly deny his suffrage to the said Election. But finding that the major part of the Electors were resolved upon it, he moved for an Act to pass, prohibiting the continuance of the Imperial Title in any one Family more than three Successions. In which not able to prevail, (as the Game was played) he left the Electors to themselves, by whom Ferdinand was chosen King of the Romans; and not long after crowned at Aids with the usual Rites, Jan. 16. An. 1531. The same course was followed by this Ferdinand, when possessed of the Empire, in causing his Son Maximilian to be elected Rex Romanorum, whilst himself was living; and so by all the rest since then, as before is said.

As for the Forces of the Empire, for by that name we are to measure the Abilities and Power of Germany, we may discern them by those Levies which have been raised upon particular occasions, or by the joint consent of the Free Estates assembled in the Imperial Diets. First, for particular Levies made by private persons, we find 12000 Foot and 8000 Horse raised by the Prince Palatine of Zweibruck, for Aid of the French Hugonots against their King; and, on the other side, no fewer than 7000 Horse, under the Conduct of the Duke of Anhalt and the Earl of Mansfield, for the service of that King against the Hugonots. And as for Levies made by consent of the States, we find that Charles the 5. had under his Ensigns at Vienna, 90000 Foot, and 15000 Horse; Maximilian the 2. at Javarin in Hungary, 24000 Horse, and full 100000 Foot; and finally, that in the War betwixt Charles the 5. and the Protestant Princes, there were no less than 150000 men on both sides; which numbers no one Country in Europe is able to equal. In a word, it is generally conceived that the Empire is able to raise 200000 Horse and Foot, with Arms, Cannon, and Ammunition of all sorts proportionable; which the instances before brought do most plainly evidence.

Touching the Revenues of the Empire, I find them estimated by Boterus, and some others since, at seven millions of Crowes yearly. Which may be true enough, taking the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia with the hereditary Estates of Austria into the account. But since they are not so united unto the Empire but they may at sometime or other be disjoined again, no reason they should come into the reckoning, unless it be as the Revenue of the Emperour, though not of the Empire. But as for the Revenue of the Empire it self, taken abstractedly from the personal and Patrimonial Estate of the Emperour, who-soever he be, it can amount to no such sum: the Tribute paid by the Free or Imperial Cities (at least 60 in number) amounting to no more per ann. than 15000 Florens, or 1500 l. English: and what is that, but like a Peppercorn for a Quit-rent, in that mighty Continent? By this we may conjecture what the rest may come to. And though, in the way of saving Charges, (which may be reckoned as a part of his Income also) the Princes and Free Cities be bound to aid him in the time of War against the Turk with 3842 Horse, and 16200 Foot, which he may challenge without troubling the Diets for it: yet War is such a great devourer, that if the Diets do not grant him greater helps, he is like to be but a sorry Gainer by the undertaking; besides the smallness of those Forces considered with the numbers they are able to raise, and the puissance of the enemy whom they are to encounter.

Finally, for the Arms of the Empire, they are Sola, an Eagle displayed with two Heads Saturum armed and crowned Mars: the two Heads signifying (as some think) the Eastern and the Western Empires. Cespian, a leamed German, conceives rather that these Arms are two Eagles conjoined, and not one Eagle with two Heads: and that they were taken up by the German Nation in memory of the three Legions of Quintilius Varus discomfited by them; at what time they seized on two of the Roman Eagles, (the Military Ensign of that People) the third being cast into the Fens by the Standard-bearer, but whether it be one or two, certain it is that the one Head is quite pulled off, and the whole Body quite stripped of all its Feathers; the Imperial Dignity being little more than titular, depouled and stripped of all authority appearing to it.

There are in Germany.

OF DENMARK.

THE Kingdom of DENMARK, or DANEMARK, reckoning in the Additions of the Dukedom of Holstein and the great Continent of Norway, with the Isles thereof, now all united and incorporated into one Estate, is bounded on the East with the Baltick Sea, and some part of Sweden, on the West with the main Western Ocean, on the North-East with a part of Sweden, full North with the main Frozen Seas, and on the South with Germany, from which it is divided on the South-west by the River Albit, and on the South-east by the Trave, a little Isthmus or Neck of Land uniting it to that Continent.

It took this name from the Danes, of long time the Inhabitants and Possessors of it; so called quasi Danorum Tractus, sive Regio, (as Mercator hath it), because the Country of that People; but rather quasi Danorum limnes, the Bounds or Marches of the Danes, bordering down upon the Dutch, from whom it hath the name of Danemarch.

As for the Situation of it in regard of the Heavens, it lieth partly in the Northern temperate Zone, and partly within the Arctic Circle; extending from the middle Parallel of the tenth Climate, or 55. Degree of Latitude, where it joyneth with Germany, as far as the 71. Degree, where it hath no other bound but the Frozen Ocean. By which account, the longest Day in the most Southern parts hereof is 17 hours and a quarter: but in the parts extremely North, they have no Night for two whole months, three weeks, one day, and some even hours over; as on the other side, no Day for the like quantity of time, when the Sun is most remote from them, in the other Tropic. The Air hereof by consequence must be sharp and bitter, even in the very warmest places. Of which, and of the nature of the Soil, we shall speak more punctually in the Description and Survey of the several Parts.

The Inhabitants generally are of good Stature, clear of Complexion, well coloured, for the most part healthful and long-lived; for though they eat and drink beyond measure, they have good Digestions. In Manners they are very severe, crafty and pious in the managing of their Affairs, but proud and wilful, and (as the Historian said of another person) Omnia quæ dixerant fecerant; Offensatores, great Vaunters of whatsoever they do or say, highly opinionated of their own Actions, and peremptory in maintaining their own Opinions: religious, observers of their Words and Contracts, and strict in executing Justice; especially in punishing of Thieves and Pirates. Such of them as do follow the Wars prove reasonable good Souldiers, both by Sea and Land; but fitter for the Sea, than Field service. The Magistrats are wise rather by experience than study, though they love Learning, and easily attain all Languages which they give their minds to. The old men are covetous, the young men thrifty, and the Merchant ambitious. The Nobility and Gentry are generally of as ancient Families as most in Christendom; here being some of those Houses still remaining which were present at the Pacification made betwixt Charles the Great and Hemmingus King of the Danes; and, which adds much unto their Honour, they keep their Blood unmixed with Marriages with the Vulgar sort; and reckon it for an high disgrace to change their Arms, or make any addition thereto. The Women are fair, discreet, and courteous, and knew well how to govern their Households; exceeding fruitful in bearing of Children, but delivered of them with great difficulty. Both Sexes speak the Dutch, or German, common (but with some difference in the pronunciation) to all the Northern Nations in Norway and Sweithland.

Of no great note for men of Learning in the former time, it hath been fortunate in these last for 1. Tycho Brabe, that renowned Astronomer; 2. Hemmingus, a well-known Divine; 3. Bartholinus, a Physician and Philosopher of good esteem; 4. John Cluverus, the Historian, &c. More famous for great Captains and men of War, especially for 1. Gustaf, or Gorricus, who settled the Government of this Kingdom, and endangered the great Realm of France. 2. Sveno, and 3. Canutus, the fortunate Conquerors of England. 4. Waldemar the 3. a right valiant Prince; but successful in his Wars against the Hanse-Towns, then newly entred into League. 5. Christiern the II. a great Commander in the Wars, but of greater Cruelty. 6. Christiern the IV. little inferior unto many of his Predecessors. To whom we may subjoin though of different Sex) Q. Margaret, the Semiramis of these Northern Countries; a Lady of a masculine Spirit, and not more fortunate than daring in all Enterprizes, as the declared in the Conquest of Sweithland, and Subjection of Norway, by her united to this Crown.

The Christian Faith was first preached to those of Holstein (the next-neighbouring Country unto Germany) by S. Angaricus, Bishop of Bremen, the general Apostle of those Northern parts, in the year 826, Lewis the Godly then being Emperour of the West. In whose time Harald King of Denmark, being expelled his Kingdoms by the Sons of Godfrey or Getricus, was baptised at Mentz, with a great number of that people which attended on him, by the hands of Ekko Archbishop of Rhemes, employed by the Emperour in that service; the Conversion of the whole Nation following not long after, by the power and diligence of the Emperour Oibo the first assigned by the Ministry of one Poppo the first Bishop of Arihusen; Sveno, or Swain, then reigning amongst the Danes. The Norwegians came not in till after, converted in the reign of Olaf the third, Anno 1055, or thereabouts the English assisting in the work, and the good King so zealous in it, that he was canonized a Saint after his decease. Relapsing for the most part to their ancient Gentilism, they were finally regained unto Christianity by the means of Pope Adrian the fourth, an English-man, about the year 1156, before his assuming of the Popedom called Nicolaus Breakpear. But by whomsoever first converted, the Popes of Rome would needs pretend some Power and Jurisdiction over them. Which when they began to exercise with too much Authority, Waldemar the third is said to have returned this Answer, Naturam habemus à Deo, Regnum à Subditis, Divitiarum à Parentibus, Religionem à Romana Ecclesia; quam, si nobis invides, remociamus per presentes: that is to say, We hold our Life from God, maria and Jutland, have that it hath an Outlet into the Baltic on the North West of Wagerland. Chief places in it are, 1. Kiel, (Choloniun in Latine) seated upon a navigable Arm of the Baltick Sea, parting Wagerland from the Dukedom of Sleswick: a Town well traded, and having a capacious Haven, seldom without good Trade of Shipping from Germany, Liefland, Sweden, and the rest of Denmark. 2. Rensborg, the best fortified piece in all Denmark. 3. Niemunster, on the North west of the Stær, not far from the lake of St. 4. Wilsen, on a small River so called. 5. Bransfede, 6. Borholm, not much observable, but for a Monastery in which Henry one of the Earls hereof (of a younger House) turned Monk and died, Anno 1241.

The ancient Inhabitants of this and the other three were the Saxons, Sigolans, and Subalings, placed here by Prology; whom I conceive to be no other than some Tribes of the Cimbri of whom this Chorjone took name: the two last of which passing into the name of the first, and in the Declination of the Roman Empire marching over the Elb, and spreading all along the Coasts of the German Ocean, molested with their Piracies and Depredations, the Shores of Britannia, known by that means unto the Britans, they were invited to assist them against the Scots and Picts. Which action, with the Aid of the Frisians and Angli (Inhabitants together with them of the Cimbri, Cherjone) they performed so honestly, as to make themselves Masters of the best part of the Island. Such as remained behind, not being able to defend their own against the Slaves, were fain to quit the parts lying next to Mecklenburg; which, being peopled by the Vagri, took the name of Wagerland. But the Saxons being vanquished by Charles the Great, these on the North-side of the Elb became a part of the great Dukedom of Saxony, and so continued till dismembered by Lotharius, both Duke and Emperor, who gave the proper Holf (or Holftein specially so called) with the Province of Stormaria to Adolph Earl of Schaumburg, who had deserved well of him in his Wars, with the Title of Earl of Holftein, An. 1114. By Adolph the second, his Successor, it was settled in this House, who having made a full Conquest of it, caused it to be planted with Colonies of Dutch or German from Holland, Westphalen, and Friesland, by which means the name of Slaves was at last worn out. By Gerrard the fifth the Dukedom of Sleswick was also added: conferred upon him by the bounty of Margaret Queen of Denmark, in whose Wars he served. Adolph the last Earl of this House dying without Issue, the whole Estate fell on Christiern, Son of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg, and of Hednigis his Wife, Sister and Heir to Adolph before mentioned, who, being called to the Crown of Denmark accompanied with his Brother Gerrard for the sum of 50000 Marks; and having gotten Dimmarf also of the Emperor Frederick the third, prevailed so far as to have the whole Estate erected into a Dukedom, Anno 1214, to be held by him and his Successors of the Sacred Empire. Which said, we will next add the Catalogue of

The Earls and Dukes of HOLSTEIN.

- 1114 1. Adolph of Schaumburg, by Lotharius, Emperor and Duke of Saxony, made the first Earl of Holftein.
1137 2. Adolph II. Son of Adolph the first.
1164 3. Adolph III. Son of Adolph the 2. vanquished by Canutus King of the Danes, lost himself and his Country.
1232 4. Adolph IV. in his Fathers life-time recovered his Estate from Waldemar the Successor of Canutus, overcome by him in a well fought Battle, Anno 1226, his Father then Prisoner to the Danes.

1261 5. Gerrard, the 2. Son of Adolph the fourth, his elder Brother John making choice of Wagerland succeeded in Holftein.

1281 6. Henry the Son of Gerrard, the first that set up a Custom-house at Hamburg, for receipt of his Tolls and Taxes.

1310 7. Gerrard II. Son of Henry, slain treacherously by the Danes.

1339 8. Henry II. Son of Gerrard the second.
1381 9. Gerrard III. Son of Henry the second, created the first Duke of Sleswick by Queen Margaret of Denmark.

1404 10. Henry III. Son of Gerrard the third.
1427 11. Adolph V. commonly called the XII. (those of the younger Houses being reckoned in the last Earl of this House).

1459 12. Christiern of Oldenburg, King of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway, Son of Theodorick Earl of Oldenburg, and of his Wife Hednigis, Sister of Henry and Adolph the two last Earls, succeeded in the Earldom of Holftein, enlarged with the addition of Dimmarf, and erected into a Dukedom by the Emperor Frederick the third, Anno 1474. But seeing that Ordo Earl of Schaumburg pretended a Right unto the whole, as the next Heir-male, according to the Constitutions of the Empire, of which it was holden; and Gerrard the Brother of Christiern put in for his Share, according to the ill Custom of Germany, of which it was then composed part: he was fain to buy his peace of both, giving to Ordo 43000 Florens in ready money, with the Towns of Pinnenburg, Haltzburg, and Bransfede, the ancient possessions of the Earls of Schaumburg and 50000 Marks to his Brother Gerrard, besides his whole Interdict in the Earldom of Oldenburg, as before was said. By this means Holftein was united to the Crown of Denmark the Kings thereof, as Dukes of Holftein, being counted Princes of the Empire; but neither send unto the Diet, nor contribute any thing at all to the publick Taxes, nor acknowledge any kind of Subjection to it more than merely titular. Only it was ordained at the request of the Subjects, when first they were incorporated into that Kingdom, that in case of any grievance or unjust sentence in the ordinary Courts of Justice, wherein they found no remedy in the supreme Council of the Province, it might be lawful for them to appeal to the Imperial Chamber, as they had done formerly. Which as it was granted to content them at the present time, on sufficient Caution, so hath it seldom or never been put in practice; the very Grant or Privilege (if such it were) being in a manner worn out of memory. But since this uniting of these two Estates, the Title of Duke of Holftein and a good part of the Country was given unto Adolphus Brother of Christiern the 2. (created by Queen Elizabeth one of the Knights of the Garter, Anno 1560) who governed it interchangeably with the King in their several turns: after whose death, and the death of all his Children dying without Issue-male, the Title of it was conferred on Ulrich, Son of Frederick the second, and Brother of Christiern the fourth, created Knight of the Garter by King James, Anno 1605, in whose posterity it remains till this present time.

2. The Kingdom of DENMARK.

IN which 1. JUTLAND containeth all the rest of the Cimbri Cherjone, divided from the Dukedom of Holftein by the River Eyder, the ancient Boundary betwixt the Saxons and the Danes; but principally by a long Trench and Wall from one Sea to the other, of great breadth, that a Chariot or two Horse-men a-bread might ride upon it. First built in imitation of of the Pis Wall in England, by Godfrey King of Denmark, in the time of Charles the Great; either to hinder the daily Incursions of the Saxons, as some, or to stop the current of the Victories of the said Charles, as others think. The Tract thereof, still very easie to be seen, is called Dennuswerk (or the Danes Work) to this very day.

It was so called from the Frisians, who, together with the Angli and neighbouring Saxons, made a Conquest of the best part of Britain. The Country fo abounded in Cattel, that it sendeth yearly into Germany 50000 Oxen, besides great store of Butter, Cheese, Tallow, Hides, and Horses: divided commonly into North Jutland, and South Jutland, or Jutland specially so called, and the Dukedom of Sleswick.

SOUTH JUTLAND, or the Dukedom of SLESWICK, is that part of the Cimbrian Cherjone, which lies next to Holftein; called South Jutland, from the Southern situation of it; and Sleswick, from the chief Town of it, and the Head of this Dukedom. The Country, for the most part, is plain, little felled with Mountains; the Fields whereof do interchangeably yield both Fish and Corn. For during one three years they sow it constantly, and reap the Fruits of it, and for the next three let the Pools overflow the Land, to the end the Fish may eat up the Grass, (whom they catch as often as they please) and the Mud which is left behind enrich the Soil. But besides their Pools, they have also on the Baltick Shores many goodly Bays; not only commodious for Merchants, but well stored with Fish, and with Salmons especially.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Flensborg, seated among very high Mountains on the Shore of the Baltick Sea, where there is a Port so deep, so safe, and so commodious, that all the Inhabitants thereof in a manner may lade and unlade their Ships close to their houses. 2. Holsten, or Holftein, upon the German Ocean, not far from the mouth of the River Eyder. 3. Haderslev, a Bishop's See, if not rather some Town or Manor of the Bishop's of Sleswick, situate on a navigable In-let of the Baltick Sea, wherewith it is almost encompassed; beautified with the fair Castle of Hamburg, begun by John the eldest Son of King Christiern the first, then Duke of Holftein, but finished by Frederick the second, King of Denmark; 4. Lundenberg, in the Peninsula called Eyderfeste, over against De Sirants, an Island of the German Ocean. 5. Sternberg, the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the King of Denmark. 6. Gottorp, a strong Fort or Castle of the Duke of Sleswick, at the end of a large Bay or In-let of the Baltick also: remarkable for the Toll-booth or Custom-house there erected, at which there is Toll paid one year with another for 50000 Oxen sent out of the North Jutland into Germany. 7. Sleswick, originally by the Danes called Hyabon, built, as they say, by Herbe a Queen of that Nation; but by the Saxons called Sleswick, as the Town upon the River Sley, there running into the Baltick, and giving to the Town a fair and commodious Haven. This of long time hath been accounted the chief Town of this Province, honoured with an Episcopal See, and made the Head of the Dukedom, so giving name unto the whole. A Dukedom first erected by King Henry of Denmark, who gave it to Waldemar, great Grandchild of Abel a former King, Anno 1280, to be held by him under the Right and Sovereignty of the Kings thereof. But the Male-issue failing, it returned to the Crown, and was by Margaret Queen of Denmark conferred on Gerrard Earl of Holftein, as before was said, Anno 1386. Repenting afterwards of the Act, he extorted it out of the hands of the Widow of Gerrard; but it was again recovered by the Valour and good fortune of his Son Adolphus. After whose death it tell, together with Holftein, upon Christiern of Oldenburg King of Denmark, as before related, by whom it was incorporated with that Crown, never since aliened, but assigned sometimes in Portion for the younger Princes, the Patrimony at this time of the Sons of Alexander, furnished of Sunderborg, (the place of his Nativity) Son of John, one of the younger Sons of King Christiern the third.

NORTH JUTLAND, the most Northern part of all the Chorjone, hath on the South the Dukedom of Sleswick, but on all other parts the Sea. Divided commonly, according to the number of the Bishopricks; into four Dioceses or Districts; that is to say:

1. The Diocese of RIP or RIPEN, bordering next to Sleswick, containing 30 Prefectures or Herets, (as they use to call them) seven Cities or walled Towns, and ten Castles. The chief of which are, 1. Ripen; the Episcopal See, situate near the German Ocean. 2. Kolding, on a Creek of the Baltick Sea; where Dorothy the Dowager of Christiern the third made a publick School, (one of my Authors calls it an University).

2. The Diocese of ARHUSSEN, lying on the North of Ripen; but more towards the Baltick, containeth 31 Herets or Prefectures, seven Cities or walled Towns, and five Castles. The chief whereof are, 1. Arhusen, the Episcopal See, seated on the Baltick; the first Bishop hereof being that Poppo who converted this Nation, Christianity and Episcopacy going for the most part hand in hand together. 2. Schanderborg, on the South of Arhusen. 3. Kaloe, a strong Castle of the Kings, seated in the inmost part of a large Bay, occasioned by the Promontory or Cape of the Hilens, extending hence two Dutch miles to the high Hill of Elenenberg, Opposite whereunto, and pertaining to this Jurisdiction, lie the Islands of 1. Samsø, 2. Hilens, 3. Tuen, 4. Hjarnen, (perhaps Gerno) 5. Hilens, and others.

3. The Dioceses of WIBORCH, on the North of Arhusen, containeth sixteen Herets, the Islands of 1. Jegon, 2. Hansholm, 3. Offholm, 4. Cifland, 5. Egholm, and 6. Bodum; three Cities or walled Towns, and as many Castles. The principal of which is Wiborich, the Episcopal See, an Inland City, but situate on a Water which runneth into the Bay of Limsfort. The ordinary Seat of Judicature for both the Jutlands, for all Causes, as well Criminal as Civil: the Court continually sitting from one day to another, unless perhaps the Judges do sometimes adjourn it for their own Refreshments.

4. The Diocese of BORGLAVE, or Pandalia, lying farther North, is commonly subdivided into four Parts or Members; that is to say, 1. Thyland, lying South of the Bay of Limsfort, on the Baltick side, whose chief Town is Alsborch, the ordinary Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Pandalia, from hence many times fled Alburborgis, situate on the Bay aforesaid, which, opening into the Baltick Sea, extendeth through the main Land Westward almost as far as the German Ocean. 2. Morfe, lying on the Ocean, and containing three Prefectures or Herets, the Town of Niceping, the Castle of Limsfort, and the Isle of Ageroe. 3. Hansborg, the Town of the Bay of Limsfort, containing four Herets, the Town of Thysdal, where Christiern the third founded a publick School, or such another University as that of Kolding, the Castle of Orum, and the Islands called Skaringen, a noted Sea-mart, fishy ferry lying underneath it and about the Coast. 4. Wenffjell, Venflia, or Wenflie, that is (as Mercator doth expound it) Pandalorum fides, the Seat of the Pandals, taken up all the rest of the North of of Funland, containing six Prefectures, the Islands of 1. Großholm, 2. Heerholm, and 3. Tidholm, three Towns, and one Castle: the most remarkable of which is Schagen, within the most Northerly point of all this Scher-fouge. In this part is a very high Mountain called Mount Aberg, in which are found some marks and remainders of the ancient Giants, as the Inhabitants believe, and report accordingly.

The Inhabitants of both Funlands, in the time of Ptolemy and before were the Cobandi, Chali, Phundhi, Charadei, and in the most Northern Tracts the Cimbri, of whom the four first were but Tribes or Nations. These moving toward the South in that great Expedition against Spain, were taken by the neighbouring Vandals into the Roman Empire, occasioned the Finns and Angli to enlarge or shift their Dwellings, each taking up the parts which lay nearest to them. The Finns, or Gutta, being a People of Scandia, and there placed by Ptolemy, took up the Northern parts thereof, from them named Funland: the other being a People of the Suevi, dwelling on the South of the Elb, possessed themselves of those parts which lay next the Saxons, their old Friends and Confederates, (their chief Town being Sleswick) where Angelen, now an obscure Village, once of greater note, doth preserve their memory. But these uniting with the Saxons in the Conquest of Britain, and leaving none behind which were fit for action, or not enough to keep possession of the Country against the new Invaders, gave opportunity to the Danes to come in upon them; by whom the Country being conquered as far as to the River Eyder, were planted by Colonies of Danes, and made a part of that Kingdom: of whom we shall say more in the close of all; first taking a survey of the Baltick Islands, and such Provinces on the main Land of Scandia as properly make up the Kingdom of Denmark.

2. THE BALTICK ISLANDS are in number 3, and are so called, because they lie dispersed in the Baltick Ocean. At this day it is called by the German De Oze; Zee; anciently by some Mare Suevicum, by Pomponius Mela Sinus Codanus, by Strabo Sinus Venedicus; but generally Mare Balticum, because the great Peninsula of Scandia, within which it is, was by some Writers of the middle and darker Time called Baltia. It beginneth at the narrow Passage called the Sund, and interlacing the Countries of Denmark, Sweden, Germany, and Poland, extendeth even to Livonia and Lithuania. The reasons why this Sea, being so large, doth not ebbe and flow, are, 1. the Narrowness of the Strait which by the Ocean is let into it; and 2. the Northern situation of it, whereby the Celestial Influences have lesser power upon it. The principal of this great hole of Islands are, 1. Seland, 2. Fionia, or Fionia, 3. Angland, 4. Lawland, 5. Falholm, 6. Arja, 7. Alsen, 8. Tidholm, 9. Wien, 10. Femera, and 11. Bornholm. Some others of less note we shall name only, and pass them over.

1. S E L A N D, the greatest Island of the Baltick Seas, is situate near the main Land of Scandia, parted from it by a narrow Strait or Fretum, not above a Dutch mile in breadth, commonly called by the name of the Sund or Sound. A Strait through which all Ships which have any trading to or from the Baltick must of necessity take their course; all other Passages being barred up with insupportable Rocks, or otherwise prohibited by the Kings of Denmark, upon Forfeiture of all their Goods. So that being the only safe Passage which these Seas afford, one may sometimes see two or three hundred Ships in a day pass through it: all which pay a Toll or Impostition to the King, according to their Bills of Lading. And to secure this Passage, and command all Passengers, there are two strong Castles, the one in Scandia, called Helsingborg, whereof more anon; the other in this Island, which is called Cronenburg.

But before we come to this Castle, we must view the other parts of the Island, being in length two days journey, and almost as much in breadth: the Soil so fertile, that, without any manuring or charge at all, it yieldeth plenty of all Necessaries for the life of man. It was anciently called Codanonia, and containeth in it fifteen Cities or walled Towns, and twelve Royal Castles. The principal whereof are, 1. Hafen, or Hafnia, the Metropolis of the Islands, by the Dutch called Copenhagen, or the Haven of Merchants; situate near the Sea, with an handfom Port; the Isle of Amager, which lieth on the East-side of the Town, making a very safe Road for all kinds of Shipping. The Town is of an orbicular form, and reasonably well fortified; but the Buildings mean, for the most part of Clay and Timber, only to be commended for a spacious Marketplace. Yet herein, as the chief Town of all the Kingdom, and situate in the heart of those Dominions, is the Palace-Royal; built of Free-stone, in form of a Quadrangle, but of no great Beauty or Magnificence. Most memorable for the University here founded by Henry Ericus the ninth; but perfected by King Christiern the first, by him and the succeeding Princes liberally endowed. 2. Fredericksburg, amongst Woods of Beech, built for a place of Pleasure by Frederick the second, where the King hath a fine House, and a little Park, in which (amongst other foreign Beasts) are some Fallow-Deer transported hither out of England in the 24 year of Queen Elizabeth. 3. Reschili, not walled but counted for a City, as a See Episcopal; the Bishops whereof have anciently had the honour of Crowning and Inaugurating the Kings of Denmark. In the Cathedral Church here are to be seen the Tombs of many of the Danish Kings; some of them very fair and sumptuous, the most mean and ordinary. 4. Sora, of old times beautified with a goodly Monastery, the Revenues whereof, at the alteration of Religion, were converted to the maintenance of a Free-School built here by Frederick the first. But in the year 1623, Christiern the fourth, adding hereunto the Revenues of two other dissolved Monasteries, the one in the Isle of Lawland and the other in Funland, founded here a new University, for the better supply of learned Ministers for the Churches of Denmark and Norway, (which before could not be provided for out of Copenhagen) and furnished it with men of eminence in all Arts and Sciences for its first Professors. 5. Ellwors, or Helsingborg, a Village only, but much frequented by Sea-faring men as their Ships pass by the Sund, upon which it is. Near unto which is 6. the strong and magnificent Castle of Cronenburg, built with incredible charge and pains by King Frederick the second; the foundation of it being laid on huge Stones sunk into the Sea, and so fastened together, that no Storm or Tempest, how violent soever, is able to shake it; well fortified as well founded, and mixt of a Palace and a Fort, being since the first building of it the most constant Residence of the Kings of Denmark, who from hence may easily discern each Ship which falls through the Sund, each of which addeth more or less unto his Revenues. A profitable and pleasing Prospect. By the Commodities of this and the opposite Castle, the King doth not only secure his Customs, but very much strengthen his Estate: the Castles being so near, and the Strait so narrow, that, by the addition of some few Ships, he may keep the greatest Navy that is from passing by him.

Unto the Government and Jurisdiction of this Island belong many others; the principal whereof are, 1. Amager, magia, Amager, or Amach, which helps to make up the Port or Road of Copenhagen, spoken of before; planted with Hollander brought hither by the procurement of Christiern the second. 2. Mund, or Moen-Land, the chief Town whereof is called Streeke. 3. (2) HUENE, or WEEN, a little South of Cronenburg Castle; a Dutch mile in length, but not quite so broad; remarkable only for the Studies of that famous Astronomer Tycho Brabe, for the Studium of the second gave this Island, that living to whom Frederick the second gave this Island, that living in private and solitary place, removed from all company but his own Family only, he might with more convenience attend his Books. At this day most observable for the Castle of Oranopolis, or Orenburg, where the greatest part of his Mathematical Instruments are preserved in safety. 3. FIONIA, or FUNEN, the second Island of account in all the Baltick, is situate betwixt Seland and Funland, from which last it is parted by a Strait called Middelfart Sund, so narrow, and of so small a Sea, that the Island and the Cherfonese seem joined together. A Country of a pleasant and delightful Situation, and as fruitful withal; containing 12 Dutch miles in length, and four in breadth; and therein 24 Herets or Prefectures, 16 Towns, and 6 Royal Castles, besides many goodly Villages, and Gentlemen Houses. The chief whereof are, 1. Odnsee, or Othense (called in Latine Othonia) an Episcopal See, founded here, at the first conversion of this People, by Otho the Great, whence it had the name. The Town is not large, but beautified with two fair Churches, the one dedicated to Saint Annet, the other to Saint Francis: situate in the midst of the Island, from which the residue of the Towns are almost equally distant; and so commodiously seated for Trade and Merchandise, as they do not only traffick in the Baltick Sea, but in Sweden, Norway, Russia, Flanders, and Germany. 2. Nyborch, 3. Fornby, 4. Symborby, 5. Middelfart, whence the Strait is named, 6. Bornby, and 7. Kartemunde; all seated on some Haven, or convenient Creek. The principal of the Castles are, 1. Newborg, 2. Hagenschow, 3. Elschow, 4. Hinsagel, 5. the Court of Rugard. In this Island, not far from the Castle of Hagenschow, is the Mountain of Offarun, where John Ranzovius, An. 1430, discomfited the great Army of Christopher the Brother of Anthony, Earl of Oldenburg, coming in those unsettled times to invade the Kingdom, upon colour of restoring Christiern the second formerly deposed: in which Fight the Earls of Hoye and Tackelberg were both slain in the place, and the Kingdom after that in quiet from the like Pretensions.

South of Fionia, and under the Government hereof, are about 90 lesser Islands, most of them inhabited: the chief of which are,

4. LANGLAND, seven Dutch miles in length, in which, besides many Villages and Gentlemen Houses, we have the Town of Rudkoping, and the Castle of Franeke.

5. LAWLAND, disjoined from Seland by a little narrow Strait called Groen-sund; so plentiful of Corn and Cheefnuts, that Ships full freighted with them are sent yearly hence. An Island which, besides many Castles, Villages and Manfion-houses of the Gentry, hath five good Towns, viz. 1. Nysbade, 2. Nafco, 3. Tegrop, 4. Richeg, and 5. Maribone; in which last anciently was a very rich Monastery, the Revenues whereof are now employed for the endowment of the new University of Sora, founded by Christiern the fourth, as before was noted.

6. FALSTRE, four German miles in length, affording plenty of Corn yearly to some neighbouring Islands. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Nicopen, which for the Elegancy of the place and Pleasants of the Situation is called the Naples of Denmark. 2. Strubopon, from whence there is the ordinary passage into Germany; seven Dutch miles hence.

7. TUSING, not far from Swynborch, or Swineburg, a Town of Fionia; a Dutch mile in length, situate in a dangerous and troublesome Sea, from whence is no safe passage either to Seland, Funen, or Funland, though much distant from neither. Chief places in it are, 1. Affens, towards Funland, 2. Niburg, towards Seland, and 3. the Court of Keltorp, belonging to the noble Family of Refensent.

8. FEMERA, or FEMEREN, a fruitful and well-peopled Island, having in it the Towns of 1. Derborch, 2. Stabul, and 3. Pitterdorp. A place of great importance to the Crown of Denmark, not so much in danger of being made subject to the Imperialists by the taking of Holstein and both Funland, as by planting a strong Garrison in this small Island: and therefore with all diligence recovered by the King again, and better fortified than before, against all Invasions, Anno 1628. Of the remaining Islands which pertain unto Fionia, we find the names of 1. Aros, 2. Romsjö, 3. Endelo, 4. Ebelo, 5. Boko, 6. Brando, 7. Zoroe, 8. Agerius, 9. Hellens, 10. Jerde, 11. Birkholm, of which nothing memorable.

Amongst these Islands, but not subordinate to Fionia, are, 9. ARJA, belonging to the Dukedom of Sleswick, consisting of 3. Parishes, some Gentlemen Houses, and the Town and Castle of Koping: supposed to be the habitation of the Arvi, spoken of by Tacitus; but a Colony rather of them, as I suppose. And not far off,

10. ALSEN, another little Island, but of more repute called in Latine Elyfia, opposite to the Gulf or Bay of Flenburg in the Dukedom of Sleswick, to which it also appertaineth. Well stored it is with Beasts for profit, and Game for pleasure; so populous, that some thousands of men may be easily and suddenly raised in it; consisting of 13 Parishes and 4 Towns: that is to say, 1. Gammelgard, 2. Offersholm, 3. Nordenborg, and 4. the good Town and Castle of Sunderburg, one of the ordinary Residences of the Dukes of Sleswick, and honoured with the Birth of many of their Princes of the Royal Family. Some think it was the Habitation anciently of the Elyfi, spoken of by Tacitus, and by him placed next unto the Angli: But being the Angli in those times dwelt about the Elb, I rather think, that when some Colonies of the Angli scattered themselves in the Cimbriack Cherfonese, as before was said, some of the Arvi and Elyfi might go along for company, and plant themselves near them and these Islands.

11. BORNHOLM, the last of all the Baltick which belong to Denmark, is situate more Eastward, opposite to that part of Scandia which is called Bleking, betwixt it and Pomeran. An Isle of excellent Pasturage, breeding plenty of Cattel, therewith, as also with Butter, Cheese, Wool, Hides, and some store of Fruits, they supply the wants of some of their neighbours; besides good quantities of powdered Beef and Mutton, which they barrell up and sell to Marriners. It containeth many good Towns and wealthy Villages; the chief whereof is Bornholm, which gives name to the Island. Both Town and Island were pawned by some former Kings unto those of Lubeck; from them redeemed by King Frederick the second for a great sum of money, after it had been in their possession about 50 years.

These Islands in the time of Pomponius Mela were by one general name called the Hemades, in number reckoned to be seven; the residue either not inhabited, or not taken notice of, are now here mentioned in the Ancients. Of these seven; the greatest and best peopled was called Codanonia, (supposed to be Seland), in which the said Author placeth the Tentoni. By Ptolemy it is called

Scandia Minor, with reference to the great Peninsula of Scandia, supposed by him to be an Island. From this, or from the Sea adjoining called Sinus Cadanus, the people of these Islands and the vast Eastern Continent took the name of Danes; spreading the name afterwards, as they did their Conquests, over the Sound, and take notice of such other parts of this Kingdom as lie on the other side thereof, in the vast Continent or Demy-Island (which you will) of Scandia: of which somewhat must be first premised, in regard that not only some parts of Denmark, but the whole Country of Norway (the Northern Islands excepted) are contained in it.

SCANDIA, by Pliny and Salinus called Scandinavia; by Jornandes Scanzia, hath on the East that Bay or Branch of the Baltick which is called the Finnish or Badner Seas, on the North and West the main Ocean, on the South, where it points towards Germany, the Baltick or Offt Sea; the Dutch call it joined to the main Continent of Sarmatia by an Isthmus, or Neck of Land, at the bottom of the Badner Sea, not far from Wardhus. In regard of so great Seas on all parts thereof, it was generally by the Ancients thought to be an Island, but incomperita magnitudinis, of an unknown greatness, as both Pytheas and Xenophon Lampiacenus do affirm in Pliny, by one of which it is called Baltia, by the other Baltia; from whence the name of Baltick to the Sea adjoining. But later Navigations and Experience have confuted that opinion, by which it is found to be no Island, but a part of the Continent and a great one too; containing the whole Kingdom of Norway, the greatest part of the Kingdom of Sweden, and some part of Denmark. That part hereof which belongs to Denmark is situate in the South of this great Peninsula, and divided into the three Provinces of Hallandia, Scania, and Bleking; and in them are 23 Herets or Prefectures, and 15 Cities.

1. HALLANDIA, or HALLAND, hath on the East the wild Woods which part it from Gotland, on the West the intervening Sea betwixt it and Justland, on the North Sweden properly and specially so called, on the South Scandia or Schonen. A Country which for the healthfulness of the Air, plainness of the Soil, commodiousness of Havens, plenty of Fish, pleasure of Hunting, for inexhaustible Mines of Brass and Lead, (with some veins of Silver) frequency of well-peopled Towns and Villages, and Civility of the Inhabitants, is not inferior to any. Places of most importance in it are, 1. Lubum, 2. Halmstad, 3. Falkenberg; all of them on the Sea; at the mouth of navigable Streams, whose names I need not. 4. Wersberg, upon the Sea-side also, but fortified with a very strong Castle on the top of an Hill; taken and garisoned by the Swedes, Anno 1569, and not without great difficulty recovered by the Danes again, Anno 1569.

2. SCANIA, or SCHÖNEN, hath on the East Blekinga or Bleking, on the West the Sound, running along the shore hereof for the space of twenty German miles, on the North Halland, on the South the Baltick or Offt Sea. The Country is of the same nature with Halland, as before described; the Character of that pertaining to all the three, this having over and above as peculiar to it, that the Sea-shores are strewed with such Sholes of Herrings, that sometimes Ships are scarceable with wind and oar to break through them, and row off the Harbour. It is in length 72 miles, 48 in breadth. Chief Towns in which are, 1. Lundin, an Archbishop's See, the Metropolis of Denmark and Norway; advanced unto that honour by the means and mediation of Ericus the first, who purposely made a journey to Rome to elect that business; the Church of Denmark being before that time subject to the Archbishop of Breme. This was about the year 1100. It is situate somewhat within the Land, but the Cathedral, easily discernible by Mariners as they sail along, the City by its mean, and, were it not for the Cathedral, of its beauty at all. But that indeed is affirmed to be a work of much Magnificence and Art; especially for the Clock, the Dial, and some outward adjuncts. For in the Dial curiously set out with divers Colours are to be seen distinctly the Year, Month, Week-day, and Hour of every day throughout the year; with the Feasts, both moveable and fixed; together with the Motion of the Sun and Moon, and their passage through each Degree of the Zodiac. Then for the Clock, it is so framed by artificial Engines, that whensoever it is to strike, two horsemen encounter one another, giving as many blows, piece as the Bell sounds hours: and on the opening of a door there appears a Theatre, the Virgin Mary on a Throne with Christ in her Arms, and the three Kings or Magi (with their several Trains) marching in order, doing humble reverence, and presenting severally their Gifts; two Trumpeters sounding all the while, to adorn the Pomp of that Precellion. 2. Malmsbo, or Elbogen, (called by both names) at the very Southern point hereof, just opposite to Copenhagen in Seland, a well-traded Port; the Birth-place of Galpar Bartholinus, otherwise called Malmsboius Duns, that great Mathematician, supposed to be the Author of the Clock and Dial before described. 3. Trelleborg, on the North of Elbogen, a Land Jeron, on the Sea-side, of great strength and consequence. 5. Helsingborg, a mean Town, but fortified with an impregnable Castle, just opposite to Helsingore and Cronenburg in Seland; the other of the two Keys which openeth into the Sound. 6. Rottenby, a Frontier-town bordering on Scania, a Province of Swethland. 7. Christiana, or Christiansborg, a strong piece built by Christiern the fourth, Anno 1604, compassed by the Sea, and fortified by Puss and Marthus, thought to be impregnable.

3. BLESCIDA, or BLEKING, is bounded on the East and South with the Baltick Sea, on the North with Verendia, a Province of Swethland, on the West with Schania or Schonen; more mountainous and barren than either, but yet partaking somewhat of the former Character which we had of Halland. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Ufled, on the mouth of a River falling into the Baltick. 2. Christiernburg, in Latine Christiansopolis, on the borders of Swethland; raised out of the ground by Christiern the fourth, to defend his Kingdom on that side, Anno 1604, but not long after by a warlike stratagem surprised by the Swedes, in the late War betwixt those Kingdoms in the year 1611; destroyed and depopled by that Nation, who looked upon it as a dangerous and unpleasant Object, but since repaired and replenished. 3. Alnby, upon the River which divides the Kingdoms not far from Christiernburg.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Guts and Danciones, taking up the South-parts of this great Peninsula. Meridionalia tenent Guts & Danciones, as we find in Ptolemy, Geog. l. 2. c. 11. which in all probability must be meant of these Provinces. Of these the Guts, passing over into the Cimbriick Chersonese, possessed themselves of the North parts of it, since from them called Justland. The rest, uniting with the people of those many Islands which lie together in the Bay or Gulf called Sinus Cadanus, (now the Baltick Sea) took the name of Danes; and not from Dan, I know not what King thereof about 1000 years before the Birth of our Saviour. First taken notice of by that name in Jornandes de rebz Getarum, who lived about the time of Justinian the first; about which time, or not long after, it is conceived that they made them-themselves Masters of so much of the Cimbriick Chersonese as had been formerly possessed by the Justes and Angli, who those forsaken or ill-peopled Seats they possessed themselves of. After this we hear little of them till the time of Charles the Great, living in a confused estate, sometimes made subject to the Norwegians, sometimes to the Swedes, but always without Law and Order, till by the King Godfrey or Gormicus they were regulated by Laws, and reduced to an orderly kind of life, Anno 797. About this time they first began to infect the Coasts of England, invaded Friesland with a Fleet of 200 Sail, and had much weakened and endangered the great Empire of France, if the unseasonable death of Godfrey, and the Quarrels which arose about the Succession after his decease, had not kept them off. Their Affairs at home being again well settled, they employed their whole Forces against England, as the weaker Enemy: over which they tyrannized 250 years, and reigned 26 under three Kings of that Nation. Obscured of that, and the terror of their name being over, they have been most busied with their Neighbours of Sweden and Germany; improving their Estate, but rather by Marriages and civil Contracts, than by force of Arms, with the addition of the Kingdom of Norway and the Dukedom of Halslein: their pretensions to, and for a time the possession of, the Crown of Sweden getting them nothing in conclusion but Blows and Losses. So that we have no more to do then to find up a Catalogue of the Kings hereof, till the uniting of the two Crowns of Denmark and Norway, leaving the rest that follow to another place.

The Kings of DENMARK.

797

1. Gormicus the first Legislator of the Danes; and the Establisher of their Kingdom; a prudent and valiant Prince.

2. Olaus Son of Gormicus, or Godfrey.

3. Heningus, Son of Olaus.

873 4. Siward, Son of a Daughter of Godfrey, by the King of Norway.

6. Siward II.

7. Ericus, or Henricus, baptized at Mentz, at the same time with his Brother Harald, recovered the Kingdom to his House, (of which they had been ousted by the Race of Godfrey).

8. Canutus, the Son of Ericus, the Heathenish Son of a Christian and pious Father.

880. 9. Frodo, the Son of Canutus, a professed Christian.

886 10. Gormo, (our English Writers call him Gormundus) Son of Frodo.

899 11. Harald, the Son of Gormo, or Gormund.

900 12. Gormo II. Son of Harald, an enemy of the Christian Faith.

937 13. Harald II. Son of Gormo the second, a good Christian.

975 14. Sueno, or Swain, Son of Harald, at first a great Enemy of the Gospel, an Usurper of the Throne in his Father's life-time, and a great Scourge unto the English. Outed of his Estate by Ericus of Swethland, he received the Gospel, regained his Kingdom, and established Christianity in this Country; his War on England still continuing.

1010 15. Olaus, the eldest Son of Swain, King of Denmark and Norway.

1020 16. Canutus II. Brother of Olaus, the first King of England of the Danes, succeeded his Brother in the Kingdoms of Denmark and Norway; to which he added also the Crown of Sweden.

1037 17. Canutus III. Son of Canutus the second, the last King of England of the Race of the Danes.

1051 18. Magnus, Son of Olaus King of Norway.

1051 19. Sueno II. Silvers the Son of Canutus the second, by Olfo an English Duke.

1074 20. Harald III. bafe Son of Sueno the second.

21. Canutus IV. another of the bafe Sons of Sueno, murdered at the Altar in the Church of Odenfe in the Isle of Fionia; afterwards canonized a Saint.

1088 22. Olaus II. another of the bafe Sons of Swain.

1099 23. Ericus II. another of the bafe Sons of Swain, the Founder of the Archiepiscopal See of Lunden.

1102 24. Harald IV. bafe Son of Henry or Ericus the second.

1133 25. Nicolas, another of the bafe Sons of Swain.

1135 26. Ericus III. another of the bafe Sons of Ericus the second.

1140 27. Ericus IV. commonly called the fifth, (some one of the younger House being reckoned in), Nephew of Ericus the second.

1150 28. Sueno III. Son of Ericus the third, and Canutus the fifth, Grandchild of Nicolas, both Kings, the first reigning in Scandia, the other in Justland; both died without Issue; Canutus being slain by Sueno, and he by Waldemar.

1157 29. Waldemar, Son of Canutus, the lawful Son of Ericus the second, after the interposition of so many Barlards, succeeded at the last in the Throne of his Fathers. By his means the Knights and Vandals embraced the Gospel.

1185 30. Canutus V. Son of Waldemar.

1203 31. Waldemar II. Brother of Canutus, and Duke of Sleswick before his coming to the Crown.

1243 32. Ericus V. called the VII. Son of Waldemar the second, slain by the practices and Treason of his Brother Abel.

1251 33. Abel, Brother of Ericus, slain by the Peasants of Friesland.

1252 34. Christopher, Brother of Abel and Ericus.

1260 35. Ericus VI. (VIII.) Son of Christopher.

1287 36. Ericus VII. (IX.) younger Son of Ericus, supplanted his eldest Brother Christopher.

1327 37. Christopher II. eldest Son of Ericus, at first dispossessed of his Birth-right by his Brother Ericus; after whose death he succeeded in the Crown, by the help of his Half-brother, the Earl of Halslein.

1334 38. Waldemar III. Son of Christopher the second against whom and his Encroachments the Sea-towns, commonly called the Hanse, did first confederate, and vanquished him in many Battels.

1376 39. Margaret, Daughter and Heir of Waldemar the third, married with Agrim King of Norway, so uniting the Kingdoms of whom and their Successors we shall speak hereafter, when we have took a view also of the Kingdom of Norway, and the Appendix thereof.

3. NORWAY.

NORWAY is bounded on the East with Swethland, from which it is parted by a perpetual Ridge of rough and wild Mountains, called the Dojrine Hills, on all other parts by the Sea: that is to say, by the Frozen Sea upon the North; the German or Norwegian Ocean upon the West; and on the South with the Danish Sea,

Sea, interposing betwixt it and the Cimbriick Chersonese, being in breadth from Schagen, the most Northern point of Finland, to Congel, the most Southerly Town of Norway, no less than 250 miles.

It is called Norway quasi Tractus seu Via Septentrionalis, from the Northern situation of it containing in length 1300 miles, in breadth not above half so much, inhabited by a People given to Hospitality, Plain-dealing, and abhorring Theft. Anciently they were great Warriors, and became terrible to all the more Southern Nations; by whom they were called Normans, (that is to say, Honanes Boreales, or North-men, as Willielmus Gemericus rightly hath it) being at that time a Mixture of all the Northern Nations together, or of the Norwegians and Sweethlanders, apart from the Danes; whose steps they followed in their frequent, or rather continual, Piracies on the Coasts of England, France and Ireland. By Helmoldus in the same sense they are called Nordlandi, a name made into Latine out of the Dutch word Nord, and the French word Lieu, signifying men of a Northern Place or Nation.

Of the Position of it in regard of the Heavens we have spoke already, but more particularly it reacheth from the first Parallel of the twelfth Clime, where the Pole is elevated 8 Degrees, 26 Minutes, as far as to the 71. Degree of Latitude, by which account the longest Day in the Southern point is but 18 hours; whereas at Wardhuys, being situate farthest North of all this Country, they have no Night for almost three whole months together.

The Country is for the most part rocky, mountainous and barren, full of vast Woods, extrem cold, and but ill inhabited. In the best parts thereof it affords little Corn, and in the most Northern none at all; inasmuch that the common sort of people are fain to use dried Fish (that which we commonly call Stock-Fish) in stead of Bread; but the better (that is, the richer) sort buy Corn of such Merchants as come to traffick with them. Their chief Commodities are Stock-fish, rich Furs, Train-oil, Pitch, and Tackling for Ships, as Masts, Cables, Deekboards, and the like; which the Inhabitants exchange for Corn, Wine, Fruits, Beer, and other necessities for man's life. The Country is exceedingly troubled with certain little Beasts which they call lemmings. They are about the bigness of a Field-Mouse, and are by the Inhabitants said to drop out of the Clouds in tempestuous weather. They devour, like the Locusts, every green thing on the earth; and at a certain time die in heaps (as it were) together, and with their stench so poison the Air, that the poor people are long after troubled with the Jaundies and with a Giddiness in the Head. But these Beasts come not so often to infect the Land, as the Whales do to terrify and molest the shores; the Western Seas being very deep, and therefore a fit habitation for those great Leviathans: against whose violence and fury the Mariners and people of the Sea-coast have found a Remedy, which is by casting out some water intermixed with the Oyl of Cadzor; the smell whereof doth force them to retire immediately. Without this help there were no Fishing on these Coasts, which is the greatest Staple-commodity (besides materials for Shipping) which the Country yieldeth.

The Towns here are exceeding thin, and in them the Houses for the most part very poor and miserable, commonly patched up of Dirt and Hurdles, not much unlike our ordinary Cottage-houses in the Fan-Countries. It is distributed into five Prefectures or Governments, according to the number of the Castles which command the same. Of these,

1. The first most towards the South is the Castle of

BAHUTS: to which are subject the Towns of 1. Marsbrand, situate in a Demi-Island begirt with Rocks, of most note for the infinite quantity of Herrings caught hereabouts. 2. Congel, upon the Sea, a Town of Merchandise, opposite to Schagen in Denmark; 3. Odewald.

4. AGGERHUTS, the second of the five Royal Castles, hath under its Command the Towns of 1. Aslo, or Alfisa, on a Bay or Gullet opposite to Finland, an Episcopal See, and of most esteem of all the Country, by reason of the Courts of Judicature which are therein held. 2. Tomborg, or Koningsborg, that is to say, the King's or the Kingly Mountain, formerly a retiring-place of the Kings of Norway. 3. Frederickstade, built by one of the Fredericks, Kings of Denmark. 4. Schiu or Sehon, remarkable for its Mines of Iron and Copper. 5. Saltzburgh. 6. Hamar the greater, and 7. Hannar the less, divided by the interposing of the Bay called Sinus Muscovianus in former times the See of a Bishop, since removed to Alfisa, or rather thereunto united in these latter times, as many poor Bishops have been in Ireland.

3. BERGERHUTS is the third Castle of Command herein. Subordinate whereunto are, 1. Bergen, the principal Town of the Country, an Episcopal See, and the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark, situate amongst high Mountains at the bottom of a deep Creek or Arm of the Ocean called Carnegie. A noted Port, and much resorted to by Merchants of most foreign Nations, bringing in Corn, Meal, Bread, Beer, Wine, and Aqua-Vite, to supply the natural wants and defects hereof; and in exchange transporting hence Fish, Furs, Codage, and other materials for Shipping. In which regard it was accounted formerly one of the four chief Staple-Towns of the Dutch Merchants of the Hanse: the other three being London in England, Norwagrad in Muscovie, and Bruges in Flanders. But of late time this Bergen hath lost most of its Trade, removed hence to Wardhuys, nearer unto Muscovie: as the great Town of Novogorod, by reason of the change of Navigation from the Baltick into that of the Northern passage, hath given way to S. Nicolas; and Bruges was deprived of her Traffick by Antwerp, from whence it is removed to Amsterdam. For the Hollanders, by blocking up the Haven, but especially by keeping Bergen up Zoon, have such a command over the River, that no Vessel can pass or repass without their license. 2. Staffenger, an Episcopal See also, but not else observable.

4. The Castle of TRONDHEIM is the fourth, situate in the Town of Trondheim, or Dronheim, formerly called Tronden, and in Latine Nidrosia; the See of an Archbishop, who is the Metropolitan of Norway. A beautiful City heretofore, but since the Subjection of this Country unto the Danes reduced to a Burrough. So called of the River Nider, upon which it is seated, and therefore a fit habitation for those great Leviathans: Rofa, the name thence of the principal Church; which in time gave place to the Cathedral for greatness and nearness of the Fabric, all of polished Stone, not giving place in any Europe, about the year 1530 much defaced with Fire, which began at the Altar, the damage done by it being estimated at 7000 Crowns; a great sum of money in those times, and for 1000 a Country. So that, by casting up our reckoning, we find in Norway one Archbishop and four Bishops; that is to say, the Archbishop of Trondheim or Nidrosia, the Bishops of Bergen, Alfisa, Staffenger, and Hannar: of the same Power, Jurisdiction and Revenue, since the Reformation, as those of Denmark whereof, and of the first Conversion of this People to the Christian Faith, we have spoke already.

5. The fifth and last Castle which commands this Country is that of WARDHUTS, so called of the Town

Town of Wardhuys, as that is from the Isle Ward, in which it is seated. A small Castle, and the Town in former times but mean and poor, situate in the extreme North-point of all this Kingdom; but in those times accounted (as easily it might) for the chief of this Prefecture, and honoured in the Summer time with the Seat and Residence of the Governour, retiring more Southwards in the Winter, at what time, by reason of the extremity of the Cold, and long absence of the Sun for some months together (the Town lying within the Arctick Circle) it is hardly habitable. But of late time it is much improved both in Wealth and Building, by reason of the removal of the English Trading from Novogorod, near the Baltick Sea, to the Town of S. Nicolas, not far from hence; drawing by that means the Trade of Muscovie and Norway more near together. So that now it is not only useful unto the Danes, in regard that it somewhat aveth the neighbouring Lappians, and commandeth the Natives, for that cause fortified very strongly by King Frederick the second; but made very profitable to him also, by the resort of Dutch and English, who mult of necessity touch at it (if they make no stay there) in their way to Muscovie. Other Towns in these two last Prefectures are not worth looking after.

And so much for the Continent or Main-land of Norway: let us next look upon the Islands in the Northern Ocean which belong unto it.

The ISLANDS in the Northern Ocean.

THE Northern Sea, so named from its Northern situation, is by some called Mare Scythicum, because it coasted along the Shores of Scythia; by Juvenal Oceanus Glacialis, because often frozen; by Pliny, in the same sense, Mare Alacchium, the word in the Scythick Language signifying frozen, or congealed; by the Russians Moscovites Myrmanowsky More; by the Cimbrians, in their Tongue, Marimorssa, that is to say, the Dead Sea, because of the snowiness of its motion, often clogged with Ice; and, in the same sense, Mare pigram, by Tacitus. This Tacitus doth best describe, from whom take it thus. "Trani Suones Mare alacchium grum & prope immotum, &c. Beyond the Swedes there is another Sea, so flow and almost immovable, that many think it to be the Bounds which compass the whole World. Some are persuaded that the Sound of the Sun is heard as he ariseth out of this Sea; and that many flaps of Gode are seen, and the Beams of his Head. Illic usque (& sama vera) tantum Natura; At this Sea (the Report is credible) is the end of Nature and the World. The English were the first of all civil people who adventured to open and discover the Passages of it, under the conduct of Richard Chancelour, arriving by this way in Russia, An. 1553, and tracing out the way; which others of that Nation, together with the Flemmings, Hollanders, and some Towns of the Hanse, have since followed. Of which more in Muscovie. The principal Islands dispersed in it are, 1. Greenland. 2. Island. 3. Free-Land, belonging to the Crown of Norway, to be surveyed at the present: Novia Zemla and Sir Hugh Willoughbie's Island, appertaining (if to any) to the Knez, or great Duke of Muscovie, of which more hereafter.

1. ISELAND is situate under the Arctick Circle; in length 144 German miles, 65 in breadth. So called from the abundance of Ice in it and about it, frozen continually for the space of 8 months, and so vehemently chilled with the Northern Winds, that it yieldeth neither Corn nor Trees, except Juniper only: yet there is Grass in such abundance, that the people are of opinion, that if they do not sometimes keep their Cattel from feeding, they are in danger to surfeit and die with fulness. Beasts for Labour here are both Horses and Oxen; the Oxen and Kine without Hous, but the Sheep not so; and they have also here a fine breed of little Dogs, known amongst us by the name of Island Dogs, the delight of Ladies; as also white Falcons and white Ravens, Eagles with white Tails, with Hares and Bears of the same colour. By reason of their want of Corn, the people eat Stock-fish (as in Norway) in stead of Bread: yet notwithstanding, by reason of the benefit of the Sea and access of Strangers, they have all things necessary brought unto them, (even to Wood and Timber) of which the richer sort make use, giving the Merchant in return sometimes the flesh of Bees and Mutton, but ordinarily Butter, Skins, Horses, Hawks, Brimstone, and Fish especially, the Staple Commodity of the Country; of which they have such plenty, and of so good condition, that a piece of Island Ling is counted with us as a fit Dish for a Nobleman's Table.

The people for the most part are of a plain and simple nature, living (as in the Golden Age) on that which Nature gives them, without help of Art, more than that of making Cheese and Butter: the Mountains serving them for Towns, and the Rivers for Drink, and their Lodging is all under one roof with their Horses and Oxen. They use neither Physick nor Physicians, yet live so long (and probably the longer for it) that many of them attain to the age of 150 years and more. The Women are exceeding fair, but they know not how to attire themselves; nor is there any difference in Apparel betwixt the Sexes, so that it is not easy to know one from another. Few of them but have some familiar Spirit to do them service: and notwithstanding the endeavour of the Ministers to purge them from this Impiety, yet it is so grained in them that they cannot leave it.

It is observable, that notwithstanding the cold condition of this Island, yet in many places it is full of Heats and Fire under the ground; which, by the Antipersifaps of the cold Air stopping the Pores of the Earth, and taking from it the liberty of Evaporation, doth burn more vehemently: inasmuch that there are three high Mountains whose Tops are always covered with Snow, and yet continually burning. The names of them are Hecla, Helga, and La-Croix, but the first the principal, by some called Heelsfort; which sometimes casts off Fire, sometimes flaming Water, then Black Ashes and Pumice-Stones, in so great abundance that it darkens the Sun, and makes the Country for six miles round about it to be uninhabited. Stranger things are not spoken of Etna than of these three Mountains: and here the Superstitious people have the same opinion which they have in Sicily, viz. That underneath must needs be Hell, and the habitations of the damned. But to judicious men the natural reason of these Flames is plain and obvious; occasioned by those veins of Brimstone (great quantity whereof they send in to foreign parts) on which the foundation of the Hills is laid: here being many Rathes and Fountains of hot water, which have Sulphur swimming at the top.

At the first planting of this Island, the people did not trouble themselves with building Towns, but every one sealed himself where he thought convenient, dwelling in Cells and Caverns digged in the bottom of the Rocks. By means whereof the Inland parts have not many Houses: but the Sea-coasts, since the coming of so many Strangers to them, begin to be built in many places, the Buildings for the most part being of Timber, roofed with Flages with an Hole on the sides of the roof to let in the Light. So that we are not to expect many fine Towns or Cities: the principal of them which are being, 1. Halar, in the North,

North, and 2. Schalbolt, in the Southern part; both Bishops Sees, having petty Schools, consisting of 24 Scholars apiece, to whom the Latine Tongue is taught at the charge of the Bishops. 3. Haffenford, an Haven Town, where under Tents the Danish Merchants barter their Commodities. And 4. Befede, a Castle, the ordinary Residence of the Governour for the Kings of Denmark.

It hath been generally conceived that this Island is that Thule which the Poets so often speak of: as Tib. servat ultima Thule, in Virgil; Nec sit terra ultima Thule, in Seneca the Tragedian. Nor did there want some reason to persuade them to this opinion; this being indeed the farthest part of the old known World. But greater reasons are against it. For when Solinus saith, Multa sunt circa Britannicum Insulae, et quibus Italia ultima, I hope Thule must be one of the British Isles. And when Tacitus saith of Agricola, Insulas quas Orcades vocant domuit, despecta est & Thule, I am sure that Island is so far from being kenne'd by any one of the Orcades, that it is at least eight Degrees distant. So that Thule must be sought for in another place, and where that is hath been shewed already. As for Island, it was so far from being known unto the Ancients, that it was hardly known unto those of Norway till the year 874, when some of the Norwegians were driven out of their Country by Harald the first, who first suppressing the many Petty Kings of the Norwegians, made many of them seek new Dwellings; of which some few arrived here; where finding room enough to plant in, and no great loss (if any) by change of their Dwelling, they invited many of their Friends and Countrymen to come unto them. An. 1070, they were converted to the Gospel by some Preachers sent thither from Adelbert the Archbishop of Breme. By whose perswasion and procurement they founded two Episcopal Sees; adding thereto in tract of time eight Religious Houses: that is to say, the Monasteries of Pingore, Remsfelde, Modur, and Monkeniere, under the Government and Jurisdiction of the Bishop of Halar; and those of Videy, Pernehar, Kirkebar, and Skiaude, under the Bishop of Schalbolt. In the year 1260, it was first brought under the Crown of Norway, following since that the Fortunes of it in all Changes both of Church and State; made subject with it to the Kings of Denmark, together with it reformed in matters of Religion according to the Confession of Angiburg, retaining still their Bishops, with a limited power, and turning the Revenues of their Monasteries unto other uses, as there they did, according to the will and pleasure of their Lords of Denmark.

2. South-west of Island lies another, and as cold an Isle, commonly called by the name of FRESLAND, from the continual Frosts unto which it is subject. By the Latines it is called Frislandia, to distinguish it from Frisia or Frisland in Germany. It is situate under the North Frigid Zone; but not so much within the Arcticus as Island is; the longest Day here in the height of Summer not exceeding 20 hours: and yet the Soil is so cold and barren, that it beareth neither Corn nor Fruit, the Inhabitants living most on Fish; which as it is their only Food, so it is also their chief Commodity wherewith to entertain or invite the Merchant. And hereof there is such abundance caught upon their Coasts, that they are never without the company of Hanse-men, Scots, Hollanders, Danes, and English, by which last it hath been so frequented in these later times, that it hath been called by some the Western England. For quantity it is somewhat bigger than Island; but by reason of the bitter Air, and the Defects above mentioned, very thinly inhabited. The chief Town of it is called Fresland, by the name of the Island; situate on the Eastern Shore of it. Besides which, there are some others set down in the Maps; as 2. Sa- mesfor. 3. Andefor. 4. Sorand, but not much observable. Westward whereof, as Zieglerus (and out of him Magnus) telleth us, is a less Island called Icaria, giving the name of Mare Icarium to the Sea adjoining: so called (by his mistake or translation of the Fable) from Icarus the Son of Dedalus, a King of Crete, who did once (but no body knows when) Land it over these Islands.

III. GROENLANDIA, so called, as some say, from the Greenness of it in the Summer; as others say, by Antiphrasis, because never green, by reason of the sharpness of Winter. But the former Etymology is more agreeable to the state of the Country. For though it be continually covered with Snow, except in June, July and August, (inasmuch that though the people be always clad with Furs and Skins, yet they feel no heat) yet in those months it is exceeding fresh and green, and affords good Pasturage. It is situate for the greatest part within the Arctic, between the 65. and 77. Degrees of Northern Latitude: so that the longest Day in the Southern part is 21 hours and a half; and in the most Northern they have no Night for three months and two weeks. The known length of it is affirmed to be 600 miles, and may be longer than so for ought that any body knows: there being no perfect discovery made of it hitherto, though much frequented by the English and Hollanders, (two great Seafaring Nations) for the benefit of the Whale-fishing, making there in use. Their chief Commodities are Fish, White Bears, wild Deer, and some Stores of Cattel there bred upon their Pastures, but housed for the most part all the Winter. The greatest part of the people dwell in the Caves, and delight in Necromancy, to which they are more wilfully addicted than those in Island, because less acquainted with the Gospel.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Saint Thoms, (in which there is a Monastery of Dominican Friars) seated in the North-East part of the Island; concerning which Mercator speaks of one thing which is very observable, relating that it is not far from a flaming burning Mountain, seated upon hot scalding springs, conveyed by Pipes of stone into the Monastery, and serving both as a Stove to warm them, and for a Fire to boil their Victuals. The Walls of the Monastery are built of Pumice-stones cald out of that Mountain; which, being tempered with the water of those burning Springs, doth make glutinous substance, serving instead of Lime, and as long durable. The Gardens of the Convent, in regard of this heat, flourish all the year with Herbs and sweet smelling Flowers; and the adjoining Sea, for the same reason being never frozen, affords good plenty of Fish and Fowl the whole year about, not only for the Monks, but the neighbouring Islanders. So far and to this purpose. The second Town of note is Iloa, not far from this Monastery: and 3. Manderpre, on the South-East-point. Others, as in a Country not well discovered, we have little notice of: though it be near 300 years since Nicolas Zenin, a Venetian, cast by Tempest on the Coast of Frisland, and by the King thereof employed upon new Discoveries, An. 1380, first made it known to us of Europe; it being immediately on that discovery possessed by the Norwegians, and made a Member and portion of that Crown.

As for the Norwegians themselves, now their Fellow-subjects, they were first known in the time of Petery by the name of Chedini, possessing then the Western parts of Scandia. Uniting with their Neighbours, both Danes and Swedish, they became better known in the flourishing times of the French Empire by the name of Normans; first called so by Eginhartus in his History of the Life of Charles the Great, insinuating then the Sea-coasts of France and Belgium. Under this name they fell so heavily on the French, especially in the times of Charles the Simple, that they extorted from him that goodly Country, since of them called Normandy, conferred on Rollo, first Duke thereof, Anno 912, whose Successors much increased their glory by the Conquest of England; as some private Adventurers of them did by the Conquest of the Kingdoms of Naples, Sicily, and Antioch. Afterwards settling on their own bottom, every one of these Northern Nations acting by itself, they were called Norwegians: sometimes, as formerly, commanding over all three Kingdoms, subject successively to each; but most and soon governed by their own Kings, till their final Subjugation by the Danes. And as a Nation acting solely and by itself, they subdued Ireland under the conduct of Turgissus, who tyrannized there for a time; as also all the Orkades and the Isle of Man, fold or surrendered by them upon good conditions to the English and Scots, who by those Titles still possess them. The Catalogue of their Kings, leaving out all those of the darker times (parallel to our Brute and the first Scottish Fergus) as merely fabulous, we will begin with King Suibadigerus, who was King of all the three Kingdoms, and at his death divided them again amongst his three Sons; whose Successors Manster thus reckoneth.

The Kings of NORWAY.

1. Suibadigerus.
2. Haddingus.
3. Hetharius.
4. Collerus.
5. Frogerus.
6. Gistarus.
7. Rotherus.
8. Helga.
9. Hajmannus.
10. Reginaldus.
11. Gimmarus.
12. Olmundus.
13. Olauus.
14. Olmundus II. not long after whose time, Anno scilicet 800, the Normans began their Irruptions.
15. Aquinus.
16. Heraldus.
17. Olauus.

18. Sueno, King of Denmark by Birth and of Norway by Conquest.
19. Olauus III. Son of Swain or Sueno, succeeded in the Realm of Denmark and Norway, Canutus his younger Brother being King of England. In this King's time the Norwegians first received the Gospel.
20. Canutus, King of England, succeeded his Brother Olauus in the Kingdoms of Denmark and Norway, to which he also added the Crown of Sweden.
21. Sueno II. by whom the Kingdom was restored to the Norwegians.
22. Canutus II.
23. Magnus.
24. Harald II.
25. Magnus II. King of Sweden and Norway.
26. Magnus III. King of Sweden and Norway, intending the Crown of Sweden for Ericus his eldest Son, conferred that of Norway on Hagquin, or Aquinus, his second Son.
27. Aquinus, King of Norway, younger Son of Magnus the third, married with Margaret, eldest Daughter of Waldemar the third, King of Denmark; so uniting the Kingdom. And though Olauus, the only Son of his Bed, died young without any Issue; yet the Danes, having once got footing in Norway, so assured themselves of it, that they have ever since possessed it as a subject Kingdom, keeping the Natives to poor and low, that they are not able to assert their former Liberties, and not permitting them to use any Shipping, so much as for transporting their own Commodities, for fear they should grow wealthy and strong at Sea. Besides the strong Garrisons maintained in most parts of the Kingdom kept in in such an absolute Awe, that they dare not stir against the Danes, if their stomachs served them. So that now Norway, or both made subject to the Crown of Denmark, or both made Fellow-subjects to the same King, we must next look upon these Kingdoms, not as Kings of each distinct and separate from the other but as they are in Fact and Title.

The Kings of DENMARK and NORWAY.

- 1376 1. Hagquin, or Aquinus, King of Denmark and Norway: of this last by Descent, of the other by Marriage.
- 1380 2. Olauus, Son of Aquinus and Margaret.
- 1383 3. Margaret, Wife of Aquinus, Mother of Olauus, and Daughter of Waldemar the third, after the death of her Son, (in whose time she governed as his Guardian) took upon her the Kingdom in her own Right, not only keeping Norway in the State she found it, but adding unto Denmark the Crown of Sweden, won by the Vanquishment of Albert Duke of Mecklenburg, then King thereof. A gallant and magnanimous Lady, the Semiramis of Germany.
- 1411 4. Ericus, Duke of Pomerania, and Knight of the Garter, Son of the Lady Mary, Dutches of Pomerania, Daughter of Ingeburgis, the Sister of Margaret, by whom he was adopted for her Heir, succeeded after her decease in all the three Kingdoms: outed of all before his death by a strong Faction made against him, and his Estates conferred on
- 1439 5. Christophher, Count Palatine of the Rhene, and Duke of Bavaria, (but in Title only) the Son of Margaret, Sister of Ericus; chosen by the joint consent of all the States of these Kingdoms. After whose death (without Issue) the Danes considering the great advantage they had gotten by the addition of Norway, pitched upon Adolphus, Duke of Sleswick and Earl of Holftein, for the next Successor, that they might get in those Estates to their Kingdom also. Who, excusing himself by reason of his Age and want of Children, commended to them Christiern Earl of Odenburg, his Kinsman and next Heir, who was chosen accordingly.
- 1448 6. Christiern, Earl of Odenburg, upon the commendation of his Uncle Adolphus, chosen King of Denmark and Norway, succeeded his said Uncle in the Estates of Holftein and Sleswick, continuing since united unto that Crown, and added also thereto by Conquest the Kingdom of Sweden.

- 1482 7. John, Son of Christiern, succeeded in all three Kingdoms; Knight of the Order of the Garter.
- 1514 8. Christiern II. Son of John, King of Denmark, Norway and Sweden, which last he held under with great cruelty; hated by reason of his Tyranny toward all sorts of people, and ousted of his Kingdoms by his Uncle Frederick, Anno 1522. by whom at last he was taken and kept in prison till he died, Anno 1559.
- 1523 9. Frederick, Brother of John, and Uncle of Christiern the second, chosen King of Denmark and Norway on the Abdication of his Nephew, Reformed Religion in both Kingdoms according to the confession of Angsborg.
- 1535 10. Christiern III. suppressed with great trouble the Party formed against him in behalf of Christiern the second, perfected the Reformation begun in the time of his Father, and was a great Benefactor to the University of Copenhagen.
- 1559 11. Frederick II. Son of Christiern the third, subdued Diemarsh, before unconquered by the Danes or Earls of Holfstein, and added it unto that Dukedom, (both being united to that Crown though held of the Empire) Knight of the Garter.
- 1588 12. Christiern IV. Son of Frederick the second, Brother of Anne Queen of great Britain, and Knight of the Garter; who engaging in a War against the Emperor Ferdinand the second for the Liberty of Germany, was suddenly beat out of all the Cimbrick Cheerfulness by the prevailing Imperialists, but compounded the business upon very good Terms, and was restored to all his own.
- 1648 13. Frederick III. the youngest Son of Christiern the fourth, his eldest Brethren being all dead without Issue, succeeded in the Crowns of Denmark and Norway.

Having thus mustered up the Kings of these several Kingdoms, taken distinctly and conjunct; we must next look upon the way of their coming to their Royal Throne, their form of Government together with their Power, abilities and Revenues incident unto it. As for the manner of their coming to the Royal Throne, the Danes pretend their Kingdom to be Elective, and not Hereditary; yet so as they have always let the eldest Son on the Throne of his Father, unless some extraordinary occasion have disposed it otherwise. But they that look upon their Stories in the former times can see no such matter, the Kingdom going generally in the way of Succession, unless by Faction or Usurpation more popular and powerful Pretender hath interposed; as often times hath happened in such other Estates as are Hereditary merely, without claim or colour of Election. 'Tis true, that the Male-issue failing in Olaus the Son of Margaret, and the Princess which pretended by the Females after her decease not being of sufficient power to assert their Titles; the Kingdom was transferred to the house of Oldenburg, who held it on no other ground than by that of Election. Which, being an extraordinary case, is to make no Precedent, though seconded by the ousting of King Christiern the second, and the advancement of Frederick unto that Estate: these being acts of Violence and Force, and justified only by the false Topick of Success. But whoever lost by the hand, the Danes got well by it; King Frederick taking up the Crown upon such Conditions as have made him and his Successors little more than Titular. For he was fain to swear at his Coronation, that he would put none of the Nobility to death or Banishment but by the judgment of the Senate, that the Great men should have power of Life and Death over their Tenants or Vassals; that no Appeal should lie from them to the King's Tribunal; nor the King be partaker of the Consecrations, nor, finally, advance any to Commands and Honours but by consent of his great Council. Which Oath being all taken by his Successors, made Adams say, Non tam re ipsa quam appellatio Reges esse; that they were only Kings in Title, but not Kings indeed. Yet in regard that the Nobility (so they call their Gentry) have but small Estates, none of them above the degree of Knights, (except only the Princes of the Blood) and that Decree conferred by the King alone; it is not often found that they have dared to cross or oppose their King, but when some of the Royal Family (out of private ends) have conferred with them in it as in the case of Christiern the 2. deposed by the People. but these people headed and set on by his Uncle Frederick, who had an eye upon the Crown.

As for the Senate or great Council, spoken of before, it consists wholly of men chosen out of the Nobility, (who are to prove their Gentry by a long Descent) seldom exceeding the number of 28. to each of which there is allowed a convenient Salary, with some fair Cattle in the Country for his Retirements, during his being of that Body: his whole Estate being freed also for that time from all publick Payments. Without their Council and advice the King is neither to determine of Peace or War, or to enter into any new League or Confederacies, nor impose any Tax upon the Subject; and unto them and the King jointly is the last Appeal: such being the Constitution of this Estate, that all Causes and Controversies are first decided in the Prefecture or Heret (184 in number) where they first arise: from whence it is lawful to appeal to the Judge of the Province, from him to the Chancellor of the Kingdom, and finally to the King and Council. By the Laws of Waldemar the first, who first reduced the Laws into set form and writing, the Bishops were to sit with his Council in all Causes of moment: but were discharged from that Employment by King Christiern the third, by whom it was also ordained, that the Clergy should not sell any of the Church-lands without leave of the King.

The Forces which this King or Kingdom are able to raise may best be seen by some of their particular Undertakings: those specially of Christiern the second, who, at the request of Henry the second of France, sent a Navy of an hundred Sail into Scotland against the English, and therein no fewer than 10000 Soldiers; and of Frederick then Duke of Holfstein, who in his War had them Christiern, (whose removal from the Crown he had then projected) brought 80000 men into the field to make good his Quarrel. And questionless considering the many Ports and Islands that this Crown is Master of, both within the Baltick and without, it cannot be but he may suddenly raise a strong power at Sea. And then considering that each of the Nobility, which are here so numerous enough, is bound to find a certain number of Horse upon all occasions; as are those also who hold Lands of the King, which the Danes call Ferlenings; it will accordingly be concluded, that they are able to make good Levies for a sudden Service, especially in defence of their own Dominions.

The Revenue of this King consisteth principally in the great Impost laid upon all Ships which pass through the Sound: the greatness whereof may easily be conjectured at by the multitude of Ships which of necessity must pass pass by in the Trade of the Baltick, though of late somewhat lessened of what it was, since the English found out and frequented the Northern passage into Muscovia. There are also some Crown-lands, and a great yearly Toll made of the Cattel which pass into Germany; as also of the Fifth transported into other Countries. And yet it is conceived that the Treasures of this King are not very great: partly because there is no other important Commodity but Fish to draw Merchants thither; and partly that there is not any one Town of any great Traffick in all his Realms for the entertaining of Commerce.

The chief order of Knighthood in it is that of the Elephant, instituted by Frederick the second. Their Badge, a Collar powdered with Elephants towed, supporting the Kings Arms, and having at the end the picture of the Virgin Mary.

The Arms hereof are Quarterly, 1. Or, three Lions passant Verr, crowned of the first, for the Kingdom of Denmark; and secondly, Gules, a Lion Rampant Or, crowned and armed of the first, in his Paws a Dank Hatchet Argent, for the Kingdom of Norway. What Arms belong to him as Duke of Holfstein and Sleswick I am yet to seek.

There are in Denmark

Archbishops 2. Bishops 13;

Copenhagen. Sora.

And so much for the Kingdom of DENMARK.

SWETHLAND.

SWETHLAND is bounded on the East with Moscow, on the West with the Dofvine Hills, which divide it from Norway; on the North with the great Frozen Ocean, spoken of before, on the South with Denmark, Liefland, and the Baltick Sea. So called from the Sueci, Suehens, or Suehidi, and the word Land, added for a termination; of which more hereafter.

It is in length, from Stockholm unto the borders of Lapland, above 1000 Italian miles; and in breadth from Stockholm, lying on the Budner Sea, to the Borders of Denmark, about twenty good days journey on horseback: inasmuch as they which have travelled the length and breadth of it, on this side of Lapland and the Gulf or bay of Budner, account it little less than all Italy and France together; but taking in Lapland, and the Provinces on the other side of the Gulf, bigger than both by the quantity of 900 miles.

The situation of it in regard of the Heavenly bodies is the same with Norway, under the same Parallels and Degrees; but of so different a temper, both for Soil and Air, as if disposed of under several and long-distant Climates. For the Air here is very pure, but not fish-pur and insupportable as it is in Norway: though in some places, where the Moors and Waters fettle, for want of care to open and cleanse the Water-courses they have great Fogs and Mists, which do somewhat putrify it. And for the Soil, it is more fertile than any of the other Northern Provinces: so that besides those Necessaries which they keep for themselves, they usually transport into other Countries store of Malt and Barley; together with great quantities of Brass, Lead, Steel, Copper, Iron, the Hides of Goats, Bucks, Oxen, and costly Furs. They have also fine Mines of Silver, not mix with any other Metal; plenty of Fish in their Lakes and Rivers; abundance of Pine-trees, Firre, Oaks, both for Ships and Houses; yielding besides, among the Woods, good store of Tar and Honey, and some other Necessaries. But hereof we shall speak more punctually in the several Provinces.

The principal Mountains of this Country are the Dofvine Hills, a vast and continual Ridge of Mountains which divide it from Norway. And though they want not Rivers fit for common uses, yet partly by reason of their great Frosts and flakes of Ice, partly by reason of the falling of Trees which lye cross their Channels, they have not many navigable, or any of great fame. The principal of such as be, are 1. Adeler, at the mouth whereof stands the City of Stockholm, 2. Lusen, 3. Dac-lacarie, giving name to the Province so called, or denominated from it. And of the Lakes, whereof here are exceeding many, that of most note is the Lake of Werer, which, receiving into it 24 Rivers, disburtheneth it self at one mouth into the Baltick, with such noise and fury, that they call it commonly the Devil's head.

The people are naturally strong and active, provident, patient and industrious; hospitable towards Strangers, whom they entertain with great Humanity; so healthy, that, if they do not shorten their days by Excess and Riot, they live commonly to 140 years of age; and so laborious, that a Beggar is not seen amongst them. Of no great note for Arts or Arms in the times foregoing: not much addicted to the one; and so kept under by the Danes, that they could not grow eminent in the other: but much improved in both respects in these later days. Eriem, the first King of the present Race, who cleared his Country of the Danes, and Gustavus Adolphus, the last King, who freed the Germans from the yoke of the House of Austria, not being easily to be matched in the Arts of War. And since they began to give themselves to the sweets of Learning, this Country hath produced (amongst some other learneth men) Olaus Magnus, Archbishop of Upsal, of great note for his History of the Gothland / Vandals : the First-fruits of this Nation in the liberal Sciences. And it is probable, by reason of their late Commerce with the German Nations, they will give better testimony to the World hereafter of their proficiency in this kind, as being generally exceeding apt to learn the Arts Mechanical, every man in a manner being his own Artificer, without employing Smith, Mason, Carpenter, or any other manual Trades. Very valiant they are both on foot and horseback, which their long Wars against the Danes, and their late Wars in Germany, have given good proof of. Their Women are discreet and modest, free from that Intemperance which these Northern parts are subject to. Both sexes use a corrupt Dutch, common to all three Northern Kingdoms; except in Finland, and the Provinces on the other side of the Bodner Sea, where they partake somewhat of the Moscovite or Russian Language.

The Christian Religion was first planted amongst them by the care and diligence of Aufgarus Archbishop of Breme, the Apostle-general of the North. Corrupt with Popish Superstitions, it was reformed, according to the Augustine Confession, in the time of Gustavus Ericus, the first of that present Royal Family, solicited thereunto by one Peter Neveius a Lutheran Divine, and Lawrence, the Archdeacon of Strengeus; but chiefly moved (as others say) by a desire to appropriate to himself the Goods of the Church. And this appears to have had some strong influence upon him in it, that he presently seized upon what he pleased; and made a Law, that Bishops should enjoy no more than the King thought fit: yet having pretty well lessened their Revenues, he was content they should remain as formerly both in power and number; referring to himself and his Successors the Nomination of the persons, but so as the Approbation of the Clergy (in a kind of Election) doth usually go along with the Kings appointment.

The Bishops are in number seven: that is to say, 1. of Lincon, containing in his Diocese 226 Parishes. 2. Of Vexime, under whom are 210. 3. Of Scara, ruling over the same number of Churches. 4. Of Strengeus, under whom are a hundred only. 5. Of Ab, the greatest for extent of all, as comprehending under it 500 Parishes. 6. Of Wyborg, and 7. of Halsby, whose Dioceses for the most part lie out of the bounds of Sweden, in Moscovia, Livonia, and some other of the out-parts of the Realm of Poland. All of them are under the Archbishop of Upsala, their Metropolitan, whose Diocese, extending into Lapland and Finnmark, containeth 171 Parish-Churches. By which account there are in all the Kingdom of Swethland but 1417 Parishes; but many of them a thousand or eight hundred Families: the people being dispersed in Forests and other places, where they have flocks of Timber to build their houses, and flocks of Pasturage for their Cattel; which is the reason why they have not so many great Towns, nor so well inhabited, as is usual in far lesser Countries. As for the Authority of these Bishops, they still retain their Voice in Parliament, and with them so many of the inferior Clergy as are from every Socken (a certain number of Parishes, like our Rural Decanries) deputed to appear there in the name of the Church: the Affairs whereof the Bishops do direct and order, as well in as out of public Meetings, according to the Ecclesiastical Constitutions formerly established; and if any great occasion be, they may either advise with their Consistorials, or call a Diocesan Synod, (as they think most fit) and therein make such Laws and Canons as they conceive to be most proper for their own Edification.

The whole Kingdom is divided into two parts, the one lying on the East, the other on the West-side of the Bay or Gulf of Bodner, called Sinus Bodicus in Latine, being a large and spacious Branch of the Baltick Sea, extending from the most Southern Point of Gothland, as far as to Lapland on the North. According to which division, we have the Provinces of 1. Gothland, and 2. Sweden, lying on the West-side of the Gulf; 3. Lapland, shutting it up upon the North; 4. Bodius or Bodden, and 5. Finland, on the East-side thereof; and 6. the Swedish Islands, where it mingleth with the rest of the Baltick.

1. G O T H L A N D.

G O T H L A N D is bounded on the East with the Bodner Sea, on the West with the Mountains which divide it from Norway, and so much of Denmark as lies in the same Continent with it, on the North with Sweden, on the South with the Sea Baltick. So called either from the Goths, whose original Country it is commonly affirmed to be, or quasi goot Land, from the goodness and fertility of the Soil, (Gootlandia, quæ Germanice Terra bona fert, as Maginus out of Minster hath it) the Soil being very fruitful for Corn and Cattel, affording plenty of Mines, with great store of Fish, and generally a better conditioned Country than any of the rest of these Northern Regions.

It is divided commonly into Ostro-goth, or East-Gothland; West-Goth, divided from the former by the great Lake of Werer, spoken of before; and South-Gothland, subdivided into Smalandia, Tuiscia, and Vendia. Chief Towns in Ostrogoth are, 1. Lincon, a Bishops See. 2. Lodise, adorned with a very fair Haven. In West-Goth, 3. Scara, on the Lake Werer, a Bishops See also. 4. Elfsborg, on the Western Sea, betwixt Denmark and Norway, a place of consequence, and flanked with two very strong Castles in the parts adjoining, the one called Croning, and the other Goldberg. 5. Tragnalle, remarkable for iron works, occasioned by the Mines adjoining. And finally, in South-Gothland there is 6. Vexime, or Vexia, another of the Episcopal Sees. 7. Walburg, a reasonable fair Town, with a strong Castle. 8. Elchebni, in that part bereft which is called Vendia, near the Confines of Denmark. 9. Calmar, a noted and well traded Port on the Baltick Sea, beautified with a Castle not inferior to that of Milban, and so well fortified throughout, that at the taking of it by Christiern the fourth of Denmark, Anno 1611, there were found mounted on the works 108 brass pieces of Ordnance, six Men of War to guard the Haven, with all manner of Ammunition in proportion to them. 10. Gutenburg, (or Gothorum Burgus) the chief Town of the Goths or Gothland, as the name importeth, enjoying a commodious Haven, on the Baltick also, and which is very frequented for the Trade of Germany, to the very much exceeding fity; the principal Town of all this Province, and for that cause the ordinary Seat or Residence of the Governor for the King of Sweden.

The first Inhabitants of the South parts of Scandia are commonly affirmed to have been the GOTHS, whom Jornandes in his Book de Rebus Geticis makes to have issued out of this Country, and to plant themselves on the North Banks of the Ister, near the Euxine Sea, some time before the Trojan War: ascribing to them what is reported in old Writers of the ancient Serthians, as their Encounter with Vexoris or Sofstris the King of Aegypt, the Aids and Achievements of the Amazons, their Congress with Alexander the Great in his Persian War, and the like to these. In which Jornandes, being himself a Goth, is no more to be credited than Gessey of Northumbria, a Welsh man, in the Story of Brute and his Successors, to whom he doth ascribe the taking and sacking of Rome under the conduct of Brennus, whom he makes to be he the Brother of Belinus a King of Britain. Most probable it is, that they were originally, a Dutch or German people, part of the great Nation of the Sarav, called by Tacitus the Gothines, inhabiting in his time (as it is conceived) in the Land of Prussia; who, finding their own Country too narrow for them, might pass over the Baltick into the next adjoining Regions; and not well likely that cold Climate might afterwards in some good numbers go to seek new Dwellings, and at last fix themselves where the Banks of the Ister, where Jornandes found them. That they were Dutch originally, besides the general name of the Goths, or Gothi, and those of Ostro-gothi and West-gothi, into which they were afterwards divided, the particular names of Alaric, Theodorick, Riccard, (the names of their Kings and Captains) seem to me to evidence. That they were once seated in this Country doth appear as plainly, 1. by the name of Gothland here still remaining; 2. by the Title of Rex Gothorum, which the Kings of Swethland keep in the Royal Style; 3. by the same Inscriptions in ancient unknown Characters engraven on the Rocks near Schar in the Continent, and in Wadby in the Illes of Guthland, supposed by learned men to be some monument of that People. And finally, that their first Dwelling, when first known by this name amongst the Romans, was on the North-side of the Ister, is evident by the testimony of all ancient Writers, from the time of Annius Caracalla, with whom they had some tumultuary Stirrings in his way towards Perfia, till their violent Irruption into Italy and the Western Provinces: most famous in this Interval for a great Fight with Decius the Roman Emperor, whom they overcame and slew in a Battle, Anno 253. In the time of Valens and Valentinian, the Roman Emperors, a Quarrel being grown amongst them, managed by Phritigeres and Athanaricus, the Leaders of the opposite Factions; Phritigeres, overthrown in fight, had recourse to Valens, from whom he received such Succours, that giving his Adversary another day for which he obtained the Victory. Whereupon Phritigeres and his Party received the Gospel, but intermixt and corrupt with the Leaven of Arianism, by the practice of Valens, who sent them none but Arian Teachers, to whom and their Factions in the Church he was wholly addicted. Afterwards the whole Nation being driven over the Ister by the barbarous Huns, they obtained of Valens the out-parts of Torace for an Habitation, on condition they should serve under the pay of the Emperor, and become Christians: the cause that Arianism over-spread the whole Nation generally, which had before infested but one part only. Ulphilas, a devout and learned man, was their first Bishop; who, for their better Edification in the way of Godliness, invented a new Gothick Character, and translated the Scriptures into that Language: in the study whereof they so well proficited, that many of them in the time of their first Conversion suffered death for it at the hands of Athanaricus, and were counted Martyrs. Persecuted by Valens, and denied their accustomed Pay, they harried and depopulated the rest of Torace, marching towards Constantinople, encountered in the way by Valens, whom they overcame and killed, after all his Favours. Vanquished by Theodosius the succeeding Emperor in many Battles, they became good neighbours, enlarging their Bounds with his leave and licence as far as Pannonia, and grown into such estimation with him, that Ricimer and Antagath, two of that Nation, did obtain the Consulship: not to say any thing of that exorbitant power and favour which Gaisas had attained unto in the Court itself. Made insolent by so great Honours, and apt to pick Quarrels with their Patrons, they invaded Italy in two great Batches, committing of no fewer than 200000 fighting men. The first whereof, under the Conduct of Ra- dagisus, was discomfited and cut in pieces by Stilico, Lieutenant to Honorius the Western Emperor, at Fevula in the Streights of the Appennine. The other, by his Treachery permitted to pass, sacked Rome, and subdued the most part of Italy, under the leading of Alaricus. He dying immediately after this great Victory, left the fruits of it to his Son Athanalsus, who, marrying with Galla Placidia, the Emperor's Sister, relinquished Italy, and had all Gallia Narbonensis, and a great part of Hispania Tarraconensis, assigned unto him, where he erected the Kingdom of the West-Goths or Western Goths, possessed of Spain and Tingitana for the space of 300 years and upward, when they lost that Kingdom to the *Moor*s, as hath been said. In the mean time the Goths which were left in their own Countries, distinguished from these by the name of Ostro-Goths, by reason of their more Eastern situation, kept themselves in quiet: being first subdued by the Huns, and when by Wlami freed from that subjection, not intermeddling or attempting any thing against the Empire, till called by Zeno Emperor of Constantinople into Italy against Odoacer and the Herali, who had then subdued it. Which action they managed with so much prudence and good fortune by their King Theodorick, that they vanquished Odoacer, possessed Italy, and held it above 60 years; when, broken in many last Battles by Belisarius and Narses, Lieutenants for the Emperor Justinian, their Kingdom and Name there came unto an end.

As for the Kings of the Goths, we have a succession of them in Jornandes from Berig, who first conducted them out of Scandia towards the East, till the going of Theodorick into Italy; but made up with so little probability, that I dare give no more credit to it than the Stories of Bride, Dan, Fergus, or the Lady Scota, Pharo's Daughter. Such of whom there is any certain knowledge and succession are these few that follow.

The Kings of the G O T H S.

- 344 1. Athanaricus, King of the Goths in the time of Constantinus and Constantius, the Sons of Constantine the Great.
- 357 2. Alaricus, the first of that name, in the time of Constantinus.
- 361 3. Phritigeres, King of the Goths in the time of Valens, the first Christian Prince among that People.
- 370 4. Athanaricus II. in the time of the Emperours Valens, Gratian, and Valentinian the second; under whom the Goths were first settled on this side of the Ister.
- 379 5. Rhadagisus, who in the time of Honorius first led the Goths into Italy; slain at the Battle of Fevula.
- 410 6. Alaricus II. who, pursuing the War of Italy, sacked Rome, subdued Naples, and the most of Italy.
- 412 7. Athanalsus, the Son of Alarick the second, who first erected the Kingdom of the West-goths in Gaul and Spain, continuing there for the space of 300 years and upwards; the present Kings of Spain coming from this Stock.
- 417 8. Athalaricus, King of the Goths remaining in the East at the departure of Rhadagisus and Alaricus, distinguished from their Plantations by the name of Ostro-Goths: vanquished by Attila, they became Subjects to the Huns in the time of Theodosius the second and Valentinian the third, Emperours of the East and West.

9. Wilamir, one of the Blood-Royal of the Goths, Vallat to Attila at the first, whom he assisted, or served rather, in the great Battle near Toulon against the Romans: but, taking advantage of some Quarrel amongst the Sons of Attila, took off that Yoke, and recovered the Kingdom of the Goths, in the time of the Emperor Marcianus.

10. Theodoric, Son of Winithar, and Brother of Wilamir, in the time of Leo Emperor of Constantinople.

11. Theodoric, Son of Theodoric, kept at Constantinople in his youth as a Pledge or Hostage for his Father, where he was instructed in all the Greek and Roman Learning, and made the adopted Son (as is said by Scaliger) of the Emperor Zeno, by whom he was sent into Italy against Odoacer and the Hornli, and erected there the Kingdom of the Ostrogoths, which continued till the Reign of Justinian, when it was destroyed by Belisarius and Narjes, as before is said: the name of Goths in Italy being thus extinct, but their Blood intermixt with the best Italian. The sum of their whole Story, for varieties sake, take thus out of Du Bartas.

The warlike Goth, which whilem issued forth
From the cold frozen Islands of the North, Incamp'd by Vistula: but the Air almost B'ing there as cold as in the Baltick Coast,
He with victorious Arms Scalonia gains,
The Transylvanian and Valachian Plains;
Then flies to Tracia, and then leaving Greeks, Greedy of Spoil, four times he bravely seeks To pluck from Rome (then Mary's Minion)
The Plum: which the from all the World had won, Guided by Rhadagise and Alarick, Bold Vindimir and Theodoric, (Legions Thence flies to France; from whence expult, his Rest ever since upon the Spanish Regions.

The Arms of these Kings are said to have been Or, three Ravens with displaced wings Purple, membered Gules. And let this suffice for the Original, Successes, and final Period of the Goths; reserved by me into this place, because most commonly conceived to be their original Country, at least the place out of which they issued when they first moved towards the East to seek new Dwellings.

2. SWEDEN.

SWEDEN is bounded on the East with the Bohner Sea, on the West with the Doefrine Hills, which part it from Norway, on the North with Lapland, on the South with Gothland. So called from the Sueathans, or Saethidi, the old Inhabitants thereof, of whom more anon. A Country sufficiently fruitful, but for the goodness of the Soil inferior to Gothland, and not so well planted or inhabited as that is, by reason of the vast Woods which they will not suffer to be destroyed, and the greatness of some Marthes hitherto undrained: but might be made as rich and fertile, if the people would, as appears by that plenty of Corn growing amongst the Woods, though much hindered by their shade and thickness both from Sun and Rain. But for the Character of this Country, we had it formerly, when we spoke of Swethland, in the general, relating specially to this as the principal Part.

And as the largest and principal part of this great Body, it contains in it many Provinces and Subdivisions:

as namely, 1. Upland, 2. Sudermannia, 3. Nericia, 4. Westmannia, 5. Delecarlie, 6. Vernland, 7. Coperalde, 8. Geftricia, 9. Helsingia, 10. Middlefjar, 11. Angermannia, bordering on Lapland, the farthest of these Provinces towards the North. Many of these have no Towns or Cities of any greatness or beauty, the people living thin and scattered, where they have Wood for Building, Pasture for their Beasts, and elbow-room enough for themselves and their Cattel. Of these the principal are, 1. Upland, an Archbishop's See, and an University, situate not far from the Bay of Bodner, beautified with a large Cathedral, wherein many of the ancient Kings of Swethland are interred. From this City the Country hereabouts is styled Archiepiscopatus Upsalensis. 2. Holm, by the Inhabitants called Stockholm, by the Russians Siecolne, the Royal Seat of the Kings, a noted and well traded Port, and the chief of the Kingdom; exceeding strong both by Art and Nature, as being situate in the Marthes, like Venice, at the mouth of the Lake or River of Atter, the passage to it out of the Bay being very narrow, and by consequence easily defended, and yet so deep within, that the greatest Ships of Burthen may sail up to the City: the Port within the Strait being so safe and capacious, that it is able to receive at one time 300 Sail, which usually ride there without any Anchor. The Castle of this City is conceived to be one of the strongest holds in the world, fortified for the more assurance of it with 400 brass Pieces, many of which are double Canon. 3. Nicepon, a town on the same Bay also. These three are in that part hereof which is called Upland. There there is 4. Strengur, an Episcopal See, and 5. Telga, on the Lake of Melr, in the Province of Sudermannia; the Tide and Estate of Charles, Father of Gustavus Adolphus late King of Sweden before his getting of the Crown called Duke of Sudermania. Next, in the Province of Westmannia, there are 6. Arby, on the West-side of the said Lake of Melr; and 7. Arby, rich in Silver-mines, out of which are made the best Bullets of Sweden: the Mines here being so rich and profitable, that out of every fifteen pound weight of Silver the workmen draw a pound weight of Gold. 8. Helsing, upon the Bay of Bodner, in the Province of Helsingia, taking name from hence, 9. Orbo or Ornbo a strong piece in Nericia; and 10. Lesinger, on the Bay of Bodner, one of the farthest North of Sweden distinctly and specially so called.

3. LAPLAND.

LAPLAND, the most Northern part of all Scandia, hath on the East Russia, on the West the Province or Prefecture of Wardhus in the Kingdom of Norway, on the North the main Frozen Ocean, and on the South Bodia, or Bodden, on both sides of the Bay so called.

It is named thus originally from the Lappi or Lappers, the Inhabitants of it, as they are from the old blockish behaviour; the word Lappi signifying the flesh with insipis or insulsi in Latine; for such they are, rude, barbarous, and without the knowledge of Arts or Letters, as except without Corn and Houses, or any certain Habitations (except only in Finnmark), feeding for the most part on Fish and the flesh of wild Beasts, with the Skins whereof sowed together they hide their nakedness. Generally they are meer Idolaters, giving Divine honour all the day following to that living Creature, whatsoever it be, which they see at their first setting out in the morning; great Sorcerers, and abhorring the sight of Strangers, whom till of late they used to flee from at their first approach, but within few years past beginning to be more tractable and familiar. In a word, they are the true descendants of the ancient Finni, (possessed in old times of all that Tract which lieth between the Bay of Finland and the Frozen Ocean) whose natural rudeness and barbarity, unmixt with the condition of more civil people, they do still retain.

It is divided into the Eastern and the Western Lapland. The former appertaining to the Knez or Great Duke of Moscovy, by which people the Inhabitants are called Moscovy, or the wild Lappians, is subdivided into Biarma and Corelia, of which, if there be any thing in them worth taking notice of, we shall there speak more. The latter doth belong to the Crown of Sweden, subdivided into two parts also, that is to say, 1. Finnmark, and 2. Seriefinnia.

1. FINMARK, being that part hereof which lieth next unto Norway, is the more populous of the two. The people are for the most part Idolatrous, but by the neighbourhood of the Norwegians, and resort of Strangers unto Wardhus and the parts adjoining, somewhat civilized, and in the Borders of both Kingdoms favouring of Religion, possessed of Sheds or forry Houses, and of those Houses reduced to Parishes under the Jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Upsal; the chief of which (if there be any chief amongst them) are named, 1. Sammar, and 2. Hells, called Finnmark, as the ancient Bounds and Marches of the Finni (of whom more anon) and therefore erroneously by Magnus made apart of the Kingdom of Norway.

2. SERIEFINNIA lieth between Finnmark and Russia. The name is derived from the Finni, a great People of Scandia, and Serikien, a Dutch word signifying hopping, liking, or bouncing, for such is their gate. An Etimologie not much improbable, in that the Wooden-soled-shoes with sharp bottoms, which they used for their more speedy sliding over the Ice, of which this Country is full, are by the Germans (who also use them) called Serick hoben, or Sliding-shoes. The ancient Writers call this people Serick finni.

These are indeed the natural and proper Laplenders, and unto these the former Character doth of right belong. Of stature very low, little more than Pygmies, but strong and active; well skill'd in Archery, and patient of Cold and Labour; much given to hunting of wild Beasts, whom they kill with their Bowes, devour the Flesh, and cloath themselves with their Skins, which they tie at the top of their Heads, and leave no place open but for the sight; giving thereby occasion unto some to write that they are hairy all over, like Kine or Horses. Such Deer (whereof they have great plenty) as they take unkill'd, they make to draw in little Carts, as they shift their Quarters. But having served them for a while, they are killed at last, though perhaps for nothing but their Skins: a certain number of which they pay yearly to the King of Sweden in the way of Tribute. Three Companies of these Laplenders, so clad and Armed, as aforesaid, came into Germany in the year 1630, to serve Gustavus Adolphus in those Wars: looked on with admiration by all Spectators.

Towns we must look for none here, where no Houses be; and yet there are some Sheds and Cabbins on the Sea-shore, which Mariners having made for their refreshment when they came on Land, have bestowed some names on, and possibly in time may become good Towns, now not worth the naming.

4. BODIA.

BODIA, BODDEN, or BODNER, is situate on the South of Seriefinnia, betwixt it and the Bay or Gulf hence named; extending Southwards on the West side of it, till it joins to Sweden, and on the East side, till it meets with the Province of Fisland.

Hence is the division of this country into the Eastern, Northern and Western Badden, with reference to the Situation of it on the Bay aforesaid. The Country is not very plentiful of Grain or Fruits, but full of great variety of wild Beasts, whose rich Skins yield great profit unto the Inhabitants, and by reason of the commodious situation on all sides of the Bay, it is well stored with Fish. Accidentally it was part of the possessions of the Finni, but how or whence it had the name of Bodia, Bodden or Bodner, I am yet to learn. But whencesoever it had the name, certain I am, that from hence the Gulf adjoining is called Sinus Bodicus, the Bodner Zee by the Dutch or Germans.

Chief Towns herein are, 1. Birkara, in West Bodden, betwixt the Bay and a great navigable Lake. 2. Toronia, a well-traded Empory at the very bottom of the Bay, in North Bodden. 3. Helsingiac, more North than that, towards the Borders of Lapland. And 4. Kerlabi in East Bodden, on the Bank of the Gulf, conveniently seated for a Town of Trade.

5. FINLAND.

FINLAND hath on the North Bodia, on the South the Baltick Sea or Mare Suevicum, on the East Sinus Finnicus, on the West Sinus Bodicus. It is by Mansler thought to be called Finland, quasi fin land; quid paleior et amano is Suecia, because it is a more fine and pleasing Country than Sweden it self. But indeed it is so called from the Finni or Fenni, a potent Nation who have here dwelt, whose Character is thus framed by Tacitus, Finni nis minia Fortis, seda Pauperis, non Arma, non Equi, non Penates, Vitui Herba, Vitui Pellet, Cubili Humis, Isa In Sagittis ipse. True Finni, faith he, are wonderful barbarous, miserably poor without Arms, Horse, or Household-goods; Herbs their Food, the Ground their Bed, and the Skins of Beasts their best Apparel, armed only with their Arrows, and in them their hopes. A Character which agreeth every way with our present Finlanders, especially those of Seriefinnia and some parts of Finnmarkia, who are not so well reclaimed to Civility as the other are: but very different from that which Forander gives them, who, living within 400 years after Tacitus, before they had much (if any) intercourse with foreign Nations, telleth us of them, that they were Scandinavii, Cultoribus omnibus mitiores, more tractable and civil than any of the Inhabitants of Scandia, not excepting the Suebidi themselves. If so, they did deserve to live in good country, more plentiful and plain than Sweden, and neither so hilly nor so moorish.

The principal places in it are, 1. Abos, an Archbishop's See, situate on the most Southern Point of it, thooting into the Baltick, 2. Wiborg, a Bishops See also, whose Jurisdiction for the most part is without this Province, on some part of Russia, all Finland being it the Diocese of the Bishop of Abos. A Town conveniently seated at the bottom of the Bay or Gulf of Finland, (called Sinus Finnicus in Latine) which divides this Country from Livonia; well fortified as the chief Bulwark of this Kingdom against the Moscovites; and so well garnished withal, that the keeping of this Town, doth cost the King of Sweden 100000 Dollars yearly. 3. Udden, on a Point or Promontory of the same Gulf, opposite to Narva, another Garrison of this King in Liesland. 4. Vorma, upon the Bodner Zee. 5. Cronaburg, more within the Land, at the efflux of a River out of the Lake called Piente, 6. Deckala, on the Banks of the great Lake called Holela. 7. Vorta, more Northwards towards Lapland. Of which last four I find not any thing observable in the way of Story.

6. The SWEDISH Islands.

AND now at last I come to the Swedish Islands, here and there interperfed in the Baltick Seas, betwixt the Ile of Bornholm, which belongs to Denmark, and Lifland or Livonia, appertaining to the King of Poland: the principal of which are, 1. Gothia, or the Ile of Gothland, 2. Infula Oland, or the Iles of Oeland.

1. GOTHIA, or the Ile of GOTHLAND, is fituate over againft Calmar, a ftrong Town in the Continent of Gothland, in length 18 Dutch miles, and five in breadth, of a rich Soil, but more fit for Pafturage than Tillage, yielding great Herds of Cattel, ftore of Game for Hunting plenty of Fifh, excellent Marble, and abundance of Pitch, which it fendeth forth to other Countries. There are in, it 18 large and wealthy Villages, befides the Haven Town of Wifby, heretofore rich and of very great Trading, as much frequented by the Merchant as moft in Europe; but now much decayed, and neither fo well peopled nor fo rich as formerly. The Trade removed hither from Wolin in Pomerania (destroyed by Waldemar the fifth of Denmark, Anno 1170) made it flourifh mightily, the greateft Traffick of the Baltick being managed here; but after that by reafon of the long and continual Wars betwixt Denmark and Swethland for the poffeffion of this Ile, it became unfafe, the Faftory was transferred unto other places. For being conveniently fited to annoy the Swedes, the Danes have much contented for it, and fometimes poffeffed it; but at the prefent it is in the hand of the Swethlander. By fome conceived to be the Eungia fpooken of by Pliny.

2. OELAND, or the Iles of Oland, fo called in the plural Number, becaufe there are many of them, of which this the principal is fituate over againft Abo, the chief City of Finland. Of no great note, but that it is commodiouly fited to invade or annoy this Kingdom; and therefore very well fortified and as ftrongly garrifoned: here being the good Towns of Viborg, NAMES, and 3. the ftrong Caftle of Caftrum.

Befides which Countries here defcribed, the King of Sweden is poffeffed of the ftrong Towns of Narva, and Ruifalia, or Revel, and Pernau in Lifland of Kexholm, or Hexholm, in Corelia, a Province of Ruffia; with very fair and ample Territories appertaining to them: fubdued and added to this Crown by John the fecond, An. 1581; except Ruifalia, which voluntarily fubmitted to Ericus the fecond King of this prefent Race, An. 1561. But being thefe Towns and Territories are not within the Bounds of Swethland, we fhall defer all farther difcuffure thereof to a place more proper.

The firft Inhabitants of this Kingdom, befides the Goths and Finni fpooken of already, were the Sirones and Suiones, mentioned in Tacitus; together with the Phavones, the Phiræi, and the Levoni, whom we find in Ptolemy, placed by him in the Eaft and midle of this great Peninfula. Which, being the general names of fome mighty Nations, are by Jornandes branched into leffer Tribes of the Sueths, Therifad, Fingeb, Bergio, Malili, Liothidi, Aethelid, Storogob, Raurmarice, Raurgnoici, Graunii, Agmæzi, Onitæ, Arochiamii, Enagæzi, Othingi, and divers others by him named. But from what root the name of Swedæi, Swædes, or Swethland, by which the chief Province of it, the people generally and the whole Kingdom is now called, is not yet agreed on; nor fpooken of at all by Munfter or Cranzins; which two but (fpecially the laft) have written purpofely of this people. Gaſper Pen-cerus deriveth them from the Suevi, who anciently inhabited in the North parts of Germany, beyond the Albi; from whom the Baltick Sea was called Alare Suevicum:

which people he conceiveth to have been driven, by the Goths and Daci into this Country, and by the change of one letter only to be called Sueci. But this hath no good ground to ftand on, though I meet with many others which are more improbable. For when they left thofe colder Countries they fell into thefe parts which are ftill called Suevia, (the Schwaben of the modern Dutch) where we find Suevi in the time of Cæſar. And after, in ſtadi illa Gentium commigratione, when almoft all the Northern Nations did ſhift their Seats, we find ſuch of them as had flaid behind to have accompanied the Vandals in their On-falls into Gaul and Spain. Of any Expedition of their proſs the Baltick Seas, ne gry quidem, nothing to be found in more ancient Authors. We muſt therefore refer the original of this people either to the Suiones, or the Suethidi, or perhaps to both; both being anciently ſetled in theſe Northern Regions. Of the Suiones we read in the Book of Tacitus inſcribed De Moribus Germanorum; by whom they are reported to be ftrong in Men, Armour and Shipping. And that they were Inhabitants of Scandia, appears by two Circumſtances in that Author.

1. That the people were not permitted to wear Weapons, quia ſubitoſt Hoſtium Inerſus prohibet Oceanus, becauſe the Ocean was to them a ſufficient Rampart? which could not be affirmed of the ancient Sueviani, but agreeeth very well with the ſituation of this prefent Country, defended by the Baltick and vaſt Northern Ocean from the ſudden Aſſaults of any Enemy. 2. Becauſe the Sea which hemmed in that people was conceived to be the utmoſt bounds of the World; Trans Suiones Mare aliud, quæſingis claudique Terrarum orbis fines, as his words there are: which we know to hold good of this Country. 3. Add unto theſe this paſſage of the old Annals of the Emperor Lewis the ſecond, where it is told us of the Danes, reſtitæ patria apud Suiones exſulabant, that they were baniſhed into the Country of the Suiones, which cannot fo well be underſtood of any place as of this Sweden, being next neighbour unto Denmark, And 4. that this People both by Munſter and Cranzins, are as well called Suiones, as Sueci or Suedi; which ſheweth what they conceived of their true Original. Then for the Suethidi or the Suethidi, whom Jornandes ſpeaks of in his Book De rebus Geticis, they are by him placed in the Ile of Scandia, (for ſuch this great Peninfula was termed to be by moſt ancient Writers.) Now that theſe Suethidi are no other than the prefent Swethlanders appeareth 1. by the propinquity of the Names. 2. In that he maketh the Finni and Finniaſtha the next neighbours to them. And 3. in that they are affirmed by the ſame Author to have furniſhed the Romans with rich Furrs, and the ſkins of wild Beaſts, with which Commodities this Country is abundantly well ſtored. Now to which of theſe two Nations, either the Suiones or the Suethidi thoſe of Sweden are moſt indebted for their Original, will (I conceive) be no great controverſie: the Sueths and Suethidi of Jornandes being no other than a Title of the Suiones, though the greateſt and moſt powerful of all thoſe Tribes; placed therefore in the Front to command the reſt, and fo moſt like to give the name unto the whole.

Their Government was anciently under Kings affirmed to ſole by Tacitus, who telleth us alſo that they were abſolute and free, nallis exceptionibus, non precario jure regnandi; not bound in Covenant with their people, nor holding their Eſtates at the will of the Subject. But their Hiſtorians have gone for Antiquity herof beyond the ſtory of Brute or the Trojan War, (beyond which very few of that ſtrain have dared to pretend) as high as unto Magog the Son of Japhet, reigning here within 90 years after the Flood. But letting paſs theſe Dreams and Doras ges of the Monkh times, certain it is that ſometimes they were under the Danes, ſometimes under the Norwegians, ſometimes had diſtinct Kings of their own; and finally ſometimes were comprehended with the Danes and Norwegians under the general names of Normans, conducted by one King or Captain upon Foreign Adtions. Omitting therefore the Succeſſion of their former Kings, we will begin our Catalogue of them with Jernanctus, who entertained Herald King of Denmark and his Brother Regerfride, driven out of that Kingdom by Goricus or Godfrey, the Contemporary of Charlemagne; of whoſe Succeſſors Munſter giveth us more certainty.

- 1411 30. Ericus IV. Duke of Pomeran, adopted by Margaret, of whoſe Siſter Ingelburgis he was defended, was in her life time choſen King of the three Kingdoms, into which he ſucceeded

- 1439 31. Chriſtopher, Count Palatine and Duke of Bavaria, (in Title only) Son of the Lady Margaret, Siſter of Ericus, ſucceeded in all three Kingdoms. After whoſe death the Swethlanders, being weary of the Danish Government, broke the Agreement made at Calmar, for the uniting of the three Kingdoms under one Prince, and choſe one Carolus Canutus to be their King, Anno 1448.
- 1448 32. Carolus Canutus, one of the meanest of the Nobility, and not long pleaſing to the great ones: whoſe Diſpleaſure when he had incurred, and ſeared the conſequents thereof, he gathered together all the Treafure he could, fled unto Dantzick, and there ended his days.
- 1455 33. Chriſtiern, King of Denmark and Norway, called in by a Party of the Swedes, and crowned King of Swethland; but outed again under colour that he had not kept Conditions with them: the Kingdom being governed after that for a time by Marſhals.
- 1458 34. John, King of Denmark and Norway the Son of Chriſtiern, received King by the Swedes, then over-powered by the Miſſcovite: but their turn being ſerved, they expelled him again, returning to their former Government under Marſhals. Of which Marſhals (deſcended from Steno Star, the Uncle of Carolus Canutus by his Mother's ſide) there were three in number, viz. 1. Steno, 2. Suanto, and 3. Steno Star the ſecond: of which the two firſt died natural deaths, and the laſt being by Chriſtiern the ſecond ſlain in Battle, this Kingdom was again poſſeſſed by the Danes.
- 1519 35. Chriſtiern II. King of all three Kingdoms, uſed his Victory ſo cruelly here, and his Subjects ſo inſolently at home, that here he was outed by Güſtavus Ericus and driven out of Denmark by his Uncle Frederick.
- 1523 36. Güſtavus Ericus, deſcended from the ancient Race of the Kings of Sweden, having vanquiſhed and expelled the Danes, was on the merit of that adion choſen King of Swethland, which ſtill continueth in his Houſe.
- 1561 37. Ericus V. Son to Güſtavus 8.
- 1569 38. John II. Brother of Ericus, married Catherine the Siſter of Sigismund the ſecond, King of Poland.
- 1593 39. Sigismund, the Son of John the ſecond, in the life-time of his Father choſen King of Poland, Anno 1586, but was diſpoſſeſſed of the Crown of Sweden (after a long War) by his Uncle Charles.
- 1607 40. Charles II. Duke of Suderman, the youngſt Son of Güſtavus Ericus, and Brother of John and Ericus the two former Kings, firſt governed here as Viceroy for his Nephew Sigismund. But having an aim upon the Crown (to which he found the Lutherans not very favourable) he raiſed up a Calvinian party within that Realm; according to whoſe Principles he began firſt to withdraw his Obedience from his natural Prince, and afterwards to aſſume the Government to himſelf: ſpeeding fo well in his Deſign, that after a long War he forced his Nephew to deſiſt from all farther Enterprizes, and made himself King, An. 1607.

 1611 41. Gustavus Adolphus, Son of Charles, having fellowed his Affairs in Sweden, and made Peace with the King of Denmark, with whom his Father was in War at the time of his death, fell first on his Cousin Sigismund, the King of Poland, from whom he took many places of importance in Prussia and Livonia; and in pursuance of that War was made Knight of the Garter. Afterwards, having fet a Truce with him, he passed into Germany, then in great danger of being absolutely intrahled to the House of Austria. In which he prospered to beyond all expectation, that in one year he passed over the Elbe, the Rhene, and the Danow, (which no Conquerour ever did before;) and having twice vanquished the Imperialists led by Tilly, and restored many of the German Princes unto their Estates, was in the current of his Victories slain in the Battle of Lutzen, Novemb. 1632; his body royally conveyed to Swethland, and there interred.

1632 42. Christine, sole Daughter of Gustavus, of the age of seven years, acknowledged Queen of Sweden;
 the Estate being governed by the Councils of the Nobility. After a long War, with variable success in Germany, they came at last to this accord in the Treaty of Münster, that (she and her Successors, Kings and Queens of Swethland, should peaceably enjoy all the highest Pomerens, with the Isles of Rugia, Wollin, and the Town of Stetin, in Lower Pomerland; the Town and Port of Wismar in the Dukedom of Mecklenburg; and the whole Bishoprick of Bremen and Verden, and the Prefecture of the Town of Wilshusen; with the Title of Dukes of Bre-
mon, Pomerens, and Verden, Princes of Rugia, and Lords of Wismar; and by those Titles to have place, as Princes of the Empire, in all Diets and Assemblies which concern the Publick. By which agreement (if it hold) the Swedes have not only got a good footing in Germany, a strong Influence upon all the Councils of the Empire, a Door open for more Forces, (if occasion be) and a free passage into the Western Ocean, which before they wanted; but may in time prove absolute Masters of the Baltic
rick Sea, and make the Hamburgers, those of Lubeck, and possibly the Kings of Denmark and the Empire it self, be at their Devotion.

But leaving these things to the Doubtful issue of Contingency, let us next look upon the Forces and Revenues of the Crown of Sweden before the time of Gustavus Adol- phus, or as he found them at his Succession to that Crown.
 For though the Swedes pretend their Kingdom to be Elective, especially since the failing of the Royal Line in Magnus the fourth, and Albert of Mecklenburg; yet still the eldest Son or next Heir succeedeth; unless put by Faction and strong hand, as in the case of Si- gismund and his Uncle Charles. Which Charles for ordered his Affairs, that having engaged the Kingdom in a War against his Nephew, he was solicited at the last to accept of the Crown; to which he would by no means yield, till a law was made for the entailing the same for ever unto his Posterity, whether male or female, as an Hereditary Crown. But whether Hereditary or Elective, the King once settled in the Throne is an absolute Monarch; having not only a power to levie Taxes on his Subjects, as he seeth occasion, as five, six, seven, eight Dollars, or more yearly upon every Housholder, according to the proportion of his Estate, but also to grant a certain number of Peasants unto such as he means to favour, to be as Subjects and Vassals to him, according to his well-deserving. And whereas in the Constitution of this Government every Parish hath a Landman or Consul to decide the Controversies of the same, as every Territory hath its Vicount, and each Province his Lamen;

 there lieth an Appeal from the Landman unto the Vi-count, and from the Vicount to the Lamen; who, if they be supposed not to judge uprightly, then the Appeal lies unto the Council, and from the Council of Estate to the King himself, (in whom is fixed the Sovereignty and De-rivet her self) and not unto the King and Council as before in Denmark.

The Forces of this King are either by Sea or Land.
 By Sea he is Commander wholly of the Bay of Bodner, and hath a great Power in all the rest of the Baltick; being able to set out 70 good men of War, as John the second did in the year 1578; eleven of which were good Gallies, and all the rest did carry above 50 cast Pieces of all sorts, besides many other good Vessels fit for service.
 And if a Navy of this size will not serve the turn, he is not only furnished with Timber, Cordage, and all other necessaries for the building of Ships, and with good store of Ordnance and Ammunition for present use, but is able to raise upon a suddain 6000 Marriners, and upon little warning as many more; all which he entertaineth at no other charges in a manner than to find Victuals: inasmuch as John the second, before mentioned, did use to say, that that which cost the King of Spain a Million of Crowns, cost him 100000 Dollars.

For his Land-Forces, they may best be estimated by the Trained Bands (as we call them) in every Province; there being in all 32 Vexilles (or Ensigns) of Foot constantly trained and Mustered in the several Provinces; each Vexille comprehending 600 or 700 men, amounting in the Total to 20000 Foot; all in a manner Musketiers, ready to march whensoever the Kings occasion shall so require. And then for Horse, there are eleven Companies in continual readiness for Sweden and Gotland, and two for Finland, maintained at the Charges of those Countries: to which the King may add at his own charges as many more as he pleaseth. And for an instance of what this King is able to do, without putting his Estate in hazard by draining them too dry of men to make good his Kingdom, we find that John the second, in his Navy of 70 Ships spoken of before, had above 18000 Land-Souldiers, besides Marriners. And in the Army which Gustavus Adolphus, the late King, brought into Germany, there were mustered no fewer at one time than 12000 Horse, and 34000 Foot, all Finnish and Swethlanders. For the accommodating of which Armies with Artillery and the like Engines of War, it is thought that the Kings heret are Masters of 8000 great Pieces, for the most part Brass, with Mortar-pieces and Granaado's in proportion to them.

But that which makes his Land Forces most considerable is their Hardiness in enduring the extremities of Wind and Weather (inasmuch that it is usual with them to stand Centinel a whole Winters night of 18 hours long without being relieved) their exact Discipline, and Obedience to their Commanders, and finally their indefatigable Industry in making their own Shoes, Apparel, Stocks for Muskets, and all other necessaries. Which doth not only make them fit to endure any labour which is put upon them in the Wars, but keeps them from Idleness and the pride of Mutinies; the ordinary effect, in great Armies, of Sloth and ease. Nor do they want encouragement on the Kings part neither; who, 1. gives to every Souldier Victuals, which he accompts not in their pay, and that according to his Obedience and desert. 2. If a Souldier

der be taken Prisoner, him the King doth usually redeem at his own charges. And 3. if a Souldier's Horse be slain under him, the King supplieth him with another.
 Which make the Souldiers (very sensible of such Obligations) exceedingly conformable unto his Commands, how dangerous soever they seem to be.

Finally, as for his Revenues, they must needs be great, there being four ways allowed him to amass his Treasures. First the Revenues of the Church, consisting before the Reformation of seven Bishopricks and sixty Monasteries, which enjoyed very great Possessions; all seized only by Gustavus Ericus, and by him incorporate to the Crown, excepting only what is given back to maintain the Bishops. Secondly, Mines, which are here of all Metals in very great plenty, except of Gold and Silver, which they have more sparingly; the Tenth whereof in all places belongs to the King, and yields him such a fair Intrade, that in the year 1578 the King's part out of two or three Mines of Copper only amounted to 30000 Dollars. Thirdly, Tents out of all Increase, as Rice, Wheat, Barley, Flax, Oxen, Skins, and the like Commodities, the sum whereof though not certainly known, (because the increase is so uncertain) yet it was once computed, that the Tenth of the Oxen only came in one year to 18000 Dollars, besides Provision for his Household. Fourthly and lastly, Customs imposed on Merchandise, and paid in all his Haven-Towns for all Commodities imported or exported, of what sort soever. Besides all which, he hath his Contributions in all times of War, power of imposing Taxes, (though moderately used) as his Necessities require; and on the Marriage of a Daughter, the Kingdom is to provide her Portion, which of late times hath been fixed at the certain sum of 100000 Dollars, besides Plate and Movables. Out of which several Items to sum up the Total: It was observed, that in the year 1578 King

John the second (all Charges, ordinary and extraordinary, being first deducted) did lay up into his Treasury no less than 700000 Dollars; which was a vast sum for those times, considering especially the great Charge which the King had been at that year, in furnishing a Navy of 70 Sail, and raising 18000 Land-Souldiers, (besides Horse) for defence of his Realm against the Danes. And yet it is conceived by some knowing men, that his Revenues would be much greater than they are, if he did employ Strangers to work the Mines, which the Natives do not husband to the best advantage; and yet are fearful to discover them to other Nations upon some jealousies, which they are naturally addicted to: or if he would turn Merchant, and in his own Ships send out Corn and Cordage, with Masts and Timber fit for Building, and in them bring back Salt and other Necessaries which his Kingdom wants, setting them at a far less price than now they go at, and yet gaining very greatly by it too.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, three Crowns Or.

There are in Swethland

Archbishops 2. Bishops 8.

Universities but one, viz. Upsal.

And thus much for SWETHLAND:

OF RUSSIA.

RUSSIA is bounded on the East by Tar- tary, on the West with Livonia and Fin- land, from which it is divided by great Lud, from which the River Pola; on the Mountains and the Frozen Ocean, and some North by the Frozen Ocean, and some part of Lupland; and on the South by the Kingdom of Poland, and the Province of Lithuania, a Province of Poland, the Province of Crimea, inhabiting on the Banks of Palus Maeotis, and the Euxine Sea. It stretcheth partly in Europe, and partly in Asia, the River Tanus or Don running through it, the common Boundary of those great and noted parts of the World.

It was thus called from the Rossi or Russi, a People of Mount Taurus, or Taurica Cherfonesus, (if not both) who in the declining times of the Greek Empire possessed themselves of some parts of it, and, being the prevailing People, imposed their Name on all the rest. Called also Ruffia, Alia, to distinguish from Ruffia Nigra, a Province of Poland, quod Incole omnium Gentium ipsius im-perii subjecti sunt, as one observes, discounting of the Affairs heretofore Russibus albis et Tartaris plebibus, stanantur, because the Inhabitants use to wear white Caps and Vests and. And why thus? It thence the People of Mari- giana and Soydiana in Asia have the name of Russibus albi, because they wear green Turbans, as the word importeth. Finally, it is called Moscovia, from Moscow the chief Province of it; as that is denominated from the Moschi, of whom more anon.

In reference to the Heavenly bodies, it is said by some to be situate betwixt the 8. and 20. Climates, the longest Day in the Southern parts being but 16 hours and an half, and almost 22 hours and a half in the Northern part. But this is to be understood only of the Province of Mosco- via properly and specially so called, and not of the whole Empire of the Moscovites according to the Bounds before laid down. For taking in the Northern Provinces belonging to it as East-Lapland, Candora & Petcora, lying within the Arctic Circle, the longest Day in Summer will be full 6 months, (for so long do those Countries see no Night at all,) which is a mighty disproportion from the length of the longest Day in the most Southern parts, being but 16 hours and a half, as before is said. And by this Rule we are to take the Dimensions also. For though some make the length hereof from North to South, that is to say, from Catalin the North to Astracan near the Cas- pian Sea, to be no more than 2260 Versts, or 3690 Italian miles; yet they confess that, reckoning forwards from Tromscheta, the farthest point of Petcora, the full length thereof will be nigh to much more. And for the breadth, reckoning from Narva on the Bay of Finland, (now in possession of the Swedes) to the Province of Severia in the East, it amounteth to 440 Versts, or 6300 Italian miles; each Vest being estimated at three quarters of an English mile. Which mighty Territory, if it were peopled answerable to some other parts of the World, would either make it too great for one Prince to hold, or make that Prince too great and puissant for all his neighbours.

The people, as is commonly reported of them, are very perfidious, crafty and deceitful in all their Bargains, False-dealers with all they have to do with, making no reckoning of their Promises, and studying nothing more than ways to evade their Contradicts. Vices by generally known and noted in them, that when they are to deal with Strangers, they dissemble their Country, and pretend to be of other Nations, for fear lest no body should trust them. Destitute they are of humane Affections, and so unnatural, that the Father insults on his Son, and he again over his Father and Mother: a fo malicious one towards another, that you shall have a man hide some of his own Goods in the house of some man whom he hateth, and then accuse him for the stealth of them. They are exceedingly given to drink, inasmuch that all heady and intoxicating Drinks are by Law prohibited, and two or three days only in a year allowed them to be drunk in. For the most part they are strong of Body, swift of Foot, of a square Proportion, broad, short, and thick; gray-eyed, broad-bearded, and generally furnished with prominent Patches. The Commons live in miserable subjection to the Nobles, and they again in as great Slavery to the Duke or Emperor; to whom no man of all the vulgar dares immediately exhibit a Petition, or make known his Grievances: nay, the mean Lords and Officers are squeamish in this kind, and, but on great submission, will not commend unto the Duke a poor man's Cause. They are altogether unlearned, even the Priests meanly indoctrinated; it being cautioned by the great Duke, that there be no Schools, lest there should be any Scholars but himself: so that the people use to work commonly on the Lord's day, holding it fit to be kept by none but Gentlemen; and to say in a difficult question, God and our Great Duke know all this, and in other talk, All we enjoy, Health and Life, is all from our Great Duke; according to whose pleasure every man is prescribed what Habit he shall wear, both for matter and fashion, suitable unto their Condition. In the time of my Author their Habit was a long Garment without Plaits, which hung down to their heels, commonly of white or blew, with very straight Sleeves; on their Legs wearing Buskins up as high as the calf, for the most part red, high at the heels, and beset with nails of Iron. The fluff and trimming of the Dreß is the only difference betwixt the Noble and the Peasant.

The Women are attired also much after this manner, but with great and noble, suffered to set forth themselves with store of Pearls and Precious Stones, which hang to thick about their ears, that they do almost pull their ears from their heads. A second Marriage is conceived no blemish in point of Chastity, but the third condemns them of Incontinence. They are naturally subject enough to the Lufts of the flesh, but private, and fearful to offend; if once lascivious, then most intolerably wanton. It is the fashion of these Women to love that Husband best which begets them most, and to think themselves neither loved nor regarded, unless they be two or three times a day well-favouredly fawned. The Author of the Treasury of Times telleth a Story of a German Shoemaker, who, travelling into this Country, and here marrying a Widow, used her with all kindnes that a woman could (as he thought) desire; yet did not the seem contented. At last learning where the fault was, and that his not beating her was the cause of her Penitencies, he took such a vein in cudgelling her sides, that in the end the Hangman was fain to break his Neck for his labour.

They use the Sclavonian Language, but for corrupt and mixt with other Languages, that they and the Sclavonians understand not one another's meaning but by circumstance only: yet in Yugria (out of which the Hungar- ians are thought to have issued) they speak a corrupt Hungarian; and in Petersona and the Country of the Czechenians they have a Language to themselves, differing from others.

They first received the Christian Faith in the year 987, or, as some say, Anno 942, by the preaching and ministry of the Greeks sent thither by the Patriarch of Constantinople; of which Church they are constant followers, both for Rites and Doctrine: but not without some Superstitions of their own superadded to them; viz, not coming near a Cross, Church or Monastery but they kneel down, and make the sign of the Cross, saying Allyh Hyspadi, i. e. Lord have mercy upon us, nor cutting into any Church, until washed and bathed. They bear a deadly hatred to the Jews, whom they suffer not to live amongst them, and to great friendship unto a Calif, that they hold it a great offence to kill one, or to eat his flesh. Their Church is governed by 18 Bishops, and 2 Metropolitans, all of them subordinate to their Archbishop or Patriarch, as he in former times to the Constantinopolitan by whom he used to be confirmed. But about an hundred years ago they withdrew themselves from that subjection, the Patriarch being nominated by the Great Duke, and consecrated by two or three of his own Suffragans. Without the counsel and advice of this Patriarch, the Emperor or Great Duke doth nothing of any moment. The Bishops are all chosen out of the Monastic or Regular Clergy; which makes the Monks (being all of the order of S. Basile) to live very religiously, in hope to be advanced to the Episcopal Dignity. Amongst the Secular Clergy, or Archidiacons, there is not much required of them, but to say their Masses, (which being in their own Language they may easily do) and to read now and then once, the Christophom's Homilies, translated heretofore for the use of those Churches. As for the death of their sick Wives they are not permitted to marry; in other thing little differing from the rest of the people. Once in the year it is lawful and usual with them to hold a Synod, at which the Patriarch hath his Crozier or Pastoral-staff carried before him, as the Pope's Legate hath the Cross; where they make Constitutions for the publick Government, and the regulating of Divine matters; which are punctually and carefully observed by the Prince himself.

As followers of the Greek Church, (but so as to be counted a Church distinct) they differ much both from the Romish and Reformed. 1. Denying the Holy Ghost to proceed from the Father and the Son. 2. Denying Purgatory, but praying for the Dead. 3. Believing that men enjoy not the presence of God before the Resurrection. 4. Communicating in both kinds butting Leavened bread, and mingling warm Water with the Wine, which both together they distribute with a Spoon. 5. Receiving Children of 7 years old to the Sacrament of the Eucharist, because then they begin to Sin. 6. Forbidding extreme Unction, Confirmation, and fourth Marriages. 7. Admitting none to Orders but such as are married, and yet prohibiting Marriage to them that are actually in Orders. 8. Rejecting Carved Images, but admitting the Painted. 9. Observing 4 Lent's in the year. 10. Repeating it unlawful to fast on Saturday, or to eat Blood, or any thing that hath been fringed, according to the first Council holden at Hiersusalem. 11. And finally, dissolving Marriage by Divorcement upon every flight occasion, or conceived displeasure. Which diversity betwixt the Romish and this people in point of Religion hath bred such a difference betwixt them in point of Affection, and made them so ill-concited of one another, that if a Moscowite be known, or but suspected, to have conversed with any of the Church of Rome, he is accounted to be a polluted person, and must be solemnly purged and purified, before before he be admitted to partake of the blessed Sacrament.

In matters of War the people are indifferent able, as being almost in continual Brolls with their Neighbours; and have a Custom, that when they go to the Wars, every Soldier giveth to the Emperor or Great Duke a piece of money, which at the end of the War he receiveth again; and by that means the number of the slain is exact: known. At their Funerals they use to put a Penny into the Mouth of the party deceased, a pair of Shoes on his Feet, and a Letter in his Hand, directed (such is their Superstition) to S. Nicolas, whom they deem to be the Porter of Heaven: an opinion doubtless very prejudicial to the Pope's and S. Peter's Prerogatives.

This Country is not so populous as spacious. The Eastern parts are vexed with the Tartars, who, like Asseps's Dog, will neither dwell there themselves, nor suffer the Moscovites to plant Colonies in them: the Western parts almost as much molested by the Swedish and Poleonian Kings; the Southern by the Turks and Precopeans; and the Northern by the coldness of the Air, which is of such vehemence, that Water thrown up into the Air will turn to Ice before it fall to the ground. The better to resist the extremity of this Cold, not only the Clothes of this people, but their very Houses, are lined with thick Furs. Every Gentleman or man of note hath in his Dwelling-house a Stove or Hot-house, in which they keep as it were, to heat themselves. Such as travel on the way use often to rub their Nose or Ears with Snow or Ice to settle and recall the motive Spirits into those parts, which otherwise they would be in danger to lose; the ignorance of which preventing Chirurgery was not the least cause that, in the year 1598, of 70000 Turks which made an Inroad into Moscow, 40000 were frozen to death. By reason of these extremities of Frosts and Cold, it is the Custom of this people to lay the Bodies of their dead all the Winter long on heaps in the Bellies of their Churches, where they lie without putrifying or any ill favour to the end of March; at what time the Air beginning to wax warm, and the earth to be fit for digging, each Family looks out their dead Bodies, and takes care to bury them. This excess of Cold in the Air gave occasion to Cassian in his Antients wittily, and not incongruously, to feign that if two men being somewhat distant talk together in the Winter, their words will be so frozen that they cannot be heard; but if the parties in the Spring return to the same place, their words will melt into the same order that they were frozen and spoken, and be happily understood. Such is their Winter: neither is their Summer less miraculous. For the huge Seas of Ice which in a manner cover the whole surface of the Country, are at the first approach of the Sun suddenly dissolved, the Water quickly dried up, and the Earth dressed in her holy-day Apparel: such a mature growth of Fruits, such flourishing of Herbs, such chirping of Birds, as if here were a perpetual Spring. The reason of which strange and sudden alteration is conceived to be the long lying of the Snow on the face of the Earth, keeping it from the rigour of the Winter Frosts; which being dissolved by the Sun in the beginning of the Spring, doth so thoroughly drench and soak the Ground, (being of a light and Sandy mould) and consequently make it the more penetrable by the beams of the Sun shining hotly on it, that it forthwith in a manner the Herbs and Plants to shoot forth in great plenty, and that too in a shorter time than can be imagined.

The whole Country generally is very much overflooded with Woods, parts of the great Herzian Forest, heretofore over-running all the North, and still more visible here than in other places: either by reason of the Islands of the people, naturally given to Sloth and Ease;

or for that the Country is not populous enough to overcome them; or that there is already Ground enough for Tillage to supply their necessary uses. For here do grow the goodliest and tallest Trees of the World, through which, by reason of their thickness, the brightness of the Sun-beams can hardly pierce; affording shelter to great multitudes of Cartel, but of wild Beasts especially, whose Skins are better than their Bodies, as Bears, Martens, Zibelines, Wolves, Black Foxes, whose skins are of very great estimation. Of the timber of these Trees are squared all necessities both for Forts and Houses, the Fortifications in this Country being made of huge Beams fastened together, (the Chinks filled with Earth) not easily shaken by Battery, though much subject to Fire. And out of them sufficient unpeakeable quantity of Pitch and Rosin, which are hence distilled: besides an everlasting Fountain of Wax and Honey; the Bees, without the Midwifery of the Art of Men, building their Hives or Houses in the hollow Trees. Concerning this there goeth a Story (reported and believed for a certain truth) of a Countryman who accidentally had slipped down into a great hollow Tree, where he stood up to the breast in Honey, continuing there two days without other Sustainance: at the end whereof a Bear coming to partake of the Booty, he laid hold of his Legs, and so terrified him with his Claws, that he made him leap out with the man at his heels. The Country yieldeth also great store of Flax and Hemp, which is transported yearly into other Countries, (and would make them very excellent Cordage, if the people had any skill in Manufactures or Mechanical Arts) and in some places rich Pastures, and such store of Corn, that therewith they do furnish Lapland, and the North parts of Sweden. Fifth they have also in good plenty, which they salt and dry, and either vent it to the Merchant, or lay it up in store for their Forts and Families. By which account it will appear that the principal Commodities which they send abroad are rich Furs, Flax, Hemp, Whales-grease, Honey, Wax, Pitch, Rosin, Nuts, Filibards and the like: which either the Dutch and English buy of them at the Port of S. Nicholas, or the Americans at Asracan near the Caspian Sea; giving them in return Cloth, Silks, Tapetery, and some other Merchandise, transported to the value of 500000 Rubbles yearly. Particularly of Wax 50000 Road, 100000 Road, 100000 Hides, 100 Ships laden with Flax and Hemp, the rest of their Commodities proportionably in the time of my Author's, since whose time the Trade herof hath been much increased.

This Country not improperly may be called (as by some it is) the Mother of Rivers. The chief of which are, 1. The Don, called Tanus by the old Geographers, and by them thought to be the only Boundary betwixt Europe and Asia; the Northern parts of this Country being then unknown. It disburtheneth it self into Palmus Montis; and hath its Fountain not out of the Riphean Mountains, as was thought of old, but out of a great Lake called Iranomysera, in the Forest of Okneskies or Seppanios, some 20 English miles from the City of Tulla; and having run a great way Eastward, turneth back again and then proceedeth Southwards towards the Montis, as was said before. 2. Borzhenn, now called Nisep, whose spring was unknown unto Herodotus, but now discovered to be near Dnepereck a Village of Moscow far off, lying in the Forest of Wolkensky, it receiveth South, and running by the Town of Sandulsky, it receiveth many other Rivers, and amongst them that of Dnest (by the ancient Writers called Hypanis) notwithstanding whose muddy waters it still retains its natural Clearness, and so falls into the Enzine Sea. 3. Tyrannus, (so called by the Sarmatians and their Slaves. For when the Africk Scythians went to plant themselves in Media, and the parts adjoining, some of the Sarmatians, then Inhabitants of this Tract, went along for company. Their long stay caused their Wives, desiring of their return, to comfort themselves with their Slaves both at bed and board; to whom they brought a lusty increase of Youths: who being well grown, and hearing that the Sarmatians were upon their coming back, joined together against them: the Slaves to retain their Wealth and Freedom which they were possessed of, the Women, for fear of the displeasure of their Husbands, and the Young men, for defence of their Fathers and Mothers. With joynt Forces they go out to meet them before their entry into the Country; neither are the Masters slow in their advance, hoping to take them unprovided. At Novogrod they have the first fight of each other. The Masters, scorning to defile their Swords on so ignoble an Enemy, assault them with Whips, and by the terror thereof got a signal Victory. In memory of which Battel, the people of that City have ever since stamped their money with the figure of an Horseman shaking a Whip in his hands: And it is the Custom of all Moscovite, that the Maids in the time of wooing fend such a Whip, curiously wrought by her own hands, to that Sutor whom the resolves on for her Husband, in token of her future Subjection to him. But of this more hereafter in another place.

6. GORELIA. 7. BIARMIA.

Sixty Dutch miles from Novogrod lieth the Province called GORELIA, extending Northwards as far as to a Branch of the Frozen Sea, where the longest Day is 20 hours and a half, the Nights proportionable in the Winter make it cold and barren. It bordereth on the East of Finland, from which it is parted by a long and rough ridge of Mountains. By reason of which Situation betwixt two great Princes, the people are enforced to pay Tribute to both, though properly the Subjects of the great Duke of Moscow. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Kexholm or Hexholm, in the hands of the Swedes, and 2. Cornburg, the chief Towns of the Province, belonging with the rest of the Country unto the Moscovite. By some this Province is made a part of the Eastern Lapland; but, I think, erroneously: the people having some good Town, and favouring of some Humanity, neither of which are known or heard of amongst the Laplenders. 3. Nordenburg, on the mouth of a Lake, which by the River called Warjaga emptieth it self into the Bay of S. Nicolas.

On the North-side of that Branch or Arm of the Frozen Ocean which bounds Gorelia lieth the Western part of Lapland, which by a proper name is called BIARMIA: the Country of the Dikloppi, or wild LAPPIANS, as the Moscovites call them, to whose Duke or Emperor they are subject. We had their Character before when we were in Swethland, nor shall we need to repeat it here: as Barbarous and as rude as the worst sort of those mentioned in Scythiana, and as Idolatrous as they; but more (if more may be) inclined to Lustfulness than the others. In the Winter Solstice, when the Sun entrencheth into Capricorn, they have Night for three whole months together, during which time, lurking in their Caves, they have leisure to consult with the Prince of Darkness; being very great Sorcerers, able (as some affirm) to raise Winds, Clouds, Tempests, and do many strange things. Towns there are none. Some Sheds and Cabins on the Sea-coasts, patched up by the Sailors for their reception and refreshment as they come on Land, and named according to their fancies, but not here considerable.

8. PETZORA. 9. CONDORA. 10. OB-DORA. 11. YUGRIA.

Opposite to Biarmia, or West-Lapland, on the other side of the Bay, leading towards the Port of S. Nicolas, lieth a large Promontory or Head-land, stretching out far into the North, beyond the Arctick comprehending in it 4 Provinces of the Russian Empire; that is to say, Petzora, Condora, Obdora, and Yugria, belonging formerly to the Tartars, but won from them of late years by the Russian Emperours; extending by that means their Territories to the River Ob, but not a whit improving them in Power or Patrimony. Howsoever somewhat must be said of them, because parts of this great Body which we are to dissect.

PETZORA, so called from a River of that name, is fenced on every side by Mountains and unfassable Rocks, extending Northwards to the Sea, and crossed with a vast Chain of Hills, part of the Hyperborei, spoken of before: so high, that a certain man, having travelled in the ascent of them 17 days together, is said to have returned back again, despairing to attain the top of them: covered in the Winter-time with perpetual Snows, in the Summer with as scorching Heats, by the continual lying of the Sun on all parts thereof. The people are of a plain and simple nature, and received the Russian Faith and Empire at one time together, Anno 1518. The chief Town of it is Petzora, or Pechora, at the fall of that River into the Sea, a small Town, but having three Churches in it: the people whereof, though otherwise sufficiently simple, as before is said, do in the Summer-time catch Partridge, Ducks, Swans, Geese, and other Fowl, which they take and lay by till the Winter, and then live upon them. So good a Tutor is the Belly, that the Poet did not unasily give it the titles of Artis Magister and Ingenii largitor Venter: whereof this may serve for one example.

CONDORA lieth on the North of Petzora, more near the Pole; by consequence is a colder Country, and of worse condition; one half of the Year being continual Day, and the other half as long a Night. The people are universally Idolaters, worshipping some Images (or Idols) in the shape of a Man, others in that of Bears, Wolves, &c. which they adorn with the Richest Furs they can get, and hide them in their Caves for fear of the Russes; who if they chance to light upon them, as they hunt those parts for Sables, Foxes and Bevers, take away their Furs, and bestow a greater heat upon them in Fires. The chief Town hereof is Pusozera, over against Nova Zemla, or on near the great Lake called Ozera, whence it hath the name; situate in the 68 Degree of Northern Latitude, 50 minutes over.

OB-DORA, so called from the River Ob, on both sides of whose Banks it lieth, is the most North-Eastern Province of all these Dominions; won to the Obedience of the Russes in the Reign of Theodore the Son of Ivan, Great Duke of Moscow. At what time the People had no Cities, lived in Hordes or Companies, ate the Beasts they took, knew no Corn nor Bread. They were then very good Archers, sharpening their Arrows with Fish-bones; with which bones and the Sineaws of Beasts they fowed Furs together for their Clothing, which they wear inward in the Winter, outward in the Summer, covering their Houses with Elk-skins. By this Trade were some Castles built on the River-side, to which he sent condemned persons, and brought it into the form of a petty Kingdom. But his Successor Boris built Toma, the chief Town hereof, with divers other Towns on both sides of the Water, nor worth naming here. But notwithstanding this Subjection to the Moscovite, they continue till in their old Idolatry, worshipping an ancient Idol in form of an old Woman, holding in Each Arm a Child, and a third at her feet, called by them Zlatn Baba, or the Golden old Wife; to which they offer precious Furs, sacrifice Hares, and therewith do consult touching things to come. But some account this for a fable or a meer mistake.

PETZORA, or YUHAR, lieth also on the North-west Seas, but more South than either of the other, betwixt Petzora or Pechora, and the Province of Dwina: the longest Day in Summer being not above 21 hours, or not fully that. The people are for the most part Idolaters, and worship the same Images as do those of Obdora: affirmed by some to be the Progenitors of the present Hungarians, who, coming out of this Country, overran all Pannania, and there fixed their Dwellings. For proof of which it is affirmed that they spake the old Hungarian Language, not used but in this Country and the North parts of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus: which more learned men affirm to be the Magyesian, the Language of the Magyes, who antiently possessed that Country in the times of the Romans. But leaving this dispute to another place, certain it is they are subject to the Moscovite, but so poor and miserable a people, that they have few Towns, and not many Houses; and so bare of money, that in stead thereof they pay Furs for Tribute to their Emperour.

12. SEVERIA. 13. PERMIA.

SEVERIA, or SIBIOR, as the Moscovites call it, lieth in a long Tract on the Banks of the River Ob or Oby, South of Obdora and the rest of the four last Provinces. The Country is very fruitful, and abounding with all things necessary, notwithstanding that there be great Deserts, and some Forests also; but those Forests well stored with black Foxes, Ermines, Sables, and the like wild Beasts, which yield more profit by their rich Furs, than any more fertile Country doth by its Corn and Fruits. Insumuch that in the year 1589 there were collected out of this Province only in the way of Tribute for the Emperour, 466 Timber of Sables, (every Timber containing 40 Skins) five Timber of Martens, 180 Cates of black Foxes, (every Cate containing 40 Skins) besides other Commodities. The Woods also do offer good plenty of Honey, and the Plains of Herbage, well watered with the River Sen, which falleth into the Desna, and bein together into that of the Nieper, or Bozphorus. There are in it many Towns and Castles, the principal whereof are, 1. Sibir, on the West side of the River Ob, which gives name to the Province. 2. Branki, not far from the great Forest from hence named. 3. Starodub, 4. Potnovlo, and 5. Czernigo. [Here by mistake the two Provinces of Siberia and Severia (which differ as the farthest North-east and South-west points of Moscovia, betwixt which there is a vast Tract of ground) are confounded, part of the Towns belonging to one, part to the other, as do the two Rivers, the Ob, and the Nieper.]

The people hereof, by reason of their continual Skirmishes with the neighboring Tartars, are the most Warlike Nations of all the Russes; heretofore governed by a Duke or Prince of their own, who at the first acknowledged no Superior, but afterwards was severally and successively tributary to the Litmanians, the Polanders, and the Moscovite; and finally, the last Duke being fairly accused of Treason, was oured of his Estate by Basilius the Great Duke, who added it to the rest of his Dominions, as it hath continued ever since.

PERMIA is situate on the South-West of Sibir, or Severia, a large Province, distant 250 Dutch miles from Mosco, so called from Perm, or Permia, the chief Town hereof, situate on the River Vjshnora, or Vjshnora. The second Town of note is called Siewiarskye. The people (as also those of Sibir) are of the Moscovite Religion, and live most by hunting wild Beasts, whose Fleth they eat, and make good Merchandise of their Skins, many of which they pay yearly to the Great Duke in way of Tribute, who makes a good Commodity of them, selling them to the Merchant at excessive rates. They have no Corn of their own growth, nor will they buy any elsewhere; but, instead of Bread, eat the Fleth of Seals dried and prepared in the Sun; (speaking a Language of their own, different from the rest of the Russes; and in stead of Horses and Oxen, make use of great Dogs and Stags, whom they train up to draw their Sleds from one place to another. There is good store of Woods amongst them; but they want Cedars, and they have paid dearly for that want. For John Vassilovich, meaning to pick a Quarrel with them, sent to them for certain loads of Cedar-wood, whereof he knew there grew none in their Country; and upon word returned that they had no such Wood he fined them at 12000 Rubbles.

REZEN, a great and godly Province, is situate betwixt the River Tanais and that of Occa, the most fruitful Country of all Russia, and (if report be true) of the whole World also: it being credited affirmed that one grain of Corn doth bring forth six Ears; the Stalks hereof growing so thick, that an Ox can hardly pass through them, or a Quail file out of them, but with very much difficulty. Here is also great plenty of Fruits, better than are to be found elsewhere in Russia; together with good store of Honey, Fish, Fowl, and other Commodities; besides Ermines, Bevers, and the like, common in their Countries. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Tula, famous for the Fountain or Spring-head of the River Tanais, which riseth near it. 2. Coltoga, well garrisoned for fear of the Crim-Tartars. 3. Cussira, a Bishop's See; as is also 4. Rezen, the principal of the Province, which is situate near, as is supposed upon the Banks of the River Occa. A Country, fertile and well-planted, according to the Great Duke 15000 Boiars, or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back, and betwixt 30 and 40000 Foot.

15. WIATHKA. 16. CASAN.

South-east of Rezen, beyond the banks of the River Skamne, and about 150 Dutch miles from Mosco, lieth the Province called WIATHKA, a fertile and barren, but well stored with Fith, an Honey, and wild Beasts good plenty. Heretofore subject to the Tartars, and then the receptacle or retreat of all fugitive Servants, here very gladly entertained: but the Tartarians being expelled it was made Subject by Basilius to the Duke of Moscow. I do not read of any Towns which remain so here, which makes me think that they do still remain so much of the Tartar with them as to live in Hordes and Companies, without any fix Dwellings, or at the best, in scattered houses, not thither united into Towns and Villages, except it be the Town of Wiathka it self, built since the subjection of it to the Moscovite; and made a Garrison, to defend these out-parts of this Empire against the Incurfions of the Tartars.

CASAN, a Kingdom formerly of Tartaria deserta, hath on the South-east of Wiathka, the most civil people of the Tartars, but owing much of that Civility to their conversation with the Moscovites, (though none of the civillest themselves) tilling their Lands and building Houses where they may with safety. For although the Soil hereof to be tolerably fruitful and fit for Habitation, yet the Country for the most part is desolate and ill inhabited; partly by reason of some vast Defarts, lying betwixt the Cities of Cafan and Afracan; but principally in regard of the Crim-Tartars, who will not suffer the Moscovites to plant it with Colonies of his own people, nor the Natives to live there in quiet, except only in the Western parts, where they are protected by Garrisons. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Cafan, upon the River Volga, which gives name to the Kingdom, since the Subjection of this People to the great Duke, and their Conversion to the Faith, made a Bishop's See. 2. Swirick, upon the River Sura, in the middle of the vast Defarts betwixt Cafan and Afracan; built by Basilius the great Duke, for a Stage or resting-place for Merchants and Travellers, that there they might repose themselves without fear of the Tartars. The people hereof had once a King of their own, as before was said; the last of which named Chelealeick, (substituted himself unto Basilius, the great Duke, and became tributary 20. afterwards revolting, he was vanquished by John Vasilvich, An. 1553, and this Kingdom thereupon united to the Empire of Russia: the Emperours since that time writing themselves Czar Cafanick, or King of Cafan. And possibly enough it is that Basilius, who first made it tributary, might from hence take the name of Basilius Cafan, according to the custom of the ancient Romans.

Under the Government hereof are the Czeremiss, a People that live in great Forreits without any Houses, living for the most part of Honey and the flesh of wild Beasts, with the Skins of which they are apparelled. Their Language is different from the rest. They are swift of foot, and very good Archers, carrying their Bows in their hands continually, and praffling their Children so timely in it, that they give them nothing to eat (after such an Age) until they can hit a White which is set before them.

ASTRACAN lieth also South East of Cafan, more near unto the Caspian Sea; parted from Cafan by those Defarts (spoken of before, but situate on the same Branch of the River Volga), which, having run a course of 2000 Italian Miles, dischargeth it self into this Sea with no less than 70 Mouths or Channels. It took this name from Afracan the chief Town hereof, situate about 20 Italian miles from the fall of one of those 70 Mouths or Channels into the Caspian: by the commodiousness whereof it is one of the best Towns of Trade in all these Dominions, the Armenian Merchants coming hither, and bartering their Silks and Manufactures for the Furs and other natural Commodities of the Russes or Moscovites. A Kingdom formerly, but a Kingdom of less esteem than that of Cafan; conquered (together with it) by Basilius the great Duke, Anno 1494, and by him made Christian. But afterwards revolting, they were more absolutely subdued by John Vasilvich, who brought into the field against them no fewer than 120000 Horse and 200000 Foot, (enough to over-run a far greater Country) and yet had hardly got the better, but for the terror of his great Ordinance, which the others wanted. Upon that Victory it was made a Member of the Empire of Russia, the Emperour whereof hath since styled himself the King of Afracan.

18. NOVOGORDIA Inferior. 19. The MORDWITS.

BUT it is now time we return towards Europe, out of which we have wandered up and down in the skirts of Asia, in tracing out the several Provinces of this Empire, since our first crossing over the Bay of Grandie, or Saint Nicolas, into the Country of Petozora. But in our way we must first take a view of the Dukedom of Novogord the Lower, so called to difference it from Novogord (situate the Great) spoken of before, situate almost in the midst betwixt Cafan and Mosco, distant from the last 100 Polonian miles, and 60 miles from the Borders of the other, every Polonian mile being reckoned at four Italian. The Country is generally very rich both for Tillage and Pasturage, inferior unto none in all this Estate but Rifan and Wolodimir only. So called from Novogord, the chief Town situate at the Confluence of the Occa and Volga; besides which it hath the neighbourhood of a very great Lake, which storeth it plentifully with Fish. A City of great esteem in all this Empire, partly for the great number of Houses, in that not easily equalled by any other; partly for an impregnable Castle cut out of the main Rock with incredible charges in the time of Basilius the Great Duke, but principally for a stately and magnificent Temple, built above 600 year ago, in imitation (or emulation, as some say) of the famous Church of S. Sophia in Constantinople. To this Town the Story of the Scythian or Sarmatian Slaves ought, in my mind, to be ascribed; a though commonly reported of the other Novogord, in the West parts of this Empire. My reason is, because it is not likely that the Sarmatians dwelling on the Borders of the Baltick Sea should cross all this Country to join with the Asiatick Scythians, so remote from them in a needless War, which those of this Tract might well do, as near Neighbours to them, if not of the same Nation or Extraction with them: nor is it probable that the Slaves would suffer their Masters to wait all the Country as far as the Baltick Sea, and to increase their strength by the Spoil thereof, before they met them in the Field to give them Tax.

Subject to the Estate hereof are the MORDWIT Tatars, lying on the South, betwixt the Volga and the Dwora Tanais, where it begetteth to return Westwards towards the Euxine. A People much of the same nature with the Czeremiss, but that they have some Villages and scattered Houses, which the other either want or else care not for. They are Idolaters for the most part (and the rest Mahometans) carrying their Idols in their Carts wheresoever they go; worshipping that Beasts all day which they first tie in the morning, and swearing by it for that day, as their chiefest Deity.

20. WOROTINE. 21. TOWER. 22. WOLODOMIR.

AND now again we are in Europe, where the Great Duke hath almost as many Titles as Towns with Territories. Four of them (besides some before) are either situate in the Province of Moscow, or else so intermingled with the Towns thereof, that they may easily be taken (or mistaken) for Members of it. The principal are, WOROTINE, seated on the West side of the River Occa, a distinct Dukedom of it self, so called from Worotin the chief City of it, built upon that River, about 3 Dutch miles from Culliga in the Province of Kozlov lying on the farther Bank thereof; beautified with a strong Castle, and a pleasant Soil. The 2. Misenchet, the next Town of note, remarkable for the Head of the River Occa, which ariseth in the fields adjoining.

TOWER, or OTOWER, as some call it, is a large and goodly Country lying along the Banks of the River Volga: so populous, that it is said to contain 40000 Doublers or Gentlemen fit to serve on horseback, and double that number of the common or inferior sort. It gives the Title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and is so called from Tuver the chief Town thereof, and a Bishop's See; affirmed to be a fairer and more stately City than Mosco it self, from which it is distant 36 Dutch miles.

WOLO-

WOLODOMIR is one of the most fruitful Countries in all Russia, not parallel'd by many Countries in the World; the Soil here (if all be true which is said of it) yielding such an Increase, that many times the Husbandman hath twenty, and sometimes twenty five, for one. It gives the title of a Duke to the Russian Emperour, and hath precedence before Moscow in the Style Imperial. So called from Wolodimir, the chief City of it, and a Bishop's See, and that so named from the Founder, who probably was the same Varladimir (one of the first Kings of the Russes) who married Helena the Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, Emperour of Constantinople. The City is situate 36 Polonian mile on the East of Mosco, anciently the chief Seat and Residence of the Great Duke, and so the chief Seat of John, the Son of Daniel, who continued till the time of John, that from thence he might more easily confront and oppose the Tartars, with whose Irruptions and Invasions both he and his Predecessors had long been troubled. Under the Government hereof is the City of Sofialsk, of great esteem, and very well peopled as long as the Royal Seat remained at Wolodimir, betwixt which and Mosco it is seated. After it fell into decay, and being once destroyed by the Tartars, could never since recover its ancient Lustre; having now little to uphold its reputation but a Bishop's See.

23. DWINA.

DWINA, so called from the chief Town, is situate on the Confluence of two Rivers, Fuch and Sachona, whence it hath the name Dwina in the Language of that Country signifying two, as ruian doth with us amongst Country-people. A Country of great extent, but exceeding barren, which makes the Villages hereof to stand very thin, the Towns (considering the great compass of it) to be very few, and the Inhabitants for the most part to live upon dried Fish and the Flesh of wild Beasts, which to have no want of. The chief Commodity is Salt, with which they use to furnish the neighbouring Provinces, and provide such Necessaries for themselves as they stand in need of. Chief Towns hereof are, 1. Dwina, situate in before, situate in the middle of the Province, on the meeting of the said two Rivers, where here united into one Stream take the name of Dwina, or Dwina, the greater; known by that name until its fall into the Northern Ocean in the Bay of Granvic. 2. Sagan, so called of the River (one of the two which makes the Dwina) upon which it is seated. 3. Colmagro. 4. Pinnegre, two strong Castles.

Unto this Province (because I know not else how to dispose of them) I must reduce these four Towns following: that is to say, 1. Ofing, a Bishop's See, situate on the Western side of the River, over against the Town of Dwina, and in a Country so ill furnished with Necessaries, that the people eat dried Fish instead of Bread, but have Salt enough to season it from those of Dwina. 2. Czereph, a Bishop's See also, on the same side of the River, and Dwina is ol. 3. S. Nicolas, a well-known Port, and a Bishop's See; situate at the influx of Dwina into the Gulf of Granovics on the Bay of S. Nicolas, from hence denominated. A Town much traded since the discovery of the North-east passage by the English, and the removal of theirs and the Dutch Traffick from Novogord hither, from hence diffused with more care and speed into all the parts of this vast Empire. 4. S. Michael, on the Sea-side, commonly called Archangel, a Town of great Trade, by the English especially, who have of late here fixed their Staple, to the great enriching of the place; by reason whereof the English Merchants have not only great Privileges and Immunities (as the Authors of so great a benefit unto this Estate) not granted to others, but the whole Nation have found better and more noble entertainment from them than any others have received. The cause of which was primarily the great opinion which their Emperours had of Q. Elizabeth, who held very good correspondence with them, continued ever since by mutual Embassies on both sides; and secondly, the comfortable Behaviour of the English to themselves, so acceptable to those Barbarians (both Prince and People) that when John Vasilvich nailed the Hat of another foreign Embassador to his Head, for his too much perverseness, he used our Sir Thomas Smith with all kinde of imaginableness. Another time, when the Jesuite Possive began to persuade with him to approve of the Religion of the Church of Rome; upon the information of the English Embassador, that the Pope was a proud Prelate, and would make Princes kiss his feet, he grew into such a rage, that the Jesuite was afraid he would have beat out his Brains. But to return again to the Port of S. Nicolas; it is so called from an Abbey there built unto that Saint, the Tutelary Saint and local Patron of the Nation. Which said, I will let fall from this Port to the Russian Islands, and see what may be said of them to our present purpose.

24. The RUSSIAN Islands.

THE RUSSIAN Islands are but two, both of them in the Northern or Frozen Ocean, on the Coasts of this Country; that is to say, 1. Sir Hugh Willoughby's Island, and Nova Zemla; both subject (if to any) to the Knez, or great Duke of Moscow.

1. WILLOUGHBY'S ISLAND was so called from Sir Hugh Willoughby, because he first discovered it, Anno 1553, and was hereabouts found frozen to death the next Year following. For being employed by the Merchants of London in the time of King Edward the sixth, to find out a new way to Moscow, Cathai and China; he proceeded so far as to this Island, (situate almost opposite to the Bay of S. Nicolas) where the Weather proved so extreme, and the Frosts so vehement, that his Ship was set fast in the Ice, and all his people with himself frozen to death, in which condition they were found the next year after, with an exact description of their Voyage and Fortunes. Notwithstanding which disastrous beginning, the Enterprize was pursued by some noble Adventurers as Jensken Jon, Birronges, Per Jackson, and others of the English Nation, who opened the way as far as to the River Ob, (the East Bounder of Russia), but by reason of the length of the way, the vast floating Islands of Ice, and perpetual Night for many months together in Winter, could advance no farther.

2. NOVA ZEMLA, situate on the East of Willoughby's Island, opposite to Petozora in Condorabere mentioned, was first discovered by such Adventurers as followed Willoughby's Design. Famous for nothing but a race of short-statured men, not above four foot high, a degree above the height of Pigmees; not yet so far discovered as to know any thing thereof, but by the relation of the Russes, who affirm the Inhabitants to have neither Religion, nor Civility, nor the Precepts of any Law; but that they worshipped the Sun, Moon, and Northern Star, to which they offer a yearly Sacrifice of their Deer; that the Island is woody, desert, and not easy for travel, having in it neither grain, Bough nor Grass, yet harbouring great Flocks of Bears, and such ravenous and dangerous Beasts. Found experimentally true by William Barrentson and his Associates, employed by the Hollanders.

for this Discovery, Ann 1594, and 1596, in which last year, after many dreadful Combats with huge flakes of Ice, they were forced to winter in this Island, where they buried an House, as well to preserve themselves from being buried in Snow, as from being devoured by the Beasts (some of them 12 foot in length) which, with the loss of two of their company devoured by those savage creatures, they at last effected; some of them coming home in safety the Oöober following. And though they seemed to give some hope that a way might be found unto Cathai on the North of this Island (themselves having gone as far North as the 81. Degree of Latitude, within 9 of the Pole) yet it is generally conceived that the undertaking is unprofitable, the success impossible.

And fo I leave it, to return to the Story of Roffia, called antiently by the name of Sarmatia Europea, but known no farther Northwards than the Head of Tanis. And for Sarmatia Europea, it was bounded in the time of Ptolemy by the Baltick Sea and fome Terra Incognita on the North, the 7. yeazles Metanefis (now Transylvania) and the Upper Hungary upon the South, the River Wiftula, or Welfel, which divided it from Germany, upon the Weft, and the Tanis upon the Eaft. Beyond that, all along the Banks of the Enxine Sea to the Mare Cafpium and as far North, as any Conquerour had gone, it was called Sarmatia Afaticae the Countries farther Eaftward being then called Scythia. By which account, as Ruffia, containeth not all Sarmatia Europea, of which Pruffia and the reft of the incorporate Provinces of Poland paff for a part, fo neither is it totally comprehended in it, extending beyond Tanis into Affaticae. The antient Inhabitants, called by a general name Sarmatae, by the Greeks Savarmatae, were subdivided, for fo much of this part of it was then made known, into the Azagyrifci, Rutheni, Pagiritae, dwelling in the North; the Ogylti, Alani, Roxolani, &c. dwelling in the South. Amongst many other barbarous Nations, there were fome of the principal, and from thefe Roxolani, as the principal of all the reft, Matthias a Michow, a learned Poleander, doth derive the Original of the Roffes, (which we now call the Ruffians;) feconded herein by the more learned Bocharius, upon proveth out of antient Authors, that the Inhabitants of Taurica Cherfonefus (from which the paffage into this Country is both by Land and cafe) have been formerly called Rhos, Tachos &c. ῥωσες &c. Taurus vocati gentes Rhos, as he faith from Taurizes. Which Ros, or Rhofes, firft mingling with the Alani, a Sarmatian People, might get the name of Roxolani; and afterwards poffeffing the more Northern Countries, or mingling with the Roffi, of Mount Taurus (from whom thofe of Taurica defcended) in their enterprizes on Conftantinople and the parts adjoining, return to their old name of Roffi. The Roffi, or Ruffians, were then the firft Lords of this Country generally, the Mefcovites poffeffors of a Province only; fo called from the Mofchi, fpooken of by Lxxvi in his Pharlatia, and placed by Pliny near the head of the River Phafis, which rifing from the Armenian Mountains, falls into the Enxine. Derived no doubt from Mofchi, (or Mofch), as the Antients called him) the Son of Japhet, placed originally in the North and North-eaft of Syria, on the Confines of Calchis and Armenia; where Pliny, as before is faid, hath fixed the Mofchi, and where there is a long Chain of Hills, which moft of the old Writers call Montes Mofchici. But to return unto the Roffi, we hear not of them by this name till the time of Michael, the third, Emperor of Conftantinople; in whose Reign they infected the Enxine Sea, and had the boldnefs to attempt the Imperial City, Anno 864; faid by Cedrenus and fome other of the Eaftern Writers to be a People of Mount Taurus, next neighbours to Moscow or the Moskovs. Failing in their attempt upon Constantinople, and not willing to go home again, they spread themselves, with their Conjurates and Associates in this Expedition, upon the North-west Banks of the Evxine Sea, enlarging their bounds Northwards with less opposition than they were likely to have done on the Southern parts: Constantinople being once again in vain attempted in the Reigns of Constantine the 7. and Henricus Aescop. Converted to the Christian Faith, or growing into better terms with the Eastern Emperours, Helenus, Daughter of Nicephorus Phocas, is married to Valadomirus one of their Kings. From that time forwards they turned their Forces on the Polanders, and their weaker Neighbourhoods; save that, provoked by the death of one of their Country, slain accidentally at Constantinople in a private Quarrel, they made another fruitless Journey against that City, in the time of Michael Calaphates. Enlarging their Empire to the West and South, they became Masters of a great part of Sarmatia, Armenia, Lituania, Podolia, Nigra, Ruffia, and other Provinces now subject to the Crown of Poland, being the parts of their Empire. Anno 1240 the Tartars, under the Conduct of Batani, or Batay, Son of Ossacca Chan, broke into them and subdued them: the Country before this empire, under one false King, being broken afterwards into divers petty and inferior Governments, according to the will and pleasure of the infidel Victors. The Principal of these (descended from the former Kings) were Lords of Volodomy, Moscov, and some other Cities; held by them with no other Title than that of Lords of Moscov, and that to this Tributary to the Tartars as were all the rest. Their Seat was originally at Volodomy, till the time that Judas, the Son of Daniel, the fifth Lord of the Ruffes, defended the old Royal Line, taking a good liking of the River and Town of Moscow, repaired the Town, being before that mean and ordinary, and made it the chief Seat of his Principality. From whence the residue of the Ruffians, in succeeding times upon this Estate by Marriages, Fraud and Conquest, had the name of Moscovites. But notwithstanding this increase of their power and Empire, the Tartars held them for their Vassals, and tyrannized upon the Country with a barbarous Infidelity. Under which Thraldom they long groaned, till the Tartarians, being divided amongst themselves, and grown less terrible to the Neighbours, were out of their Power and Command here by the valour of Jobn, son of Basilins the second; who thereupon changed the Title of Lord into that of Duke, and after that out of Gren Duke, as his Fortunes thrived. Yet not so great, but that he was contented to be an Homager of the Tartars: it being finally agreed on at the end of their Wars, that the Tartars should relinquish all their Holds in the Country; and on the other side, that once every year, within the Castle of Moscow, the Great Duke, standing on foot, should feed the Horse of the Crim-Tartars with Oats out of his own Cuy. This Homage was by Basilins changed into a Tribute of Furs; which being also accepted by his Successors, (as the grow in power) occasioned the long Wars betwixt the Nations: the Tartars always preying on them by sudden Inroads, sometimes by Armies of no less than 200000 fighting men. But notwithstanding all their Power, and the Friendship of the Turk to boot, the Moscovites is not only able to assert his Sovereignty, but hath also wrested from them many of his Provinces.

As for the Princes of this Country, I shall not trouble myself (as I seee some do) in tracing a Succession of them as far as from the times of Augustus Caesar; when neither the Rossi nor the Moschi had here any footing. We will therefore go no higher than the time of George, whose Daughter Anne I find to have been married married to Henry the first of France. From whom in a direct Line descended another George, with whom we intend to begin our Catalogue, as being the last King of the Russies before the coming of the Tartars. He, wisely yielding to the Storm, waved the Title of King, contented only with the Title of Lord, as more fate for him, and less invidious to the Tartars. The fifth from whom, called Iohn, (as before is said) having removed his Seat to Mosco, took to himself the Title of Lord of Mosco, the chief feat of that Power and Sovereignty, which he transmitted afterwards to his Posterity; affecting for that cause the Title of Duke of Moscovie (though all the conquered Towns and Territories have their place also in his Style) as much as that of Emperor of Russia; which some of them have assumed also since the time of Basilius, who styled himself Basilius, by the Grace of God, Emperor and Lord of Russia, Great Duke of Pologdomir, Moscovie, Novogrod, the great, Pleskov, Smolensk, Tver, jarvis, Wiatka, Belgar, &c. and Lord and Great Prince of the lower Novogrod, Cernigow, great, Novogoloda, Nov, Biele, Rondow, Jarslaw, Poleskie, Bielozersk, Udore, Obdora, Konfow, &c. King of Czowan and Afracan. But leaving them to their swelling and voluminous Title, (little inferior unto that of the Kings of Spain) let us next look on the Succession from the time afore said.

The Lords of MOSCOWIE of the old Royal RUSSIAN Line

A. C. b.

1. George, the last King of the Russes, and first Lord of the Russes of the Royal Line.
2. Iacflans.
3. Alexander.
4. Daniel.
5. John, who transferred the Seat to Mosco.
6. John II.
7. Basilus.
8. Demetrius.
9. Georgius II.
10. Basilus II.

The Great Dukes of MOSCOWIE.

1. John, the first Great Duke, who shook off the Tartarian Bondage.
2. Basilius Cazan, won the Provinces of Severia, Rosovia, and Smolensko, with the Realms of African and Cazan.
3. John Basilius, conquered Livonia and Lithuania. Both which his Successor
- 1548 4. Joannes Bafilides, or Wasilwich, lost in his age; though in his youth he had subdued the Noj-baczenian Tartars to his Empire, and vanquished Selim Emperour of the Turks, Anno 1569. With this King the Englishs first began to confederate.
- 1583 5. Theodoros Johanniades, the last of the old Royal Line of Moscow.
- 1591 6. Baris Theodorits, Brother to the Wife of the last Great Duke, partly by the last Will of his Predecessor, partly by practising with the people, obtained the Empire; but being an unmerciful Tyrant, was dispossessed by the Polanders coming in favour of one.
- 1603 7. Demetrius, pretending himself to be the Son of John Wasilwich, (and generally believed to be so) preferred in a Monastery from the Tyranny of Boria, in hatred of whom he was brought in by the Polander; by whose aid he overcame the Tyrant, and rooted out his Family, and was with great joy crowned Emperor in the City of Mosco. But the Russian Lords disdaining to have a Prince imposed on them from Poland, rose in Arms against him, and at last vanquished and slew him in open Field: his Wife, a noble Polonian Lady, being sent poorly home, and the Polanders beaten out of the Country.

- 1606 8. Bogdan Ivanowitch farrnamed Siskins, the chief of the Confiscators, was by the rest of his Faction chosen Knez, or Emperour, and held the State with great Trouble till the year 1610, when
- 1610 9. Demetrius II. another pretender to the State, as the Son of Iohn Wasilwitsch also, in opposition upon Siskins, fell up by a stronger Faction, gave occasion to the Polander to work upon this difference; by whom Siskins was taken Prisoner, Demetrius slain, Smolensky and other great Towns subdued, and Vladislaws, Prince of Poland, recommended to the Russians to be chosen Emperour. But the Russies, loath to fall under the power of the Polander; and weary of their own Confusions, made choice at last of
- 1615 10. Michael Fedorowitsch, Son of Theodore the Patriarch of Mosco, who at last settled this vast Empire, and managed it in a more constant way of Peace with the Turk, Tartar, Polonian, and Sweethlander, than any of his Predecessors had done before him.
- 1646 11. Alexius Michaelowitsch (or the Son of Michael) succeeded his Father in the Empire; troubled at first with some Discontents in the State, (as in all other Countries about that time) but now quietly settled, Anno 1648.

The Formales with which these great Emperors are invested or fetted in the Throne are not many nor flatly, such as they be. There afford you out of the History of the Life of Johnnes Baptista, written in Latine by Pavlos Oederivinus. On the 2. of June, Anno 1583, Theodorius Jordanus went towards the Temple of S. Michael: being the principal Church in all Mosco, the Streets all covered with Flowers, the Doors of the Citizens crowned with Garlands, the Air echoing with the noise of Flutes and Trumpets, and the people to crowding to behold their Prince, that had not the Guard with naked Swords forced a passage through them, it had been impossible for him to have gone on. Being now come to the Church-door, the Lords of the Country (Knezess they there call them) went out to meet him; and the Archbishop of Mosco, clad in his Pontificalibus, when he was come into the Church, embraced him. The Pavement of the Church was cobby with Tapestry, and the Stalls adorned with costly Hangings. The Great Duke fate down in his Throne, being attired in a garment of Silk, buttoned down with Golden Buttons: on his Head he wore a Purple Cap fringed with rich Jewels, and on his Fingers abundance of Rings. Being thus seated, the Patriarch made a Prayer to God to bless him, his People, and his Government: which was seconded by the joyful Shouts and Acclamations of his Subjects; amongst whom no small store of Silver-money was flung by the Treasurer, and so they returned to the Palace.

The Government of this Country is meerly Tyrannical, the Emperour being absolute Lord of the Lives, Lands and Goods of all his Subjects: all of them, the noble as well as the base, subscribing themselves in their Petitions to him by the name of Kleptery, that is, Slaves. Whereupon Mahomet, a Turkish Bashaw, was used to say, that his Master and the Moscow were the two most absolute Princes in all the World. First for their Goods; when any Embassador returns home, the Great Duke takes from him all the Presents which he hath received, giving him perhaps some small Reward, perhaps none at all: and as for Lands, they pass not from Father to Son, but as he confirms it. But more particularly, (besides the case of Permia spoken of before) John Vasilvitch sent a Command to Mosco, to provide a Coal-pack of five Fleas for a Medicine: and when the Citizens returned answer that it was impossible, he fined them at 700 Rubbles for their Disobedience. Another time he laid a Mult of 300000 Rubbles upon his Nobility, because he had no good Sport in his Hunting: which they again extorted from the common people; and under colour of want, commanded from some Bishops and Monasteries the sum of 100000 Rubbles, from some 50000, more or less from others, according unto their Revenues. And it is usual with the best of them to cause the Boiars (or Gentlemen which serve on horse-back) to pretend themselves robbed, that he may send unto the City to find out the Felon, and, on a Non est inventus, fine them at discretion, sometimes 8000, sometimes 10000, and sometimes 20000 Rubbles. Then for their Lives, there is a Story, that Vasilvitch having found that one of his Secretaries had received a Goofe stuffed full of Silver for a Bribe, caused him to be brought into the Market-place of Moscow, without any legal Trial, he commanded the Executioner first to cut off his Legs about the Shins, and then his Arms about the Elbows, (still asking the miserable man how he liked Goofe-flesh) and in the end to cut off his Head; in similitude of a Goofe ready for the Spit: And that they may the better preserve this Power, the Great Dukes seldom shew themselves unto the people but in Apparel of inestimable value, joyning the Ornaments of a Bishop unto the Majesty of a King, by wearing a Mitre on their Heads shining with Diamonds and rich Stones: and when they wear it not on their Heads, they place it before the Chair of State, (over which are the Images of Christ and the Blessed Virgin) holding in their hands a most rich Crozier-Staff, and all their Fingers full of Rings. And upon solemn Festivals and Entertainments the great Chamber is beset with Cupboards of Plate of infinite value, and filled with men clothed with Cloth of Gold to the very footfall of them seeming to be men of the chief Nobility, but many times being no other than the gravest and portliest Citizens of Mosco, richly apparelled for the time out of the Emperour's Wardrobe; which to such as do not understand the Fraud, look like to many Princes, and cause no small wonder at his Magnificence. So that the people seeing him in such Royal state, and knowing no more than what they are taught at home, reverence him as Slaves, not Subjects, and look upon him rather as a God than a King.

Having to absolute a Command on their Lives and Goods, it will be easily supposed that he may raise what Forces and amass what Treasures he hath a mind to. First, for his Forces, it is said that he is able to raise 300000

Horfe, if occasion be: and that he may come near that number it is more than probable, in that John Vasilvitch, in his War against those of Astracan, had actually 120000 Horfe, and that a great part of the Country is in the hands of the Boiars placed by their Tenure to serve with Horfe whenever he pleareth; and that there are 110 men chosen by the Emperour, and by him enfeoffed with Lands, (during pleasure only) who for these Lands are to find 65000 Horfe with all things necessary for the Wars, and those in a continual readines fit for present Action. Then for such Horfe as he himself doth keep in perpetual pay, there are no fewer than 25000 which attend him as a Guard to his person, all of them well-experienced men and fit for Service: which added to the 65000 spoken of before, make up a standing Body of 90000. Had he Foot answerable unto this proportion of Horfe, there were no dealing with him; but therein his Militia is defective: Vasilvitch to his great Army of 120000 Horfe having but 20000 Foot; the Foot-men which he hath in continual pay amounting to 12000 only, far short of such a standing Body of Horfe as before we spoke of. And this defect hath been the reason why the Polanders with far less Armies have prevailed against them: the Great Duke not being able with all his power to hinder King Stephen of Poland from taking Vilno, or besieging Pleskow (though his Army was not above 60000 in both Horfe and Foot) for want of standing Bands of Foot to make good his ground. Generally both Horfe and Foot are very obedient to their Captains and Superior Officers: patiently enduring all Discommodities of Cold, Rain, and Hunger, (in that regard fitter to keep a Fortrefs than serve in Field) and so regardless of their Lives in the day of Battle, that they will rather lose themselves than yield themselves Prisoners or demand Quarter.

For his Revenues, they may be what he will himself, considering (besides his extraordinary power of oppressing his Subjects before mentioned) the many ordinary ways he hath of amazing Treasure: viz. the Forfeiting of home-bred Commodities, and ingrossing the sovereignty, selling them at what price he list, and hindering all men else from Trade till his own be sold; provision of Rent-corn and Victual, raised in some years to 200000 Rubbles, Rent-wood and Hay to 30000, Poll-money to 400000, Customs on Merchandise to 800000. By which and other means of collecting Monies, and the Domain of his Crown, though he raise vast Sums; yet it is thought that, his Household-charges being deducted, there remain not towards all other Expences three millions of Rubbles, every Rubble being as much as an English Mark.

The Arms are Sable, a Portal open of two Leaves and as many Degrees Or.

P O L A N D.

POLAND is bounded on the East with Russia and the Crim-Tartar, from whom it is parted by the River Borjphenes; on the West with Germany, on the North with the Baltick Sea and some part of Russia, on the South with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Hungary, Transylvania and Moldavia.

It is an aggregate Body, consisting of many distinct Provinces united into one Estate, of which Poland, being the predominant, hath given name to the rest, called all together the Realm of Poland: and that so named from Pole, which in the Slavonian Language (the common Language of the Country) signifieth plain; because it is but little settled with Hills. It is of Figure round, in compass 2600 miles, situate under the eighth and twelfth Climates; and that the longest Day in the Southern part is but 16 hours; and about 18 hours in the parts most North.

This Country is plain, but full of Woods, which serve to rectifie the Air, being naturally so cold that they have neither Wine nor Grapes; instead whereof they use that kind of Drink called Ale, in former times the usual Beverage of England and this Country only. Barley they have, and Pulse in such abundant measure, that no small quantities of each are transported yearly: nor yield they any thing at all to Denmark, or Hungary for their plenty of Cattel. But of this more in our description of the several Provinces.

The People are very industrious, and studious of all Languages, especially of the Latine; to which they are so devoted, that there is scarce a mean man who is not able in some measure to express himself in it. According to their abilities, they are rather prodigal than truly liberal, and good Soldiers generally. The Peasants live in miserable Servitude to their Lords, the Lords in such Equality of estate amongst themselves, that none of them excepting the greater Princes) exceedeth 25000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Proud in their Garb, costly in their Apparel, impatient in their Humours, and delicate in Diet. These last Conditions are common to the Women also, who are for the most part indifferently fair, and rather witty than well spoken. But this, being the peculiar Character of the Polander properly so called, is not perhaps communicable to the People of the rest of the Provinces, whom we shall speak of severally in their proper places.

The Christian Faith was first planted in this Kingdom at several times and by several persons, according to the different parts of which it consisteth: in Poland specially so called in the time of their Prince Micosslaus, Son of Nemanslaus, Anno 963; in Livonia, by the Preaching of one Meinardus, Anno 1200, or thereabouts, in Lithuania, not until the year 1386, at the admission of Jagello to the Crown of Poland, and then done (as some say) by Thomas of Walden (or Waldensis) an English Friar, in Samogitia and Polshunia, at the same time with Lithuania; in the rest at other times and on other occasions: yet to that in many places of idolatry was never totally rooted out, the feeds and practice whereof many Points still remain amongst them. Corrupted by the Superstitions of the Church of Rome, a Reformation was endeavoured at such a time as John Hus flourished in Bohemia, the next neighbouring Kingdom: but by the rigour of Vladislaus the sixth, then King thereof, assisted by his Bishops and Noblemen, it was at that time hindered. Afterwards in the time of Luther, some who had studied at Leipsick, and Wittenberg (Universities of Saxony) brought his Opinions home with them into the Province of Poland; as some Dutch Merchants (with the rest of their Commodities) did into Danzick, the chief Town of Pomerellia, Anno 1525: from whence it spread it self over most part of that Country. According as it was favoured or disliked by the Palatines, Chastellans and other great men of the Realm, so was its entertainment either good or bad: the Gratiens in the mean time taking opportunity to win some parts of it to their side, and confirm others in it, who, being originally members of the Church of Greece, because originally converted by the Bishops thereof, did still continue in Conformity and Obedience to it. In the end, by reason of the over-greedy Liberty of the Nobility and People, and want of Power in the King to controule their doings, every man took up what Religion he best liked; some following the Augustine Confession, others the Helvetian, others adhering, as tenaciously to the Church of Rome, and some inclining to new Sects, or rather to old Heresies under new Disguises, have brought in such a Miscellaneous or Babel of Religions into this Estate, (Jesuits, Lutherans, Calvinists, Socinians, Arians, Anabaptists, and indeed what name being here all tolerated) that at last it grew into a By-word, that If any man had lost his Religion, he might find it in Poland, or else believe it to be vanished. A by-word afterwards applied unto Amsterdam, communicable since unto other places, Liberias Prophetandi, or the Liberty of Prophecying, being now as much allowed of in some parts of Christendom, as Libertas opinandi was in Rome under Nerva's Government, ubi et sentire quae velis, et quae sentias loqui liceat, when as a man might think as he liked of the publick, and speak what he thought. But whether this be such a vera et temporaria Felicitas, such a Felicity of these our Times, as Tacitus conceived the return to be of those, future times will shew.

But to return again to Poland: notwithstanding this mixture of Religions, yet that most publicly allowed and countenanced is the Religion authorized by the Church of Rome, asserted here by the Zeal of the Kings unto that Cause, and the great Power of the Bishops, who seeing how those of their Order have sined in Germany and other places, under colour of Reformation of more things amiss, have hitherto upheld the Ecclesiastical Estate in the same form they found it. The Government of the Church is as formerly by 4 Archbishops and 19 Bishops, who challenge a Jurisdiction over all the Kingdom, but exercise it upon those only who submit unto them: those who embrace the Doctrines of Luther or Calvin following the Forms of Government by them established; and others do some new ones of their own devising. And for those Provinces and people which lie towards Greece, or or were parts heretofore of the Russian Empire, and still hold a Communion with those Churches, they have Archbishops and Bishops of their own Religion; that is to say, the Archbishops of Vilne and Lemberg, the Bishops of Pelaco, Lusko, Pinsk, Volodimir, Przemisl and Kiovia. Yet amongst all these different Churches and forms of Government there is this Conformity, that whenever the Gospel is read openly in the Congregation, the Nobility and Gentry use to draw their Swords, (according to an ancient Custom which they had among them) signifying their readiness to defend it against all Opposers. Which reason doubtless gave beginning to the standing up at the Creed and Gospel in the Primitive times, retained still in the Church of England, whereby we do declare how prepared and resolute we are to defend the same: though some of late, holding it for a Relique of Popery, with greater nicety than wisdom, have refused to do it.

Principal Commanders of this Country in the Art of War were, 1. Casimir the third, the great Establisher of this Kingdom after long Diffusions. 2. Jaagelo, or Fladislav the first, who first brought down the Pride of the Dutch Knights in a famous Victory. 3. Casimir the 4. the fortunate Conqueror of the Knights of Prussia, brought by him under the Command of the Kings of Poland. 4. Sigismund the first, by whose Valour and good fortune the Dutch Knights were totally suppressed, and the greatest part of Prussia for ever added to that Crown. 5. Sigismund the second, surnamed Augustus, fortunate in his Wars against most of them of Livonia, by him united to this Kingdom. Of most special note for learning, Hofius, a Divine of the Papal Party, whose great Abilities advanced him to the State of Cardinal. 2. Crellius, and 3. Volckelius, of the contrary party in Religion, men of great parts, but Heretodox and unsound Opinions. 4. Fromartius, the Historian. 5. Keckerman, the Professor at Dauk or Dantzick, a man of universal Studies, but of greater industry than exactness.

Chief Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1. Vistula or the Weyssel, the ancient Boundary betwixt Germany and Sarmatia Europaea, which, rising in the Carpathian Mountains, passeth by Cracovia, the chief City of Poland, and, dividing Prussia from Pomerellia, falleth into the Baltick Sea, not far from Dantzick, and is navigable for the space of 400 miles, of old called Faudalis. 2. Wartha, which runneth through the lesser Poland. 3. Diuna the left, watering Livonia; and 4. Borsbhenes, or the Nieper, passing through Podolia: both spoken of before, when we were in Russia. 5. Nisster, by Polemey called Tyras, which falleth into the Euxine Sea, having first parted Podolia from Moldavia. 6. Jugra, by some called the lesser Tanais, arising in Lithuania, and falling into the more noted Tanais, which is now called Don. Of less note there are, 1. Ruben, or Renben. 2. Chorona, now called Pregel. 3. Bog, said by some to be the Hypaxis of the Ancients. 4. Memel. 5. Nicmen, the Meander of these Northern parts. 6. Windaw, a Livonian River falling into the Baltick. Mountains of note here are not many, the Countries for the most part being plain and champaign: and those which be are rather Boundaries betwixt this and some other Kingdom, than proper unto this alone. The chief of which are those called Sarmaticæ, dividing Germany from Sarmatia Europaea, by Solima named Sera, by Polemey the Carpathian Mountains; the Boundary at this time betwixt Poland and Hungary, of which more anon.

The common Meets and Land-marks being thus laid down, we will next take a view of those several Provinces of which this Kingdom doth consist, being eleven in number; that is to say, 1. Livonia, 2. Samogitia, 3. Lithuania, 4. Valmirie, 5. Podolia, 6. Russia nigra,

7. Maffovia, 8. Podlaffia, 9. Prassia, 10. Pomerellia, and 11. Poland specially to be called: all of them (except the proper Poland) within Sarmatia Europaea.

1. LIVONIA.

LIVONIA, or LIEFLAND, is bounded on the East with the Empire of Russia, on the West with the Baltick Sea, on the North with the Gulf or Bay of Finland, on the South with Samogitia and Lithuania extended in length along the Shore of the Baltick for the space of 125 Dutch, or 500 Italian, miles, and 40 Dutch, or 160 Italian, miles in breadth: and called thus perhaps from the Levomi, a People of Germany, inhabiting not far from the River Vistula.

The Country is for the most part plain, without any Mountains; furnished with Corn and Fruits in so great abundance, that they send part thereof into other Countries: and yet there is much Ground untilld in it, by reason of the Bogs and Marthes, which are very frequent. Here is also store of Wax, Honey and Pitch, but they have neither Oyl nor Wine: the want of which last is supplied by Meth. Of taste Beasts fit for man's Service they are well provided; as also of such whole Skins as are more value with the Merchant than their Flesh at the Market; as Ermins, Sables, Castors, and others of that kind, besides good store of Game for Hunting, the Country having in it many large Woods, parts of the Harjymian. And as for Rivers, there are few Countries which have more; it being watered by the Windaw, the Beck, the Dwine, the Renbon, all of them falling into the Baltick; many great Lakes, whereof the chief is that of Beybas, 45 miles long, and full of Fish.

The people are much given to Gluttony and Drunkenness, especially in rich men's houses, where it is to be held: for the Peasants live in want enough, poorer Slaves than Tyrannical Landlords, who spend in Riot and excess what these get by Drudgery: and when at any time the poor Wretch leaves his Landlord to mend his condition with some other, the Lord, if he can overtake him, will cut off his Foot, to make him sure for the future. They are a mixture of many Nations: as the Estoni, which are the natural Inhabitants, (derived from the Esti, a Dutch people, spoken of by Polemey) of which Nation are almost all the Peasants; the Moscovites, Swedes, Dani, Dutch and Polanders, intermingled with them, coming in upon several Conquests, and planting themselves in the best parts of it, in which they still Lord it over the Native, but the Dutch especially, for long time Masters of the whole.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by Meinardus of Lubeck, (employed herein) in the time of Fredrick the first; at the persuation of some Dutch Merchants who traded hither, by the Archbishop of Byeme, by whom he was made the first Bishop of the Livonians. The Church hereof at this time is governed by the Archbishop of Riga, the Bishops of Derpt, Asia, Osel, Carland, and Kiovia. In those parts which remain subject to the Polanders, the Religion of the Church of Rome is only countenanced. Such parts of it as are under the Swedes or Dani are for the most part of the Lutheran Profession, planted with Colonies of that People. But the Estoni, or original Inhabitants, as they have a Language, so they have a Religion by themselves also, mixt of the Christian and the Pagan. Extremely well affected unto their Priests, to whom they present Salt, Candles and Fruits, when they come to their their Blessings; great lovers of Confection, eaters of Holy water, and diligent frequenters of their Churches; but so extremely ignorant in all Points of Religion, that there is hardly one in a Village that can say his Pater-noster. When they bury any of their dead, every one drinketh an Health to him, and poureth his part upon him when his turn comes to drink; putting it into the Grave with him an Hatchet, Wine, Meat, and a little Money for his Voyage. And in some places they are wholly Idolatrous, (if not converted very lately by the care of the Jesuits) some of them worshipping the Sun, others Stocks and Stones, and some Serpents also. The Language of the Country is for the most part the High Dutch, being the Language of those Nations who first Lorded over them; the Estoni having generally a peculiar Language, which none of the others understand.

It was divided formerly into the Provinces of Carland, Ejfland, Semigallia, Virland, Harland and Lettenland; but these fix, since the Conquest of it by the Polanders, are reduced to three, Harland and Virland being united unto Ejfland, and Semigallia unto Carland.

Chief places in Ejfland are, 1. Rivallia, or Revel, a Bishop's See, and a well-traded Port, situate on the Gulf of Finland; a Town belonging to the Swede, the keeping whereof, and of Wiborg on the Borders of Moscow, stand him yearly in 100000 Dollars. 2. Habsey, or Halsfel, (Asia in Latine) a Bishop's See; and 3. Pernaw, a well-fortified place, belonging to the Swedish also, ever since the Conquest of these parts of the Country by John the second. Places of great importance to the Crown of Sweden, as all other pieces of this nature are, which, standing in an Enemy's Country, not only do defend our own, but offend our Adversaries. For they are not only Docks, to open a farther passage into their Territories, whenever we shall find occasion; but whilst the Enemy is besieging thereof, or otherwise busied in recovering them into his power, our own State is preferred in quiet, and time may yield fit opportunity to relieve them, if they be distressed, without waiting of any part of our proper Countries. Of which nature was Calais when it was in the hands of the English; the Garrisons which the Spaniards and Portuguese have in Africk and India: the Charge of keeping them being sufficiently defrayed (if the charge prove greater than the Income, as sometimes it doth) by the advantages they give unto him which hath them.

4. Vilna, a strong Town, and fortified with an impregnable Castle, betrayed by the Dutch Garrison at that time in it, together with William of Erstenburg, the Great Master, into the hands of John Basilus the Great Duke of Moscow, who still holds it. 5. Derpt, or Derbern, (in Latine Tapauna) a Bishop's See, situate on the Beck, or Embeck, betwixt two Lakes, in the midst of the Province, and taken at the same time by the Moscovite, who, transporting the Livonians into other places, planted these parts with Colonies of his own people. 6. Tervoff, a Castle of great strength taken then also by the Russes; but being recovered by the Polander, was blown up with Gunpowder, that it might no more come into the hands of the Enemy. Hitherto nothing of this Country which belongs to the Polanders; that which follow do: that is to say, 7. Borcholm, the Seat and Residence of the Bishop of Rivallia, since the taking of that Town by the Swedes. 8. Weisenburg, incommoedly seated betwixt two ill neighbours, Narvia and Rivallia, but serving very well to prohibit the Incursions of those Garrisons farther into the Country. 9. Vernebeck, in that part of Ejfland, which is called Odinapog, and Weisenburg, in that part thereof which is named Servia.

In LETLENLAND, lying in the midst betwixt Ejfland and Carland, the places of most note are, 1. Riga, (the people call it Ry) seated on the Mouth of the River Duna, falling there into the Baltick: first built & planted at the charges of the Merchants of Byeme; after that the Archbishop's See, the ordinary Residence of the Great Master, and the chief City of the whole Province of Livonia. A Town well fortified, according to the modern Rules of Fortification; with a strong Wall, large Bulwarks, double Ditches, Palisadoes, and well provided, of all manner of Ammunition: a famous Empory, of great resort for foreign Merchants, who carry hence, Pitch, Wax, Hemp, Flax, and such other Commodities. They are governed (notwithstanding their Subjection to the King of Poland) by their own Laws, and such stout defenders of their Liberties, that they will by no means admit of any Foreigner to have Command of the City, obedient in all other things to the will of that King. 2. Danumund, an impregnable Fortrice, two Dutch miles from Riga, well garrisoned by the Polanders, who here take Toll of all foreign Merchants. 3. Blokows, a Garrison of the King's betwixt Riga and Danumund, where the Merchants are tolled over again. 4. Wenden, more within the Land, on the River Teider. 5. Wolmar, upon the same River. 6. Kakenhantse, a strong Town on the Banks of the Dvina. This Country belongs wholly to the King of Poland, and stood firm for him in the War made by Charles Duke of Sunderman against his Nephew Sigismund King of Poland and Sweden, when almost all Ejfland had submitted to him.

CURLAND, the third and last Member of this Division, containing Semigallia also, lieth South of Lettenland, and North of Samogitia and Lithuania: an entire Dukedom of it self, but holden under the Sovereignty and Homage of the Kings of Poland. Places of most importance in it are, 1. Candow. 2. Goldingen. 3. Kies, (the Dutch call it Windaw) the Seat of the Great Master of the Tenonic Order in times past, now most frequented as the place of Parliament or general Assembly for Affairs which concern the publick. 4. Dubin. 5. Grubin, on the Sea-side, but of no Trade at all. 6. Hafenpor. And then in Semigal, 7. Mittaw, the Court and Residence of the Dukes of Carland. 8. Selborg. 9. Belfenberg. 10. Dobelin. There is no Town in all this Dukedom of any Trading, though lying for a great place all along the Baltick; because none of them are furnished with commodious Harbours. A Dukedom first begun in the person of Gothardus Keler, (of one of the Noble Families of Denmark) the last Great Master of the Dutch Knights in this Country, who in the year 1562, surrendering his Order, and the whole possession of Livonia, to Sigismund, Augustus K. of Poland, received back again for him, and his Heirs for ever the Dukedom of Carland and Semigal, to be held by them of the Crown; the Nobility of these Countries doing then presently their Homage and Allegiance to him as their Hereditary Prince. Since which time the Princes of this House have continued Feudataries unto Poland, but not reckoned as parts or members of the Body thereof; not coming to the Diets, nor liable to the publick Charges, nor having any thing to do in the King's Election; in a word, rather honourable Neighbours of the King of Poland, than Subjects to them. The present Duke is now to be much increased in Estate and Power, if the new Marquess of Brandenburg (whose Sister is his Mother) should depart without Issue. For by that means there will be added to this House the great Dukedom of Prussia, those of Cleve and Guelic, together with such other Countries possessed now by that Marquess as he holds by descent from the Heirs-general of those Dukedoms: which makes him call an eye already upon those Estates.

There belong also to Livonia some few Islands situate in the Baltick Sea: that is to say, 1. Offia. 2. Dachden. 3. Mona. 4. Wormle. 5. Wrangen. 6. Kegn. Of which the four last do belong to the King of Poland, Dachden to the King of Swedish, and Offia, or Osel, to the Danes. This last is the chief of all the fix, distant distant from the main Land of Livonia 12 Dutch miles; 14 of the same miles in length, half as much in breadth: the chief Towns hereof being 1. Oleſa Bishop's See, which gives name to the Island. 2. Sonneburg. The Island was made subject to the Danes by Magnus, Brother of Fredrick the second, King of Denmark, who being chosen Administrator of the Bishoprick of Scythia in Estland, made himself Master of this Island and some other pieces, which, dying without Issue, he bequeathed to the King his Brother, Anno 1580.

As for Livonia it self, it was first under the Levoni and Esthi, two German Nations, from whom the Country had the name of Livonia, the People of Estlanders or Eſtones. Distracted into many petit Principalities, it was made acquainted with the Christian Faith by the care of the Merchants of Bremen, as before was said. Meinard their first Bishop being dead, and Bertold his Successor slain by such of the people as had not yet received the Gospel, the Knights of the Port-gaive, or the Sword, were sent hither, to defend the Preachers and the Doctrine by the force of Arms. Finding themselves too weak to effect the business, they united with the Order of Dutch Knights in Prussia, to whom from that time forwards they became subordinate; the great Master of Livonia acknowledging him of Prussia for his Superiour. These Knights continued Masters of it without contradiction till the year 1557, (embracing in the mean time the Opinions of Luther, Anno 1558) then quarrelling with the Archbishop of Riga, of the House of Brandenburg, because he would not adhere unto their Opinions; who, to secure his own Estate was forced to put Riga into the hands of the Polanders. Afterward being overlaid by the Moscovite, who had taken from them almost all their Country, they were fain to put themselves under the Protection of Sigismund-Augustus King of Poland, Anno 1559. But William of Furstenberg, the Great Master being betrayed by his own Mercenaries into the hands of the Moscovite, Gothard his Successor (following the example of Albert the Great Master of Prussia) transacted with the said Sigismund for the whole Estate, which he surrendered to his use in the Castle of Riga, March 5, 1562, together with his Cross, the Seal of the Order, the Charters and Grants of many of the Popes and Emperours which concerned the same, as also the Keys of the City and Castle of Riga, the Office of Great Master, the Rights of Coinage, and all the Powers and Privileges appertaining to it: receiving back again from Ratzevil, the King's Commissioner, the Dukedom of Curland to him and his Heirs for ever, as before is said. By this Transaction the Kings of Pole became Masters of Lithuania, and were more absolutely settled in it after a long War betwixt Stephen King of Poland and John Vassilvich the Great Duke of Moscovie, who in the end surrendered all his Claim therein to the said Stephen and his Successors, Anno 1582, reserving only some few Towns on the Eastern Borders: the Danes and Sweethlanders taking occasion by their Troubles to impatronize themselves of Narva, Rivallia, Oſel, and some other pieces.

2. SAMOGITIA.

SAMOGITIA is a small Province wedged in betwixt Livonia and Lithuania, having Livonia on the North, Lithuania on the East and South, and the Baltick Sea upon the West: in length extending 50 miles from East to West, but not of an answerable breadth. It is so called from the lowliness of the situation, (the word Samogitis in the Language of the Inhabitants signifying terram inferiorem, or the Low-lands) by the Moscovite in same sense called Samotzhschina. This lowness of situation makes it very watery, and almost continually frozen: but withal it hath many Forests, which yield unto the people abundance of Honey, better, more pleasing to the taste, and less mixt with Wax, than in other places.

The people are supposed to be of the Saxon Race of a good Stature, well set, bold, and apt for War; but withal boisterous, rude and barbarous: Christians in general, but many of them do still retain their old Idolatries, nourishing amongst them a kind of four-footed Serpents, about three handbills in length, which they worship as their Household-gods, attending them with fear and reverence when they call them out to their repair: and if any Mischance do happen to any of the Family, it is imputed presently to some want of due observance of these ugly Creatures. They are naturally inclined to Divinations, Charms and Sorceries, and frequently abused (as for the most part such people are) by Diabolical Illusions. Nay, they which profess the name of Christ are so ill instructed, that they use to marry many Wives, without consideration of Blood or Parentage: it being ordinary for a man to marry with his Brother's Widow, and not unusual to marry the Relict of their Fathers, (a Fornication not so much as hecard of in St. Paul's time amongst the Gentiles.) They have some Customs also as unprofitable as these are heathenish; breaking up their Land, as they do in Moscovie, with Spades or Sickles. And when one of their Governours, observing the Husbandry of other Nations, had brought them the use of the Plough, it turned that for two or three years, either by the indisposition of the Weather, or some other Accident, they had not so much Corn as they used to have. Which War the people attributing to the use of the Plough, ex quoquam aliud in causa esse putantes, and not believing that there was any other cause of it, grew so much incensed, that the Governour, fearing some Sedition like to follow on it, was forced to leave them to the old way which before they went. An humour like to that of the preſent Irish, in ploughing with their Horses tails, spoken of before. So pertinacious for the most part are ignorant and superstitious people in standing to their ancient Customs, though absurd and hurtful.

Towns they have few, their Houses for the generality being poor and low, covered with Straw or Dirt, with an Hole open in the Roof to let in the light. The principal of those they have (but rather Villages than Towns) are 1. Bigla, near the head of the River Smute; 2. Likava, of which nothing memorable.

This Province hath always followed the fortunes of Lithuania: subject when that was so, to the Kings of Russia, converted when that was to the Christian Faith, and finally united with it to the Crown of Poland.

3. LITHUANIA.

LITHUANIA hath on the East the Empire of Russia on the West Prussia, Moscovie, and Poland; on the North Livonia and Samogitia, and on the South Polonia and Podolia. So called from Lithus the Ceremonial Staff, used anciently by the Angurs in their Divinations; to which the Inhabitants hereof being very much addicted before their receiving of the Gospel, were called Lithani; but this is but conjectural only. Yet rather thus, than that it should be peopled by some banished Italians, first named Italiches, then Lithiches, and after, by a most unlikely Corruption, come to Lithuania, as Matthias a Mitchon would fain have it.

The Country for the most part is full of Moors, Forests, some great Lakes like a Sea for bignels, and many navigable Rivers; which frozen over in the Winter make the the ways more travelling at that time of the year than they are in Summer. The Air in most places is exceeding cold, which makes their Wheat (whereof they have some abundance) to be seldom ripe, and other Fruits of the Earth to come slowly forward. Their Forests yield them Bagles, Ermices, Sables, Deer, wild Horses, plenty of Honey, Wax, and Pitch: but their breed of Cattel is less here, and of smaller stature, than it is in Germany. These Forests also are the Store-house out of which the English and Hollanders furnish themselves with Timber, both for Ships and Building; returning to them in exchange Salt, Wine, and other Necessaries which are wanting here.

The people anciently had Fire and Serpents for their Gods, nourishing the last in their houses, and keeping the other continually burning; the Priests and Ministers of the Temple always adding Fuel, that it might not fail. The Vespal Fire was not kept more carefully at Rome, nor with greater Ceremony. To this God, whom they called Dispan, or the Lord of the Smoak, they used to sacrifice young Pullets; to the other, their Cocks. The seed of this Idolatry is so implanted in them, that it is said, that in a Village of the King's called Levamski, not four miles from Vilna, their chief City, they do to this day worship Serpents. Converted to their Prince Jagello to the Christian Faith, Anno 1386, they yet retained such Customs as are inconsistent with Christianity, marrying unmarried, when and as often as they please; no Bond being so soon cancelled as that of Matrimony. For a married man to use the body of an Harlot is accounted (as indeed it is) an opprobrious Crime: but for the Wife to have her Stallions and Adulterers is a thing so ordinary and unblameable, that the Husbands call them their Coadjutors, and prize them far above the rest of their Acquaintance. The common people are in a miserable Servitude unto their Lords, pillaged and beaten by them upon any occasion; yet must not come before them with an empty hand. And if any of them have committed a Crime deserving death, he must hang himself as soon as the Sentence is signified to him, or else is beaten and tormented in to cruel a manner, that Death at last is looked on as a better Life.

The Country is divided into ten parts or Provinces, subject unto the Jurisdiction of so many Palatines; that is to say, the Palatine of 1. Vilna. 2. Trock. 3. Minſky. 4. Novogrod. 5. Brſſia. 6. Velhima. 7. Kiovia. 8. Mſſlau. 9. Vitebsky. 10. Polozskie. But Novogrod and Polozskie being conquered by the Great Duke of Moscovie, and added unto that Estate, and Velhima reckoned (of late times) for a distinct Province of it self, not depending of it, the remaining number is but seven, most of them taking names from their principal Towns. The chief of those, and others which deserve place here, are: 1. Vilna, a Bishop's See, equal in bignels to Cracon, the chief City of Poland; so called of the River Vil, or Vilva, upon which it is seated; built there in the year 1205 by one Gedemin, a great Prince of these parts; well walled, but the Gates thereof open night and day; large, rich, and well frequented by foreign Merchants, especially by those that drive the Trade of Moscovie, who have here their Hall, one of the chief Ornaments of the City. They have in it also some Churches built of Stone, (but the most of Wood) the principal whereof is the Monastery of St. Bernard, which is a very comely Structure. The Natives call this Town Vilenski, the Dutch Die Wilde. It is situate in the very heart of the Country, the longest Day in Summer being here 16 hours and half a quarter; whereas in the most Southern parts of the Country it is but 16, and in the most Northern not fully 18. 2. Kiovia, or Kiof, situate on the Nieper, or Bory- thenes, where the River Desna falls into it: heretofore a beautiful and most stately City, having in it above 300 fair Churches, of which some remain unto this day; the Ruines of the rest to be traced out amongst Shrubs and Buiſhes, the receptacles of wild Beasts. The Seat at that time of the Metropolitan of the Russian Empire, containing also under his Jurisdiction the Countries of Wallachia in Dacia, and Nigra Russia in Poland. But being destroyed by Batu or Boyo the Tartarian, in the Conquest of these parts by that People, it never could come near its former Lustre: yet still it holds the reputation of a Bishop's See, acknowledging the Patriarch of Moscow for his Metropolitan, and consequently is of the Communion of the Greek Churches, not of that of Rome. 3. Grodno, on the River Chorna, the chief Town of the Palatinate of Trock, memorable for the death of Stephen King of Poland. 4. Grammado, more memorable for the great Defeat given near it, by Jagello Duke of Lithuania and King of Poland, to the numerous Army of the Dutch Knights invading this Province; so constant with them a Success in the undertaking, that they brought with them a abundance of Chains and Torches; with the one to lead captive the Nobles of Poland, and with the other to fire their Cities. But Jagello, then newly made a Christian, putting his confidence in God, with an Army of untrained Souldiers so turned their Pride, that he flew 40000 of them; so that they never recovered of that Blow whilst their Order stood. 5. Pinsk, in the Palatinate of Brſſia, fortified with a Castle; both under the Palatine of Mſſlau. The rest of the chief Towns may be known by the Palatimates which they give their names to, but not else observable.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Avſi, Pagari, Savari, Tribes of the Sarmate Europe. United into this name of Lithuanians, they became subject to the Kings of Russia, till the breaking of that Kingdom by the Tartars. At what time Erdzgril, then their Prince, (but an Homager and Tributary to the Russians) withdrew himself from their Command; as did also many other of the conquered Provinces. Afterwards Minadch, one of the Dukes or Princes of it, being made a Christian, was by Pope Innocent the third honoured with the Title of a King. In the end, Anno 1386, Jagello Duke of Lithuania, marrying with Hedevig Queen of Poland, was upon three Conditions chosen King of that Realm. 1. That he should immediately receive the Christian Faith. 2. That he should unite this Dukedom to the Crown of Poland. Of these the two first were performed without any delay, though the second not without some difficulty, the people being obstinate in their old Idolatry, especially in the Religious conceit they had of high Trees, which to cut down was held both unsafe and impious. The could not be weaned from this conceit, till by the authority of the King their loftiest Trees were felled; and their Woods grubbed up: when they saw done without any danger to the Prince, or any of those whom he employed in that service, Regis mandato & autoritate ecclesiarum they then began to hearken unto his Commands, and generally received the Gospel, and were baptized. In the last point there was a longer time of deliberation: For the Princes of the House of Jagello, loth to deprive themselves of their Patrimonial Estate, which was hereditary unto their Posterity, and to subject it to the Election of the Polanders, in which it was possible the Princes of their Family might be pretermitted, deferred the accomplishment hereof from one day to another, under colour that the Lithuanians would revolt if they went about it. But Sigismund-Augustus, in whose person the Male-issue of Agello failed, forcing what Divisions might ensue after his decease, and fearing that the Moscovites would renew their old Pretensions, united it into the Crown: ordaining that the Bishops, Palatines, and a certain number of the Chancellors by him established, should have their place and Suffrage in the great Council of Poland; power in the chusing of the King, and all other Privileges which the natural Polonians have. Since that it is accounted a chief Member of that Body politic; subject to those Corruptions, Changes and Innovations in matters of Religion, which have been predominant in the other; excepting those parts only which relate to the Church of Greece, or Mosco, adhering pertinaciously to the Rites thereof.

4. VOLHINIA.

VOLHINIA, by some accounted one of the Palatinates of Lithuania, (as once it was) but by others a distinct Province of it; is bounded on the North and East with Lithuania, on the South with Podolia, and on the West with Russia Nigra and Podlussia. So called, as Maginus is of opinion, from the Poligari, who dwelling on the Banks of the River Polga, came afterwards in to this Country, calling it Polgaria, whence by degrees it came unto Volhonia, and at last unto Volhinia. But this conjecture is improbable, and of no good grounds.

The Country yields good plenty both of Grain and Fruits, Pools which abound with very good Fish. Forests which do afford them store of Game and Honey, and much good Pasture for their Cattel. That people of the same nature with the Lithuanians, but more strong and warlike, & better weaned from their old Superstitions and heathenish customs than the others are. They are of the same Language and Religion with those of Russia, to which, together with the rest of Lithuania, it did once belong. It is divided commonly into three parts or Provinces, all taking name from the three principal Cities of it: that is to say, 1. Luske, in Lutina called Luscoria a Town of above 1000 Families, where 127 only (in the time of my Author) were of the Romish Religion, the residue being Russians, Gracians, and some Armenians. The Seat and Residence of one of two Bishops, of which one being of the Communion of the Church of Rome, is of the Province of the Archbishop of Lemberg in Russia Nigra; but they which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece have also a Bishop of their own, who acknowledgeth the Patriarch of Mosco for his Metropolitan. 2. Polodmir, a Bishop's See also, of the same condition. 3. Keromence, which (as the rest) hath unto it many fair Towns and Castles, besides large Villages. The whole was once part of Lithuania, as before was said; but is lately difmembered from it, and united to the Crown of Poland, as a State distinct but so, that the greatest part of it is immediately subject to the Duke of Offpragne, who is said to have 4000 Feudatories in this Country; the greatest Prince of those who hold Communion with the Church of Greece in the whole Realm of Poland.

5. PODOLIA.

PODOLIA hath on the North Volhinia, part of Lithuania, and the great Empire of Russia, on the South Moldavia, from which it is parted by the River Tyras, now called Nieper, on the West Russia Nigra; extending Eastward through vast uninhabited Countries as far as to the Exensine Sea. The reason of the name I find no where guessed at. The people are for the most part of the same nature and original with the Russians, to whose Empire it formerly belonged also, till gained (if such a Subjection as they give the King may be called a gaining) to the Crown of Poland, at such time as the Russes were intrahed to the power of the Tartars.

The Country is generally so fertile, that the Husbandman is accustomed to reap an hundred for one, in regard it bears at one Ploughing for three years together, the Countryman being put to no farther trouble, than at the end of the first and second years to shake the Corn a little, as he reaps or loads it; that which so falls serving as Seed for the next year following. The Meadow-ground is so strangely rich and luxuriant, and the Grass so high, that a man can hardly see the Heads or Horns of his Cattel; of so swift a growth, that in three days it will cover a Rod which is thrown into it, and in few more to hide a Plough, that it is not an easy work to find it. If these things come beyond belief, let Maginus, who reporteth them, bear the blame thereof; though better take it on his word, than go so far to disprove him. And yet, which adds much unto the Miracle, the ground is in most places so hard and stony, that there need fix yoke of Oxen to break it up; to the great toil both of the Cattel and the man. It is also said that in this Country there are great Flocks of Sheep, many Herds of Oxen, abundance of wild Beasts, and great store of Honey. And yet for all this Plenty and abundance of all things necessary, the Country for the most part, especially towards the East, is but meanly inhabited, by reason of the frequent Invasions of the Tartars bordering next unto it, who have so wasted it in times past, and thereby to discouraged the people from Building, Planting, and all other works of Peace and Husbandry, that in so large and rich a Country there is nothing to be seen but some scattered Houses, few Villages, and not above five Towns of note, viz. 1. Orzani, at the influx of the Borjphenos or Nieper into the Exensine Sea. 2. Vulfow, at the fall of the River Boj into that of Nieper. 3. Bracian, more high upon the Boj. 4. Linnice, on the Borders of Russia Nigra, built by some divine hand, as it were, amongst the Precipices of high and inaccessible Rocks, and so well fortified withal, that it is impregnable, as is apparent by the many and great Repulses which the Turks, Tartarians and *Polachi*ans have received before it, with much shame and loss. 5. Lemberg, remarkable for the Sawes or Salt-means which they fend thence into other Countries. The former fortunes of this Province, and how it was brought under the Crown of Poland, (with which it was incorporated long since) we shall see anon.

6. RUSSIA NIGRA.

RUSSIA NIGRA hath on the East Volhinia, Podolia, and Moldavia; on the West Lithuania and Poland specially called; on the North Lithuania and Podlussia, and on the South the Sarmatian or Casparian Mountains. It is called also Roxolomia, from the Roxolani, a chief People of Sarmatia Europea, and by some Kuthenia; but generally Russia, from the first flock of before in the Empire of Russia, who spread themselves over all these parts. Some hold that it was first called Rossia, which significeth in the Slavonian Language a scattered Nation, or a Nation difmembered and dispersed into many parts; and that this was the name generally used of all that spake the Slavonian Tongue, and followed the Religion and the Rites of the Church of Greece, extended from the Frozen Sea to the Adriatick, and from the Exensine to the Baltick This and a greater tract of ground I grant to have been heretofore possessed by divers Nations under the name of Slavonians a very considerable part of Germany and Poland being conquered by them. But for the name of Russia, given at first to all the Russian Empire, Empire, distinguished now into Russia Alba and Russia Nigra, I adhere unto my former Vow, conceiving that it came from the Rossi, an Armenian People, inhabiting about Mount Taurus, who in the year 864, or thereabouts, attempting the taking of Constantinople, and after placed themselves on the Northern Banks of the Evros, getting ground of the Slavonians to the North and East, till they had made themselves Masters of all Russia Alba, Lithuania, Volhinia, Podolia, and this Russia Nigra. Distinguished from the former by the adjunct of Nigra, after the destruction of that great Empire by the coming in of the Tartars; either from the colour of their garments, or their black and more Southerly Complexion. In which regard it is called also Russia Meridionalis, or the Southern Russia.

The Country is generally fruitful, abounding in Hares, Ocen, Sheep, Sables, and Foxes; such flocks of Bees, that they breed not only in Hives and hollow Trees, but in Rocks and Caves. Well watered both with Pools and Rivers, affording them great plenty of Fish, more naturally flying therein than in other places, inasmuch that it is a Pond to be digged, and spring accordingly, the Fish will breed therein of their own accord, without the help of any other waters. The greatest want heretofore was Wine, either supplied with Medecine from other places. And it is said that in the Territory of Chelm the Branches of the Pine-Trees, left upon the ground for three years together, will be converted into Stone.

The people are generally valiant, and so strong of body, that they use Bows of 12 foot long. Being formerly governed by Dukes, they do but ill brook the name of King; which much induced the King of Poland to fend Colonies of natural Polonians into most parts of the Country, inasmuch as most of the Knights and Gentry of it are of that Extraction, and follow the Religion of the Church of Rome; the Peasants and the Original Inhabitants of it being more generally affected to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Chelm, in the Territory whereof it is affirmed that the Branches of Pine-trees, left upon the ground for three years together, are converted to Stone. 2. Premislen. 3. Halitz. 4. Betso. 5. Grodno, and 6. Leopolis, by the Natives called Lemberg, built by one Lev a Moscovite, a Town of great Trade, and an Archbishop's See, who is of the Religion of the Church of Rome. But the Patriarch of Mosco hath here also an Archbishop of his own ordaining, there being Churches both in the City itself, and all Russia generally, (as before was said) which are of the Communion of the Church of Greece. There are also in this City some Armenian Merchants, who have a Church, a Bishop, and some Priests of their own Religion.

Of the Affairs of this Province, and how it was a part once of the Russian Empire, hath been said already. Difmembered from it by the Tartars, it had a while Dukes or Provincial Governors, subject and tributary unto those Barbarians; as had also Podolia, its next neighbour. Both conquered by the Polander, were for a time kept under by strong hand and the power of Garrisons. But being upon all occasions apt to revolt, by reason of the hard hand which the Kings held over them, (by whom they were treated rather like Slaves than Subjects) they were affixed unto the State, by giving the same Liberties and Immunities, both for the Nobility and the Commons, which the natural Polonians had, and by that means made Fellow-members of that Commonwealth. The Act of Ladislav the 6. Son of Agello, imitating therein the ancient Romans, who much augmented their Forces, and assured their Estates, by communicating the Freedom of Rome and the Privileges of Latium to many of the conquered Provinces: and was imitated by Sigismund the first, Sigismund-Augustus and Stephen, his Successors in their incorporating of Prussia, Lithuania, and Livonia, to the Crown of Poland.

7. MASSOVIA.

MASSOVIA is bounded on the East with Lithuania, on the West with Poland specially so called, on the North with Prussia and Podlussia, on the South with Russia Nigra or Meridionalis. So called from Maffo, one of the Dukes heretofore, who in the year 1045, being vanquished by Casmir, Duke of Poland, fled into Prussia, and there unfortunately died.

The Country is large, and for the most part full of Woods, where they find store of Bugles and wild Bulls. The people are strong, valiant and courageous in War; differing little from the Polonians in Speech, Manners, or Apparel, save that they use a kind of Whistling, which the others do not. The principal Towns of it are, 1. Warsaw, the chief of the Province, and heretofore the Residence of the Duke or Prince; remarkable for the best Medecine or Methemine. 2. Czirkow. 3. Polowskie. 4. Gadzick. 5. Lozara. 6. Droie, the Seat of a Palatine, but not else observable.

This Province was once subject to Princes of its own, not subject or subordinate unto any Superior. Of which number that Maffo was one, from whom it was named Massovia. In the year 1246 and 1260, being strangely wasted and distressed by Mindoy Duke of Lithuania, they were fain to put themselves under the power of the Polander; by whom they were made the Portion of the second Son of that Kingdom. But John and Stanislaus, the two last Dukes heretofore, dying without Issue, it returned unto the Kings of Poland, and became incorporate to that Crown, and privileged in the Election of the King, and all matters which concern the publick, as all others of the Polonians are, Anno 1526.

8. PODLASSIA.

PODLASSIA is bounded on the East with Polhinia, on the West with Prussia, on the North with Lithuania, and on the South with Massovia and Russia Nigra. The reason of the name I know not. The Country differs not much from those before: the people being a mixt generation of Russes, Moscovites, and Polonians; partake a little of the Manners and Garb of those several Nations from which they lineally are descended.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Bielsko. 2. Bransko. 3. Saras; all of them having fair and ample Territories. 4. Tyockzyn, strongly fortified and well garrisoned, being the place where the King's Treasures are kept. 5. Krypin, beautified with a Royal Palace, and a pleasant Park, wherein are store of wild Beasts for Hunting, and Fish ponds very well replenished. 6. Narew. 7. Piskow. and 8. Angelsow, a very strong Town, built and well fortified by Sigismund-Augustus, and by him thus named, Anno 1569, at what time he difmembered this Province from Lithuania, to which before it appertained, uniting it for ever to the Crown of Poland.

9. PRUSSIA.

PRUSSIA is bounded on the East with Lithuania and Podlussia, on the West with Pomerania, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the South with with Poland and Maffovia. Called first Borussia, from the Boruffi, who subdued it, (of whom more anon) which by an easy alteration was changed into Prussia, by which name it is still called.

The Country is extended all along the Baltick Sea, from the City of Danzick in the West, to Lithuan on the Mouth of the Maikank R. for the space of 50 Polish miles; and from Torne, bordering on Maffovia, to Memel in the Confines of Lithuania, 58 miles of the same measure. The Air thereof is very mild and temperate, the Soil both fruitful and pleasant, full of Lakes and Rivers strewed with Fish, plentiful of Corn and other Necessaries, and well clad with Forests, which yield them Game for Hunting, rich Skins for profit, and abundance of Honey, of which last they make Meads for their own use; (their ordinary Drink where there is no Wine) and sell the rest unto the Merchant. But the Commodity wherein they do excel their neighbours is their plenty of Amber, which is the Juice of a Stone which growth like a Coral in a Mountain of the Baltick Seas, covered quite with water, and thumbed by Mariners three leagues off, for fear of Shipwreck: the Mountain is reasonable large, about 50 yards high of English measure. And when any Tempest riseth in these Northern Seas, especially in September and December, the Liqueur by violence thereof is rent from the Rock, and cast into divers Havens, and on divers Coasts of this Country, and sometimes upon those of Sweden and Pomerania: the people leaping into the Sea when it rageth most, whence they take up first fowle store of Weeds, after that this Liqueur, which being taken out of the water hardeneth like to Coral. Before is the beauty hereof, and the quality it hath of attracting Straws and Iron, as the Adamant doth, burning like Pitch, and others of this nature; it is excellent good for stopping Bloud, all kind of Agues, Falling-sickness, Dropsies, Stone, Cholick, weakness of Stomack, Head-ach, and the Yellow Jaundies.

The people, especially the Gentry, descend from the Germani, and retain much of their nature; having more Art and industry than the other Polenians, and being more renacious of their ancient Customs. They were Idolaters long time together, converted first unto the Faith in the time of the Emperor Frederick the 2. by whose Fetter they were subdued by the Order of the Dutch Knights, An 1215, and either won or forced to the Christian Faith. As Christians, governed since the plantation of the Gospel by the Bishops of Culm, Warmia, Sambia, and Pomerania, Suffragans to the Archbishop of Gnesna, under whom these parts do still continue, which have not yet forsaken the Church of Rome: the Lutherans, Calvinians, and other separate Congregations distinct from them, having their own Forms both of Doctrine and Discipline.

Few Provinces of the North are better watered than this, both for Lakes and Rivers: some of the Lakes being seven Dutch miles in compass, and well stored with Fish. The Rivers are 12 in number; that is to say, 1. the Vistula, 2. Chironus, 3. Nogat, 4. Elbing, 5. Pelica, 6. Levia, 7. Alia, 8. Pregel, 9. Offa, 10. Premysla, 11. Lita, and 12. Livia, all plentifully stored with Fish, besides a large Sea-Coast both for Trade and Filling no small commodity to the Natives.

The Country, formerly divided into twelve Dukedoms, (so they called the parts and fractions of it) was by the industry of the Dutch Knights to adored and beautified, (after they had once brought it under their Obedience) that there were no fewer than 72 Castles and 62 good Towns of their foundation. Which number being much increased in these latter times, hath made it the most flourishing part of the whole Kingdom of Poland. But the Order of these Knights being suppressed in this Country by an Agreement betwixt Sigismund the first, King of Poland, and Albert of Brandenburg, the last Great Master of the Order; both Town and Country are divided between the Successors of the said Albert, as Dukes of Prussia, and of the said Sigismund, as Kings of Pole: the Dukedoms or Divisions of Hogeland, Wania, Gallindia, Michelow, Culmigeria, with the City of Mariburg, the Sovereignty of Danzick and Melting, with the whole Country of Pomerellia, lying on the West-side of the Vistula, being allotted to the King; the residue, containing the Divisions of Schulauonia, Sambia, Natangia, Naravia, Bartonia, Sudavia, and Pomesania (except the City and Territory of Mariburg) to the Duke of Prussia.

Chief Towns belonging to the Duke are, 1. Memel, a well-frequented Port, the Mart-Town for the Commodities of Lithuania, which are brought hither, and here bought by the foreign Merchant: part of this Province interposing betwixt Lithuania and the Baltick, 2. Koenigsberg, as the Dutch, Regiment as the French, and Muni Regina, as the Latins call it, situate in the Province of Sambia, at the bottom of a Gulf or Bay, where the Pregel falleth into the Baltick Sea: built by the Dutch Knights in the year 1260, and made an University by Albert the first Duke hereof 1225, the Seat and principal Residence of his Successors; as also of the Bishop of Sambia, in Laine called Sambonia, by the name of the Province, 3. Mulmberg, founded by the Dutch Knights, An 1279, 4. Brandenburg, on the South-side of that Bay more near the Sea, built as I guess, by some of the great Masters of that Family, 5. Ragnitz, the farthest Town of the Masters of that Family, 6. Angersburg, in Schulauonia, was also Ragnitz, 7. Nordenburg, in Bartonia, 8. Ortelsburg, in Gallindia: of which little memorable, 9. Mariburg, the farthest of the Duke's Estate towards the Vistula, and the ordinary Residence of the Bishop of Pomesania. Besides which there are reckoned in this Division 8 good Towns more, and about 54 Castles, though not of much observation in the course of Story.

Chief Towns pertaining to the King are, 1. Braunsberg, upon a Bay of the Baltick Sea which call Frish Haffe; a Town of good Trade by reason of the commodious Haven, and the ordinary Residence of the Bishop of Warmia, 2. Frauenberg, on the same Bay, not far from Braunsberg, 3. Refel, the chief Town of the Diocese and Dukedom of Warmia, 4. Strasburg, in Michelow confining on Poland, specially to be called, at the Siege whereof Gustavus Adolphus King of Sweden, An 1628, Elector of Brandenburg, one of the Engineers of that King, found out the use of Leatheren Ordnance, which afterwards did that King great service in the Wars of Germany, 5. Culm, on the River Vistula, a Bishop's See, 6. Mariburg, on the Nogat, built by the Dutch Knights, An 1302, and made the Seat of the great Masters of their order, as founded first from Polesians or Acon in Syria to the City of Venice, from whence to Marpurg, and at last to this place by Sydrice the twelfth Great Master of it, whose constant Residence in this Town occasioned the Bishop of Culm to remove thither also. A very fair and well-built City, the Chief of those which do belong to the King of Poland: by him fo well garisoned, and furnished with such store of Victuals, Ammunition and other Necessaries, that it was thought able to hold out for a Six years Siege. But it proved otherwise when besegged by the King of Sweden, who took it in less space than so many months; being on the settling of a Peace betwixt the Crowns rendered again unto the King of Poland. Beneath this Town, down towards the Baltick, is a pleasant Island made by the Nogat and the Weyfel, for the fertility of its Soil, and the great number of Houses, Villages, and People, not equalled (for the richness of it) in all this Country.

To

To this part also belongeth the fair port of Elbing, (or Melung, as Maginus calls it) situate on the Bay of the Baltick, called Frish Haffe; spoken of before, not far from a Faithful Lake; well traded, rich, and full of very wealthy Merchants; of great resort from other Nations, and much frequented by the English Merchants, who have here their Staple for the Baltick: a small, but neat and well-built City, and fortified with a very good Wall, governed after the manner of a free Estate or Commonwealth, under the Patronage and Protection of the Kings of Poland, in like sort as Danzick also is, of which more anon.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof were the Venedi; the most potent Nation of this Tract, extended all along the Coasts of the Baltick, from them by Protemy called Sinas Venedicus: containing under them the Githones, Phinis, Silantes, Phrangudones, Avarini; and more within the Land the Sodini and Gallindae, whose name the Dukedom or Province of Gallindia doth still retain. But great and potent though they were, they were subdued by the Boruffi, inhabiting at the foot of the Riphaean Mountains, who, weary of their own cold and barren Dwellings, removed into the Western parts, and vanquished the Venedi, and those other Nations, possessed themselves of this Country, which they called Borussia, now by us named Prussia. By Venedus one of their Princes, having twelve Sons in all, it was divided into 12 Provinces or Dukedoms, one for every Son; continuing by that means distracted into divers petty Principalities, till the coming of the Marian or Dutch Knights, sent hither by Frederick the second, An 1215, by whom the Provinces or Dukedoms of Sudavia, Michelow, and the greatest part of Naravia, were laid waste and desolate: the rest submitted to their power, and received the Gospel. After this it continued subject to this Order of Knights till the year 1419, when, weary of their Extortion and the continual change of Masters, they revolted to the King of Poland, to whom they offered their Obedience: founded by the yielding up of Mariburg, with many other Towns and Castles, sold to King Calimirus by the Gariffo Soldiers, An 1457, for 476000 Florents. But the Knights declining to be so dealt withal, and refusing to swear Allegiance to the Kings of Poland, they brake out into open War, which was managed with variable Success on both sides; Landowicus, the then Great Master, being so successful at the first, that he once beat the King out of the Field, routed his whole Army, near 30000 of his men upon the place, and took 136 of his chief Nobility: nor was he vanquished at last, but by the Treachery and Rebellion of his own people. In the end, wearied and worn out on both sides, by continual Wars, Albert of Brandenburg, then Great Master, having for 14 years together courageously maintained the Honour of his Order, and for the four last years imported in vain the Assistance of the Emperor and Princes of Germany, began to think of some Expedient to compound the business. Being inclined to Lothar's Estate, he secretly practised with Sigismund the first of Poland to end the War to the advantage of both parties. By whom at last it was agreed, that Albert should relinquish his Order, and surrender all Prussia into the hands of the King: That the King, possessing the Western parts, with the Town of Mariburg, and the Sovereignty of Danzick and Melting, should invest Albert with the Title of Duke of Prussia, creating on him and the Heirs of his body the whole Eastern Moiet, containing the Provinces or Dukedoms before specified: and finally, that Albert and his Heirs should hold the said Estate, as Homagers to the Crown of Poland, taking place in all Assemblies at the King's right hand. According to this Agreement, Anno 1525, Albert, attired in the complete habit of Master of the Dutch Order, professed himself humbly on his knees before Sigismund at Cracow, the King then sitting on his Throne. The King, raising him from the ground, caused him to put off those Robes and attire himself in a Ducal Habit: which done, an instrument was read and put forth, whereby the King conferred upon him and the Heirs of his body the Dukedom of Prussia, to be held of him and his Successors Kings of Poland, An Act at which the whole Order were extremely incensed; but they could not help it, and thereupon retired into Germany, where there were some good Lands left, to maintain such of them as had no mind to quit that Military honour; leaving their old Estates into Prussia to the King and the Duke; whose Successors have hitherto enjoyed their part of it, with the Title of

Dukes of PRUSSIA

- 1525 1. Albert of Brandenburg Son of Frederick Marquess of Onsdalbeck, of Onsbach, created Master of the Order by the Emperor Maximilian, Anno 1511, and the first Duke of Prussia by Sigismund, the first of Poland, An 1525, founded the University of Koenigsberg, Anno 1544.
- 1568 2. Albert-Frederick Son of Albert the first Duke, married Mary-Eleanor, Daughter of William Duke of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c.
3. Anne, Eldest Daughter of Duke Albert-Frederick, Dutches of Prussia, brought the Estate in Marriage to
4. John-Sigismund, Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, who was confirmed therein by Sigismund the 3. of Poland, pretending an Elcheat thereof for want of Heirs-males of the body of Albert the first Duke.
5. George-William, Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, in right of his Father, Duke of Prussia in right of the Lady Anne his Mother, and of Cleve, Gulick, Berg, &c. by Descent from Mary-Eleanor his Grandmother.
6. Frederick-William, Son of George-William Marquess and Elector of Brandenburg, Duke of Prussia, Cleve, Gulick, and Berg, of whose Investiture in the Dukedom of Pomeran and other large and goodly Seigniouries we have spoken elsewhere.

As for the Government of this Province standing thus divided, that of the Duke is more Monarchical than that of the King; the one being absolute and uncontrollable in his Estates, the other subject to the great Council of Poland. If any difference grow between them, Delegates appointed by the King, but taking a new Oath to do equal Justice either at Mariburg or Elbing, do compound the business: who, together with some other of the Duke's nomination, receive all Appeals in which the Duke is interested as one of the parties.

The Revenues of this Dukedom are thought to be 120000 Ducats yearly.

10. POMERELLIA.

POMERELLIA is bounded on the East with the River Vistula, by it parted from Prussia, on the South with Poland specially to be called, on the North with the Baltick Sea, and on the West with the Dukedom of Poland.

MEET. AN. 10.

deposited by Lesius the fifth, who again seized on the Estate.

- 1243 27. Bolfgang V. furnished Podicins.
 1280 28. Lesius VI. furnished Niger, the adopted Son of Bolfgang, and his Cousin-german once removed, after whose death, An. 1289, the Estate, being distracted into many Factions, was for some time without a Prince, till at last on 1295 29. Primsian, furnished Posthumus, Duke of Pozna, who again assumed the name of King, continued ever since by his Successors.
 1296 30. Pladislaus, furnished Lothius, Brother of Lesius Niger, ousted by Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, Anno 1300, after whose death, An. 1306, he resumed the Estate.
 1333 31. Casimir III. furnished the Great, Son of Pladislaus the fourth, the first Establisher of the Kingdom after all those Troubles, died without Issue.
 1371 32. Lewis, King of Hungary, Nephew or Grandson to Charles King of Hungary, by Elizabeth the Sister of Casimir.
 1383 33. Hedwigis, the youngest Daughter of Lewis, her elder Sister Mary succeeding in the Realm of Hungary, chosen Queen of Poland; married to Jagello Duke of Lithuania, Christianized, and called Pladislaus the fifth.
 1386 34. Pladislaus V. Duke of Lithuania, elected King upon his Marriage with Queen Hedwigis.
 1435 35. Pladislaus VI. Son of Jagello, or Pladislaus the fifth, by Sophia, Daughter of the Duke of Kiovia, King of Hungary also; slain at the Battle of Farna by Amurat the second, King of the Turks, and without Issue.
 1447 36. Casimir 4. Brother of Pladislaus, first brought the Knights of Prussia under his Command; Knight of the Order of the Garter.
 1593 37. John Albert, the second Son of Casimir; his elder Brother Pladislaus being pretermitted, on his accepting of the Crowns of Hungary and Bohemia.
 1502 38. Alexander, the third Son of Casimir.
 1507 39. Sigismund, the fourth Son of Casimir his elder Brethren dying without Issue; he suppressed the Order of the Dutch Knights in Prussia, and added part thereof unto his Estate.
 1548 40. Sigismund II. furnished Augustus, the last of the Male-issue of Jagello.
 1574 41. Henry, Duke of Anjou, Son of Henry the second, the French King, chosen on the death of Sigismund Augustus, the only Stranger to the Blood in all this Catalogue. On the death of his Brother Charles the ninth, he departed secretly into France, where he succeeded by the name of Henry the third.
 1579 42. Stephen Bator, Vaivod of Transylvania, by the recommendation of Amurat the third, Emperor of the Turks, having first married Anne, Sister of Sigismund the second, is elected King. He united Lithonia to the Crown, and had a great hand upon the Moscovite.
 1587 43. Sigismund III. Son of John King of Suevia, and of Katharine his Wife, another of the Sisters of Sigismund the second, King of Poland and Sweden. He valiantly opposed Osman the Great Turk, invading his Dominions with an Army of 300000 fighting men.
 1633 44. Pladislaus VII. eldest Son of Sigismund the third. After whose death the Kingdom was extremely embroiled by Factions, especially by the mutinous and seditious Cossacks, not fully settled by the Election of

- 1648 45. Casimir V. Brother of Pladislaus the seventh, now King of Poland, Anno 1648.

The Government of this Kingdom is nothing less than Monarchical. For though the first Dukes thereof were absolute Princes, and ruled after a Despotical manner, having power not only of the Estates of their Subjects, but of Life and Death, without Formalities of Law; yet when they once became Elective, they lost much of that power: which decayed by little and little, that at the last the King is counted little better than a Royal Shadow; Stat magni nominis umbra, in the Poet's language. A Diminution which began first in the times of Lewis of Hungary and Jagello of Lithuania, who, to gain the Succession to the Kingdom, contrary to Law, the one for his Daughter, the other for his Son, departed with many of their Royalties and Prerogatives, to buy the Voices of the Nobility. Since which time, the Nobility in all their Elections have so limited and restrained the King's Authority, and enlarged their own, that without their consent in Council he may neither make a War, nor treat of Peace, nor impose Taxes, nor alienate any of his Demains, nor do any thing of Importance which concerns the Publick; inasmuch as Boterius, a great Statesman, doth expressly say, That the Government of Poland doth rather seem an Aristocracy than a Monarchy, a Common wealth rather than a Kingdom. Besides, the King not only takes a solemn Oath at his Coronation to confirm all the Rights and Privileges which have been granted to the Subject by his Predecessors, but adds this Clause, Quod si Sacramentum meum violavero, incole Regni nullam nobis obtineant pretereuntem, that if he violate this Oath his Subjects shall not be obliged to yield him any Obedience. Which as Badinus well observeth, doth rather favor of the condition of a Prince of the Senate, than of the Majesty of a King. He is respected accordingly by the Great ones, who look not on him as their King but their elder Brother, (and perhaps not that) and reckon his Decrees but of three dates lasting. Which notwithstanding the King, once chosen and introned, hath sole power in many things without consulting with the Senate; as viz. in assembling Diets, chusing the Secular Counsellors, disposing absolutely also of his Vassals and the Revenues of the Crown to what use he pleaseth; being sole Judge of the Nobility in Criminal Causes, which is a strong bridle to rein them in with. By which, and either uniting himself unto the Clergy, or the well forming of his party amongst the Nobility, he may do many things not allowable in strictness of Law: the power and influence which he hath in the publick Government being proportionable to the strength of his Wit and Brain.

And here it is to be observed, that none but the Clergy and Nobility have any Suffrage in the Election of the King: that is to say, the 26. Palatines, and 62. Chapellans, with the four Marsbals, and some others of the principal Officers of State, in behalf of the Nobility; and the Archbishops and Bishops in the name of the Clergy; but of the Commons none at all. Which is the reason why there is so much care taken to preserve the Privileges of the two first Orders, without obtaining any Immunities for relief of the third; who are most miserably oppressed on all sides, rather as bondmen than Tenants in respect of their Lords, and not so much Subjects as plain Slaves in regard of the King; whereof somewhat hath before been noted. Nor are the Common people excluded only out of this Election, but have no place nor Vote in the Council of State, or in any of the general Diets: the first consisting only of the Prelates, Palatines, Chapellans.

Chapellans, and principal Officers spoken of before, the dominating of which pertaineth to the King alone; the remaining of all persons of those several Orders, and the Delegates of each Province and principal City; and upon their Lands: which do amount to such a Sum that by means hereof King Stephen maintained War three years against the Moscovite, without expending any thing of his own Revenue.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom are, 1. The Marian or Dutch Knights, instituted under the Walls of Accon or Ptolemais in the Holy Land; in a Church whereof, dedicated to the blessed Virgin, their Order was first allowed, from whence they are called Equites Mariani. The Institution was in the year 1190. The first Great Master was Henry Walpot. The Christians being beaten out of Syria, they first removed to Venice, and from thence to Marburg in Hassia, where, and in some other parts of Germany, they were endowed with fair Revenues; hence they were named Equites Teutonici, or the Dutch Knights: Sent into Prussia by the Emperor Frederick the second Anno 1239, or called in, as some say, by the Moscovite against the Prussians, they fixed their Seat at Marienburg, under Sigisride the second Great Master, Anno 1340, or thereabouts. In the time of Ludovicus, the 18. Great Master, they were forced to submit to Casimir the fourth of Poland, Anno 1450; which was the occasion of the long War betwixt them and the Polanders, continuing till the time of Albert of Brandenburg, the 24. and last Great Master in this Country; who surrendered his Order (as before is said) to Sigismund the first, by whom he was created the first Duke of Prussia. Such of the Knights as disliketh this action retired into Germany, where they chose out Walter Crumberg Master of the Order the Title being afterwards conferred upon Maximilian, one of the younger Sons of Maximilian the second; but the Order sensibly decaying, and at this time of little estimation in the World.

2. Of the Port Glaive, or Sword-bearers, (Ensseri in Latine) confirmed by Pope Innocent the third, by whom they were sent into Lithonia, to defend the Preachers of the Gospel against the Infidels, at the first Conversion of that Country. Being too weak to effect that business, they united themselves with the Dutch Knights by the Popes authority, and instead of Knights of the Sword, were called Knights of the Cross. Separated therefrom in the time of Univm their Great Master, Anno 1541, the Dutch Knights being then dispossessed of Prussia, and these inclining wholly to the Opinions of Luther, they a while subsisted of themselves. What became of them afterwards, and how the Order was extinguished, hath been shewn already in Lithonia.

The Arms of this Kingdom are quarterly, 1. Gules, an Eagle Argent, crowned and armed Or, for the Realm of Poland; and 2. Gules, a Chevalier armed Cap-a-pes, advancing his Sword Argent, mounted on a barbed Courser of the second, for the Dukedom of Lithuania.

There are in the whole Realm of Poland

Of the Romish Church, Archbishops 3. Bishops 19.
 Of the Greek Church, Archbishops 2. Bishops 6.

Universities 4.

Viz. Cracow. Dantzick.
Vilna. Koningsberg.

And so much for POLAND.

THE

Carpathian Mountains.

IN our way from Poland unto Hungary (whither now we go) we must of necessity pass over the CARPATHIAN MOUNTAINS, the ancient Boundary of Sarmatia Europæa from the rest of Europe. A long and craggy Ledge of Hills, which beginning near the City of Prefburg, and the Borders of Austria, pass on in a continual course till they come to the very Euxine Sea; and by that means not only divide Hungary from Poland, specially so called, but part Transylvania and Moldavia, two Dacian Regions, from Russia Nigra and Podolia, Provinces of the Polonian Kingdom. By Ptolemy, in his second Book, they are called Montes Sarmatici (Sarmaticæ Rupes by Solinus) because differentiating the Sarmatian Nation (who possessed the most part of it) from Germany and the more Southern parts of Europe: and in his third Book by one name Carpates, or Mons Carpatius, so called (as some think) from the Greek word Karpatis signifying Fruit, from the Fruitfulness of it, compared with the other Mountains in those Northern Countries. At the present it is known by divers names, according to the Provinces and People which it passeth by. By the Dutch generally called Wurtzgarten, (or a Garden of Herbs) which alludeth to the name of Carpatu, by the Hungars, Tarchzal. Betwixt Moravia and Hungaria, where it is at the highest, it is called in the Sclavonian Tongue by the name of Tatru, in the German Sclavberg: where it parteth Transylvania from Russia Nigra, the Russies call it Bisfid, and the Dutch-men Crapack. A Chain of Hills of more length than fame; not much observable in Story, but for the shutting up the Hungary Sclaves, and others of those Northern Nations which afterward invaded the Roman Provinces: nor of much notice at the present, but for giving an Original to many of the principal Rivers which water the Countries lying on both sides of it. And therefore having nothing more to detain us here, we will pass them over, and descend into the Plains of Hungary, where we shall meet again with the Roman Empire, the Territories and Affairs whereof we shall take along without interruption until we come unto the Banks of the great River Tigris and the Caspian Sea. And so far also from this place we shall survey the Fortunes and Estates of the Turkish Empire, of which the Realm of Hungary is the most Western part or Province; not meeting either of them again till we come to Egypt.

OF ## HUNGARY.

HUNGARY is bounded on the East with Transylvania and Valachia, on the West with Siria, Austria, and Moravia, on the North with the Carpathian Mountains, which divide it from Poland, and on the South with Sclavonia, and some part of Dacia. It extendeth in length, from Presburg, along the Danow, to the Borders of Transylvania, for the space of 300 English miles; and 190 of the same miles in breadth. The reason of the name we shall have anon.

It lieth in the Northern Temperate Zone, betwixt the middle Parallels of the 7. and 9. Climates, so that the longest Summer's Day in the Southern parts is but 15 hours and a half, and not above 16 hours in the parts most North: taking up all that Tract of ground on the North-side of Danubius possessed by the Fazgyes Metanastes, a Sarmatian People, and part also of Pannonia Superior and Pannonia Inferior, both on the South of that River.

But being it passeth generally under the name of Pannonia, we are to know that the Romans having made themselves Masters of all Pannonia, divided it into four Provinces, part of the Diocese of Illyricum Occidentale: that is to say, 1. Pannonia Superior, bordering on Noricum, and containing part of the Higher Austria; and the most Western parts of the present Hungary, on the South-side of the Danow. 2. Pannonia Inferior, containing the Eastern parts of Hungary, on the same side of the River. 3. Valeria, anciently part of Pannonia Superior, comprehending Siria or Stiermark, in the Archdukedom of Austria. And 4. Savia, so called of the Rivers Savus, anciently part of Pannonia Inferior, now called Wandischland, one of the Provinces or Subdivisions of Sclavonia. But the name of Pannonia falling into the Roman Empire, and this Country being fallen into the hands of other Masters, it took a new name from the Nations who possessed themselves of it, and was called Hungaria, quasi Hunn-avaria, by a mixt name made of the Hunni and Avarti, two Scythian Nations, who either successively or conjunctly were possessed thereof; or from the Hungari, another race of Scythians, mentioned by Strabo in his Book De Rebus Geticis, drawn into this Country by the the Emperor Arnulph, to aid him in his War against Swatiburgius King of the Moravians. This last I look on as most probable: the first as more probable than that of Avartine, and others of our late Writers, who finding a poor Province in the most Northerly point of the Russian Empire called Ingria, (and by them Ingeria) would have the name of Hungary to be thence derived.

The people are strong of Body, and rude of Behaviour, respecting neither the liberal Arts nor Mechanick Trades. The greatest Affection is the name of a Coward, which cannot be wiped off without the killing of a Turk: after which they are privileged to wear a Feather, and by the number of their Feathers to show how many Turks they have slain in Battle. They desire Wars, and like no Trade better, being naturally slothful, (like the Trishe) and therefore best approve of that course of Life, whereby they may rather live upon other mens Labour than take pains for their living. Extremely covetous they are, yet having rather desire than art to enrich themselves, permitting the Dutch to ingross all their Trading, and manage such Commodities as the Country yieldeth. Which is the cause (seconded by the Oppressions of the Turk and the Austrian Princes, under whom they are) that none of them rise to any considerable Wealth. And for such as have Estates in Land, they grow every day more poor than other. For though the Females be excluded from inheriting their Fathers Possessions, (to whom they give no Portion, but new Cloaths on the Wedding-day:) Yet being the Sons do equally inherit the Estate, (as such who hold in Gueldland do here in England) it must needs be that by so many Divisions and Subdivisions the greatest Patrimony that is will be brought to nothing. Both sexes in the way of their Education are inured to Hardness, not flustered to lie in Beds till the night of their Marriage.

The Christian Faith was first planted here in the time of Stephen, furnished the Saint, the first King of this Country, who was invited thercunto by the special means and procurement of the Emperor Henry the second, giving him upon that Condition his Sister Gisela in Marriage; and through the preaching and industry of Albert Archbishop of Prague, Anno 1016, or thereabouts. Since which time Christianity hath continued here without interruption, (defended gallantly and courageously against the Turks) but broken into Fractious and Subdivisions among themselves: Some pertinaciously adhering to the Church of Rome, some following the Doctrine of Luther, others that of Calvin and some new Fancies and Opinions, disavowed by all the rest. Free exercise of Religion was first granted by Maximilian the second, and re-obtained in the time of Rodolphus, his Son and Successor, by the Pacification at Vienna, procured by the power of Bassian Prince of Transylvania, An. 1606. The violating of which Pacification by Ferdinand the second, in the beginning of his Reign occasioned great Wars and Troubles betwixt him and this People, not quieted in a long time after. Yet all these different Parties do agree in this, to punish Adultery and Fornication with no less a punishment than death; the Father forcing his Daughter, the Husband his Wife, and the Brother his Sisters, to the place of their Execution.

The Language generally here spoken is a kind of Sclavonian, differing in Dialect from the Poles; but in the parts adjoining to Germany the Dutch is spoken; as the old Fazgyes is betwixt Danubius and Tibiscus, the ancient Seat of the Fazgyes Metanastes.

The Soil is wonderful fruitful, yielding Corn and Fruits in great abundance; the Grains in some places, (as in the Isle of Komar) if it be sowed to grow to its full length before the cutting of it down, being said to exceed the height of a Man: Which doth breed such a number of Cattel, that this Country alone is thought to be able to feed all Europe with flesh. They yearly send into Germany and Sclavonia 80000 Oxen: they have Deer, Partridge, Pheasants, in such superfluity, that any man that will may kill them, which in other places is utterly prohibited, these Creatures being preserved as Game for Gentlemen. For at that great Infurrection of the Boors in Germany, (before the end of which 50000 of them were slain in fight) their chief Demands were, 1. That they might chuse their own Ministers, 2. That they might pay no Tithes but of Corn, 3. That they might be free from the power of Magistrates, 4. That Wood, Timber and Fowl might be common. 5. And especially, that they might hunt and hawk in all times and places. The other Commodities of the Country are Gold and Silver, whereof they have some very rich Veins; as also of Tin, Lead, Iron, good store of Brass, Copper, Wine: this last as good as that of Candia.

The worthiest Scholar that ever this Kingdom produced was St. Hieron, a worthy Father of the Latine Church, born in Siridon. The most worthy of all their Soldiers were 1. Johannes Huniades, who so valiantly resisted the Incurfions of the Turks, and slew of them 5000 at the Battle of Maron. And 2. Matthias Corvinius, his Son, afterward King of Hungary; of whom thus Adrian our of a Poet.

The principal Rivers of this Country are, 1. Carpatus, the Sarmatian or Carpathian Mountains, spoken of before. 2. Matrav, near the City of Agria, covered with rich Vines. 3. Erdol, omnium amplissimus, the largest of the three, faith the Atlas minor. Which words if true, must needs be understood of the height of this Mountain, but neither of the length or breadth; in both which without question it comes short of Carpatus.

The Country is commonly divided into the Upper Hungary, and the Lower: the Upper lying on the North of the River Danow, out of the Bounds and Territories of the Roman Empire; the Lower lying on the South of that River; and comprehending all Pannonia Inferior, and part of Pannonia Superior, two Roman Provinces. The Upper again was subdivided (before the coming in of the Turks) into 32 Counties or Juridical Reforms; that is to say, 24 on the West-side of Tibiscus (or the Tieff) and 8 on the East-side of it: The Lower (at the same time) into 16 only, of which ten were betwixt the Danow and the River Dravus, and the other six betwixt the Dravus and the Savus.

Against whom was chosen Wenceslaus King of Bohemia, Son of Wenceslaus the second, and of Anne his Wife, Daughter of Bela the fourth, and after three years Otho of Bavaria, descended from Elizabeth, another of the Daughters of Bela the fourth, was chosen also by a Faction against Wenceslaus. But Wenceslaus surrendering his Claim to Otho, and Otho not long after being forced to renounce his Title, Charles Martel remained King of the whole.
- 1343 25. Ludovicus, Nephew to Charles Martel by his Son Carlbert, succeeded King of Poland also, in right of Elizabeth his Mother, Sister of Casmir the 2.
- 1383 26. Charles II. King of Naples, descended from Charles of Naples, and Mary, Daughter of Stephen the 4. before mentioned, by their Son John of Durazzo, one of the younger Brothers of Charles Martel, poisoned after a short Reign by the Widow of the former King, to make a way for her Daughter to the Crown.
- 1387 27. Sigismund Emperour, King of Bohemia and Duke of Luxemburg, succeeded in right of Mary his Wife, eldest Daughter of Levi or Ludovicus, her younger Sister Eduigis being Queen of Poland.
- 1438 28. Albert of Austria, Emperour, and King of Hungary and Bohemia, in right of Elizabeth his Wife, the Daughter of Sigismund.
- 1440 29. Ladislaus, or Vladislaus, Son of Agello King of Poland, in the minority of Ladislaus the Son of Albert chosen King of Hungary; unfortunately slain at the Battel of Varna, with 30000 of his people; and perhaps his Perjury might deserve it. For having made and sworn a Truce with the Turk, the Pope's Legate, upon a seeming advantage, absolved him of his Oath, and drew him into the Field. At the beginning the Christians had the better: but at the last, Amurat the 2. against whom they fought, lifting up his eyes to Heaven, and desiring Wher to look upon the perfidious dealing wherewith his Followers had dishonoured him, re-encouraged his men and to go to the Victory.

- 1444 30. Ladislaus V. King of Bohemia, the Son of Albert by Elizabeth, Daughter of Sigismund and Mary.
- 1458 31. Matthias Corvinus, Son of the famous Hunniades, after the death of Ladislaus the 1. King of Hungary.
- 1491 32. Vladislaus II. or Ladislaus VI. Son of Casmir the 4. of Poland, and of Elizabeth the Daughter of Albert, succeeded in the Kingdoms of Hungary and Bohemia; his three younger Brothers succeeded in that of Poland.
- 1517 33. Ludovicus II. King of Hungary and Bohemia, both born dead before the ordinary course of nature; being in the 21. year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign, unfortunately drawn unto the Field, to encounter Solyman the Magnificent, one of the hardest Captains in his time. The Battel was fought at a Village called Mogacz, or Mogace, just betwixt Belgrad and Buda; in which 19000 of the Hungarians were slain, and the young King drowned in the Flight. A most lamentable Discomfiture. Lewis thus dead, John Sepusio, Vaivod or Governour of Transylvania, was by the States chosen King of Hungary. But Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria, and Brother unto Charles the fifth, challenged the Kingdom in right of Anne his Wife, Daughter to Vladislaus, and Sister to Lewis King of Hungary and Bohemia. On this Pretence he invaded the Kingdom, and drove out John his Competitor; who, to recover his Right, called Solyman the Magnificent into the Country, who took to field footing in it, that his Successors could never since be removed.
- 1527 34. John Sepusio, Vaivod of Transylvania, chosen King upon the death of Ludovicus, the 2. outed by Ferdinand of Austria, restored by Solyman the Great Turk, died Anno 1540: after whose death the Hungarians caused his Son Stephen, an Infant, to be crowned King in his Cradle, of which he was immediately deprived by Solyman his pretended Patron, who, under colour of preserving that Kingdom for him, seized Buda, and other the chief Towns thereof, which he after kept unto himself.
- 1540 35. Ferdinand of Austria, elected King of Bohemia, in respect to the Lady Anne his Wife, Sister of Ludovicus the 2. Anno 1527, did in the same Right lay Claim to the Crown of Hungary; chosen to which by a party prepared for him, he was always in contention with

- with John de Sepusio, each of them acknowledged King by their several Factions; but he was by both sides received on the death of John.
- 1561 36. Maximilian, Emperour, King of Hungary and Bohemia, Archduke of Austria, Son of Ferdinand.
- 1572 37. Rodolphus, Emperour, &c. Son of Maximilian.
- 1608 38. Matthias, Brother of Rodolphus, afterwards Emperour.
- 1613 39. Ferdinand II. of Graz, next Heir unto Matthias of the House of Austria, afterwards Emperour, &c. against whom a Party of Hungarians called in Bethlen Gabor, Prince of Transylvania, whom they elected for their King, intending (as they said) to crown him also. But the Affairs of Bohemia going on the Emperour's side, Gabor relinquished his pretensions, and hearkened to a Peace betwixt them.
- 1625 40. Ferdinand III. Son of Ferdinand the second, chosen and crowned King in the life of his Father, and in the year 1627 King of Bohemia also, succeeding after him in the Empire, and now living, Anno 1648.

This Kingdom doth pretend it self to be Elective, and to have special Privileges indulged them by their former Princes; and anciently indeed it was so in both respects, the last especially; King Andrew giving authority to his Prelates, Peers, and other people, Ut sine nostra alicujus Instigatio, &c. that without any Imputation of Difloyalty they might contradict, oppose, and resist their King, if he did any thing in violation of their Laws and Sanctions. But both their liberty of Elections and pretence of Privileges have been so shaken and restrained by their Kings of the House of Austria, that the Elections are become a matter of Formality only, and their Privileges depending wholly on their Prince's pleasure, now grown too potent for them to contend withal, unless they should betray their Country into the hands of the Turk. To which some of them have expressed some strong Inclinations, the Oppressions laid upon them by the Austrian Family being deemed unendurable.

The Forces of this Kingdom, when it was entire, may best be seen by those great Armies which they have brought into the Field against the Turk. By whom two parts of three being since subdued, that which remains must not be thought able to answer the proportion of former times; though they have done more than could be reasonably expected from it. For at the Battel of Kerskew, Anno 1566, there were 6000 Hungarian Horse, and 10000 Foot of that Nation only; besides the 6 of Germany and Transylvania; and the next year, notwithstanding the Difcomfiture of that Army, they raised no less than 20000 Horse and Foot, on the noise of some Preparations among the Turks. 'Tis true, their Foot are commonly but newly armed; the defect whereto is rather to be imputed to the Prince, than unto the people, who can but bring their Bodies (which is all they have) for defence of their Country. And for their Horse, (whom they call Heyducks) maintained in continual readiness at the charge of the Nobility and principal Gentry, they are next Cousins to the Cossacks, almost as mischievous as they, and hold as strict Intelligence with the Turks as those do with the Tartars.

The chief Revenues of this Kingdom come from the Silver-Mines, out of which is yearly raised about a million and a half of Guilders. Maximilian the second made it up two millions, by seizing on the Lands of Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and assigning annual Pensions to the Bishops, Canons, and other Religious persons. Most of which Sum comes clearly to the Emperour's Coffers; the Prebendary Souldiers being paid with Contribution-money raised upon the Country; and the Lieutenant-general, whose entertainment comes to 300000 Dollars yearly, defrayed upon their Purfes also.

The chief Order of Knighthood in this Kingdom was that of the Dragon, instituted by Sigismund Emperour and King hereof, at such time as by the Council of Constance against John Hus and Hierom of Prague, and by the sharpness of his Sword proved upon their Followers, he had cast down (as he conceived) the Dragon of Heresie and Schism. But the Device proved of no long continuance, expiring almost with the Author.

The Arms of Attila the Hun, once the King of this Country by the name of Pannonia, are said to have been Gules, a Falcon displayed Or, membered and crowned Argent. But the Arms of the Kingdom at this time are Barre-wie of eight pieces, Gules and Argent.

And so much for HUNGARY.

Thus Enghbed by my honoured Friend Sir Robert Stapleton, in his excellent Translation of that harsh Satyrift:
When Buifness calls, a Crowd the rich man thuns,
And or 'em's Heads in's huge Sedan he runs,
Reads, writes; and fleeps within it, as he goes:
For Sleep will come if he the Curtains clofe.

Befides which office of Chair-carriers, or Sedan-men, as we call them now, this People being, when once conquered, a fervile Nation, furnished the Romans with thofe Beadles whom they employed in calling the Citizens from the Fields to their public Buifnesses: to which the fame Poet alludeth in the next Satyrift, Clamante Liburno, Currite jam fedit, &c. But to proceed. The nearens of this Country to the Adriatick occasioned the Bay of Quarnero, or Cornaro, as some call it, commonly called Sinus Flanaticus, to be sometimes named Sinus Liburnicus, the parts of Italy on the other fide of it to be called Regna Liburnorum in the Poet Virgil, and gave the name of Liburnades to a Shole of Iflands lying on the Coast hereof, 60 at least in number, as is said by Strabo. To which and other Iflands of the Adriatick we are now to haften, leaving the Stories of Illyricum to the clofe of all.

6. The SCLAVONIAN Iflands.

Along the Coasts of Sclavonia lie a Cluster of Iflands, to the number of a thousand, as is said by Pliny, most of which (if indeed so many) are but Rocks, not Iflands, or not inhabited at all, nor of any note. The Principal whereof, and fuch as deserve place here, are, 1. the Li- burnades before mentioned. 2. The Apfyrides. 3. The Ifles of Ragusi. 4. Arbe. 5. Curzola. 6. Zara. 7. Lissa and Braccia; the rest not being worth the looking after as to our Defign. The whole number of the Inhabitants is reckoned in the total to no more than 40000 persons.

1. The LIBURNADES, said by Strabo to be 60 in number, lie all along the Coasts of Liburnia, or Con- rado di Zara. The chief whereof are 1. Iffa, now called Pago, containing 100 miles in compafs, having a Town of the fame name, but in all that Tract of ground not above 1000 Inhabitants, in the time of my Author, by reason of the sharp Ayre, and great want of Fowl. The Saltpetres here yield great Commodity not only to the people themselves, but also to the State of Venice, fupreme Lords hereof. 2. Tragurium, now Trau and Traban, fo called from the chief Town hereof, built by thofe of Iffa: fo near the Continent, that it feems to be a part thereof. By Mela it is named Tegurium, with fome little difference:
3. Pharus fo called from the Pharis, or Paris of whom it was once a Colony, long fince come to Ruine. It is now called Lefina, the greatest of all the Adriatick as being 150 miles in compafs, and very fruitful for the bignefs. It hath a Town of the fame name, which enjoys a safe and fpacious Harbour: unvalued and of no great beauty, but fortified with a ftrong Caffle, which commandeth both the Harbour and the Shipping in it. The Birth-place of De- metrius Pharus, fo often mentioned in the Stories of Greece and Rome.

2. The ABSYRTIDES are in number many, fo called from the River Abfyrus, which thereabouts falls into the Adriatick; according unto that of Lucan, Et cadit Adriacis puppans Abfyrus in undas.
Abfyrus foaming with his haft,
Into the Adria falls at laft.

But whether that River were fo called by the Colchians at their landing there, in memory of Abfyrus the Son of Aetas King of Colchis, whom they went to feek, or for some other reason, I determine not. Certain I am, it could not be fo named from the scattering of his Limbs hereabouts by Medea, his unnatural Sifter, as is said by Pliny; that cruel Faft being done on the Shores of the Euxine: the place being called Tomas afterwards upon that occasion. But of these Iflands, being in number many, as before was said, two only are of fpecial note: that is to say, 1. Vegia, or Vegio, not far from Segna on the firm Land, containing in compafs betwixt 80 and 100 miles, and about 10000 Inhabitants: the most populous of all these Ifs. It hath a Town of the fame name, with a very fair Harbour: the Ifland by Pliny called Curia, the chief Towns of it in his time being, Fulfinium and Cur- cum. 2. Abfyrus, as Ptolemy Abfyrum, as Pliny calls it, in whole time it was one Ifland only, but now divided into two by the Venetians, letting in the Sea betwixt them: the one of them is called Cherfo the other Ofero; both joined together by a Bridge made by the Venetians, and both together making up 140 miles in compafs; each of them having one Town only, and that of the fame name with the Ifland; the Inhabitants in both not exceeding 50000 persons. Stored with fufficiency of Corn, plenty of Wine, and abundance of Wood, great quantities whereof are sent yearly to Venice. They have also goodly Herds of Cattel, and great Flocks of Sheep; affording by their Fleefh, Wool, Cheefe and Butter, a good increafe of profit to the Owners of them.

3. The Iflands of RAGUSI, (for fo I call them which belong to that Commonwealth) are but three in number.
1. Gravosa, a very pleasant place, full of gardens of Oranges, Limons, and Pomegranates. 2. Langafte, fimo-ned about with very high Mountains, in which are the Ragufan Farms, made rich by great Charge and Indu-ftry of the fveral Occupants, fo as to yield them Wine, Oyl, and most excellent Fruits; which they receive more plentifully from a goodly Plain fituate in the middle hereof, and naturally more fruitful than the other parts. Near to this last Ifland is good fifhing for Sprats: and in both an Art of making their trees to bring forth Oylers, by bending down their Boughs, and tying them under the water with Stones; fo as in two years there are fo many Oylers fastned to them as is ftrange to fee, and in the third year they are very good meat. Melyda, lying betwixt Ragusi and the Ifle of Curzola, by Pliny called Me- lita, and on that ground fuppoted by fome to be that Ifland on which St. Paul did fhipper Perice, Art. 26.
But the name of Barbarus which the Text joins to the Inhabitants of it, not proper to an Ifland betwixt Greece and Italy in the times of St. Paul, and his Landing, when he parted thence at Syracufe, an Haven of Sicily fo far from this fo near unto the other Melita, which is now called Malta, fufficiently refel this Fancy, though otherwise not improbably grounded.

4. Of thofe which are known only by one fingle name the chief are, ARBE, fo called in the time of Pliny, from the best Town of it, but by Ptolemy it is named Sto- donia. A pleasant Ifland, in compafs about 50 miles, and containing fome 30000 Inhabitants; the only Haven of life of all the Adriatick; but that defect is abundantly recompenced by the natural Sweetnefs of the place, which is efteemed certain difolute Rovers of Austria, that they fci-ced it upon it Anno 1618, and had like to have occasioned an upon it heavy War betwixt Ferdinand, Archduke of the Houfe of Gratz, (not long after chosen King of the Romans) and the State of Venice, if Philip the third of Spain had not made up the Breach.

5. CURZOLA, by Ptolemy and Strabo called Coreyra, or Melena, more rightly Coreyra Melana, now Coreyra Nigra, to difference it from Coreyra, now Cor- fu, in the Ionian Sea. The chief Town of it, being of the fame

fame name with the Ifland, was founded by the Gudians of the Ifle of Crete. It is fufficiently fruitful, but of Wine efpecially; forty miles long, in compafs ninety, and very populous for the bignefs, notwithstanding that the people, being Sea-faring men, do much use the Seas, and build many Ships. In the year 1571, a little after the taking of Cyprus, and before the Battle of Lepanto, it was invaded by Uluaz Ali, General of the Turkifh Fleet, with a Navy of 60 Gallies: for fear of whom Contareno, the Ve- netian Governor, together with the Townsmen and Garrison Soldiers, abandoned Curzola, the chief Town hereof, the Filly Women thus forsaken, and preferring Death before Dishonour, defended the Walls, and with Fire, Stones, and fuch other Weapons as they had, they beat off the Enemy; till at the laft a violent Tempeft forced the Turkifh General to remove his Gallies farther off, to a place of fafety.

6. ZARA, LISSA, BRAZZIA, three small Ifles, not otherwise memorable but for their Misfortunes, spoiled by the Turks at their departure from Curzola who carried thence 1600 Chriftians into cruel Bondage. The rest I purposely omit, being rather Rocks than Iflands, barren and stony for the most part, and not much inhabited.

The ancient Inhabitants of Illyricum, in the full extent of it, comprehending Liburnia and Dalmatia, were the Lapides, bordering on Italy, the Scirones, or Sciritari, confining upon Macedon, the Maezi, in the middle about Sa- lina; the Petrifia, lying towards Pannonia; the Deris, Cerami, Dauris, Paras, Sicula, Sardis, and others of inferior note, making up the great and potent Nations of the Libert and the Dalmatae, and comprehended generally in the name of Illyrians.

Of these the Liburnian
Illyrians (by Pliny, fen Liburni) are they are indifferently called by Pliny were the first who felt the Forces of Rome:
which growing State they had provoked by their frequent Piracies, but more by murdering the Embassadors which were sent unto them to require Satisfaction; Tenta their Queen, a proud and imperious Dame, commanding Execution to be done upon them. Warred upon by the Romans for fo many Injuries under the Conduct of Centimulus, one of their Confals, they were overthrowen, (as having more of the Pirate than the Soldier in them) some of their chief Nobility executed, in revenge of the Wrong done to the Embassadors, an yearly Tribute imposed on them, and the Queen deprived of the greatest part of her Kingdom, conferred by the Romans on Demetrius Pharus, one of their Confederates. But he proving unfaithful to them in their War with Hannibal, and Gentius, their last King, who commanded over Illyricum, fiding against them with Per- seus King of Macedonia, Antius the Pretor is sent with a fufficient Army to make an end of that work; who used fuch diligence therein, that Scodra the chief Town of the Kingdom was taken, and the King himself, together with his Wife and Children, made Prisoners; by consequence the whole War ended, antequam geri Roma nunciaretur, before they knew at Rome that it was begun. The Liburni- an after that became quiet Subjects, the whole Country on the taking of Gentius being made a Province of the Romans Anno D. C. 86, and they employed at Rome in many fer-vile offices, as before was said: and then the Dalmatians began to call off the Yoke. But Dalmatium, their chief City, being first sacked by Marcus Fulvius, and after by Nepos before mentioned, they continued quiet and obedient till the time of Augustus Caesar, when they again rebelled at the instigation of one Batto, a man very potent with the People, who, having ten years together maintained the Liberty of his Country, at last, broken and wearied by the Forces of Germanicus and Tiberius, fubmitted himself unto the two Generals; who, asking the reason of his Revolt, were answered, because the Romans sent not Shepherds to keep, but Wolves do devour, their Flocks. Thus finally conquered, it continued a Roman Province till the coming of Odoacer into Italy, who brought it under his Command; as the Goths also did, having vanquished him, and thereby made themselves Masters of Italy and the rest of his Purchases. But the Kingdom of the Goths being brought to an end by the good fortune of Justinian, and the valour of Belisarius and Nar- ses, two of his Commanders, (but very ill requited by him)

Illyricum became a part of the Eastern Empire, continuing under the power of the Gracian Emperors till the time of Phocas, that bloody Tyrant; when it was made a Prey to the Sclaves.

Of these though we have spoken before in fveral places, as their Fortunes and Affairs have led us; yet being this is the only Country which preserves their name, we will here fpeak more exactly of them than we have done hitherto; efpecially as to their Manners, Name, and first Original, and finally of their Successe in this Country.
And first for their Original, I take it for a thing past que-tion that they were no other than natural Sarmatians, inhabiting on the North of the River Rif, uniting themfelves under this Name in their Undertakings and Attempts on the Eastern Empire: as the many Natives of Germany took the name of Franks and Almans in their Adtions and Achievements against the Western. But why they took this name rather than another, is not yet agreed on. Some fetch the original of it from Slavo, which in the Sclavonian Tongue fignifieth a Speech or Word, because they were all of one common Language, though from Slava, fignifying in that Language Fame or Glory, in regard of that great Fame and Honour which they had attained by their Successe on the Empire. But when I find a potent Nation of the Winnibi, Windi, or Venedi, a Sarmatian People, called Scalvini by Jordanes, possessed in his time of the farther Shores of the River Rif, opposite to Illyricum and Thrace, and by that Name wading and foraging these Provinces and other parts of that Empire in the time of Justinian, as we read in Procopius that they did; I see no reason why we should look farther for the name of Sclaves than from these Scalvini. For having in the time of Phocas fubdued this Country, and called it Sclavi- nia or Sclavonia, after their own Name, they and other fortunate Successe on the Eastern Empire, and the Honour they had thereby gotten, they might very well induce the rest of the scattered Tribes of the Sarmatians to unite together with them both in Name and Adtion, and try their fortunes in the Conquest of the West of Europe, as these had done already on the East parts of it. In which Defign they fped fo well, that they became Masters of almost all thofe Countries which lie betwixt the River Viftula and the Euxine Sea, the Adriatick and the Baltick, communicating their Language unto all the Provinces and Nations conquered by them, and to most their Manners, Rites and Customs. Their Government was at first by Kings; but fo that the Succession feldom held in a Race or Family, and thofe that had the Throne did not long enjoy it. For having a Law amongst themselves, that he who killed a Tyrant should fucceed in his place; they had few Kings whom fome or other would not vote to be a Tyrant, and then difpatch him out of the way, that a greater Tyrant might himself (as it commonly happeneth in fuch cafes) might poffels the Power. Infomuch that they had a new King almost every year, none of them for the fpace of an hundred years dying natural deaths; and all that while the People (as it must be) were most miserably torn in pieces by intestine Wars. They were not cured of this Diftemper, till the fveral Tribes and Nations of them (as Poles, Moravians, Bohemians, &c. these here, & thofe of other Countries) had their several Princes succeeding one another in a regular way. Their Religion was Gentilism at the first. For being originally Heathens, they worshipped such Gods as others of the Gentiles did; Jefus for Jupiter, Ladon for Pluto, Marzim for Mars, Zie-vane for Venus, and Nian for Diana. They had also a God-dess called Fagode, to whom they prayed for Fair weather and a temperate Air. To their Children they used to give no Name till they began to grow great, and then they con-ducted them to the Temple of their Gods; where they cut off their first Hair, and offered it as a Pledge of their future Service: at which Solemnity they called together their Friends and Kinsfolk to make merry, with Banquets, Dancing, Singing, and all kind of Sports; offering in sac-rifice an Hog, and Wine mixed with Honey; somewhat like Methuehlin.

The Gospel was first generally received amongst them by the Preaching of Gyrril and Methodius, two right godly men, who had before converted the Georgians and Circassians, two great Asian Nations, employed therein by the Patriarch of Constantinople, with good Success as to the Work, and with no small Honour and advantage to those Patriarchs also. The Eastern Slaves, inhabiting those parts of this Country which lie next to Greece, and all the Dacian Provinces, except Transylvania, being of the Communion of the Church of Tranſylv, but privileged to officiate all Divine Services in their natural Language. The rest, as more obnoxious to the power of the Kings of Hungary and the German Emperours, submitted by de-grees to the Popes of Rome, who by this means did reap where they never sowed.

But to return unto the Story, The Slaves, thus settled in this Country, (since called Slavonia) continued absolute Masters of it, under the Title of Kings of Croatia and Dalmatia, till the year 970; when growing unſufferable by their frequent Piracies, and having ravished or surprized a Company of Venetian Ladies, they forced that State (as the Liberians did the Romans) to make War upon them: which ended in the Loss of Leſan and Car-zola, two of their best Islands, and almost all the Sea-Towns on the Coast of the Adriatick, possessed for the most part since that time by the State of Venice: a Tri-bute also of a hundred Barrels of Wine, and a Prefect to the Duke of 3000 Coney-skims, being laid upon them; Petro Orſolo, being then Duke of Venice, and Marcovic King of the Slavonians. Afterwards Zelamirus, the last King, dying without Issue, bequeathed the Kingdom to his Wife, and she as freely to her Brother Vladislaus, King of Hungary, furnished the Saint; the right hereof ac-cruing by this means to the Kings of Hungary, but the Possession of a great part of it remaining to the State of Venice: the cause of much War and Bloodshed betwix those Princes, till the Turk came to part the Fray, and got the greatest part for himself by their Disagreements. Be-twix these three Slavonia at this time those Island thus divided: the Venetians possess the greatest part of the Islands, and all the Sea-coasts from the River Asio to the Bay of Cattaro, (the City and Commonwealth of Ragusi excepted only;) the House of Austria, in Right of the Crown of Hungary, the Inland parts of Windischland and Croatia; and the Turk (who first set footing herein the Reign of Mahomet the second) the whole Kingdom of Bosnia, the Patronage of Ragusi, some Towns in Windischland and Croatia, and all the residue of Dalmatia, from the Bay of Cattaro to Albania.

The Arms of Slavonia were Argent, a Cardinal's Hat, the Strings pendant, and platted in a True-love Knot, meeting in the Base, Gules.

OF D A C I A .

D A C I A is bounded on the East with the Exe-sine Sea and some part of Thrace, on the West with Hungary and Slavonia, on the North with Podolia and some other Members of the Realm of Poland, on the South with the rest of Thrace and Macedonia. So called from the Daci, who here first in-habited; in Strabo better known by the name of Davi: who proving, when first known to the Romans, an officious people, willingly putting themselves to Service in hope of Gain, occasioned the Romans in their Comedies and common Speech to call a Sycophant or Servant by the name of Davus.

It lieth on both sides of the Danow, fronting all along the Upper and the Lower Hungary, and some part of Sclavonia: extended from the 7. Climate to the 10. so that the longest Summers Day in the most Northern parts thereof is near 17 hours, and in the most Southern 15 hours, 3 quarters.

By this account, with reference to the other Limits before laid down. It differeth much in Situation and Di-mensions from the ancient Dacia described by Ptolemy: that lying wholly on the North-side of the Danow, but tak-ing in so much of the Upper Hungary as lieth on the East-side of Tibiscus, this comprehending all the rest of the ancient Dacia, with both the Myſia's and Dardania, and, in a word, the whole Dacian Diocese in the largest extent thereof, the Province of Prævalitana excepted only; which, though a Member of this Diocese, was no part of Dacia, but rather of Macedon or Albania. For the clearer understanding whereof, we may please to know that Dacia properly so called, was situate on the Northside of Danubius, as before was said, extending as far Westward as the River Tibiscus, where it fronted on the Jazyges Metanſæ; inhabited by a military and val-iant People, who many times, especially when the Frost did favour them, passed over the River, and invaded the Roman Provinces. And though repressed and made tri-butory butary by Julius Cæſar, yet they brake out again in the time of Augustus, who sending Lentulus against them with a puissant Army, compelled them to retire on the other side of the River, planting the Southern Banks thereof with strong Towers and Garrisons, to restrain them from the like incursions for the time to come. By means whereof, ſi Dacia turned non viſita, ſummata atque Silota est, faith the Historian, though Dacia, was not overcome, yet it was removed somewhat farther off, and the Provinces thereby secured from the attempts of that people. After this, scared from the attempts of that people. After this, scared from the time of Cæſar, with whom Augustus had to deal, we find little of them till the Reign of Decabalus their last King, a man both ready in Advice, and quick in Execu-tion. Against him Domitian made War by Julianus his Lieutenant, who gave Decabalus a great Overthrow, and had then utterly vanquished him, if his Wit had not bet-ter befriended him than his Sword. For fearing that the Romans making use of their Victory, would enter and take possession of his Country, he pitched in the way a great number of Stakes in Battel-array, putting on them the old Corlets of his Souldiers, which, looking like fo many men at Arms, frightened the Enemy from approaching the Country. Trajan was the next that made War against him and brought him to that Extent, that having with much loss endured some few Skirmishes, he yielded him-self, and is acknowledged a Friend to the Senate and Peo-ple of Rome. But being one of an high spirit, and born in a free Air, he once again fell off from the Romans, but to his own destruction: for feeling by the valour of Trajan his Kingdom conquered, and his Pa-ace taken and destroyed, he fell upon his own Sword, and Dacia was made a Province of the Roman Empire. Lost in the time of Gallienus, it was again recovered by Aurelianus; who, finding how difficult and chargeable the keeping of it was like to be, retransferring the other side of the River, placing them betwix the two Myſia's, (in some part of each) and calling the Country given to them by the name of Dacia, or New Dacia, leaving the Old unto the Goths, and others of the barbarous Nations, whose Thoroughfare it was in all their Enterprizes and Designs upon the Roman Empire. It was divided by Aurelianus into the two Provinces of Dacia Mediterranea, and Dacia Preſens; this lying on the Banks of the Danow, the other more within the Land: which, with the Provinces of Meſo-potamia, Dardania, Prævalitana, and part of Macedonia, Salutaria, made up the whole Diocese of Dacia in the times succeeding. It was first subject with that of Macedon to the Præſens Prætorio, for Thyricum, and consequently appertaining (after the Division) to the Eastern Empire. And it continued in this State till the time of Justinian, who being a Native of this Country, subducted it from the Command of that Prefect, and instituted both a Præſens Prætorio for this Diocese only in Civil matters, and a Primate for the affairs of the Church; both settled in the City of Justinian, of his own Foundation, enlarging the Jurisdiction of the first by the addition of some part of Macedonia, Secunda, and Panno-nia, and giving to the other all those Prebeminences which had been anciently enjoyed by the greater Pa-triarachs. But this new Institution was of no continuance. For first the Slaves, and afterwards the Russians, Hun-gars and Bulgarians, breaking over the Danow, dimem-bered it piece-meal from the Empire and divided it under new names amongst themselves. Of which, together with the nature of the Soil and people, I shall speak anon, having first took a view of the Rivers, Hills and other Land-marks, which are to be my chief Guides in the Choro-graphy or Description of them.

The Rivers then of most note are 1. the Danow, which here at Asinum or Asinopolis, a Town of Bulgaria, takes the name of ſſir, continuing it from thence to its Exſu-rium, where it falleth into the Exeſine Sea with 7 Mouths or Channels; that is to say, 1. Pence, 2. Naracſtoma, 3. Calſtoma, 4. Plendofſtoma, 5. Spiroſtoma, 6. Bore-ſtoma: the name of the last I find not amongst my Au-thors, quia languiſſimum, nec perpetuum, as it is in Ptolemy. 2. Marulius, now called Marſch. 3. Termes, 4. Alma, keeping its old name, 5. Hierafus. All of Old Dacia, and all falling into the Danow or ſſir: as do also Ciabrus, now Ibar, a River of Cervia, and 6. Suconia of Bulgaria, or the Lower Myſia. Chief Mountains of it are, 1. The Carpathians, 2. Scardus, 3. Ozbelus; whereof the first parteth it from Sarmatia Europea; the second from Dalmatia, and the third from Macedon.

This said, we will proceed to the description of the fe-veral Provinces which we have comprehended under this name of Dacia; that is to say, 1. Transylvania, 2. Mol-davia, 3. Wallachia, 4. Ralcia, 5. Servia, 6. Bulga-ria: The first four in Old Dacia, on the North-side of the Danow, The two last in New Dacia, on the South thereof.

1. TRANSYLVANIA.

TRANSYLVANIA is bounded on the East with Moldavia, on the West with the Upper Hun-gary, on the North with Ruſſia Nigra, a Province of the Realm of Poland, from which it is parted by the Car-pathian Mountains; on the South with Ralcia and Wa-lachia.

It took this name from the great Woods lying betwix it and Hungary; the name in Latine signifying the Coun-try beyond the Woods. By the Dutch it is called Sieben-bergen, from seven Castles or strong Holds anciently built in it to defend the Frontiers: Septemcastrens in some La-tine Authors upon that occasion. But by the more elegant Latinists it hath been named Pannodacia, as that part of Dacia, which either was inhabited by the Pannonians, or made subject to them.

The Soil doth naturally abound with Wine, Corn, and Fruit; of which it was so plentiful in the time of the Romans, that the Emperour Trajan caused a piece of Mo-ney to be coined, having the Figure of Ceres, holding in the one hand a Cornu Copia, and in the other a plain Ta-blet with this Inscription, Abundantia Dacia. Particu-larly, besides great plenty of Wheat and most Excellent Wines, it yieldeth great store of Cherries, Damascens, Malacatoons, Musk-melons, not inferior to those of Italy, and also Centaury good store, and many other Med-icinal plants; some Mines of Gold and Silver, many of Iron, Brass, Copper, and not a few Veins of Salt and Sul-phur. Of Cattel such abundance, that many times large Oxen are sold for a Floren, or half a Crown a piece; and a most notable breed of Horses: not to say any thing of that variety of Wild Beasts which they have in their Woods and Forests, and of all sorts of Fowl both for food and pleasure. So populous withal, (for the most fruit-ful Countries are commonly populous also) that Cassi-ald, Governour hereof in the Minority of Stephen the fourth Son of Iohn de Sepſis, Anno 1551, advanced an Army of 70000 able men, consisting of the Natives of this Country only, for the Siege of Lippe, a strong Town of Hungary, but on the Borders of this Coun-try.

The People are much of the same nature with the Hungarians, to whom they have been along time subject, but somewhat more stubborn and untractable: speak the same Language as they do, with some difference in the Dialect only; converted at the same time to the Chris-tian fian Faith, and under the same form of Ecclesiastical Government. In former times they used to read, as the Jews do, from the right hand to the left; but of late heretofore they on to the Western Nations, from whom they are generally defended.

For that the people of this Country are the Progeny of the Saxons, is evident 1. by the Saxon Language yet in part retained. 2. We find that Charles the Great, like a politic Conqueror, placed many of that Nation here, weakening so their strength at home, and fortifying the Bounds of his Empire. And 3. by a Story recited by Verfeggen, which we touched in our Description of Brundwick; the whole Narration is this. Halberstadt was beyond credit troubled with Rats, which a Musician, whom they called the Pfäpfer, undertaking for a great mass of money to destroy, they agreed: hereupon he tuned his Pipes, and all the Rats in the Town dancing after him are drowned in the next River. This done, he asketh his pay, but is denied: whereupon he stricketh up a new fit of Mirth: all the Children, male and female, of the Town, follow him into the Hill Hanslen, which presently closed again. The Parents miss their Children, and could never hear news of them. Now of late some have found them in this Country, where I also leave them: only telling you this, that this marvellous accident is said to happen the 22. of July, 1376. Since which time it is said that the people of Halberstadt permit not any Drum, Pipe, or other Instrument to be sounded in that Street: and established a Decree, that in all Writings, of Contract or Bargain, after the Date of our Saviours Nativity, the Date also of their Childrens Transmigration should be added in rei memoriam. But though the Dutch or Saxons make up the main body of them, yet being conquered by the Hungars, they received many of their Colonies; and in the Northern parts there remain still some of the old Scythians planted there by Attila. Out of those Members is the Body of this State composed: so strong and populous, that it is conceived to be able to raise an Army of 90000 men; and actually did arm 6000 Horse and 12000 Foot for the Battle of Kersbure, Anno 1596, being more by 2000 than the whole Realm of Hungary sent unto that Service.

Chief Towns herein of the foundation of the Dutch or Saxons are, 1. Hermanstadt, in Latine Hermanopolis, (of old called Cibinium, from the River Cibin, on which it was situate) so named of one Herman the Founder of it, little inferior to Vienna for strength or greatness, well fortified both by Art and Nature. 2. Cronstadt, in Latine called Corona, by some Braşovia, by others Stephanopolis; this last name being given it by Stephen King of Hungary, who repaired and beautified it; situate on the Borders of Wallachia, amongst fruitful Mountains; remarkable for a fair Library and a kind of Academy; and the most noted Empory or Mart-Town of all this Country; of great Resort especially in the Time of their publick Fairs, by Turks, Arabians, Greeks, Armenians, Poles, Wallachians, and other Nations. 3. Bistricia, (by the Dutch called Noren) so called from the River Brice, which runneth through it: so pleasant and so sweet a Town, that there is no dirt or mire to be seen at any time; or if there be, the people presently swell up the River, and so cleanse the Streets. 4. Mediesfus (by the Dutch Medwitsch) so called quasi medius confossus, because situate in the middle of the Country, a Town almost as neat as Bistricia. 5. Segeşvaria, or Scheşburg, on the declivity of an Hill. 6. Zağrebis, or Laitz, once the chief Town of the Saxons, but now much decayed; situate in a very deep Valley, well fenced with Waters, and those Waters well stored with Fish. 7. Clusenburg, or Cluswar, the Zeugma of Ptolemy, in Latine called Clandopolis, from Clandius the II. Emperor, by whom re-edified at first a Colony of the Saxons or Dutch only, but of late times the Hungarians, coming in as Strangers, were at last privileged as Citizens, and inhabited together with them. The Town is well fenced in the middle of a pleasant Plain, encompassed with an handsome Wall, and beset with elegant Buildings. 8. Alba Julia, now Wesslingburg, the Apulum of Ptolemy, situate on a small brook then called Apulus, (but now Orani) whence it had the name. Built on the side of an Hill near the River Marisch, (or Marisus) over-looking a large and fruitful Plain: heretofore a Bishops See, and the ordinary Residence of the Prince or Vaivod of Transylvania, but now a Garrison of Hungarian Soldiers, holding it for the Emperor, as King of Hungary.

Chief Towns belonging to the Hungarians, and by them inhabited, are, 1. Waradin, much mentioned in the Stories of these later times, since the invasions of the Turks; situate on the Borders of Hungary. 2. Thorda, built in or near the place where stood the Valina of Phlemy, so called from the abundance of Salt-pits which were then about it. 3. Engedine, by the Romans called Amnium, from a Causey leading to it, raised by one Annius, and from him so named; some Fragments whereof are still remaining. 4. Deva, remarkable for a Vein of the best Wines. 5. Fenischum, affording very pleasant Wines also, not inferior to those of Penum in Italy. 6. Zilich, 7. Gela, of which little memorable. 1. Miltenbach, a river from which, betwixt which and the Town of Brav, is a very strong Fortrefs, commanding a freight and narrow passage leading into this Country out of Hungary.

In the North part hereof lieth the Province called ZECKLERE, inhabited by the Scythians, an old brood of Scythians, brought hither by Attila on his first Conquest of this Country, and here still continuing. A people which have much in them of the ancient Huns, and had heretofore a peculiar Language to themselves, but now they speak the Hungarian generally, differing in the Dialect only. But, though by the necessity of Commerce and Cohabitation, they are brought into the same Language; they still retain their ancient Customs, governed by their old Laws, and living after the same manner as the Switzers do; each of their Cantons (seven in number) being absolute in and of itself, but all united with the Transylvanians, and with one another, for defence of the whole Country against the several Pretensions of the German and Turkish Emperours. And though they do acknowledge some Subjection to the Emperor as King of Hungary, yet it is but what they list themselves being anciently privileged from all Taxes, more then the paying of a Bull for every Mouthful, in the way of an Hecot, at the Coronation of the new King, when and how oft sever it may chance to happen. Their Cantons (so they call them) are, 1. Septi. 2. Orbgy. 3. Kysk. 4. Czyk. 5. Gyrgy. 6. Maros-Zeck. And 7. Arania-Zek, so called from the chief Town in each Division. In former times no Nobleman, nor any one of better Means and greater Eminence than other, was known amongst them: but now of late that Parity (or Confusion rather) is grown out of credit, and some begin to over-top the rest both in Power and Tide as in other places.

The first Inhabitants of the old Dacia, whereof this Province was a part, were the Anari, Tarvisi, Rhaetis, Canconsi, the Buridenfi, and Biopis, &c. First conquered they were by Lyfimbach, the great and mighty King of Thrace, one of the renowned Captains of Alexander the Great; in token whereof, innumerable Medals in the age of our Grandfathers were found in this Country, having his Image on the side, and this word Victoria on the other. How they were afterwards subdued by the Emperor Trayan, and quitted by Aurelianus, hath been already

dy. Being forsaken by the Romans, it was won by the Goths; their constant Dwelling till forced over the Danube by the Huns, the next Possessors of this Country; the Road or Thorough fare from that time of those barbarous Nations, which out of Asia made their Inroads on the Europæans. Having been successively subdued by the Slaves and Rosses, this part hereof was conquered by Stephen, the first King of Hungary, furnished the Saint, by whose perswasion and inducements they received the Gospel. They were governed after this time as a Member of that Kingdom, by a Deputy, whom they called the Vaivod of Transylvania, (the word Vaivod signifying as much as Presectus Militie, or a Lord-Lieutenant) a man, by reason of the greatness of his place and power of most Authority in that Kingdom. The names and Succession of these Vaivods, till the time of John Haniades, comes imperfectly to us; but after that more cleere and constant in this order following.

THE VAIVODS AND PRINCES OF TRANSYLVANIA.

1. John, furnished Haniades, made Vaivod hereof by Vladislav the IV. A man of great Valour and Renown, the great Defender of his Country against the Turks, whom he overthrew in many Battles, especially in that of Maros, where he slew 50000 of them. He died about the year 1458.
2. Stephen, of the noble Family of Cattory, Vaivod in the time of Matthias King of Hungary, the Son of Haniades.
3. Stephen II. furnished de Sepiso, from the place of his Honour or Estate; not so much memorable for any thing as for being Father of Barbara, the Wife of Sigismund King of Poland, and of
4. John II. called also de Sepiso, after the death of Lewis the II. chosen King of Hungary, of whom before amongst the Kings of that Realm
5. Americus, Bishop of Veradum, made Vaivod by John de Sepiso, on his taking of the Crown of Hungary, treacherously murdered, for not complying with the Turks, Anno 1534.
6. Stephen III. furnished Maylat, a noble Hungarian, but extremely ambitious, having not long after the death of Americus usurped the Vaivodship, was in the year 1540 confirmed in that Dignity.
7. Stephen IV. Son of John de Sepiso the late King of Hungary, by Solyman the Magnificent made Vaivod of Transylvania, being then an Infant, (by whom he had been deprived of his Kingdom of Hungary, not long before being inchoated upon not long after by the said Solyman, this Country was put into the hands of Ferdinand King of Hungary, other Lands being given to the young Prince in exchange hereof.
8. Stephen V. furnished Dobos, for his Valour showed against the Turks in defending Agria, made Vaivod of this Country by the said King Ferdinand. But Solyman, not liking that this Country should be at the Devotion of the Kings of Hungary, conferred the same (under the Vassallage of his Empire) upon one
9. John III. whose Family and surname I have no where found; a professed Champion of the Turks, and as professed an Enemy to Ferdinand and his Successors in the Kingdom of Hungary.

10. Stephen VI. furnished Battery, (of which House he was) made Vaivod by the Turks; and afterwards on the Commendation of Amurad the III. chosen King of Poland.
11. Christopher Battery, Brother of Stephen, on whose Election unto Poland, he succeeded here, and was the first, who leaving the Title of Vaivod, took that of Prince of Transylvania.
12. Sigismund, Son of Christopher, shook off the Turkish Bondage, defeated many of their Armies, and slew some of their Bassis, (the Scanderbeg of the times he lived in) But not being able to hold out against so Potent an Adversary, he resigned his Estate to Rodolphus the Emperour, having for it in exchange the Dukedoms of Oppelen and Ratisin in Silesia, and an annual Pension of 50000 Peacchims. But finding his Pension ill paid, he made a new Renegation of it to
13. Andrew Battery, Cousin of Sigismund, slain within the year by the Vaivod of Valachia. After whose death
14. Rodolphus, Emperour and King of Hungary, is admitted Prince of Transylvania, on the second Renegation of Sigismund. But his Souldiers behaving themselves with too great Insolence, Sigismund was called back again, but never well settled: so that at last he was faine to leave the Country in the power of the Emperour and retire to Prague, where in the year 1613 he died unlamented. In the mean time
15. Justine, or Ibrav, furnished Borcsay, a Nobleman of this Country, made Prince hereof by the great Turk, and supported by him, cleared the Province of the Germans: and being followed by great Companies of those of the Reformed Religion, he not only obtained of the Emperour Rodolphus a Confirmation of this Estate unto himself, but liberty of Conscience, and the free exercise of Religion for both the Nations, presently after which he died, Decemb. 30. 1606.
16. Sigismund II. of the noble Family of Ragotzy, elected in the February following by the Transylvanians; but finding himself not able to make his Election good against the Emperour, and being unwilling to subject himself unto the Turks, and after the end of one year he relinquished the Government, and betook himself again to a private life.
17. Gabriel Battery, of the Family of the former Princes, succeeded by the favour of Acemet the great Turk: after whose death, so welcome unto his Neighbours and Subjects,
18. Bethlem Gabor, by the same Acemet was made Prince of Transylvania; a professed Enemy of the House of Austria, but one that with a great deal of noise did them little hurt.
19. Stephen VII. furnished Ragotzy, on the death of Bethlem Gabor, succeeded Prince, by the power and favour of the Turks, under whose Clientele and Protection he doth still enjoy it, (as his Predecessors did before him) against all Pretensions of the Empire and Realm of Hungary; as on the other side he is defended by the Emperour and Crown of Poland from being made Thall unto the Turks.

2. MOLDAVIA.

MOLDAVIA is bounded on the East with the Enxine Sea, on the West with Transylvania, on the North with the River Niefter, the Tyras of Ptolemy and the Ancients, by which it is parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland: and on the South with Valachia.

It is fo called as some fay, quasi Meotavia, from its nearness to the Fens of Meotis; or rather from the Huns and other People of those Fens who possessed the fame. Others conceive that it was first called Maur-davia, i. e. nigrum Davorium Regis, the Country of the black Davia, (for by the name of Davi were the Dacians called, as we find in Strabo and some others) so named from their Complexion, or the colour of their Caps and other Garments; as Nigra Russi, a near neighbouring Province of the Realm of Poland, on the like occasion. But the more probable opinion (as I take it), is, that it took this name from the River Moldavia, which runneth through it; as the Moravian had the name from the River Morava. The Nature and Religion of the People we shall find in Valachia, whereof anciently it was reckoned for a part.

The Country is very fruitful in Corn, Wine Grapes, and Wood; but more used for Pasturage than Tillage, by reason of the great want of people to manure the Land: by means whereof it affordeth great plenty of Beef and Mutton, whereby they supply some parts of Poland and the populous City of Constantinople. And these they issue out in so great a Number, that the tenth penny, exacted by the Prince or Vaivod in the way of Custom amounteth to 150000 Crowns per annum: and yet the Clergy and the Gentry are discharged of this Impost. But the main Trade of this Country is not driven by the Natives: the Port Towns being full of Armenians, Jews, Hungarians, and Ragusan Merchants, who forestall the Markets, and barter all their Corn and Wine into Russia and Poland; their Skins, Wax, Honey, powdered Beef, Pulse and Butter into Constantinople: it being credibly reported, that from the Ports of this Country no fewer than 500 Ships laden with Corn, Victuals, and other Provisions necessary to the life of man, are yearly sent unto that City.

The Country is in a manner round, the Diameter each way being near upon 300 Englisch miles: but so ill inhabited, by reason of the neighbourhood of the Turks, Tartars and Polonian Cossacks, that certain Englisch Gentlemen having in the year 1609 travelled at least 240 miles in the Country, could meet with in all the way but nine Towns and Villages; and for an hundred miles together the Grapes so high, that it rotted on the ground for want of Cart to eat it, and of men to order it. So that we are not to expect in it many eminent Cities or Towns of note, though it afford two Archbishops and two Bishops Sees, Followers (as all the rest of the People are) of the Traditions and Doctrines of the Church of Greece.

The principal of those which be, are, 1. Occasnoia, Zuconia, or Socava, the Vaivod's Seat. 2. Feciciana. 3. Fazeling, of which little memorable. 4. Kotim, a place of great strength, on the Borders of Poland; by some called Cochina, the ordinary Magazine of the Country. 5. Jassy, commonly called Tar, the chief Town for Wealth and Trade in all this Province. 6. Bender, a strong Town on the Enxine Sea. 7. Polada, near the Danow. 8. Bialograd, situate on or near the River Tyras, now called Niefter; a strong Town against the Tartars, and Polonians. 9. Kilia, anciently called Achilleia situate on the Shore of the Enxine Sea, for the most part com-passed round with the waters of it, and therefore faulty Ptolemy to be an Island. 10. Ac-German, of old called Alprocatron, and Moncastrum, a very strong Town on the same coast also. Both taken by Bajazet, the second Emperor of the Turks, Anno 1485. But these three Towns are not so properly in Moldavia, at least not in Moldavia properly so called, as in a little Province called Bessarabia, lying on the Enxine, formerly counted part thereof, till conquered by the Turks, in the year aforesaid, it became a Member of that Empire. A Trade inhabited by the Bess in the times of Ptolemy, who being driven out of their Country by the Bulgarians, settled themselves (as some say) in that part of Scythia, which is now called Bosnia.

The whole Country, following the Fortune of Transylvania and the rest of Dacia, till the coming of the Slaves and Rosses, was for a while accounted part of the Russian Empire, till the dismembering of that Empire by the Tartars. After which it was sometime Homager to the Polanders, sometime to the Hungarians, according as the Vaivods or Princes of it could find best Conditions. By Mahomet the Great it was made Tributary to the Turks; but the Tribute at the first was very light and easy: not above 2000 Crowns per annum: that mighty Emperor, who aimed at more profitable Conquests, being loath to spend his Forces on so poor a Purchase as the addition of this Province would have been unto him. But Bajazet his Son finding how fit it lay for the more absolute Command of the Enxine Sea, took in that part hereof which is called Bessarabia, reducing it into the form of a Turkish Province, Anno 1485, as before it was; imposing on the rest an increase of the former Tribute; and so left it unto the disposal of its natural Princes. After which time the Vaivods fearing to be made Vassals to the Turks, did many times rise in Arms against them, aided therein sometimes by the Hungarians, and sometimes by the Polanders, which last pretended to the Sovereignty and Chiefage of it. Bogdan, Vaivod hereof in the time of Selim the second, uniting himself more closely to the Polonians, became thereby suspected by the Turkish Tyrant; who with a great power chased him out of his Country, and gave the same unto John, a Moldavian born, but bred up for the most part in the Turkish Court (where he renounced his Faith, and was circumcised) under the yearly Tribute of 6000 Crowns. But John the new-made Vaivod was no sooner settled, but he returned again to his first Religion, and for that cause grew less affected by the Turks, which being observed by the then Vaivod of Valachia, he persuaded to obtain that Dignity for his Brother Peter; offering to double the said Tribute, and to assist in Subjugation of the Country. The Turk, accepting of this Offer, compounds an Army of 70000 Valachians, 30000 Turks, and 3000 Hungarians, with which they fell into Moldavia; and were so gallantly received by the noble Vaivod, that few of them escaped the Slaughter. But being afterwards betrayed by his old Friend Camarce, and, against faith given, barbarously murdered by the Turkish Bassa; Moldavia fell into the hands of the Turks, and was united to that Empire, Anno 1574: the Vaivods from that time forwards being nominated by the Turkish Emperours, and governing as Substitutes and Lieutenants for and under them. And though Arum, one of the succeeding Vaivods, did shake off this Yoke, and confederated himself with Sigismund Prince of Transylvania, and Michael, Vaivod of Valachia, for Defence of themselves and their Estates against that Enemy yet being afterwards supplanted by Rafsan, one of his own ambitious Subjects, and that confederacy dissolved, it became Subject first unto the Polonians, by the power and prudence of Zamoisie, Chancellor of Poland; and then unto Rodolphus, Emperour of Germany; and finally unto the Turks, as before it was. And though the Polanders have since made use of some opportunities in imposing Vaivods on this Country, in despite of the Turks: yet was it commonly to their own Loss, little or no Benefit to the Moldavians; and in the end drew the whole Power to the Moldavians upon themselves in the Reign of Osman; of the Turks upon themselves in the Affairs of this Province, but leaving them entirely to the Turks disposing; who receive hence some yearly Tribute, but have not hitherto obtained the entire Possession of it, so long since aimed at by those Tyrants.

3. VALACHIA.

VALACHIA is bounded on the East with Moldavia, and a branch of the Ister or Danubius bending towards the North; on the West with Russia, on the North with Transylvania and some part of Moldavia, and on the South with the Danubius wholly, by which it is parted from Servia and Bulgaria. First called Flaccia, from one Flaccus a Noble Roman, who, on the Conquest hereof in the time of Trajan, brought hither an Italian Colony; afterwards by corruption Valachia, and at last Valchia.

But the name of Flaccia or Valchia was at first of more large extent than it is at present, comprehending all Moldavia also divided in those times by a Ridge of Mountains into Cisalpina and Transalpina; the name of Moldavia being afterwards appropriated to the one, and that of Valachia (properly and specially so called) unto the other. The people of both in token of their first Extraction, speak a corrupt Latin or Italian Language; but in Matters of Religion follow the Disciples of the Greek Church, and obey the Patriarch of Constantinople, under whom all Ecclesiastical Affairs are governed by one Archbishop, and two Bishops. In other things they partake generally of the Rudeness and Barbarity of those Nations, which have since subdued them; being a rough-hewn people, hardly civilized, ignorant for the most part of Letters and all Liberal Sciences, not weaned perfectly (in so long time of their profession of Christianity) from the Superstitions of the Gentiles, swearing by Jupiter and Venus, marrying and unmarried at their pleasures, much given to Magical Charms and Incantations, and burying with their Dead both Cloaths and Victuals, for their Relief in that long Journey to the other World.

It is in length 500, in breadth 120 miles. The Country is for the most part plain and very fertile, affording store of Cattel, a breed of excellent Horses, Iron-mines, Salt-pits, and all Provisions necessary to the life of man. Some Vines they also have, and not few Mines of Gold and Silver, more then for fear of the Turks, and other ill Neighbours they dare discover. They are begirt about with woody Mountains, which afford them Fowel, and very well watered with the Rivers of 1. Pruth, called anciently Hicrasus. 2. Sterias. 3. Falmina. 4. Telza. 5. Alata, all of them falling into 6. the Danow, which in this Province, at the Influx of Falmina, takes the name of Ister. Yet is it not (at the present) very populous the Spaciousness and Fertility hereof considered, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Tartars, Turks, and Polonian Cossacks: their late long Wars against those Nations and the Danub having much decreased their former numbers, with which they so abounded in the times foregoing, that the Vaivod of this Country, in the year 1473, was able upon little warning to bring 70000 men into the Field for present Service.

Places of most note herein are, 1. Galatz, on the Influx of the River Pruth or Hicrasus, into the Danubius; the water of which River is so unwholesome, that it causeth the Body to swell. 2. Trisfortum, not far from which they dig a Bituminous earth, so refined and pure, that usually they make Candles of it instead of Wax. 3. Prailaba, by some called Brailova, the Town of most Trade in all this Country, situate on the Danow, and defended with a very strong Cattle, fortified by Art and Nature, and furnished with a strong Garrison of Turks, as the Key of this Province, opening the Door unto the rest. The Town was most cruelly destroyed and razed to the ground, with an incredible Slaughter of the Inhabitants of all Sexes and Ages, for the space of four days together, by John the Vaivod of Moldavia, spoken of before, at his first revolting from the Turks: but the Cattle, in regard of the great strength of it, was scarce attempted by him. 4. Teina, a Fortress of great strength, but in the hands of the Turks also; 5. Zorava, corruptly for San-Georgia, seated on the Danow, with an Arm whereof the Cattle of it is encompassed, garrisoned by the Turks, and by them held to be so strong and so safe a place, that at the taking of it by Sigismund the Prince of Transylvania, Anno 1596, there were found in it 39 great pieces of Ordnance, with such store of Arms and Ammunition as might well have served for a whole Kingdom. 6. Tergovista, or Tereva, sometimes the chief City of the Province, and the ordinary Residence of the Vaivod, till the taking of it by the Turks; once beautified with a fair and famous Monastery, by the Turks converted into a Fortress, environed with deep Trenches, strong Bulwarks upon every quarter, and great store of Ordnance; but many times lost and got again, according to the changes and chance of War. 7. Bucarest, about a days journey from Tergovista, seated on the Danow, remarkable for two Bridges built near unto it. The one was of Boats, (the Bridges built near unto it) but a whole month's laying whereof took up no less than a whole month's time for the transporting of the Army of Sinan Bassa against Sigismund Prince of Transylvania before mentioned, and broken down by the said Bassa in his Flight, having been worked in all places by the Transylvanians. The other was the work of the Emperor Trajan, in his War against Decabalus King of Dacia, built all of Stone, and laid on Piles and Arches of a wonderful greatness; 24 Piles or Pillars whereof are yet remaining, to the great admiration of all beholders. 8. Cebim, of old called Lycosmos, in vain besieged by the Forces of Mahomet the Great, coming in person to subdue this petty Province. 9. Zarmizegethela, the Seat-royal of Decabalus King of Dacia, taken and destroyed by Trajan in his War against him, who, causing it to be repaired and more beautified than formerly, gave it the Privileges of Rome, and the name of Ulpia Trajana, which it retained as long as Dacia was a Province of the Roman Empire, now a small Village called Vatzer. Some Stones have been dug up hereabouts with this Inscription, COLONIA ULPIA TRAJANA AUG. DACIÆ E ZARMIS, which clearly shew as well the Dignity and esteem as the Antiquity of the place, before the Turks' times.

This Province, as the rest of Dacia on that side of the Danow, after the coming in of the Slaves and Rosses was under Princes of their own, whom they called (as those of Transylvania and Moldavia did) by the name of Vaivods. Protected by the Hungarian Kings they lived long in Peace; till, sensible of the approaching Danger which the Conquest of most part of Servia and Bulgaria by the Turks was like to bring them, the Vaivod of it in the time of Bajazet the First passed over the Danow with his Forces, and having done great Spoil to the Turkish Territories, returned again into his Country. Rather provoked than weakened with which Invasion, Bajazet comes into Valachia, overcomes the Vaivod in a pitched Field, compelling him to flee for Peace, and to pay him Tribute, But Bajazet being not long after taken Prisoner by Tamerlane, and the Succession controverted amongst his Sons, the imposed Tribute was withheld, till Mahomet, the fifth King of the Turks, having settled the Affairs of that tottering State, Anno 1417 enforced them to a new Composition, and the payment of all former Reckonings. The fortunate Successes of Hunyadi in several Battles, induced them once more to change their Masters, and to put themselves under the Protection of the Hungarians, as they had done formerly: but they paid dear for it, their Country being made the Thoroughfare of the Turkish Forces in their Attempts upon that Kingdom. But the Hungarians being vanquished at the Battle of Cassova by Amurat the second, the accustomed Tribute was brought in, and the Turks satisfied for the present, being then hardly put to it by the famous Scanderbeg. Not long after, in the year 1462, Mahomet, the Great undertook the Conquest of this Country, upon advertisement that Wladis the then Vaivod of it, intended to join with the Hungarians in some War against him: and finding how unprofitably he had spent his Forces in fighting against Woods, Mountains, and a wasted Country, he set up Dracule, the younger Brother of Wladis, to claim the Government, who, making a Party amongst the people, and having the Turk for his Assistance and support, possessed himself of the Estate, to be holden of him as a Vassal to the Turkish Empire. And it continued in this State, the Vaivods being after this at the Turks appointment, and paying all Exactions imposed upon them, till the Revolt of Sigismund the Prince of Transylvania, Anno 1591, at what time Misbach, the then Vaivod hereof, taking that opportunity to shake off this Yoke, confederated with him and the Moldavians for their common Safety. And though he held out longer against Turk and German than either of the other did, discomfited the Turks by his own proper Forces at the Battle of Nicopolis, vanquished the Transylvanians, and added that Province for a while unto the Estate: yet, being at last out of his Country by the Polanders, and another put into his place, he was shamefully slain in his own Tent, by the privacy and consent of Bassa, Lieutenant of Rodolphus, Emperor, and King of Hungary. After whose death the Country, miserably distracted betwixt two Vaivods, the one placed by the Emperor Rodolph, and the other by Mahomet the Grand Seigneur, endured all the Spoil and Wreck which so calamitous a Competition could bring upon it: till in the end, the fortune of the Turks prevailing, the Valachians were constrained to submit unto their Disposal, and receive their Vaivods from that Court, as they had done formerly: performing their accustomed Duties, and paying such yearly Tribute as is laid upon them. Which notwithstanding, partly by their own natural Unquietness, and partly by the ambition of such persons as contend for that Dignity, they have since been many times embroiled in Wars; never to quietly composed, but that a new Hope, or the Artifices of the Turkish Ministers, starts them into Action. By means whereof, when they have tired and spent themselves in their own Combustions, they may in fine be fully conquered, and made the next addition to the Turkish Monarchy.

Of what Revenue these Provinces severally were to their natural Lords, and of what fealty to the Turk, I am not able to determine. But look upon them as conjunct, and as they stood at the time of the Revolt so often mentioned, and they yielded one way with another into the Treasury of the Grand Seigneur no less than a million of Ducats yearly. Kneller in his Turkish History doth report it so. And his Continuator doth affirm that Moldavia only, before the said Revolt, did yearly yield unto the Turk a whole Tun of Gold, 2000 Horles for service, 10000 great Measures of Wheat, with as much Barley, and a wonderful proportion of Butter, Honey, and other Victuals; adding wheat, that the other two Provinces paid as much, or more, for their yearly Tribute. After which rate, the Estimate made by Kneller may hold very good. But since the Reduction of these Countries to their former Obedience, the Turks having been more moderate in their Exactions than they were before, for fear of startling them to some new Engagement; whom they have brought to this Obedience and Conformity with such a vast expense both of Blood and Treasure as would have purchased the best Kingdom of Christendom in the open Market. Insum, that the ordinary Tribute of Moldavia is now but 40000 Chequins, that of Valachia but 24000 of the same Coin; besides 10000 Horles yearly lent from both. Such Tribes and Presents as are given by the Vaivods hereof, either to get or hold their places, being Merchantable Ware, and wholly at the Turks disposing, not being part of this Account.

+ R A S C I A.

R A S C I A is bounded on the East with Valachia, on the West with Hungary, on the North with Transylvania, and on the South with the River Danubius, encompassed on three sides with that River, and another now called Temes, by the Latines Samus; and on the East divided from Valachia by the River Aluta. Called Rascia from the Rascians, a Slavonian People, whom Ortelius placeth in this Tract, and from him Magnus. But here it is to be observed, that besides this Country, the Rascians held some Towns and Territories on the other side of the Danubius, and amongst others the strong Town of Chrysiacum; whereof more anon.

The Country is poor enough, but the people poorer, oppressed in former times by the Servians, and lately by the Turks; which makes them valiant and adventurous upon all occasions, as commonly those people are who give themselves the hope of bettering their Fortunes which they cannot make worse. Places of note here are, 1. Bodan, a Town of Trade on the Danubius, memorable for the Marts or Fairs which are here held annually. 2. Zarnovia, 3. Covin, 4. Novebrade, 5. Severin, not far from which, betwixt it and Bucaresta, a Town of Valachia, are the remainders of Trayan's Bridge before mentioned. 6. Colambes, and 7. Columbella; of which little memorable.

These Rascians, as before is said, were a Tribe of Slaves, settled in this Country, at the time of their first spreading in the East, and here continuing ever since in possession of it. Governed at first by their own Princes, whom by a name borrowed from the Grecians, they called their Despots; that being once the Title of the Heir apparent or designed Successor of the Eastern Empire, as Cesar had been formerly in the Empire of Rome, and Moscow in the same sense in the Realm of France, to signify the eldest Brother (if Heir apparent to the Crown) of the King in being. But as the following Emperors did assist in Titles, so that of Despot fell from one step to another, till given at last unto the Governors of Provinces, as the Despot of Epirus, Peloponnesus, &c. and in the cees, as the Despot of Rascia, Serbia, &c. and was assumed by the several Princes of Rascia, Serbia, and Bulgaria. How this Estate became united unto Serbia, I am yet to seek: but sure I am, it was united in the person of George Despot of Serbia, and as a part of his Estate surprized by Amurat the second, who bestowed his Success therein, (in a Speech made by his Soldiers at the Siege of Belgrade) notwithstanding that he had to strive with Hunger, Thirst, Labour, and Desperation. Nor have I found at what time or under whose Conduct they pulled over Danubius, and these possessed themselves of Chrysiacum, and some other Towns and Territories on that side of the River, which they still retain, either surrounded by the Servians, or at least intermingled with them; which makes some Writers of opinion that the Rascians and the Servians are but one and the same People under divers names: to which conjecture their being subject to the same Prince gave some farther ground. But whenever they pulled over, most probable it is, that, proving either troublesome Neighbours, or unwelcome Guests, they gave occasion to the Despots of Serbia to make War upon them, to carry the War over unto this; that side of the River, to carry the War over unto this; till in the end the whole Country was made subject to them. Added to Serbia, they fell together with it into the power of the Turks, as was said before. But being more impatient of the Yoke than the Servians were, they did the Turks much mischief many times, as they came in their way never to much not so effectually as when Mahomet the III. warred against the Hungarians; at what time they frequently distressed his Armies, by cutting off his men, and intercepting the provisions of Arms and Victuals intended for the great Army of Sinan Bassa. After which at the time when Sigismund Prince of Transylvania had won so many noble Victories against the Turks, 10000 of these Rascians, casting off that Yoke, offered themselves unto his Service. These are the only memorable Actions which are told us of them, though this last was only the attempt of some private Adventures, the whole Nation still continuing in Obedience, as before they did. But following (as they did) the Fortunes of Serbia, and having a Concernment on that side of the Water, we shall there say something farther of them.

Thus have we seen when and by what means the whole Province of Old Dacia became in part subject, and in part tributary to the Turks. It is now time to pass over the Danubius, and look upon the other part of this Province, called Dacia Nova, or New Dacia; containing after our account four Provinces of the Roman Empire, that is to say, both Mysia, Scythia, and Dardania, besides the two Dacia's, Mediterranea and Ripensis, interjected betwixt the two Mysia's, as before is said: all now reduced only unto two of the Turkish Provinces, namely the Counties of Serbia, and Bulgaria.

S. S E R V I A.

S E R V I A is bounded on the East with Bulgaria, on the West with Bosnia, and some part of the Lower Hungary, on the North with the Danubius, by which it is parted from Rascia and some part of Valachia, on the South with Albania, and part of Macedon. It containeth all Mysia Superior, and a great part of Dardania; and took this new name from the Serbs, or Sorabi, a Slavonian People, of whom more hereafter.

This Country, with the neighbouring Rascia and the modern Slavonia, was first converted to the Faith by the preaching of Cyril and Methodius, formerly remembered, between the years 860 and 890. of both which there is reserved some special Monuments. For Methodius, having obtained both of the Patriarch of Constantinople and the Pope of Rome, that the Nations by them converted might celebrate all Divine Offices in their natural Language, translated the whole Bible into the Slavonian Tongue, which still they have among them in high esteem. And Cyril is said to have devised the Serbian Character, not used in this Country only, (though here originally) but also in Rascia, Bulgaria, Bosnia, Moldavia, and most parts of Russia: which Character, from this

Cyril, (or Chirill, as they pronounce it) is still called Chirilizze.

The Country was very rich and fruitful before the Conquest of it by the Turks, well stored with Mines of Gold and Silver, especially about Zerbenie, a strong Town hereof. The people are rude and gross, and much given to Wine, false of their Promises, and that upon slight occasions, so that there is but little trust to be laid upon them.

Chief Rivers of this Country, are, 1. Colubra, and 2. Lina, falling into the Savus. 3. Ibar, falling into the 4. Morava; as that into the Danubius at Chrysiacum, or Chrysovetia, a strong Town of the Rascians. Principal Towns hereof, 1. Nisja, the Nessum, as I take it of Ptolemy, by whom it is said to be a City of the Dardanians; now the Metropolis of this Country, and the Key thereof: besieged and taken by Amurat, the third King of the Turks. Anno 1367. 2. Vidina, by the Turks called Kiravon, taken by Ferisbeg, in the beginning of Bajazet the first, and ever since the Seat of a Turkish Sansack under the Beglerbeg of Bassa of Temejar. 3. Cratova, and 4. Zerbenie, rich in Silver Mines; a great temptation to the Turks to invade this Country. 5. Simandria, or Senderovia, by some called Spenderebe, by the Hungarians Zenderin, by the Turks Semender; situate on the Danubius not far from Belgrade, and taken by Amurat the II. Anno 1438. since governed by a Turkish Sansack under the Beglerbeg of Buda. 6. Novograd, in the Borders hereof, fortified with an impregnable Castle. 7. Stoniburg (in Latine Stoniburgadum) the ordinary Seat of the Despots. 8. Prislen, built by Alercaer to be the Birth-place of the Emperor Justinian, most like to be Tamresium a City of the Dardanians, mentioned by Procopius, who maketh it the Birth-place of that Emperor, by whom it was repaired and fortified with four great Towers, thence called Tetracyprus. But others (more probably) make him to be born at Laebida, a Town of Bulgaria, of which more hereafter. 9. Scupi, by Ptolemy called Scupi. And 10. Ulpianum, first built by Trayan, whose forename was Ulpian; afterwards re-edified by the said Justinian, and called Secunda Justiniana, (Justiniana Prima, being in Bulgaria): now a poor Village called Pyrithi, as Lazius, or Czanadre, as Marius Niger is of opinion. 11. Rhetivaria, by Ptolemy, for distinction sake, called Rhetivaria Mysorum, then the chief City of the Masians, of which now no Ruins are remaining. 12. Raveniczen, the Fendensis of Ptolemy, but not else observable.

Besides these Towns and many other of less note which properly belong to this Province of Serbia, the Rascians also hold some Towns on this side of Danubius, the chief whereof is Chrysiacum, or Chrysovetia, an old Town, almost wholly ruined, till repaired and fortified by the Turks. Anno 1449, who marking the convenient situation of it on the Banks of Danubius, near to the Fall or Influx of the River Morava, and how commodiously it stood both to command and to annoy the rest of this Country, and for transporting of their Forces to the other side of that great River, made it their first work to possess themselves of it, and have held it ever since with a very strong Garrison. Such other Towns as the Rascians have on this side of the River, or of less note, are looked on by our Author but as Towns of Serbia, (by the Despots whereof they were long since conquered) where before we had them.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, such as are most considerable in the story of it, were the Bastarnae, the Dardani, and the Masi: the Tricornejii and Picennjii, spoken of by Ptolemy, being either Branches of the Masi, or else an obscure People not worth the looking after. Of these the Dardanians were most ancient, inhabi-inhabiting near Mount Hemus, on the Borders of Macedonia, a barbarous People, and perpetual Enemies of that Crown, most mischievous in their Attempts and Designs against it in the declining state thereof, making great and frequent inroads into that wealthy Country, with the spoils whereof they enriched themselves. Insumuch that Philip the Father of Perseus, finding no other likely means to be rid of that Trouble, negotiated with the Bastarnæ, a strong and hardy Nation that dwelt beyond the Danubius, to abandon their own Dwellings, and come to him with their Wives and Children; promising to assist them in rooting out the Dardaniæ, and give them possession of their Country. But Philip dying as the Bastarnæ were in their March through Thrace, and no care taken by his Son to pursue the Business, they returned all home again, except 30000, which pierced into Dardania, and made their own Fortunes as they could. This practice, as it gave matter of Quarrel to the Romans against the Macedonians; so it occasioned Perseus, the Son of Philip, to make use of these Bastarnæ against the Romans, at whose request 10000 Horse and as many foot passed over the Danow, under the Conduct of Claudius, a King amongst them. But finding that Perseus was too frail-laced to part with Money for their pay, they returned again, foraging the Country as they passed. But whether they passed over that River, or mingled themselves with the rest of their Nation, who upon Philip's invitation had before come over, that I do not find. However, coming by this means acquainted with the sweets of this Country, divers of them came over hither in the following times, incorporating with the Dardaniæ, or bordering near them; insumuch as Tacitus for the most part joins them both together, either as the same, or neighbouring Nations first vanquished and added to the Roman Empire by C. Curio Scribonius, immediately upon the end of the Civil Wars raised by Spartacus and the Fencers, or Gladiatores, the Myrsini, or the Mæsi, being broken at the same time also, Anno U. C. 681. As for the Mæsi, being the last and greatest of these Nations, they were most probably a Colony of the Myrsini of the lesser Asia, anciently called Myrsi, and the Country Myrsia, as those Asians were, and as those Europeans are by the Greek Writers generally, and by Florus and some others amongst the Latines, though after, for distinction sake, Tacitus, Pliny, Virgil, and generally most Latine Authors, give them the name of Mæsi. A fierce and savage People they were held to be, Barbari barbarorum, as my Author calleth them, more barbarous than commonly the Barbarians were: but, for all that, subdued by M. Licinius Crassus in the time of Augustus Cæsar, who overcame them in two Battels, and after vanquished the Bastarnæ, and their King Deldo, whom he killed in fight, the Country being reckoned after that as a Roman Province. It continued in this estate till the Fall of the Eastern Empire, when it was subjected by the Sclavi or Sarmatians of Europe; and in the division of the Spoil fell unto the Sorabi, a Scythian People, contractedly called Sorbi; and at last Serbi, Servii, and the Country Servia. It was reduced again to the Obedience of the Eastern Emperours by Basilius Porphyrogenetus, Anno Ch. 1000, or thereabouts; but more absolutely conquered by John and Manuel Comnenus, two of his Successors: but so as they were suffered to live under their own Princes, whom they called Despots, Homagers to the Empire, and depending on it. Inriched with the Conquest and addition of Rascia, (the certain time whereof I have no where found) they were first set on by the Turks in the time of Lazarus the Despot, from whom Amurath the first took the Town of Nissa, being the chief of all this Country; provoked thereto by the great Forces which the Servian and Bulgarian Despots had raised against him for the Siege of Adrianople. And though Lazarus, terrified with this Loss, made his Peace with Amurath: yet after he brake out again into open War, in which he was evermore slain in the Plains of Cassova, whereof more anon. To Lazarus succeeded Stephen, who quietly enjoyed his Dominions here; the Turks being in the mean time embroiled in War amongst themselves by the Sons of Bajazet. But that difference being once composed, and Mahomet absolutely settled on his Father's Throne, the Turks began again to pursue this Quarrel: which George the Son of Stephen compounded with Amurath the second, Son of Mahomet, paying the Turks a yearly Tribute, and giving him his Daughter Mary for a Wife or Concubine. But this Alliance did not so well unite their Affections, (though George did many ill Offices in regard thereof to his Christian Neighbours) nor so well settle his Estate, but that Amurath in fine dispossessed him first of Rascia, and afterwards of Servia also, for letting Hunades escape, whom he had in his power. And though Amurath was necessitated to restore Servia again, upon the Peace made with Wladislaus the King of Hungary, yet Mahomet the Great, on the death of George, soon possessed himself of it. For Lazarus, the youngest of George's Sons, having deprived Stephen and George's elder Brethren (whose eyes Amurath had before put out, to make them incapable of the Government) of the Principality, compelled them to seek to Mahomet for Aid. But dying whilst these matters were in agitation, his Widow put her self and her three Sons, Peter, John, and Martin, under the Protection of the Hungarians; and by that means, but with much trouble and many difficulties (the blind Brethren still soliciting the Turks against her) held the State a while, till the people, finding no assurance in that kind of Government, and weary of the daily Harms they received from the Turks, yielded themselves absolutely to the Power of Mahomet, about the year 1460, continuing ever since a Province of the Turkish Empire.

6. B U L G A R I A.

B U L G A R I A is bounded on the East with the Euxine Sea, on the West with Servia, on the North with the River Danow, which is here in the East part called Ister, on the South with Thrace, called formerly by the name of Myrsia Inferior, as lying lower than the other on the course of that River; as Servia, lying up the Water, was called Myrsia Superior. Afterwards it was reckoned of as a part of Dacia, and in that notation was the Birth-place of Galerius, one of the Cæsars in the Empire of Diocletian, born in this Country near the Borders of Thrace, not far from the City Sardica; who theretore, in the Martyrologies of the middle Times, was called by the name of Dacianus. Finally, it took this name from the Bulgars, a Scythian People, who in the year 566, possessed themselves of it.

The Country for the most part is full of sharp and rugged Hills, Branches of the great Mountain Hemus, which divide it from Thrace, and spread themselves over all this Province, insumuch that even the Mid-lands of it are rough and stony; and though the lower parts have some Plains and Valleys, yet are they generally full of Woods and Defarts; the most unpleasant and least peopled part of both the Dacia's. The Inhabitants hereof, in some conformity to the Country, are patient of all Toil and Labour, and not easily tired; but nothing is more troublesome than their Conversation: more full of Courage than of Valour, their Courage not proceeding by rules rules of Reason, but issuing only out of Brutishness, or a natural Ferocity.

They first received the Christian Faith towards the latter end of Justinian the 2. who died in the year 713, Trebellian being then their Prince; afterwards by the persuasion of Leo the 4. surnamed Porphyrogenetus, about the year 789. But those Conversers being but partial and for private ends, they relapsed shortly after to their former Gentilism; not totally gained unto the Gospel till the Empire of Michael and Theodora, in the year of Grace 860. Subject since that unto the Jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople; but not without great opposition of the Popes of Rome, who laid a Claim unto them.

Places of most note in it are, 1. Axiom, or Axiopolis, on the Banks of Danubius, which from this Town begins to take the name of Ister. It is now called Colomanichof, of no great fame otherwise. 2. Dinogetia, by Antonine called Dumetia, now Drimago, situate also on the Ister, opposite to the Influx of Hierissus, and the Town of Galatz, 3. Mezimoria, situate on the Encine, and still retaining the old name; in Strabo, by some error of the Transcribers, called Amberia. 4. Marcianopolis, on the Ister or Danubius also, built by Trajan in honour of Marcia his Sister, whence it had the name: in vain besieged by the Goths at their first Irruptions on this Country; and afterwards much mentioned in the Stories of that warlike People, for many Bickerings and some great Battels they had near it with the Emperour Claudius, in one of which they were overthrown by him with a mighty Slaughter. 5. Nicopolis, (by the Turks called Nigebol) built by the same Trajan on the Danow at the Fall of the River farve, at his return from the Conquest of Dacia, whence was the occasion of the Name; the word Nicopolis signifying the City of Victory; sufficiently memorable for the Founder of it, more for the many great Battels fought near unto it, whereof two were principal. The first, that of Siegmund the Emperour and King of Hungary, besieging it with an Army of 130000 Christians in the time of Bajazet the first; whose Father Amurath had taken it from the King of Bulgaria: the issue of which Siege was this, that Bajazet coming to raise the Siege obtained the Victory, with the loss of 60000 Christians; the Army of the Christians being wholly routed, 20000 slain, all the rest made taken Prisoners, and the young Emperour forced to fly by Sea to Thrace, thence unto Constantinople, afterwards to Rhodes, and at last, after 18 months absence, to his Realm of Hungary. The other (as it were in revenge of this) was fought between Michael Vaivod of Valachia, and the Forces of Mahomet the third, over whom the Vaivod got a remarkable Victory, and, as the Fruits thereof, sacked the City it self, carrying thence great Spoil and Booty, and infinite multitudes of People; with some whereof he made up his Army, sending the rest to inhabit and manure the void and desart places of his own Dominions. 6. Sopota, called Tibserim in the time of Ptolemy, repaired by the Emperour Justinian, who gave it this name, in a famous and magnificent Temple founded and dedicated by him unto S. Sophia. The ordinary Residence in these late times of a Turkish Beglerbeg, who hath the chief Command of Europe under the Grand Seigneur. Once taken by Hunades, and by him at the command of Placidius King of Hungary, burnt to the ground; but after a while repaired, and more strongly fortified than it had been formerly. 7. Varna, anciently called Dinopolis, situate on the Encine Sea, near the Borders of Thrace; remarkable for the great Defeat there given the Christians, the first Flight of Hunades from thence of the Turks, and the death of Placidius King of Hungary, spoken of before. 8. Siumium,

9. Percebius, 10. Calacrium, 11. Galatz, & 12. Macropolis, all taken by the Hungarians in their way to Varna, and lost again upon the issue of that Battel. 13. Silistria, at this time the chief City hereof, and the ordinary Abode of a Turkish Bey: delivered to Amurath the first by Salmes, Prince or King of Bulgaria, out of a vain hope to save thereby the rest of his Country. 14. Parasclabos, or Perislabos, the ancient Seat of the Kings of Bulgaria, till the taking of it by John Zimisce Emperour of Constantinople, who caused it to be called Iobannopolis: but it soon lost that new Name, and is now an ordinary Village called Peretelad. 15. Ternova, the usual Seat or Residence of the later Princes of this Country at the Conquest of it by the Turks. 16. Badina, once of great importance, and the chief of this Country; but being taken by Hunades in the course of his Victories, it was by him burnt down to the ground, as having been the cause of much War to the Christians there: supposed to be built in or near the place where once stood the old City of Oescus, the principal Town of the Triballi, called therefore Oescus Triballorum, though some will have that City to be now called Elida. 17. Venzina, a Town of great strength, and one of the first pieces taken by the Turks. 18. Cassova, fatal to the Christians, who in the Plains here had two main Defeats. The first by Amurath the first, who here discomfited Lazarus the Despot of Servia, and the greatest Army that the Christians ever raised against the Turks; Lazarus himself being slain in the Fight, and Amurath himself shortly after the Battel flabbed in the Belly by one Miles Cobelitz, a wounded and head-sear Soldier, as he was taking a view of the dead Bodies which lay there in heaps. The last by Amurath the second to the famous Hunades, whom he here discomfited after a cruel Fight continuing three days together; in which were slain 17000 Christians, and amongst them the greatest part of the Hungarian Nobility; Hunades put again to flight, and forced to some Extremities to preserve his life; he Turkey by this great Victory with the loss of 40000 men, as themselves confessed. The place in which these Fights were fought, called the Plains of Cassova, extendeth 20 miles in length and 5 miles in breadth, incomparable round with pleasant Mountains, in the form of an Amphitheatre; as if it were designed by Nature for a Stage of action. 19. Dorostorum, by some of the Ancients called Roudostol, the Seat in Ptolemy's time of the First Legion called Italica; afterwards one of the chief Towns which the Kosses or Russians had in this Country: from whom it was taken by John Zimisce the Eastern Emperour, decaying after that time by little and little, and now wholly ruinant. 20. Achrida, the Birth place of Justinian, by whom it was beautified and enlarged, and called Justiniana Prima; who, raising the Diocese of Dacia into a Prefecture, placed here a Primate for the Affairs of the Church, which honour it doth still retain; the Bishop hereof being the Primate of all Dacia, and a Profectus Prætor for Affairs of State. But he being dead, the Town returned to its old name, now called Ovrida, contracted by William of Tyre to Acre; by the Turks called Ginsimind: a distinct Principate of it itself in the time of Amurath the first, and by him made tributary at his first War with this Country.

And here it is to be observed, that those parts of this Country which lie next to the Euxine Sea had anciently the name of Pontus, as had also some parts of Asia minor which bordered on the same Sea also; and that the City of Tomis, as Ptolemy, or Tomas, as Pliny call it, to which Ovid was banished by Augustus Cæsar, was a City of this European Pontus, and not of the Asian, as hath been commonly conceived. For Tomi is by Ptolemy placed amongst the Cities of Mæsia in ferior, and by Ovid on the West or left side of the Excuse, and not upon the South thereof, as appeareth by these Lines of his:

Cum Maris Euxini positas ad Leva Tomitas Quæere me læsi Principis ira jubeo.

That is to say;
*My wronged Prince's Wrath commands me 'vide
At Tomos, on the Euxine's Western side.*

The place is at this day called Tomis, according to Cælius Calpurnius: but others would have it to be the same which is now named Novia, in the same Track alway, not far from which is said to be a Lake called to this day Ovidow Jezococor, the Lake of Ovid. For what cause it was hither banished is not yet agreed on. Some say it was for the unlawful Pleasures which he enjoyed with Julia the Emperours Daughter, whom he celebrates in his Amorum under the borrowed name of Corinna. Others imagine that he had seen Augustus himself ungenerally using the company of the same Julia, his Daughter, for which the offended Prince exiled him; and that he alludeth videtur unto in his Book of Tristibus, saying, Quæ aliqd videretur nociva lumen feci? &c. A Crime of which I doubt not that noble Emperour to be in any way guilty. But certain it is, that whatsoever was the true reason of it, that certain it is, that whatsover was the writing of those lascivious and inflammatory Books of Arte amandi, tending to the Debauchment of Youth and Corruption of Manners, which he in divers places of his Works acknowledgeth for the cause thereof.

But to return unto the business of this Country. The ancient Inhabitants hereof were towards the East the Thracians, dwelling near the Mouth or Fall of the River Peneus into the Euxine or Black Sea; the Pæni, inhabiting on the very Mouth of it; and in a little Island opposite thereto, called also Ægeæ, now Pezina, the Cribæi, Pænesi and Dumæsi, the Western parts being wholly taken up by the Triballi, the most potent Nation of them all, who alone had the happiness to vanquish Philip King of the Macedonians. For Philip having, or pretending, a Quarrel against Macedæus a King of the Sarmatians, entered his Country, overthrew him in a few days, carried with him great Booties, and among other things 20000 Mares for Breed, which he took in the Battle; in being the Custom of the Scythians and Sarmatians to use Mares only in their Wars, because their not stopping in the midst of a Race to piss could be no impediment to them in their Flight. In his return homeward these Triballi deny him passage through their Country, unless they might partake of the Spoils. This being denied, they fall from words to blows, and at last to a pitched Field. In which Fight Philip was slain with an Arrow, which, passing through his thigh, nailed him to his Saddle; his Horse being galled with the Wound, falling down to the ground. Which the frighted Macedonians seeing, and supposing him dead, fled out of the Field, leaving all their spoils to the Triballi, as if they had been sent out only to be their Receivers. So true an Observation is it, that the very Life-blood of an Army runs chiefly in their veins of the General or supreme Commander. Overtopped after this by the Mæsi, who mingled with them, they were first broken by the Romans under the Conduct of G. Corio Scriverinus, spoken of before, the absolute Conqueror of them and the rest of the Mæsi being reserved for the times of Augustus Cæsar. By him, or his Successors, the whole Country of the Mæsi being cast into two Provinces, this part of it had the name of Mæsia inferior, that, lying Westward up the Water, being called Mæsia superior, for distinction sake. By the Emperour Archelaus, the Dacians being forced from the other side of the Danow by the Barbarous Nations, or by him prudently removed to avoid their Fury, were planted here betwixt both the Mæsia, divided afterwards into two Provinces taken out of the other, Mædætanica, and Ripensis; which, with the help of the higher Mæsia, Dardania, Prevalitana, and part of Macedonia Salutaris, made up the whole Diocese of Dacia, as before was said. The residue hereof, now passing under the name of Bulgaria, was afterwards divided into two Provinces also; another Province being taken out of the East parts of the lower Mæsia, lying betwixt the River Phanias and the most Northern Branch of the Ister, which they called Scythia, because the Arætes, a Scythian People, did once possess it; the Romans afterwards affecting to be thought the Conquerors of that unconquerable Nation. Successively by the Goths and Huns was this Country taken from the Romans: recovered again in or before the time of Justinian, who had here his Officers which were subordinate to the Vicar or Lieutenant of Thrace, to which Diocese they properly and of right belonged.

But long they held not in that State; the Slavonians first, and after the Bulgarians, being Masters of them. Of the first of these enough hath been said elsewhere. The latter being a Scythian People, inhabiting on the Banks of the River Volga, were at first called Vulgari, afterwards Bulgari: though some conceive they had the name of the Bulgarians from Bulgar, the chief Town of their Nation; but both uncertain. In the time of the Emperour Anastasius they made their first Sally into the Provinces of the Empire, foraging Thyrricus and Thrace; afterward, in the Reign of Heraclius, they were hired by Cisios the Persian (with many other Barbarous Nations) to besiege Constantinople. In the Reign of Constantine surnamed Pogonatus, conquering or calling out the Slaves, they planted themselves in these Countries; compelling the Emperour to compound with them for a sum of money, from making any farther Inroad into his Dominions. From this time forward we find their Princes called by the name of Kings of the Bulgarians: the first of which after their settling in these parts was Trebellius, or Trebellus, as some call him, the fifth Christian Prince of the Bulgarians, by whom Justinian the Second was first restored unto the Empire, of which he had been ousted by Asparius; and afterwards well beaten by them, and forced to fly unto Constantinople, on some Breach between them. Growing into good terms with the Eastern Emperours, they aided them against the Saracens, then besieging the Imperial City; of whom they slew 20000 as they were foraging the Country: and in the time of Leo the fourth, called Porphyrogenetus, they became Homagers to the Emperour, whose perswasion Teleucus King of the Bulgarians received the Sacrament of Baptism; and thereupon was honoured by him with a Wife of the Imperial Family, and the honourable Title of a Patrician. After this time the Kings hereof had many Privileges indulged them by the Constantinopolitans, not usually communicated unto other Princes, viz. their Crown of Gold, their Tiara or Cap of Silk, and their red Shoes, for their Regal (which were also the Imperial) Ornaments. To these Kings also, and to those only, did the Greek Emperours allow the Title of Basileus, as being merely Imperial. Other Kings they called Patriarches from the Latine word Reges. Inasmuch that when Basilius Macedo had received Letters from Pope Adrian the second, wherein Lewis the Second the Western Emperour was called Basileus, he raised out that Imperial Attribute, and dispatched an Embassie to Lewis, wherein he challenged it as his own peculiar Epithet. Some have Quarrelled after falling out, Cyrinus the Bulgarian King, in the time of Nicephorus, Successor to the Emperour Irenæus, invaded Thrace; and, taking the City of Sardica, killed that Emperour in his Tent, and worsted Michael (who

(who succeeded) in the open Field; Mesembria, a principal City of this Country, being taken and ransacked by him. But Bogor, of another temper, not only did receive the Sacrament of Baptism, which many of his Predecessors had intermitted, but brought his Subjects (who rebelled on the Change of Religion, and thereupon were fought with and vanquished by him) to the same Faith also: gratified for that cause by Theodora the Emperess with some large Accession unto his Estate. After long Wars betwixt the Bulgarians and the following Emperours, the Fortune of the Constantinopolitan did at last prevail: Sammel King of the Bulgarians being overthrown, 15000 of his Souldiers taken and deprived of fight, and the Country conquered by Basilius the second, surnamed Porphyrogenetus, Anno 1015, from that time Tributary to the Empire; to which they did good service in the time of Constantinus Ducas, using their Help against the Uzi, a new Swarm of Scythians, passing over the Ister with an Army of 60000 fighting men, and wasting Macedon and Greece. The like did Ighin, another of the Kings thereof, aiding the Greeks against the Laines, whom they overthrew with a great Slaughtre, Baldwin the Emperour of the Laines in Constantinople being taken Prisoner, sent in Bonds to Ternova, and there cruelly murdered, An. 1206. Nor were they wanting to assist them against the Turks, when they grew dangerous to that Empire by the taking of Adrianople: for the Recovery whereof they raised a great and puissant Army, unfortunately discom-fitted by the Forces of Amurat the first, Anno 1369. Provoked with which Invasion, Amurat, having settled his Affairs in Asia, with an Army of 60000 falleth into Bulgaria; takes divers Places of importance, and prevailed so far, that Safmus the last Prince hereof, wrapping his Winding-sheet about him, to shew that he had deserved Death, prostrates himself most abjectly at the Tyrant's feet, offering to put Silifria (his strongest City) into his possession. For net performance of which Offer, his Country again invaded, and most part of it taken from him, he being permitted to enjoy the rest upon hard Conditions, as Vassal and Tributary to the Turk. But Bajazet, Amurat's Successor, not content herewith, picked a Quarrel with him, and made an absolute Conquest of Bulgaria, converting it into a Province of the Turkish Empire, An. 1396. In which state it hath ever since continued, governed by three Turkish Sanzacks under the Beglerbeg of Greece: the Sanzacks residing at Nicopolis, Silifria, and Sophia, in which last the Beglerbeg himself doth sometimes reside.

Mount Hæmus.

Before we enter into Greece, we must cross MOUNT HÆMUS, a Ridge of Hills extending from the Euxine Sea to the Adriatick, and thereby separating Greece both from Dacia and Slavonia. They are so high and Subject to the Weather, that Stratonicus, an old Grecian, did use to say, that eight months of the Year it was always cold, for the other four, Winter. It was affirmed by some of the ancient Writers, that from one of the highest Heads hereof as well the Adriatick as the Euxine might have been discerned: the truth of which report, upon very good reason, hath been called in question. But out of doubt, from some one Top or Summit of it there is so full a Prospect into Thrace and Macedon, that from hence Perseus taking a survey of the Site of these Countries, pessis per abrupta Captris, &c. as the Story hath it, was able to make choice of the fittest places for Forts and Castles, whereby to lock up all the passages against his enemies the Romans. In the parts bordering upon Thrace it is so rough and craggy, that it is not to be passed but at two places only. Whereof one was made by the Emperour Trajan, where is yet to be seen a mighty strong Gate built of great square Stone, by which the Passage that way was either opened or shut at the pleasure of them who had the keeping of the same, with a small Force exceeding easily defended against puissant Armies. The other, being situate near a little River by the Bulgarians called Saltina, not altogether so straight and narrow as the other, but rising high, and full of broken Rocks and dangerous Precipices, is alike impassable; defensible at ease, and without any great danger; as was experimentally found by the famous Hmidaeus, when he attempted (but in vain) to have led his Forces this way for the Siege of Adrianople. Those parts hereof which border upon Macedonia, though somewhat opener, are not much easier of access; the Passages through the broken Rocks and Precipices being very difficult, and not easily mastered: inasmuch that when Perseus, the last King of Macedon, had fortified the Streights hereof against the Romans, non religiosis adiis nisi à Cælo venientibus videbatur, it was conceived (saith Florus) that there was no passage left for any Forces, unless they fell immediately from the Heavens themselves.

This great and rocky Chain of Hills, as they were vehemently exposed to Wind and Weather, so were they destitute of those Commodities which were either comfortable, or indeed merely necessary to the Life of man: which made the Passage over them in a manner impossible unto any Armies, but what were very patient both of Cold and Hunger. Yet were they not left desolate and void of People, especially in these sides hereof which lay next to Greece; but most especially in those parts which bordered or confined on Thrace: where the Spurs and Branches of the Hills spreading far and wide and taking up a great part of the Country, occasioned the Romans, in the Division of the Diocese of Thrace into several Provinces, to call that part or Province of it which lay next to Mæsia by the name of Hæmimontus, or Hæmimontana. The principal Towns whereof were Adrianople, Endana, and Archelais: the principal Governour thereof being a Roman President. Where, by the way, we may take notice of an Error in the common Impressions only, and perhaps not those. It took beginning in the person of Agialus, within 150 years after the Deluge, and 200 years before the death of Noah, continuing in a Race of Princes who swayed the Affairs of Peloponnesus, till overtopped by the growth and good fortune of the Kings of Argos. The names of whom, by reason of the undoubted Antiquity of this Kingdom, I shall here subjoin in the ensuing Catalogue of the last King of Sicyon. After whose death, A.M. 2812, the Estate hereof was governed by the Priests of Apollo, the Estate hereof was after another; the first five, only years apiece, Amphytion, who was the sixth, continuing 9 years in the Regency, and Charidemus, the last of them, ruling 8 years. After whose death, or departure, I know not which, A.M. 2844, the Heracleids, who about that time returned into Peloponnesus, made themselves Masters of this Country; there being no Kings of Sicyon from this time forwards.

Of these Kings the most memorable were Egialus and Apis, the first and fourth, from whom this Peninsula had the names of Apia and Agiala; Egirus, the 6 giving name and being to the City Agira (spoken of before; Marathon, the 13, of whom perhaps the famous Fields of Marathon (in the other Achaia) took denomination; Epopeus, the 17, who founded a Temple to Minerva, and therein placed his own Monument or Trophies, Sicyon, the 19, the Founder of the City Sicyon, or at least the Repairer and Enlarger of it, Pelagus, the 25, from whom perhaps the Gracians might be called Pelagi, (if not known formerly by that name. After this time I find no man of note who here swayed in Sicyon, till the time of Aratus, the special Ornament of this Town, (of which a Native) and one of the principal Establishers of the Achaean Commonwealth against the Spartans and Maccedonians, of which more hereafter in the general History of Peloponnesus.

2. The Country of ELIS hath on the East Arcadia, on the West the Ionian Sea, on the North Acchia propria, on the South Messina. The chief Cities are, 1. Elis, which gives name to the whole Province. So called from Elipha the Son of Jacan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who fix himself in these parts of this Country, where he built this City, calling it by his own name, as his posterity in honour of him did the Isles adjoining mentioned in the Prophet Ezekiel by the City runneth the River Aphis, of which we have spoken in Sicilia; and in this City reigned the King Ancas, the clearing of whose Stable is accounted one of the Wonders of the Lovers performed by Hercules. 2. Olympia, famous for the Statue of Jupiter Olympius, one of the seven Wonders, being in height 60 Cubits, composed by that excellent Workman Phidias of Gold and Ivory. In honour of this Jupiter were the Olympic Games instituted by Hercules, and celebrated on the Plains of this City, A.M. 2575. The Exercises in them were for the most part bodily, as running in Chariots, Running on Foot, Wrestling, Fighting with the Whorlits, and the like. But so that there repaired thither also Orators, Poets, and Musicians, and all that thought themselves excellent in any laudable quality, to make trial of their several Abilities: the very Citizens proclaimed the Victories, contending which should cry loudst, and best play his part. The rewards given to the Victour were only Garlands of Palm, or such slight remembrances; and yet the Greeks no less esteemed that small Sign of conquest and Honour, than the Romans did their most magnificent Triumphant which were Conquerours herein being met by all the principal men in the City in or under which they lived, and a passage broken in the main Walls thereof for their reception; as if the ordinary Gates were not capable of so high an Honour, or able to afford them entrance. Infamuch that when Diogoras had been his three S as crowned for their several Victories, a Friend of his came to him with this Gratulation, More, Diogoras, quoniam enim in Calem glorians es, that is to say, Dye now, Diogoras, for thou that never go to Heaven: as if no greater Happiness could befall the man either in his life or that to come than that which he enjoyed already. The Judges and Presidents of these Games were some of the Citizens of Elis, deputy; highly commended for their Justice and Integrity in pronouncing who best deserved without Partiality. Of these thus Horace in his Odes:

*Sunt quos Curriculo pulvere Olympico
Collegisse prius; Metaque servidus
Evitata Rotis, Palmisque nobilis Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.*

Quos Elax domum reducit Palma caelestis.

That is to say,
Some in Olympick Dust take pride
Their Chariots and themselves to hide;
Whom the thunn'd Mark, and Palm for prize'd,
Like to the Gods hath eterniz'd.

Such as like Heavenly Wights do come With an Eleian Garland home.

But to proceed, after the death of Hercules these Games were discontinued for 430 years: at which time one Iphitus, warned so to do by the Oracle of Apollo, renewed them, causing them to be solemnly exercised every fourth year: from which Custom Olympias is sometimes taken for the space of 4 years; as quingue annorum Olympiades for 20 years Varro reckoneth the time before the Flood to be Obscure, those before the Olympiads, after the Flood, to be Fabulous; but those that followed these Olympiads to be Historical. These Olympiads were of long time, even from the restoration of them by Iphitus unto the Reign of the Emperor Theodosius, the Gracian Epoebe, by which they reckoned their Account: the first of them being paced in the year of the World 3174, before the building of Rome 40 years; the last in the 440, year after Christ's Nativity. According to which reckoning this Account continued for the space of 1214 years; the memory of which remains, though the name of Olympia be not found in Peloponnesus the Town at at this time being called by the name of Scotri. 3. Pisa, whose people followed Nesfor to the Wars of Troy; and in their return were by Tempest driven to the Coasts of Italy, where they built the City Pisa in Tuscany. 4. Tornefe, a new Town, or the new name of some ancient City; from whence the adjoining Promontory, of old called Chelenter, is now called Cabo di Tornefe.

3. MESSENE hath on the East Arcadia, on the North Elis, on the South and West the Sea. It takes its name from the Metropolis Messene, situate on Sinus Messeniacus now called Golfo di Corone. 2. Pylot, where Nesfor was King, now called Navarino, a desolate and poor Village not worth the noting. Of which thus Ovid (speaking in the name of Penelope):

Nai Pylon, antiquis Nectia Notior arvis, Mijunus; incerta est reddita fama Pylot.

To Pylon, aged Nesfor's Seat, we fenc;

But could not hear from thence how matters went.

3. Modon, or Mothone, seated in the most Southern part of this Peninsula, from whence unto the Isthmus which joine it to the rest of Greece are reckoned 175 Italian miles. The Town is commodiously seated in a Demi Island, washed on the one side with the Sea, and so well fortified toward the Land, that in the opinion of most men it is thought impregnable; adorned on the South-side with a large and capacious Bay, about 3 miles wide, secure from all winds except the North, and thus up with a little Island called anciently Oenusa, but now Sapienza, which makes it one of the safest Harbours in all these Seas. It was possessed by the State of Venice, but conquered by the Turks after many sharp and fierce Assaults, Anno 1500, both Alas and Corone yielding on the poise thereof. The best Retreat since that time of the Turkish Navies, and the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Sancaks, who hath the Government of this whole Province of Morea under the Beglerbeg of Greece. 4. Corone or Coron, the chief Town on the Bay of Messene, called from hence Golfo di Corone, and the last which we call against the Turks for the State of Venice, one Lords of all the Sea Coasts of Peloponnesus.

5. Cypris now called Arcadia, from whence the Bay adjoining hath the name of Golfo di Arcadia. Here is also the Promontory called of old Coryphasum, now Cabo Zuchbi. The people of this small Province had once a great sway in the whole Peninsula. At first they were confederate with the Spartans in to fight a League, that they mutually sent young Virgins to one another for their publick Sacrifice: but afterwards Corrivals with them for the supreme power: The Spartans, at the last getting the upper hand of them, oppressed them with a miserable Servitude. The occasion this: In the confines of this Country stood a Temple of Diana, common alike to the Messenians, Spartans, and Dares. It happened that some Spartan Virgins were by the Messenians here ravished: which abuse the Spartans pretended to be the ground of their War; the true reason indeed being their Covetousness of the sole Empire. This War broke out three several times. The first continued twenty years; in which space the Lacedemonians, fearing their Absence would hinder the supply of Children in the City, sent a Company of their ablest young men home to accompany their Wives. Their Oil-pressing were called Purilenti, who, coming to full growth, abandoned Sparta, fled into Lady, and there built Tarentum. The second being of 23 years continuance, was raised and maintained by Antigonos, one of the chief men of the Messenians, in which they prospered till Antigonos, King of Arcadia, one of their Confederates, revolted to side with Lacedemonia. Then began they to decline, and Antigonos was thrice taken Prisoner, still miraculously escaping. His last Imprisonment was in a Dungeon, where by chance espying a Fox devouring a dead body, he caught hold of her Tail. The Fox running away, guided Antigonos after her; till the freightness of the Hole by which he went out made him leave his hold, and fall to scraping with his Nails, which exercise he never left till he had made the Hole passable, and so escaped; and having a while upheld his falling Country, died in Rhodes. The third War was like drops after a Tempest; in which the Messenians being finally subdued, were forced to abandon their Country, or become Slaves unto the Spartans, who put them to all Drudgeries and servile Works; as they did the Helots, whom they counted as their bondmen. And to this little some of them did apply themselves with so much Obsequiousness, that at last it grew into a Proverb, Messenius servitor, that such a one was more servile, or more slavishly used, than these poor Messenians. But the greatest part of them not brooking that heave Yoke, passed into Sicily, and there built the City of Messana. Others were planted in Naxos, &c., by the State of Athens, the rest departed up and down in all parts of Greece: few of them left in their own Country, till Epaminondas having vanquished the Lacedemonians at the Battle of Leuttra, restored them to their ancient Possessions.

4. ARCADIA hath on the East Laconia, on the West Elis and Messene, on the North Acchia propria, and on the South the Sea. This Country took its name from Arca, the Son of Jupiter and Calisto; but was formerly called Pelagida: the people whereof thought themselves more akin to the Moon.

The land which of great Arca took its name
Was e're the Moon, if we will credit Pam.

The chief Cities are, 1. Manitena, nigh unto which the Theban Army, consisting of 30000 Foot and 3000 Horse, routed the Army of the Spartans and Athenians, consisting of 35000 Foot and 2000 Horse. In this Battle Epaminondas, that famous Leader, received his death's wound, and not long after died. At his last Gaspe, one of his Friends (removing his untimely death, Alas, said he, then die, Epaminondas, and leave behind thee no Children. Nay, replied he, two Daughters will I leave behind me, the Victory of Leuttra, and this other at Manitena. It was afterward called Antigonia, in honour of Antigonos, Tutor or Protector of Philip the Father of Persius, King of Macedon; but by command of the Emperor Adrian restored to its old name again, and is now called Manitena. 2. Megalopolis, the Birth-place of Polybius, that excellent Historian. The one half of it had sometimes the name of Orestia, from the lodging of Orestes in it: the whole is now called Leontari, on what cause I know not. 3. Phiala, towards the Sea. 4. Pisphos, so called from Pisphos, one of the Sons of Lycan, one King of this Country, slain by Jupiter. 5. Symphalini, situate near a Lake and River of the same name, where Hercules flew the Symphalini Birds, so great in number and in Body, that they darkened the Sun-beams, and terribly infected this little Province, till driven thence by Hercules. Here was also in this Town a Temple dedicated to Minerva, from hence called Symphalida. 6. Tegea, famous for the Temple of Pan, here worshipped; and from hence called Tegeus: more for the War made upon the Tegeates, or people thereof, by the Lacedemonians; who, thinking themselves assured of Victory, brought with them store of Chains and Fetters wherewith to lead Captive their conquered Enemies; but, being overcome in Battle, were themselves bound with them, and forced as Slaves to till the Grounds of these Tegeates. Here is also in this Country the famous River Sige, whole whose water, for the poisonous taste, was called the water of Hell; by which Poets feign that the Gods use to swear, as may be every where observed; and that what God never swore by Sisy fallily, he was banished from Heaven, and prohibited Nectar for 1000 years.

This Country, for the fictions of it for Pasturage and Grazing, hath made it the subject of many witty and witty Discourses, especially that of Sir Philip Sidney, of whom I cannot but make honorable mention: a Book which besides its excellent Language, rare Contrivances, and delectable Stories, hath in it all the Strains of Poetic, comprehendeth the artificial Art of speaking, and to them which can discern and will observe, affordeth notable Rules for Democritus, both private and publick. Which notable Gentleman, as he may worthily be called the English Heliodorus, so the ingenious Author of the History of Melinus and Ariana may deservedly be called the French Sidney.

LACONIA is bounded on the West with Arcadia, on the East and South with the Sea, on the North with Argolis. Called first Laega, from the Laegae, by Strabo said to be the first Inhabitants of it; afterwards Oebalia, from Oebalus a King of Lacedaemon; and finally Laconia, of the Lacones who succeeded the Laegae in the possession hereof, on their removal into the Islands of the lesser Asia. It is by some Writers also called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities which it once had in it.

The Soil hereof is exceeding rich, and the Fields very spacious; yet for most part not well tilled, in regard of the many Hills and Mountains which overthwart it. Well watered with the River Enrotas, and memorable for many fair Bays and Promontories: of which the principal are the Promontories of Malea, and Tanania, now called Cabo Mallo and Cabo Matapan; and of the Bays, that called Golfo di Colochina, the Sinus Laconicus of the Ancients, into which the River Enrotas (now better known by the name of Pasiphatos, or the Kingly River) pours his gentle Streams. The nature of the People we shall find in Sparta.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Lenitra, situate on the Sea-side, near the Bay of Messine: of which name were two others in Greece, the one in Arcadia, the other in Achaia; but this last most memorable. 2. Amicle, so called from Amycle, the third King of Sparta, by whom it was first founded: renowned afterwards for the Birth of Cassor and Polux, the Sons of Tyndarus; and of good note for being the Foundress of the City of Amicle in Calabria Superior; at first a Colony of this: distant from Lacedaemon about 20 Furlongs. 3. Thionia, high to which is the Lake of Lerna, where Hercules flew the Monster Hydra; and not far off Mount Tanarus, near the Promontory Tanania, in which the Natives had a Cave, (believed in former times to be the Defect into Hell) out of which the Poets feign that Cerberus was dragged by Hercules. 4. Sidassia, where Antigonus vanquished Cleomenes, the last King of Sparta. 5. Epidaurus, (situated on the Bay named Golfo di Napoli) now called Mulvafia: a Town well built, and very well peopled; remarkable for the sweet Wines called Mulvosey or Malsiey, sent from hence into all other parts in great abundance. 6. Sparta, so called from Sparta, the Son or Brother of Phoroneus, the second King of Argos, the Founder of it but afterwards beautified and enlarged by Lacedaemon, the second King of this Country, it took that name also; promiscuously known by both in the best Authors. One of the Eyes of Greece, and a famous Commonwealth; but at first governed by Kings, as most of the Greek Cities in ancient times. Tyndarus, the Father of Cassor and Polux, was or ce King hereof. After whose death, and the death of the said famous Brethren, Menelaus was admitted King of Sparta, or Lacedaemon, in right of Helena his Wife, their Sister. And though Nicollstratus and Megapenthes, Sons of Menelaus by another Venter, succeeded after his decease, yet the Spartans soon rejected them, and received Orestes the Son of Agamemnon to be their King, marrying him to Hermione, the daughter of Menelaus and Helena, and consequently the Niece of Tyndarus. Tisamenus, the Son of Orestes and Hermione, succeeded next; in whose time the Heraclidae, or posterity of Hercules, returned into Greece, under the conduct of Temenus, Crepion, and Aristodemus: Sons of Aristomachus: whereof the first possessed himself by force of Arms of the City Argos, the second of Messene, and the third conquered the City and State of Sparta; which dying very shortly after, he left unto his two Sons, Eurythbenes and Procles, the Rulers of the two Royal Families which jointly and in common governed the affairs of Sparta; first absolutely as Sovereign Princes, without any controul, afterwards at the direction of the Senate, and finally under the Command and Check of those popular Officers whom they called the Ephori. But because these Spartan Kings in each several period were for the most part men of Action, and often mentioned in the Histories of the elder time; I will first make Catalogue of them, and then subjoin such Observations and Remembrances as I think most pertinent.

The Kings of SPARTA of the first Family.

A. M.

1. Enrotas, the first King of Sparta, who gave name to the River Enrotas.
2. Lacedaemon, Brother of Enrotas, from whom the City of Sparta was called Lacedaemon.
3. Amycle, Son of Lacedaemon, the Founder of Amycle, a Laconian City.
4. Argalus Son of Amycle.
5. Cynorta, Son of Argalus.
6. Oebalus Son of Cynorta, from whom a part of this Country had the name of Oebalia.
7. Hippocoon, Son of Oebalus.
- 2700 8. Tyndarus, Brother of Hippocoon, in whose life he was King of Oebalia only.
9. Cassor and Polux, Sons of Tyndarus, famous amongst the Argonauts.
- 2740 10. Menelaus, Son of Atreus, and Brother of Agamemnon Kings of Mycenae, together with Helena his Wife, the Daughter of Tyndarus, whose Rape occasioned the Destruction of Troy.
- 2770 11. Nicollstratus and Megapenthes, Sons of Menelaus by a former Wife.
12. Orestes, Son of Agamemnon, and Hermione his Wife, Daughter of Helena and Menelaus.
13. Tisamenus, Son of Orestes and Hermione, who, being outed of Sparta by the Heraclidae, resided in Achaia, and left his Posterity.

Eurydamidas, the Son of Agis the third, substituted his Brother Epicles in his place. But being himself shortly after vanquished by Antigonus of Macedonia, and forced to fly his Country with his Wife and Children, the Government of the Heraclidae ended, after it had continued here for the space of 900 years, or thereabouts.

Under these Kings the Government at first was Monarchical, as Plinckart termeth it, sufficiently Monarchical it were not more. Under Ennomus, the Reins of Government fell loose, began to mutiny and grow too headstrong. To bridle whom, and to restrain the Kings with firm, (should they prove exorbitant) Lycurgus, the Proctor of Charilaus, the sixth King of that House, did ordain the Senate, committing to them the supreme Power in matters Civil and leaving to the Kings the ordering all Military and Sacred business. To curb the Insolencies of this Senate, who quickly found their own strength, Therompeus, the eighth King of that House, with the consent of Eurydamidas, the tenth King of the other, instituted a new Magistracy chosen out of the Common People, whom they called the Ephori; which grew in time to such an height of Pride and Tyranny, as not only to controul the Senators, but to confine, fine, imprison, depose, and mutually to kill their Kings, as the spirit of Sedition moved them. So that the State of Lacedaemon was at first a Monarchy under Kings, then an Aristocracy under the command of the Senate, next a Democracy under the Ephori, and finally, by those popular Officers made to plain a Tyranny, that Aristotle and Plato, two great Common-wealths-men, who died before they had embred their hands in the blood of their Kings, call it in plain terms tyrannical. &c. & tyrannical a most absolute Tyranny. What think you these men would have called it, had they lived to see Leonidas the third deposed, and Agis the third of that name also most barbarously murdered by these popular Villains?

But being the Foundation of this Commonwealth was first laid, and the good Laws and Politick Constitutions by which it did so long subsist in great Power and Splendour established, by the Wit and Power of Lycurgus, as before was said; we are to know concerning him, that he was the Son of Ennomus, the fourth King of the second House, slain in a popular Tumult by the Common people. Who, finding by this Essay, that the People were become too head strong for the Kings to govern, unless reduced to extreme Bondage by their Kings, which he wished not neither, took the advantage of the Minority of Charilaus to new mould the Government; and what he could not do by fair means, to effect by Arms; forcing this Charilaus, through his Nephew, when he came to age, to flee for Sanctuary to the Temple of Juno. Having ordained what Laws he pleased, and settled such a Form of Government as himself well fancied, the better to decline the Envy of so great a Change, he got leave to travel, binding the people by an Oath to observe all his Laws until his return; and, being gone, commanded at his death, that his Ashes should be cast into the Sea, lest, being carried back to Sparta, the people might conceive themselves released from their Oath. By means whereof his Laws continued in force near 700 years, during which time that Commonwealth did flourish in all Prosperity. The particulars of which Institutions he left to us to see may find them specified at large by Plutarch in the Life of Lycurgus. Suffice it that the Discipline was so sharp and strict, that many went into the Wars for no other reason than on a hope to rid themselves from so hard a life; and that Dioegenis, returning hence to the City of Athens, gave out that he returned from Men to Women, in the ἄνδρες γυναικῶν; and being asked in what part of Greece he had met with the completest men, made answer that he could no where meet with Men, but that he had found some Boys amongst the Spartans. A cynical and rugged Answer, but such as carried a great deal of Judgment in it; the Spartans being more stout and resolute in all their Actions, and less delicate in their Lives, than the rest of the Grecians. But besides the strictness of the Discipline under which they lived, there was another thing which made them with for Wars abroad, namely, the little or no power which either the Kings or People had in Civil matters, or Affairs of State, entirely left to the disposing of the Senate and the Power of the Ephori. So that the Kings, having by the Laws the Command of their Armies, were willing to engage in War upon all occasions, and the Common people as desirous to attend them in such Employments as the Kings could wish. Upon these grounds War was made a Trade amongst them; beginning with the Helots, a neighbouring People, then with the rest of the Lacodians, afterwards quarrelling the Messians, their old Confederates: all which they severally subdued, and made subject to them. In the War which Xerxes made against the City of Athens, their King Leonidas the first, of the elder House, went forth to aid them; slain at the Straights of Thermopylae, courageously fighting for the Liberty of Greece: to which it was thought fit to set upon the Perseus Fleet, Eurybiades the Spartan Admiral did command in chief. In pursuit of this War against the Persians, Pausanias and and Argilians were of most renown: the first in helping the Athenians to drive them out of Greece; the other in making War upon them in their own Dominions. Freed from the Perjans, they grow jealous of the State of Athens, whom they locked on as their Rivals in point of Sovereignty and Glory. Hence the long War betwixt these Cities, called Belium Peloponnesiacum, managed for the most part in Peloponnesus, from whence transferred into Sicily, and at last ended in the taking of Athens: the Government whereof they changed into an Aristocracy under thirty Magistrates of their own appointment, commonly called the Thirty Tyrants. Proud of this fortunate Success, their next Quarrel was with the Boeotians, the conquered Athenians covertly, and the Perjans openly, assisting the Enemy. Here their Prudence began to leave them. For, besides many small Defeats, Epaminondas the Theban so discomfited them at the Overthrow of Leuttra and Manitinea, that Sparta it fell was in danger of utter Ruine. Not long after happened the Holy War, chiefly undertaken against the Phocians, wherein also they made a party: but this War being ended by King Philip, they scarce breathed more Freedom than he gave air to. But when Alexander's Captains fought for the Empire of their Matter, all these flourishing Republics were either totally swallowed into, or much defaced by the Kingdom of Macedon. The Lacedaemonians held the chief Strength of a Town to confil in the Valour of the people; and therefore would never suffer Sparta to be walked, till the times immediately following the death of Alexander the Great: yet could not those Fortifications then defend them from Antigonus Dofon, King of Sparta, entered the Town, and was the first man that ever was received into as Conqueror. So much different were the present Spartans from the Valour and Courage of their Ancestors. Cleomenes being forced to forsake his Country, and the Race of the Heracleidae falling in him, they became a Prey to Machanidas and Nabis, two wicked Tyrants, from whom they were no sooner freed, than they were made subject (in a manner) to the Power of Rome: and in the end the Town was so weak and inconsiderable, that it was not able to resist the poorest enemy; now a small Burrough called Misthiora. And so I leave them to the thoughts of their former Glories, having now nothing else to boast of but the fame and memory of their Actions in former times.

6. ARGOLIS, so called from the chief City Argos, is bounded on the South with Laconia, on the West with Corinthia and Achaia Propria, on the East and North with the Sea. A Territory remarkable for a most excellent breed of Horses, and from thence called Hippium.

Places of most importance in it are, 1. Argos, founded by Argus, the fourth King of this Country; the chief of this Kingdom. Memorable as for other things, so 1. for the Death of Pyrrhus King of Epirus who, having forced his Entry into it, was here ignobly slain, after all his Victories, by the hands of an old Woman, throwing a Tile at him from the top of an House: 2. for the long Race of the Kings hereof, from Inachus the contemporary of our Father Abraham. Anno 2003, unto Acridas their last King: whose Daughter Dione, being shut up in a Tower of Brass, was deflowered by Jupiter, to whom she bare the renowned Perseus, so memorized in ancient Poets. But Perseus, having by misfortune slain his Grandfather, the old King Acridas quitted the City of Argos, as unlucky to him, and transferred the Kingdom to Mycenae, a City of his own Foundation, and so better fancied, which was by means hereof the second City of esteem in this little Province, growing in small time unto so great Riches, that it got the name of dies Mycenae, as appeareth by Horace, in whom the Horses of Argos and the Wealth of Mycenae are placed in one Verse together:

For Horses Argos is of fame, For Wealth Mycenae hath the name.

3. Trezen, situate on the Saints Saronicus (now called Golfo di Engia) the Royal Seat of Pitheus, the Grandfather of Trezen by the Mothers side, who was born herefrom whence the Town in Ovid hath sometime the name of Pitheia Trezen, and Trezen many times is called Trezenis Heros; as Hercules had the name of Trezenis Heros from 4. Tyrinthia, another City of this Province, in which he was murdered. 5. Nemea, where Hercules slew the dreadful Lion which annointed this Country. In honour of which noble Act were instituted in time following the Nemean Games, which continued of great fame in Greece for many Ages. The Exercises were, Running with swift Horses, Whorlbat, Running for foot, Quoting, Wrestling, Darting, Shooting. Some have referred the Original of these Games to one Ophelet, a Lacedaemonian, in whose Honour they conceived them instituted, and others fetch it higher, from the War of Troies, but this I take to be the more allowable Opinion. 6. Epidauros, on the Sea-side, famous for the Temple of Aesculapius, and the Cure of all sorts of diseases there, located from Epidauros, the Son of Argus, the Founder of it. Of the same name, but of a different situation, from that before mentioned in Laconia; that being, seated on the Bay called Golfo di Napoli, that on the Engia. One called Melissa and Amerga, that at time an Island, by an Earthquake laid unto the Continent, now called Pegida. 7. Nauplia, so called of Nauplius King of Enolaga and Father of Palamedes, to whom it is anciently believed. A Station then, as now, for Shipping; in that regard called Nauplia Navale, now Napoli, on Napoli is a small and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Napoli, into which the famous River Inachus, having passed through the City of Argos, doth discharge itself, so called from Inachus the Father of Io, and the Original and Progenitor of

The Kings of ARGOS and MYCENAE.

A.M.

- 2093 1. Inachus, the supposed Father of Io, from whom the Gracians are sometimes called by the name of Inachi.
- 2143 2. Phoroneus, the Son of Inachus and Melissa, from whom the said Io hath the name of Phoroneus in the Poet.
- 2223 3. Apis, the Son of Jupiter and Niothe the Daughter of Phoroneus, who, leaving Greece, went into Aegypt, where he taught the people Tillage, and was there worshipped afterwards in the form of an Ox.
- 2258 4. Argus the Son of Apis, and the Founder of Argos; in whose time Agriculture was taken up amongst the Gracians, from him called Argoi.
- 2308 5. Crataus, by some Peiratus, the Son of Argus.
- 2363 6. Phorbas, the Son of Crataus; in whose time Atlas and Prometheus are said to flourish.
- 2397 7. Triopas, the Son of Phorbas, and the Brother of another Phorbas, who planted himself in the Isle of Rhodes.
- 2442 8. Crotopus.
- 2464 9. Sthenelus, outed of the Kingdom by
- 2475 10. Danaus, the Brother of Aegyptus; by whom being driven out of Aegypt, he was made King

King of Argos by consent of the people: the Father of those many Daughters got with child by Hercules. From him the Gracians are called often by the name of Danai.

- 2525 11. Lyncus, Son of Aegyptus, the Brother of Danaus.
- 2536 12. Abas, the Son of Lyncus and Hypermetra, the Daughter of Danaus.
- 2566 13. Pratus, the Son of Abas.
- 2604 14. Acridas, the Brother of Pratus, and the Father of Danaus; who being foretold by the Oracle that he should be slain by a Son of that Daughter, thus her up in a Brazen Tower. But Jupiter, having corrupted the Guards with Gold, got the Ladie's consent, by whom he had Perseus, so renowned amongst the Poets and Historians of those elder times.
- 2637 15. Perseus, the Son of Jupiter and Danaus, exposed by his Grandfather to the Seas, miraculously preserved, and grown into great fame by his brave Exploits. He restored Acridas to his Throne from which he had been deposed by his Brother Pratus. But after having ignorantly and unfortunately slain the said Acridas, he removed his Seat unto Mycenae, where he reigned together with his Son Sthenelus.
- 2645 16. Eurythene, the Son of Sthenelus, much spoken of for the difficult Tasks which, at the instigation of Juno, he imposed on Hercules his Foster-child, and the supposed Son of Amphitryon his Cousin-german.
- 2688 17. Atrous and Typhes, Sons of Pelops, on the falling of the Line of Perseus, succeeded in Argos and Mycenae, infamous for their Murders and Adultery; Typhes abusing the Bed of Atrous, and Atrous casting him with the Body of his own Son, whence Θυρεν, Θύρα in the Proverb.
- 2753 18. Agamemnon, the Son of Atrous, Commander of the Greeks at the War of Trois, in which action there engaged 69 Kings of the Gracians, waisted over with a Navy of 1224 Ships; killed at his coming home by Agisthus, his Cousin german.
- 2768 19. Agisthus, the Son of Typhes, having defiled Clytemnestra the Wife of Agamemnon in the time of his absence, by her procurement murdered him at his coming home, and usurped the Kingdom.
- 2775 20. Orestes, Son of Agamemnon, revenged his Father's death on Agisthus and Clytemnestra his own Mother. After which falling mad, and restored again unto his Wits, he married Hermione, Daughter of Menelaus and Helena, by whom he had the Kingdom of Sparta also.
- 2803 21. Penibulus, the Son of Orestes, and the last King of this Line, outed of his Estate by the Dares and Heracleidae, who made themselves Masters of all Peloponnesus, which they possessed until the Conquest of it by the Macedonians.

7. CORINTHIA is a little Region, lying towards the Isthmus or Neck of Land which joineth Peloponnesus to the rest of Greece, betwixt Argolis and Achaia Propria. It containeth only the Territory of the City of Corinth, not large, nor very fruitful of those Commodities which the rest of this Peninsula doth abound with;

as being mountainous and hilly, and, by reason of the nearness of the Sea, full of craggy Rocks. The indeed the only Cities of note in it are, 1. Cenchrea, the naval Road or Station of Ships for Corinth, mentioned Acts 18. 18. and Rom. 16. 1. in both Texts reckoned a distinct Town from Corinth, as indeed it was: situate on that Bay which openeth into the Aegean Sea, called anciently Sinus Saronicus, now Golfo di Engia; and consequently opposite to 2. Lechaum, the other Naval Road for Corinth, situate on the Western Bay, called of old Sinus Corinthiacus, now the Gulf of Lepanto. 3. Corinth it self, commodiously situate for the Command of all Greece, (had not the Inhabitants been more given to Merchandise than unto the Ways) as being seated on the bottom of the Neck or Isthmus, the Ionian Sea upon the West, and the Aegean on the East, washing the Walls thereof, and giving it on each side a Capacious Haven; in which regard it is called by Horace bimaris Corinthus. It is in compass about Eleven miles, for Strength impregnable, for Command as powerful, Mastering both Seas on which it stood, and cutting off all passage from one half of Greece to the other: to which last end the Cattle called Acercorinthus, looking into both Seas, served exceeding fitly; and was therefore called one of the Fetters of Greece. The City is rich, very well Traded, and neatly built, most Houses beautified with handfom Pillars, from then called Corinthians: more memorable for the Wealth of the People, and the convenience of the Situation, than for any notable Exploits performed by them, or any great Influence which they had on the States of Greece. But in regard of the Wealth, Greatness, and Situation, accounted by the Romans one of the three Cities which they held capable of the Empire; Carthage and Capua being the other two. In this City lived the famous (or infamous) Whore Thais, who exacted 10000 Drachmas for a single night's Lodging: which made Demeitrius cry out, Non emam tanti pœnitere, and occasioned the old By-word,

'Tis not for every man's avail

Unto Corinth for to Sail.

Near hereunto stood the Acercorinthian Mountains, at the foot whereof the City, and on the top whereof the Castle called hence Acercorinthus, were seated: out of which flowed the famous Fountain named Pyrene, of old consecrated to the Mules; by Perseus called Fons Caballinus, because seized by the ancient Poets to have been made by the Horie Pegasus dashing his foot against the Rock. And on the other side hereof in the Isthmus were celebrated yearly the Isthmian Games; ordered by Trezen in honour of Neptune, in imitation of the Olympic devised by Hercules in honour of Jupiter. The Exercises were much the same, and the reward no other than a Garland of Oaken Boughs: yet they drew yearly a great resort of people to them, partly to exercise themselves and behold the Sports; and partly to sacrifice to Neptune, who had hard by a famous Temple.

As for the Fortunes of this City, it was at first called Ephyra, at that time a small and obscure place; but beautified and repaired by Corinthus, the Son of Pelops; it took the name of Corinth; governed by him and his posterity, till the coming of the Heracleidae into Peloponnesus, at what time one Aletes of the Race of Hercules possessed himself hereof, with the name of King, A.M. 2849. Twelve Princes of his Line enjoyed it for the space of 220 years and upwards: when the House failing in the person of Automedes, they were governed by temporary Officers, like the Archontes of Athens. Continuing under this Government 124 years, the City was seized upon by one Cypselus, A.M. 3294, who left it to his Son Periander, one of the Seven wise men of Greece, counted a Tyrant in the those times, for no other reason than that he had suppressed the Popular Government. After whose death, Anno 3364, the City did recover its former Liberty. In the Battle betwixt Athens and Lacedæmon, and other the Estates of Greece, for the Superiority, he did little meddle; the aim of this people being Wealth, not Honour; nor interested in any Action or renown in all those times, but the sending of Timoleon to the aid of the Syracusans against the Tyrant Dionysius, who did Lord it over them. It was subdued, together with the rest, by the Kings of Macedon; and with the rest restored to Liberty by the power of Rome: under whom growing still more rich, and withal more insolent, they abused certain Roman Embassadors. But irasci populo Romano nemo sapienter potest, as is said in Lucius, which the Corinthians found too true; the City being besieged, sacked, and burnt unto the Ground by Lucius Mummius, a Roman Consul, Anno U. C. 670. In the burning whereof there were consumed so many goodly Statues of Gold, Silver, Brass, and other Metals, that, being melted into a lump, they made up by that fatal chance the so much estimated Metal called Æscorinium, more highly prized in Rome than Gold or Silver. Repaired again, it was of great esteem in the time of the Emperours, converted by St. Paul to the Christian Faith; and having flourished a long time in Pride and Pleasures, decayed by little and little, till it came to nothing, and is now a small Barren hill called Craio.

Having thus spoken of the several Estates of Peloponnesus, it resteth that we speak somewhat of the Estates of the whole, partly according to the Fortunes of those particular, which had most Influence on the same. The Affairs hereof were a long while swayed by the Kings of Sicyon, whence it had the name of Sicyonia, restrained afterwards to the Territories of that City only. But when the Kings of Argos came in place and power, it depended much upon their pleasures; from Apis the third King whereof, (if not rather from Apis the fourth King Sicyon) in the opinion of some Writers, it was named Apis. But Pelops the Son of Tantalus King of Phrygia, coming into Greece, and marrying Hippodamia, Daughter of Oenomaus King of Elis, became the most powerful Prince of all this Penninsula, taking from him the name of Peloponnesus. The Kingdom of Mycene, growing into Power and Credit, had the next turn in swaying the Affairs hereof for a certain season; as after that the Dores and Heracleids, possessed at once of Argos, Sparta, Corinth, and Melfene. The Spartans, getting the Preeminence over all the rest, were the next who governed the Affairs of it, and they held it long, having first conquered Laconia, and subverted the Estate of Melfene; by means whereof, and by their fortunate Success against the Perjans, they became almost absolute in their Commands, without any Competitor. But their Power being broken by Pelopidas and Epaminondas in the Theban War, the petty States hereof began to take heart again, and stand upon their own Legs; as they did awhile, till the Kings of Macedon succeeding Alexander the Great brought them once more under, and made them Fellow-servants with their Spartan Masters. In the Confusions which ensued in Macedon amongst the Competitors for that Kingdom, Pavia and Dyme, two Cities of Achaia propria, first united them in a strong League of Amity, at such time as Phylarchus first went into Italy: into which Confederacy the Cities of Tritæa and Phæra shortly after came, and not long after that of Ægira, and the rest of Achaia propria. Their Affairs were first governed by two Prætors with Advice of the Senate, as afterwards by one alone with the like Advice; of which Marcus Ciceronis was the first, and Aratus of Sicyonia the second. The ground thus laid, and the reputation of this new Commonwealth increasing by the Vertue of Aratus, the Epidaurians, Træzians, Argives and Megarians became Members of it, maintaining gallantly the Liberties of Peloponnesus, till finally mastered by the Romans. In the Division of the whole Empire it fell, with all the rest of Greece to those Emperors, and in the declining of their Fortunes, when the Latins got possession of the Imperial City, most of the Sea-Coasts of it were allotted to the State of Venice; the Inland parts formerly parcelled out amongst many Princes whom they called Despots, continuing as before they were. By Ladab, a Daughter of one of these Despots, (and as it seems the chief amongst them) married to Ferdinand, Son of James the first, and Father of James the second King of Majorca, the Title of Prince of Majorca came into that House, used by them and the rest of these Pitt Princes, till all together were made a Prey to the Turkish Tyrants Mahomet the Great, and Bajazet the second, by whom they were wholly conquered. For howsoever Thomas Comnenus Palæologus, had held hither after the taking of Constantinople, and were received and obeyed by those petty Princes: yet being unable to hold out against the Conqueror, they became his Tributaries, but their falling out amongst themselves, and neglecting then to send in the Tribute agreed upon, gave Mahomet the second occasion to invade the Country, and under colour of aiding one Brother against the other, to destroy them both, as he did accordingly: Demetrius being carried Prisoner to Constantinople, and Thomas forced to abandon Peloponnesus, and fly to Italy, Ann. 1457. Such Tumults as he belonged to the State of Venice followed the same Fortune also in the time of Bajazet, by whom they were all taken at the last, and the whole Country brought under his obedience, Anno 1500, or thereabouts. Governed ever since that time by a Turkish Sanc, under the name of herbeg of Greece, who hath his Residence at Modon, a Regiment of 1000 Horse to secure the Country, and 70000 Alpers (that is to say, 140000 Crowns) a year for his entertainment.

2. ACHÆIA.

ACHÆIA is bounded on the East with the Ægean Sea, on the West with Epirus, on the North with Thessaly, on the South with Peloponnesus and the Sea thereof. Called anciently Hellas from Helle the Son of Dædalus; but whence it had the name of Achaia, is not yet agreed on: though fire I am that from hence the Inhabitants of it were called Achæi, a name communicated afterwards to all the Græcians to difference them from the Achai of Achaia propria.

The Country is famous in the Authors of the elder times, more for the Gallantry of the Men, than any great goodness of the Soil and place: yet that is sufficiently memorable for the Hill Hymetus, furnishing with Bees, plentiful of the sweetest Honey, and rich in Mines of excellent Marble; as also for the River Cephissus, which runneth almost through the whole length hereof; divided into two main Streams of which the one is called Asopus, the other retaineth its first name. Upon the Banks thereof stood the Temple of Themis, to which Dædalus did repair to be directed in the Restauration of Mankind, as the Poets Fable.

It was divided anciently into these seven Parts; viz. 1. Attica, 2. Megaris, 3. Bœotia, 4. Phocis, 5. Læris, 6. Doris, and 7. Ætolia. A Division now as much divided as the name of Achaia, changed by the Turks into that of Lebadia, of which more anon.

1. ATTICA hath on the West Megaris and some part

Part of Bœotia, on all other parts compassed with the Sea: so called from Athens, the chief City. The Soil for the most part is very barren and craggy; yet by the Arms and Industry of the People made both rich and famous; inasmuch as the yearly Revenues of this Country were 1200 Talents. The Money current in this Country was commonly stamped with an Ox, whence came the By-word Bos in lingua, applied to such Lawyers as the By-word to which was the Proverb rising from the Coin of Ægina (an Isle adjoining) stamped with the figure of a Snail, viz. Virtutibus & Sapientiam vincunt Teledines.

Places of most observation in it were, 1. Phyla, a strong Fort on the Borders of Bœotia, surprised by Tharabulus and others of the banished Athenians, during the Government of the thirty Tyrants: the taking whereof was the first step towards their own and their Country's Liberty which soon after followed. 2. Elenfus, on the Borders of Megaris, almost impregnable fortified by the thirty Tyrants when they had the command of Athens, by whom it was designed for their Retreat in all times of Danger. But having withdrawn thither on the taking of Phyla and Piræus by the Thessalians, they found strong Walls and a weak defence for so much Wickedness, being trained out as to a Parly, and so deprived of the Place and their Power together. It was first built by one Elenfus, who entertained Ceres as she was in Quest of her Daughter Proserpine; who, to reward him, taught him the use of Agriculture; and he in honour of her built here a Temple. Hence Ceres in the Poets is called Elenfus, and her Sacrifices Sacra Elenfus; and sometimes the City also Cerealis Elenfus, so called by Ovid in the seventh Book of his Metamorphosis. 3. Rhamnus, upon the River Asopus, famous for the Temple of Amphiarus, and the Statue of the Goddess Nemesis, hence called Rhemusula in the Poets: this Nemesis, or Rhemusula, being the Goddess of Indignation, punished those who made themselves unworthy of their present Fortunes. 4. Tricoronum, of more Antiquity than fame. 5. Marathon, on the South-side of the River Asopus, opposite to Rhamnus; of great note for the Discomfure given by Miltiades the Athenian to the numerous Army of Darius, consisting of 200000 and 100000 Horse: the Emulation of which noble Victory flamed forth brave Resolves in the breast of Themistocles. As memorable in the Poets of those elder times for the Marathonian Bull there slain by Theseus. Mopissia, the ordinary Dwelling-place of Theseus, before he reached his Seat at Athens. It being at this Town that he rescued Helen (whom he had before stolen from her own Country) to her two Brethren Castor and Pollux; of which bold Rape and Restitution we find mention in Ovid, the one in the Epistle of Oenone to Paris, the other presently Rudis Mopissia Tyndaris arbo Soror, that is to say, that she was delivered to her two Brethren (who had taken much pains in seeking for her) in the Town of Mopissia. 7. Piræus, the Port town to Athens, and the ordinary Station for their Shipping, the Haven hereof being capable of 400 Sail; distant from the City about two miles, but joined unto it by two long Walls reaching from the one to the other, for securing the conveyance of their Merchandise to and from the Sea. The Port it self was impregnable fortified by the Advice of Themistocles. But as the long Walls were broken down by the command of the Spartans, when the City of Athens was taken by them, so were the Fortifications of Piræus it self demolished by the command of Sylla, in his War against Archelaus King of Pontus, the better to keep under the Athenians. 8. Pæoneus, a Sea-town also, and of very good Trade, but not of such importance as the other was. 9. Athens, one of the Eyes of Greece, and the chief of Æfrica, situate from the Sea two miles, as before was said; the Haven of Piræus serving it with all Commodities which come from other parts by shipping. First built by Cecrops the first King of it, by whom it was called Cecropia, A.M. 2409; repaired afterwards by Theseus, and furnished with good Laws by Salon; and finally thus named from Misæra, (whom the Greeks called Athene) to whom they dedicated, and in whose Honour there were yearly kept some solemn Games, called Panathenæa. A City heretofore adorned with all these excellencies of Strength and Beauty which Art or Cost could add unto it. Renowned, as for many things, so for three especially: 1. For the inviolable Faith of the Citizens in all their Leagues, and most firm Affection to their Friends: so that Fides Æfrica grew in the end unto an Adage. 2. For the famous Scholars which here taught and flourished; so being so happy a Nursery of the choicest Wit, and so fitly seated for the Muses, that the very Natives, being in other Countries, could sensibly perceive some want of that natural Vigour which at home was refrant in their spirits. Trius corpora sibi Genis separata sint in alias Regiones, Ingenia vero solis Athenienium muris clausa esse testantur, ac Pelionis hathi. It, yea, and to say the truth, it was a most famous University, from whose great Gift the Conduct-pipes of Learning were delivered over all the World. Yet did not Learning so effeminate or soften the hearts of the people, but that 3. This one City yielded more famous Captains than any in the World besides, not excepting Rome; Miltiades, Archides, Themistocles, Cimon, Pericles, Alcibiades, Phocion, and divers others of great name. Who though they were the men that both defended and enlarged this Commonwealth, yet were the people so ungrateful to them, or they so unfortunate in the end, that they either died abroad in Banishment, or by some violent death at home. Themistocles, the Champion of Greece, died an Exile in Peris, Phocion was slain by the people, Demosthenes made himself away by Poison, Pericles was many times endangered, Theseus their Founder first deposed, and then desperately imprisoned, Archides, Alcibiades, Nicias, &c. banished for ten years by the Ostracism; a form of Punishment, so called, because the name of the party banished was written on an Oyster-shell; and only used towards such who either began to grow too popular, or potent among the men of service. Which Device, allowable in a Democracy, where the over-much powerableness of one might hazard the Liberty of all, was exercised in spite of other than for desert. A Country-fellow meeting by chance with Archides, desired him to write Archides in his shell: and being asked whether the man whose Banishment he desired had ever wronged him? he replied, No, he was only sorry to hear folk call him a good man. We find the like unfortunate end to most of the Romans fo redubbed in War. Coriolanus was exiled, Camillus confined to Ardea, Scipio murdered, with divers others; only because their Vertue had lifted them above the pitch of ordinary men. Ventidius was disgraced by Antony, Agrippa poisoned, with the privacy of Domitian, Caracalla murdered by the command of Nero: all able men, yet living in an Age wherein it was not lawful to be valiant. In latter times it happened to Gonstato the great Captain, who having conquered the Kingdom of Naples, driven the French beyond the Mountains, and brought all the Italian Potentates to stand at the Spartans devotion, was by his Master called home, where he lived obscurely, though honoured after his decease with a solemn Funeral. Worse fared the Gustaf and Biron in France; worse Effex, and Du Rely of Northumberland, with us in England. Neither the Greeks were valiantly defended by Leonidas King of Sparta with no more than 300 of his men, who, having valiantly resisted that Army which in his passage out of Perfa had drank Rivers dry, and slain at least 30000 of them, died every man upon the place. To hide the greatness of which Loss, left it should terrify the rest of his Army which were coming on, Xerxes commanded all the slain men to be buried in several Pits, except a thousand; as if no more than they had been lost in that passage.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Theſſia, on a River of the same name, at the Fall where into the Bay it is pleasantly seated; shadowed on the North with a Branch of the Mountain Helicon, and consecrated, as that was, unto the Muses, hence called Teſpiades in the Poets. 2. Platee; nigh to which Mardonius, General to the Persians, was overcome by the Greeks, with the loss of Maronius himself and 160000 men on the Persian side; and on the other no more than 313 Spartans, 16 Aradians, 52 Athenians, and about 600 of the Megarenses. In memory of which brave exploit, and to preserve the names and honour of those Worthies who there laid down their Lives for the Liberty of Greece, there was a Festival kept annually by the Plateans in the month of September, with solemn Sacrifices, and a kind of divine acknowledgment unto the deceased, continued from the time of Arifides the Athenian, who first ordained them, to the days of Plutarch, who records it; but how long after I am not able to say. In this great Fight the commander in chief was a noble Spartan, called Pausanias, who, afterwards having a Design to make himself Sovereign of all Greece, and being discovered in the Practice, fled for Sanctuary to the Temple of Pallas. From whence because it was counted Sacrilege to constrain him by violence, it was unanimously resolved to wall up the Entrances his own Mother laying the first stone. It is recorded that before the fighting of this Battle, the Albani had been told by the Oracle that they should be Conquerors; if they fought upon their own ground: whereupon the Plateans, within whose Territories the Persians had prepared to fight, bestowed that Field on the State of Athens. In requital of which noble act, Alexander the Great re-edified and enlarged their City, having been first burnt and sacked by the Persians, and after levelled with the ground by the Lacedaemonians, because confederate with Athens in the War against them. 3. Leuttra, remarkable for the great Overthrow which the Thebans, upon the Conduct of Epaminondas, gave unto the Spartans and their King Cleombrotus, who was there slain: by which Victory they did not only preserve their own Liberty, but brought their Enemies to that fall of Courage and Reputation, that they could never rise again: the divine Vengeance overtaking them in that very place where some of their Nation had deflowered the Daughters of Scadaeus, who had given them courteous Entertainment. For which when no Reparation could be had from the State of Sparta, the unfortunate Damocles flew themselves, to avoid the infamy of consenting to their own Dishonour, and were buried in those very Fields where this Battle was fought. 4. Ascræa, the Birth-place of Hefiod, a man (according to Paterculus) elegantis ingenii, & carminum dulcedine memorabilis: though it hath pleased that proud Critick, Julius Scaliger, intending to decise Virgil, to prefer the worst Verse in the Georgicks of the one before the whole Works of the other. 5. Labadia, near the River Cephissus, the Inhabitants whereof were counted the most superstitious of all the Grecians: memorable for the Trojanian Den or Cave, and the Oracle there given by Jupiter, hence called Trophenus: into which Cave none were permitted to enter and receive the Oracle, but after many Ointings, Washings, and the like Superstitious preparations, too long and many to be specified in this place and time. A Town which still preserves to much of its ancient Estimation, that from hence (as I conjecture) the whole Country of Achaia hath the name of Livadia, by which the Turks call it at this present. 6. Chærona, or Chæronia, the Birth place of Plutarch; near unto which was fought that memorable Battle between L. Sylla and the Romans against Archelaus, one of the Lieutenants of Mithridates King of Pontus, leading an Army of 120000 Souldiers, of which 10000 only escaped with life, the Romans losing but 14. 7. Orechemnus, no less memorable for another Victory obtained by the same L. Sylla against Dorileus, another of that King's Commanders, having an Army of 80000 men, of which 20000 lost their lives that day. After which Victories, when Sylla might easily have destroyed that King, he suddenly patched a Peace up with him, that he might hasten unto Rome, where Marinus and Cinna had trodden his Faction under foot: preferring by that act the pursuit of his own private Quarrels before that of his Country, endangered more by Mithridates after his return, than it had been formerly. 8. Aulis, a Port-Town on the Shores of the Egean Sea, where the Grecians took shipping when they went to the War of Troy; here making Oath never to give over the Enterprise until they had destroyed that City. Concerning which thus lie in Virgil.

Non ego cum Danais Trojanam exscindere Gentem

That is to say,

I took no Oath at Aulis, to destroy,

As did the Greeks the Town and State of Troy. But the chief of this Country, and such as had a special Influence over all the rest, was the City of Thebes, situate on the Banks of the River Cephissus, where it was built by Cadmus the Phœnician, after all his wanderings. Famous in old times for the Wars between Ætæus and Polynices, the Sons of the unfortunate Prince Oedipus, and of his Mother and Wife Jocasta. The History of which War is the most ancient piece of Story that we find of all Greece; the former times and Writings containing nothing but Fables, little favouring of Humanity, and less of Truth; as of men changed into Monsters, the Attributes of the Gods, and the like. In this Town lived Pelopidas and Epaminondas, who so crushed the Lacedaemonians at the Battels of Leuttria and Manitæa, that they could never after re-obtain their former Puissance. This Commonwealth long flourished, and at last, being over-burthened in the Theban War, was glad to submit itself to the Protection of the Macedonians, under the leading of King Philip; who by this means first got footing in Greece, into which afterwards he thrust his whole body. Upon the death of Philip, Thebes revolted from the Macedonians, but Alexander his Successor quickly recovered it: and to dishearten the Greeks in the like Attempts, he raised the City, filling all the Inhabitants of age and strength; only Pindarus's house he commanded to be left standing in honour of that learned Poet. At the sack of this Town, one of the Macedonian Souldiers entered the house of a principal Woman, named Timothea, ravished her, and rifled her Coffers, but still demanding more Treasure, she shewed him a deep Well, saying that there all her Money was hidden. The credulous Villain stooping down to behold his Prey, the troubled him into the Well, and overwhelmed him with Stones. For which noble act, the generous Prince not only dismissed her unhurt, but most highly commended her. It was after re-edified by Cassander, and followed for the most part, as the rest of the Thebians did, the Fortunes of Macedon. It is reduced at this time to the state of an ordinary Borough, and called Sivies by the Turks.

4. PHOCIS is bounded on the East with Boeotia, on the West with Doris and Locris, on the North with the River Cephissus, and on the South with the Bay of Corinth. A Country somewhat twined with Mountains, but those of eminent note in the elder times. The chief whereof are, 1. M. Licon, 2. Cithæron both consecrated to the Majesty, and both containing with Parassus for height and bigness. 3. Parassus, of so great an height, that in that great Delta, e in which most of those parts of Greece were covered themselves and many others on the Top here: for which, and for its two Summits reaching to the Clouds, it is of great renown amongst the Poets; as in Ovid thus,

Nomine Parassus. Superæque cacamine Nubes.

To passeth there with its two Tops extends

The lofty Clouds Stars, and all the Clouds transcends.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. A. Theia, situate near the Sea, and famous for the Helleborum there growing, an Herb very medicinal for the Phrenetic; whence the Poet, Naevius, Antic, ram, applied to mad-men. 2. Pythia, or Pythia, said to be sacred not only in the middle of Greece, but of all the World: Strabo relating how Jupiter, desirous to know the exact middle of the Earth, let loose two Eagles, one from thence, and the other from the West, which flying with an equal Wing, (so we must conceive) and meeting at this very place, showed it apparently to be the Navel of the World. By reason of which convenient situation in the Heart of Greece, it was made a solemn Town for all the Grecians, and honoured with the Court and general Assembly of the Amphictyons; men chosen out of the prime Cities of Greece, who had power to decide all Controversies, and to make Laws for the common good. A Court first instituted by Asterius, as Strabo teaches us: or, as Hæcarnæus more probably, by Amphictyon the Son of Helle, from whom they seem to have their name. The Amphictyons from the several Cities, with reference to the places for which they met, had the name of Pythiænes, when assembled, they were called the Amphictyons: their Meeting, were at the beginning of the Spring and Autumn. Some instances of censuring their Authority will not be amiss. In the time of Cimæ, the Corinthians, having by Piracy wronged the Theſſians, were tried by this Council; and after that the Lacedaemonians for kidnapping Camæa, and the Phocians for troubling the Land of Cirra, which belonged to the Temple of D. Phoebus by them annexed: and because they could not obliterate, and paid not their arrearsments, their Dominions were adjudged to be confiscated unto that Temple. So they, disobeying this Decree also, spoiled the Temple itself: for which War, Cæsar, who by the Assistance of Philip King of Macedon brought them to Obedience, the Council was again assembled, in which it was decreed that the Phocians should raise the Walls of their Cities, that they should no more lose Heart and Arms, that they should no more lose the Temple, nor any longer have a Voice in those Conventions. It was at this time enacted, that the Sacrifices of the Phocians should be vetted. In King Philip and his Successors, Kings of Macedon, in whom the also did the perpetual Prebend their, and made them Princes of that State. A Court to which the Sacred of the Greek Evers amongst the Turks, and, in our times, the Dots of the Empire, and the At-families of the Swissers, carry most resemblance. 3. Cirra, on the Sea-side, the Port-town to Delphos. 4. Crissa, so called from Crissus the Son of Phobus, and grandchild of Æacus, situate on the edge of the Bay of Corinth, called sometimes from hence Crissus Sinus. 5. Scæparia, memorable for the Defeat of Cristallus, Captain of the Alban Army, by Mællus one of the Roman Pretors: the Loss of which Battle drew after it the Destruction of Corinth. It was observed in the success of this great Fight, that a Band of Acadians, clapping out of the Battle, came into 6. Elatea, another City of this Province, and were there kindly entertained on memory of some former Alliances, till news came of the Overthrow of Cristallus; when they were ordered by the State of Phocis to relinquish the Town, (for Adversity seldom meeteth with returns of Friendship.) They were let upon and all slain by the Romans in the last famous place in which their Ancestors had unworthily forsaken the aid of the Grecians in their War against Philip King of Macedon, for the publick L. cre. 7. Danlia, a City appertaining to Toreus King of Thrace, who, having married Progne, the Daughter of Canis King of Albania, ravished her sister Philomena, and cut her Tongue, the better to keep his Villany undiscovered. But Progne being made acquainted with the double Injury, first made him ignorantly eat his own Son Tis, whom he had baked in a Pie, and after killed him, with the help of her ravished Sister. 8. Delphos, renowned in old times for the famous Temple of J. P. in which, with that of Jupiter Hæmmon in Macædo, (now reckoned as a part of Egypt) were the most famous Oracles of the ancient Gentiles; dark Riddles of the D. vil, couched and conveyed with so much Cunning, that the meaning of them was most hidden, when it was thought most easy to be discerned. An Instance of which is that given to Cræsus, in the War by him projected against the Persian, which was thus delivered;

When Cræsus over Haly goes,

A mighty Nation he o'ethrows.

Which he interpreting according to his own hopes, crossed the River, was vanquished by Cyrus King of Persia, and his Kingdom conquered. The like we find of Pyrrhus King of Epirus, who, before he made a War against the Romans, consulted with the Oracle, and received this Answer;

Alto, Æacida, Romanos vincere posse.

Which doubtful Prediction he thus construed, Te posse vincere Romanos, That he should overcome the Romans; but found it unto his cost that the meaning was, Romani posse vincere te, That the Romans should overcome him: as indeed it happened. By another kind of the same Fallacy, which the Logicians call Amphibolia, did this great Enemy of mankind overthrow another, who, demanding of the Oracle what Success he should have in an Expedition which he was in hand with, received his Answer in these words,

Which he thus pointing, His redibus, nunquam per, &c. engaged himself in the War, and was therein slain. Whereupon his Followers, canvassing the Oracle, found the meaning of it to be this, His redibus nunquam, per se.

The like Juggling he also used in those supernatural Dreams which Philosophers call Superventive. For Cæsar, dreaming that he cannally knew his own Mother the night before he passed over the Rubicon, became Lord of Rome, the common Mother of the Romans; and Appian, the Son of Pisistratus the Tyrant of Athens, having upon the same precepts the same Dream, was killed and buried in the B. wells of his Mother the Earth. So that Cæsar miscarried in his action, and Appian thrived; yet still had the Devil been reputed his Crafts-master, and the Father of Truths. But as the Ecclesiastical History telleth us, that Julian the Apostate, consulting with the Devil, was told that he could receive no Answer, because that the Body of Babylus the Martyr was entombed him his Alter: so neither could the Devils deceive the World, as formerly they had done, after Christ, the Truth it self, was manifested in the Flesh, and tormented these unclean Spirits, though, as they alledged, before their time. Angelus, as Suidas telleth us, in whose time our Saviour was born, consulting with the Oracle about his Successor, received this not satisfying Answer:

Ἐρεβὶς κηλεύει με θεοὶ καὶ ἀγγέλων ἀπάντων
Τὸνδε θεόν σφραγίσαντα καὶ αἰδῶν ἄνθρωπον
Λατρεῖν ἀπὸν σὺν τοῖς θεοῖς καὶ ἀγγέλοις.

An Hebrew Child, whom the blessed Gods adore;
Hath bid me leave these Shrines, and pack to Hell;
So that of Oracles I can no more.

In silence leave our Altar, and farewell.

Whereupon Angelus, coming home, in the Capitol erected an Altar, and thereupon in Capital Letters caused this Inscription to be engraven, HÆC EST ARA PRIMOGENITI DEI. Now as the Devils had by Curf's Birth lost much of their wanted Virtue, so after his Passion they lost it almost together. Concerning which Plutarch, in a Tract of his Morals called Thei καὶ λατρεῖν ἀπὸν σὺν τοῖς θεοῖς καὶ ἀγγέλοις, telleth us a notable Story, which was this. Some company, going out of Greece into Italy, were about the Echinades becalmed, when on a sudden there was heard a Voice loudly calling on one Thamus, an Egyptian then in the Ship. At the two first calls he made no answer; but to the third he replied, saying, Here I am. And the Voice again spake unto him, bidding him, when he came to the Palades, to make it known that the great God Pas was dead. When they came unto the Palades, which are certain Shelves and Rocks in the Ionian Sea, Thamus, standing on the Poop of the Ship, did as the Voice directed him: whereupon was heard a mighty Noise of many together, who all seemed to groan and lament with terrible and dubious shrieking. News hereof coming to Tiberius, he caused the learned men in his Empire to enquire out of their Books who that Pas should be: by whom it was answered, that he was the Son of Mercury and Penelope, with Ignorance enough, and little satisfaction to the business propounded to them. Such therefore as more narrowly observed the Circumstances of this accident found it to happen at the time when our Saviour suffered on the Cross; who was indeed the true God Pas, the chief Shepherd and Bearer of our Sorrows, as the Scripture calleth him: and that, upon this divulging of his Death and Passion, the Devils who used to speak in Oracles, did with great Grief and Lamentation forsake that Office, which had been so painful to them in seducing Mankind. That all Oracles at that instant ceased, I dare not say; though it be certain that about that time they began to fail: it being said by Juvenal, who lived in the Reign of Dominian, Delphis Oracula cessant, that the Oracle of Delphos was then silent; the rest decaying suddenly in a short time after.

But to proceed. The Temple of Apollo being spoiled by the Phocians, as before was noted, caused the War betwixt them and the Thebans, called the Holy War, in which the Thebans, being like, to have the worst, but for Philip of Macedon, who made an end of the Quarrel by subduing both. The Treasure which the Phocians found in the Temple was reckoned at 60 Talents of Gold; but it proved Astruc Talsunum, and brought a sudden Ruine on their State and Nation: Sacrilege being so unpardonable a Crime, even amongst the Heathen, that the fault of some few, countenanced by the rest of a people, hath brought Destruction on them all. It was afterwards with the like ill fortune rankfaced by Brennus and his Gauls, in the wain of the Macedonian Empire, all of them miserably perishing who had any hand in it.

5. LOCRI is bounded on the East with Phocis and a Branch of the Aegean Sea, on the West with Ætolia, on the North with a long Ridge of Hills which part it from Theffaly, and on the South with parts of Achaia, Beotia, Phocis, the Bay of Corinth, the Straights of Aurintrium, and a part of the Ionian Sea. So that for largeness of Extent, and the commodiousness of the Seas, it yieldeth to no Province in Achaia, though not so fruitful as some others. Divided into the three Nations, of the Locri Ozæla, lying towards the South, on both sides of the Straights, so called from some ill Smells of the Country or people, 2. the Epinemidii, inhabiting the middle parts, named from Mount Cnemis, not far from Parnassus, and 3. the Opuntii, so called from Opus their chief City, lying on the North-side of the River Cephissus, on the Coasts of the Aegean or Evbean Seas.

Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Opus, the Head-City of the Opuntians, situate on the River Asopus, being one of the main Branches of Cephissus. 2. Cynus, the Port-Town to Opus. 3. Thronium, the prime Town of the Epinemidii, mentioned by Polybius, Lyotie, Ptolemy, Aconides at the foot of Mount Cnemis, whence they had their name. 4. Amphissa, the chief City of the Ozæla, situate in the inland parts of it: the People whereof, refusing to yield to the Sentence of the Amphictyones against their Confederates the Phocians, were the cause that Philip of Macedon returned into Greece. Against whom, grievously insulting the Boeotian, and manifestly aspiring to the Command of Greece, the Athenians desperately opposed; not so much with possibility of prevailing, as being urged on by the sharp and biting Orations of Demosthenes made against his Proceedings: which being by him called Philippicks, occasioned Tully to call his bitter Invectives against M. Antonius by the same name also. But the Success hereof was such as commonly attendeth a broken Fortune: The Athenians being vanquished at Cheronæa, and Philip declared Captain of Greece against the Persians, obtained under that Title the Command of the fought. 6. Enantia, as Ptolemy, Ocantia, as Pliny and Pausanias call it, opposite to Ægira in Achaia Propria. 7. Molycria, by Ptolemy placed here, and by others reckoned in Ætolia: not far from whence is the Promontory of Antirrhium, so called because just opposite to that of Rhium in Achaia Propria, between which runneth a narrow Strait, (not so wide as the Hellspont) which openeth into the Bay of Corinth: each Promontory being fast that cause fortified by Bajazer the second with a very strong Garrison, that on this side being gallantly defended by the Turks, when besieged by Doria, Anno 1534, for being forced with great Slaughter into a strong Tower, which commanded the Cattle, they rather chose to blow it up, together with the Ammunition, Victuals, and themselves to boot, than that the Fort should come into the hands of the Enemy. Some place this Promontory in Ætolia also; but, following the authority of Ptolemy, I have placed it here. 8. Nauractis, so called from the building of Ships there by the Heracleids; situate on the Corinthian Bay, near the Mouth thereof. Given, after the Citizens of Albens to the poor Massilians, unwilling to have them trouble some Neighbours, and their coming to be quiet Slaves) compelled them to seek new Habitations. It hath of late been called Lepanto, giving the name of the Gulf of Lepanto to the Bay of Corinth; by that that name subject for a while to the Venetians, and from them taken by the Turks, Anno 1499. Of these Locrians those of Italy were a branch or Colony, whose Law-giver was Zaleucus, spoken of elsewhere.

6. DORIS is bounded on the East with Phocis, on the West with Ætolia, on the North with the Hill Ossa, and other Mountains which divide it from Theffaly, and on the South with Ætolia and part of Locris. The Air here of is very healthy, and the Soil sufficiently fruitful, if well manured; but now the greatest part lieth waste for want of Tillage. First peopled by the Dores or Dorieuses, descended from Dorus the Son of Helen, and Grandchild of Democoon, by whom they were placed in Theffaly, afterwards spreading into this Country, which they left their name to as their proper Dwelling: though many of them, following the Heracleids into Peloponnesus, possessed themselves of the greatest part of Laconia also; imprinting on the same their Dialect or form of Speech, from them called the Doric.

Chief Cities hereof are, 1. Doris, so called in memory of Dorus, the first Progenitor of this People. 2. Ermenus, seated at the Foot of Parnassus, mentioned by Thucydides, Sirabo, Mela, Ptolemy, and the rest of the Ancients. 3. Bium, as Ptolemy says Bionas as Strabo and Pliny call it. 4. Cyminum, near Parnassus also, in the common Impressions of Diocorus Siculus the Historian fallily called Cynthium. 5. Lilea, situate not far from the Spring or Fountain of the River Cephissus; which, rising hereabouts, passeth through the whole length of Achaia, and falls into the Aegean or Evbean Sea.

7. ÆTOLIA hath on the East Locris, on the West Phocis, on the North Doris, on the South the Ionian Sea, said to be so called from Ætolus, the Son of Mars, who, being by Salmonus cast out of Elis, fixed himself in this Country.

Here is the Forest of Calydon, where Meleager and the Flower of the Greek Nobility slew the wild Boar. Here is the River Euenus, over which the Centaur Nessus having cried Dejanira, Wife of Hercules, and intending to have ravished her, was slain by an Arrow which Hercules on the other side of the River shot at him. Here also is the River of Abelous, of whom the Poets fable many things: as that being Rival with Hercules in the love of Dejanira, he encountered him in the shape of a Bull; and that when Hercules had plucked off one of his Horns, the Nymphs made it of their so-much-celebrated Cornucopia.

The people of this Country were the most turbulent and unruly people of all Greece, never at Peace with their Neighbours, and seldom with themselves. The Macedonians could never tame them, by reason of the Craginess of the Country: yet they brought them to such terms, that they were compelled to let the Romans into Greece, who quickly made an end of all.

Principal Towns hereof were, 1. Chalcis, situate near the Spring-head of Abelous before mentioned. 2. Aradus, near the River so called; which, arising hereabouts, passeth into Epirus, and falleth into the Bay of Ambracia, not far from Nicopolis. 3. Olennus, not far from the Gulf of Calydon. 4. Picronne, giving name to the adjoining Country, called hence Picronnia, the People whereof had the name of Curces ἀὐτὸν τὸν κούρην from their wearing, being their custom to shave the fore-parts of their Heads, and let the Hair grow on the hinder-parts only, of Hesperus casarise approbation, because their Enemies should not lay hold on them by the Fore-top, and so put them down. 5. Thermus, the Parliament City, or place of general Assembly, for all the States of Ætolia: which Meeting was called Panætolium. It was chosen for those Meetings in regard of the situation and strength thereof, as being situate well-near in the midst of the Country, environed with rocky Mountains, of steep and difficult ascent. For that cause it was made also the receptacle of their Wealth and Treasure in all times of danger; but taken as the last by Philip of Macedon, with all the Spoil in it, in his War against them. 6. Calydon, near the Forest so called, giving name unto the royal Seat of Oeneus, Father of Meleager, divided into two parts by the River Euenus, which runneth through it, according unto that of Ovid.

Er Meleagream maculatus sanguine Nefci Eucnus Calydonia fecit.

That is to say,

Calydon, Meleager's Town, the Floud
Even divides, deni'd with Nessus blood.

Adjoining herunto were the Atabamians, whom Pliny makes a People of it, who gave name unto a little Province called Atabamania; but such (as little as it was) as gave it the Title of a Kingdom to Antimander; a Prince whom the Ætolians made special use of in their Wars against Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Perses, suggesting to him and his Children, that they were descended of the House of Alexander the Great, and so engaging them, in hope of that Kingdom, to hazard the quiet of their own. The places of most note are, 1. Dium, 2. Athenæum; both of them taken by Philip in that War.

These, as they were the last Actors on the Stage of Achaia, so had they the most deplorable part in all the Tragedy of that Country. The Affairs whereof, governed successively by that State which was most powerful, were for a long time managed by the Athenians; whose Councils and Conclusions went for Law amongst them. But that Estate being broken, if not subverted, by the Power of Sparta, the Thebans and Boeotians, who came next in play, had the chief Command; uniting almost all the rest in design with them against the Spartans, who now grew terrible to all. Becoming insolent by the course of too much Prosperity, and the many great Victories which they had against the Spartans, and thereupon quarrelling with the Phocians, they were the cause of Philip's coming into Greece; who, as he had learned amongst them the use of Arms, so made he use thereof at last, and of their Dissentions, to unite all the States of Greece under his Command; Thebes it self being taken and sacked by Alexander the Son of Philip, as before is said. The Macedonians thus prevailing, partly by Force, but especially by Art and Practice, there was no People in Achaia that durst oppose them; till these Ætolians, a restless and impatient People, took the Cause in hand. Who thrived so well under Antigonus and Philip, two of the last Kings of Macedon, that they took from them many Towns, invaded Theffaly, attempted Macedon it self, and, when they could not otherwise obtain their purpose in the Destruction of that Kingdom, opened a passage for the Romans to elect it for them. But finding no such favour at the Romans hands as they did expect, they began to murmur, and afterwards to excite Antiochus and the Greeks against them, drawing thereby those Forces against themselves which they had invited into Greece, and were the first People of all the Grecians that were conquered by them; though, by the Mediation of the Rhodiens and some other Friends, their Country was restored unto them, with the loss only of Cephalenia, Zint, and some other Islands; which the Romans were relieved to keep as the fruits of the War. This was about the 564 year of the building of Rome, Fulvius Nobilior being then Consul, and chief Coman

mander in this War. After which time the several Estates hereof enjoyed so much Liberty as the Romans, their new Masters, thought fit to give them: till they were finally made absolutely subject in the time of Vespasian, by whom Achaia was reduced into the form of a Province, Peloponessus being reckoned as a part thereof. In the Division of the Empire by Constantine the Great, the West parts hereof being divided from the rest were called New Epirus; but both of them made Provinces of the Diocese of Macedon, under the Profectus Prætorio for Illyricum; the principal Officer of this part being called the Proconsul of Achaia: continuing under him and his Successors, Emperours of Constantinople, till the Destruction of that Empire by the power of the Turks; but so that it remained not always under the Command of one sole Officer, the Politie of that State being altered, and this Country parcelled out into many Governments, especially after the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, or Western Christians. At that time Theodoros Imperial, a noble Græcian, and one of the (then) Imperial Family, seized on Aetolia and Epirus; part of which last, and also the first, he left to Michael his Son, who held them, though with some dispute: twixt him and Michael Palæologus, the first Emperour of Constantinople after the Expulsion of the Latines, Charles, the last Prince of that Family, dying without Issue about the year 1430, bequeathed Aetolia to another Charles, the Son of his Brother, and Acarnania (being that part of Epirus which the Princes of Aetolia held, to his late Sons, Momon, Turmus, and Hercules. But man Quarrels happening upon this Division, Amurat the second having then newly conquered Thessalonica, composed the Differences by taking all unto himself, Anno 1432. There were at that time other Princes of like Authority, as of Athens, Phocis, and Beotia; but the first the chiefest, as honoured not only with the Title of Dukes of Athens, but of Princes of Achaia also; such being the Fortune of that City, as to have the first and last great Say in the Affairs of Achaia. For at the Translation of the Empire upon the Latines, Gedroff of Troyes, a French man, was made Duke of Athens and Prince of Achaia, of whom Paulus Æmilinus speaketh, Anno 1220: which Honour afterwards was conferred on Walter de Breu, a Kinsman of John de Breu, the last King of Jerusalem, Protector of Baldwin the second the last Emperour of the Latines, mentioned by the said Æmilinus, Anno 1288. And though on the Defeat and death of this Walter by the Catalanians, then ransacking those parts of Greece, the Title of Duke of Athens was assumed by Frederick Alphonso, the Son of Frederick King of Scily, and by other Princes of that House: yet, upon better ground, by the Heir general of this Walter it was conveyed in Marriage to Ignatius de Accio, a Nobleman of the Realm of Naples; whose Son Walter (commonly called the Duke of Ateneis) for a time obtained the Sovereignty of the State of Florence, Anno 1342, but lost it suddenly again by his too much Cruelty. Francis de Acciolo, the last Prince of this House, having been brought up in the Court of Alab the Great, as one of his Favourites, surrendered his Estate herein, at the persuasion of that Tyrant, in charge for the Country of Beotia and the Dukedom of Twicks; which he no sooner had received, but he was seized by Mahomet to Joan his Lieutenant in Morcia, by whom it first he was courteously received, at last cruelly murdered. And to the whole Country of Achaia fell into the possession of the Turks, Anno 1454, or thereabouts.

EPIRUS is bounded on the East with Aetolia, on the West with the Adriatick, on the North with Thessaly, Macedon, and some part of Albania, and on the South with the Ionian Seas. So called from the Solidity and Firmness of it, the word Epirus in the Greek Tongue signifying as much as Terra firma, or the firm Land. But by the Turks at this day it is called Albania, whiche name they give to all the Lands and Countries in their possession lying under the Adriatick and Ionian Seas.

In this Country was born Olympias, Mother of Alexander the Great; and Pyrrius, who conquered the Realm of Macedon, and was the first Foreiner who made tria (though to his own Loss) of the Power and Puissance of Rome; accounted by Hannibal next to Alexander the second great Souldier of the world. Here is also Mount Pinus, sacred to Apollo and the Muses, dividing this Country from Thessaly, and therefore common unto both: as also the Acrocætanian Hills, so called, because they are so much subject unto Thunder and Lightning, eminent for their height, and much feared by Mariners, who, when they see a little Cloud rising on the top thereof, are sure of a Tempest. Finally, here are the famous Rivers Acheron and Cocytus, which, for their black waters and unfavourable taste, are said to be the Rivers of Hell; which last the Sacrifices and Solemnities made in honour of Proserpine, whom Plato vanished and brought hither, had the name of Cocytia. Thence, by a Metonymy, these Rivers are taken sometimes for Hell itself; as in that of the Poet,

Since those in Heaven I cannot move,
The Powers of Hell I mean to prove.

The Soil hereof is very barren, and in many places full of Forests, and thin of people, but towards the Sea reasonably fruitful: plentiful of Oxen, Dogs, and Sheep, of more than ordinary bigness, and yielding the best breed of Horses. The people use a distinct Language from the Græcians, though of the Greek Tongue not utterly ignorant; and by reason of the Barrenness of their own Country, become great Wanderers, especially in Summer-time, when they travel into Thrace, Macedon, and Alia Minor, hiring themselves to work in Harveit under the Turks, as also to thresh, winnow, and make clean their Corn; and in the Winter-time return to their Wives and Children. They are able of body, swift of foot, apt to undergo any Toil and Labour; having with good Courages and high Projections: which makes such of them as delight not in works of Drudgery to look for action in the Wars, and otherwise to rob and spoil the neighbouring Mountains of Albania. Till their Subjection to the Turks, they were much used both by the Kings of Hungary and the State of Venice in their several Wars, serving on Horse or Foot, as occasion was: as Mercenaries by the Switzers in the Western parts, but not so faithful to the party entertaining them.

Anciently it was divided into Chaonia (which was the proper Epirus) lying on the West, and Acarnania, bordering on Aetolia, in which it is parted by the River Achelous: the middle parts hereof being Amphilochia, Thesprotia, and Almene: all very populous in former times, and so continued till Paulus Æmilinus, on the Conquest of Macedon, overthrowed seventy of their Cities. Few of which being since re-edified, and the Country for a long time languishing under the Turks, here are not a very fair Towns or well peopled Cities at the present to be spoken of; and therefore we must look on such as flourished in the times fore-going. The principal, at which were, 1. Dagana, one of the Cities of Chaonia, memorable for the Temple and Oracle of Jupiter, hence called Dodonæus; situate in a fair Grove, the Trees whereof are said to be Vocal, and to give the Oracle: though others say, It was delivered first by a pair of Pigeons, whereof the one afterwards fled to Dolphos, the other to the Temple of Jupiter Hammon in Ægypt. It was the ancientest Oracle of all Greece: and so perhaps was the Town the ancientest Town also. Said to be first built by Dodon, the Son of Jupiter and Europæ more probably by Dodonim, the Son of Joveon, and Grand-child of Jupiter, who first inhabited this Region, the whole Country (Greece I mean) being called Ægeon from the Father, (by which name commonly it occurreth in the Hebrew Text) this Town Dodon from the Son. 2. Casipæ, a Port-Town, with a fair Promontory of the same name adjoining to it. 3. Ouchefensis, by Strabo called Onchimus, and by Pliny Echinus, a Port-Town also, now called Santi Quaranta. 4. Pavornius, on the Sea-side also, retaining still the old name, and but little else. 5. Antigonia, more within the Land, founded or repaired by Antigonus a King of Macedon, now called Argiro Cefiro, as Niger thinketh. 6. Phenice, once the chief Town hereof; which being sacked by the Illyrians, under Tenta their Queen, gave the Romans an occasion of Quarrel with them, upon Complaint made to them by the Epirots. 7. Pelades, a Port-Town, the Principal in that part which was called Thesprotia; as 8. Tarone, on the River Thyanis, and 9. Sybotæ, an ancient Haven-Town, (now called Syotæ) was in that part whereof which was called Almene. 10. Argos, the chief City of the Amphilochians: this part hereof was first named Molossia, from Molossus the Son of Pyrrius; and Andromache remarkable for the belt breed of Hatives, hence called Molossi: and afterwards (Quaslibet Helene the Son of Prianus, whom Pyrrius the Son of Achilles settled in this Country; who having unfortunately slain his Brother Phaon, caused it in memory of him to be called Phaonia; *Chao*namque omnem Trojanæ *Chao*ne duxit, as it is in Virgil. Of these Molossians, Plato, the third Son of Saturnus, was sometimes King, called, from the flat and hollow situation of this Country, consisting much of deep Valleys, the King of Hell.

Towns of especial note in Acarnania were, 1. Ambracia, on the Bay of Ambracia, now called V. antissa. 2. Ambracia, the Regal Seat or Court of Pyrrius, giving name unto a fair and capacious Bay, now called Golfo di Larta, from Larta an adjoining Town, situate in or near the place where Ambracia stood. It was once subject unto Perander, King or Tyrant of Corinth, who being slain by a Woman named Leontia, whom he kept as his Concubine, occasioned the Inhabitants from that time forwards, in memory of their Deliverance, to worship a Lion. Afterwards being taken from the Children of Pyrrius by the Macedonians, and from them won by the Aetolians in the time of their greatness, it was besieged by Pulvius, a Roman Consul spoken of before. Who, seeing that he could not force it, was willing, at the Mediation of the Athenians, Rhodiens, and other Friends of both parties, to conclude a Peace; but so that he dissolved this City at his going hence of much excellent machinery, carrying away with him unto Rome the Pictures of the nine Muses most admirably well done by the hand of Zeuxis, the rarest Painter of his times. 3. Bathrotrium, a Roman Colony, by Pliny called Colonia simply; now a small Village called Burtrino. 4. Leucas, situate on the point of a Promontory of the same name also, anciently memorable for the Temple of Apollo. By leaping into the Sea from the top of this Promontory, such as unfortunately were cured of that malady: the first trial of that kind being made by Sappho that famous Poetress.

At that time it was joined unto the Land; but since by the violence of the Sea or the hand of man, it is made into an Island; according unto that of Ovid,

Leucæda continam veteres habuere Coloni,

Nunc Fræcis crementum.

That is to say,

Leucas, in former times join'd to the Land,
Environ'd round with Waters now doth stand.

It was called Leucas from the Whiteness of the Rock of Promontory, having before the Separation or disjunction of it been called Neritos; the chief Town of it varying with the name of the Isle and Promontory. Both Town and Island at this time is called S. Marre, taken by Bajazet the II. from the State of Venice, and by him given unto the Jews, (who do still inhabit it) at their expulsion out of Spain. 5. Nicopolis, a Colony of the Romans, of great both Wealth and Beauty in the time of S. Paul, who from hence dated his Epistle to Titus: called in that Poetrick Nicopolis of Macedonia, because Epiros at that time was part of the Province of Macedon, though afterwards a distinct Province of itself. It was first built by Augustus Cæsar on a Promontory opposite unto Actium, on the other side of the Bay: that being the place where his Land-Souldiers were incamped before the Naval Battle betwixt him and Mark Antony, and from a poor man and his Ass whom he met there the day before. For asking the man his name, he told him that his name was Entycheus, i. e. Fortunate; and that the name of his Ass was Nicor, i. e. Conquerour; which happy Omen made his Souldiers courageous and hopeful of Victory: and he in memory thereof erected there two brazen Images, the one of the Ass, the other of his Master. It is now a small Village called Preveza. 6. Actium, on the Sea-shore, high unto which Augustus and Antony fought for the Empire of the World. The Navy of the latter consisted of 700 Gallies, the former had 250 only; but those crowned with Victory: Antony himself deserting his Souldiers to follow after Cleopatra, who on the very first Charge fled away for Ægypt. The Town being now ruined, the Promontory upon which it stood is called Caba di Figalo.

The Country was first peopled by Dodonim the Son of Joveon, or at least by some of his Posterity coming thither from the Isle of Rhodes, whose Memory was preserved a long time in the Town of Dodon, by him, or from him, so denominated. Afterwards being parted into several Nations, and those Nations united in the common name of Epirots, it became a great and powerful Kingdom; governed by a Race of Kings descending from Pyrrius the Son of Achilles, and continuing till the time Pyrrius was Eacides. A man of such Courage and Magnanimity, that he did not only recover his own Kingdom, of which Cassander had deprived his Father; but got the Kingdom of Macedon from Cassander's Children; out of which, he tried his Fortune with the Romans, Anno Mundi 363, U. C. 471. After his death this Kingdom was thrice taken by the Macedonians, and shortly after subdued by Paulus Æmilinus, who, as we now said, destroyed 70 Cities hereof in one day. For desirous to satisfy his Souldiers after his Victory in Macedon, he sent unto the Epirots for ten of the principal men of every City. These he commanded to deliver up all the Gold and Silver which they had, and to that end, as he gave out, he sent certain Companies of Souldiers along with them; unto whom he gave secret Instructions, that on a day by him appointed they should fall to sack every one of the Town whereunto they were sent. A barbarous and bloody Deceit, 70 Cities confederate with the Romans ruined in one day, and no fewer than 150000 Epirots made and fold for Slaves. But the chief motive which induced him to so great a Cruelty was, by discippling this Country, to give with a long and fair Sea-coast over against Italy, to lying the Romans opportunity to land their Armies with out any Resistance for the farther Progress of their Forces into Macedonia, Thracæ, Mesia, or where else they pleased. Which ungodly Policy was afterwards imitated by William the Conqueror, who laid waft all that part of Hampshire, since called New Forest, and therein 36 Parish Churches, that he might have a safe Landing-place for his Norman Forces, if the English should at any time endeavour to make head against him. Being made subject to the Romans, it was a while part of the Province of Macedonia; but afterwards, when Macedonia was made a Diocese, it became a distinct Province of it self, called by the name of Old Epirus, to difference it from the Province of New Epirus, which lay Eastwards of it. At the Division of the Empire it belonged to the Constantinopolitans, and so continued till the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians: at what time Theodorus Angelus, a Prince of the Imperial Family, seized on Ætolia and Epirus, as before was said, and sped for well in his Designs, that he took the strong City of Dracenza from the State of Venice, (to whom it fell in the division of that Spoil) and cunningly (if not treacherously) intercepted Peter the third Emperor of the Latins, whom, as some say, he caused to be Murdered at a Banquet. After his death, his whole Estate being divided into two parts, Ætolia with that part hereof which is called Chaonia, continued in his House till the time of Charles Prince of Ætolia and Epirus spoken of before, after whose death it was subdued by Amurat the Second, as before was said. The residue hereof, together with that part of Macedonia which is called Albania, fell to the Family of the Castriots: the last of which, named John, (the Father of Scanderbeg) seeing himself unable to resist that Tyrant, who had already swallowed up all his Neighbour-princes, submitted his Estate unto him, and gave unto him all his Sons for Hostages. No sooner was the old Prince dead, but Amurat seized on his Estate, murdered his three eldest Sons, and caused George, the youngest to be traid up in the Law of Mahomet: who afterwards, escaping out of his Power and recovering all his Father's Countries, assumed also the Title of Prince of Epirus. After whose death, his Children, not being able to make good their Game, lost it to Mahomet the Great; as shall be shewn more fully in the Story and Description of Albania, which is next to follow.

4. ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the East with Macedonia, on the West with the Adriatick, on the North with Scævonia, on the South with Epirus. The Country is mountainous and barren; watered with few Rivers, and thence of no great note amongst the Ancients; as 1. Lani, 2. Apfus, 3. Panyalus, 4. Celydons: all of them falling into the Adriatick.

It took this name from the Albani, once the Inhabitants of this Tract, from whom the chief City hereof was called Albanopolis. Other Towns of most consideration are, 1. Spetigrade, 2. Vestigard, (called by some the Holy City) situate in the Borders of Epirus, on the top of an Hill, where it is fenced about like an Eagle's Nest: one of the best Towns in all this Country which was taken by Scanderbeg at his recovery of his Birthright and Estate herein; but being once taken by him, held good courageously against the Turk, the Souldiers neither fainting in their Oppositions, nor corrupted by Money, till at the last subdued by a Superstition. There was in the Town one only Well into which a treacherous Christian cast a dead Dog, at the fight of which, being the next day drawn up, the Souldiers gave up the Town, being so unreasonably superstitious, that no persuasion, nor the example of the Captain or the Burgo-masters, could make them drink those (as they thought) defiled waters. 3. Dracenza, a Town of great strength, first called Epidaurum, and afterwards Dyrrhachium. Under the Walls of which Town was the first bickering between the Souldiers of Cesar and Pompey, not only to the present Loss, but also the utter Discomfiture of Cesar, as he himself confessed, if the Enemies Captain had known how to have overcome I must not omit the Valour of Scævus at this Siege, who slew long resisted Pompey's Army, that he had 250 Dartthick in his Shield, and lost one of his Eyes; and yet gave not over till Cesar came to his Rescue.

Fortune beholds an unaccustom'd Sight, An Army and a man together fight.

Whole breast a Wood of Arrows covered quite. In the Division of the Eastern Empire amongst the Latins it fell into the power of Venice, taken at last after a long and tedious Siege, by Amurat the second, Anno 1474. 4. Dibra, in the Hill-Countries, near Epirus, the first Town which submitted to the Valiant Scanderbeg at his revolting from the Turke; supposed to be the Debrum of Ptolemy. 5. Croia, conceived to be the Epitaur of Ptolemy, the chief Town of all this Country seated amongst inaccessible Mountains, and made impregnable by Art: not got by Scanderbeg, but by a Wife, who, having got into his power, the Secretary of the principal Bafa, forced him to write Letters in his Master's name unto the Governour hereof, to deliver it into his hands; which was done accordingly. Afterwards it was in vain besieged by Amurat the second, who under the Walls thereof gave up his wretched Soul to the Devil; and thence being to Mahomet his Son and Successor, before he could again possess it, but taken at the last after Scanderbeg's death, as the Generous or Tutelar Deity of the place had departed with him. 6. Petrella, a Town of great Strength, seated on the Top of an Hill (as almost all the Towns of Albania are) about 25 miles from Croia delivered unto Scanderbeg at his first sitting down before it: as also was Petra Alba, three miles from Petrella, near the Borders of Macedonia, and situate like the other on the top of a Mountain, the River Emathus running under the bottom of it. Scanderbeg, fifty miles from Croia, built on the top of an high Hill in the middle of a pleasant and fruitful Valley, with great and spacious Plains about it. 9. Dagnar Derna, a place of great importance in the Hill-Country towards Scævonia; for the possession whereof rose a War between Scanderbeg and the State of Venice, but the Venetians being worsted at the Battle of Drino, relinquished their Pretensions to it. 10. Anion, a Port-Town, now called Valona, situate over against Hyduntum or Orontus in Italy, distant from it about 60 miles. The Town is unsuitably fit for the invasion of Italy, and was accordingly made use by Achmetes the chief Bafa under Mahomet the Great, who from hence passed his Army over into Apulia, took the Town of Otranto, and had near the death of Mahomet and the Combustions, thence following amongst the Turke, altered the Design, might have opened a very fair way for the adding of Rome unto Constantinople. 11. Apollonia, a Town of great note in the time of the Romans, a Sea-Town, furnished with commodious Haven, which they held as their Entrance into Greece; to that purpose serving them as commodiously as Calais did the English in their Wars with France.

This

This Country anciently was a part of Macedonia, inhabited by the Talantini, Æthras and Albani, from which last (but not till these latter times) it had the name of Albania; but whether these Albani were a Colony of the Albanians of Asia, (though it is very probable) I determine not. When it was made a Province of the Empire it contained all Prevalitana and some part of Macedonia Salutaris; being under the Diocese of Dacia in the time of Justinian, but at first of Macedonia. Dismembered from the main Body of it when the Latines had subdued Constantinople, it fell up to the noble Family of the Castriots; who, though they took unto themselves the Title of Kings or Princes of Epirus, (most of which they held) as the Country is more Note and Eminence, yet was Albania the greatest Strength, and Croia the chief City thereof, the Seat of their Residence: they being called in that respect by some Writers the Kings of Albania. John Castriot, the Father of Scanderbeg, seeing himself unable to resist the Turke, became their Homager, and delivered four Sons for Hostages, whom Amurat the second in their Father's life time caused to be circumcised, and turn Mahometans; and after his decease murdered the three eldest, and seized upon Croia the chief City, with the rest of the Country. But George, the youngest of those Sons, being reserved for better Fortune, was carefully brought up by Amurat (who somewhat passionately affected him) in the Stratagems of War, though some of his Courtiers told him that he nourished a Serpent in his Bosom, which would one day sting him. Amurat, to make trial of his Disposition, offered him on a time the Crown of Albania: to which he prudently replied, that he preferred the honour of his Service before all the Kingdoms of the World; and that he held his hand fitter for a Sword, than his Head for a Crown. Satisfied with which Answer, the Tyrant preferred him to the place of a Sanzack, or Provincial Governour, and gave him some office of Command in all those Armies which he let out against the Christians, Escaping out of the Battle wherein Caraman, the great Bafa, was overthrown and taken Prisoner by Hamad, he got the Town of Croia by a piece of wit, as before was said; and in a very short time after made himself Master of Petrella, Petra, Alba, Stelissa, and all the rest of the Country, by the reputation and return of his first Successors Having recovered his Inheritance out of the hands of the Turke, he reconciled himself to the Church of Christ, flying himself the Souldier of CHRIST JESUS from that time forwards. Invaded by a vast Army of Turke, he overcame Aly Bafa, and kills 20000 of his men with no more than 20 Horse and 50 foot he assauleth Musphala in his Camp; in which 5000 Turke were slain, and 300 taken. With whom encircling not long after in the open Field, he slew 10000 of his men, took many prisoners, and Musphala himself amongst the rest, whom he ransomed for 25000 Ducats. Falling upon the Host of Amurat, then besieging Croia, he killed Feris Bafa hand to hand in a single Combat: and in the time of Mahomet, who succeeded Amurat, vanquished Usac the great Bafa, routed his whole Army, had the spoil of his Camp, took 30 of his fairest Enemies, and slew 20000 of his Souldiers. Not to instance in the rest of his noble Actions, it is reported that in the course of his War against the Turke he killed no fewer than 3000 of them with his own hands; using a Turke's Scimitar in all his Fights, of great weight and bigness. Which when Mahomet on a Peace between them had desired to see, and afterwards returned again with this Centure of it, that he saw nothing in it more than ordinary: the gallant Prince sent back this Answer, that the Virtue of the Weapon depended on the Strength of his Arm, which he could not send him, for that he did reserve it for the death of his Enemies. Finally, having held his Cards against Amurat and Mahomet, two most fortunate Gamblers, for the space of 24 years, he set up his Rest at last a Winner; dying in Peace at Lissa, then belonging to the State of Venice, Jan. 17. An. 1466, and was there honourably interred. At the taking of which Town by the Turke about nine years after, his Body was digged up by them, not in spite; but honour, that man accounting himself happy who could get any of his Bones to preserve as a Relic, supposing that as long as he had it about him he should be invincible. But with him died the Liberty of his Country, also not long after subdued by the Turke, and made a Province of that Empire, as it still continueth: the name of Albania being by them extended over all Epirus, and so much of Dalmatia also as is under their power.

The Arms of this Kingdom (or rather of the Kings thereof) were Gules, an Eagle Sable.

5. MACEDONIA.

MACEDONIA is bounded on the East with the Ægean Sea, on the West with Albania, on the North with Mesia Superior and a part of Thracæ, and on the South with Epirus and Achaia.

It was first called Æmonia, from Mount Hamus, which shunth up that side hereof which is towards Mesia, after Æmathia, or Emathia, from a King of it called Æmathus; Macedonia, from Macedo, the Son of Deucalion, and the Father of Caranus, the first King of the Line of Alexander, and finally Krim, or the Land of Krim, whereof see 1. Macedon 1. 1. and 8. 5. from Krim the Son of Javan, and Grandchild of Japhet, who was planted here. Anciently it was of more large extent than it is at the present, extending from the Ægean Sea unto the Adriatick, till the taking of Albania out of it, which hath streighted it upon that side, but the rest is as formerly.

The Country taking it together, is very fruitful and pleasant, though on the outward parts thereof begin with rough Mountains and thick Forests; former times much celebrated for its Mines of Gold and Silver, which are long it is exhausted. It contained formerly the Provinces of Æmathia, Pieria, Pelagica, Iphionia, Philottis, Thessalia, Mydonia, Amphaxitis, Paraxia, Edoniz, and many others of less note, inhabited by 152 several Nations: now principally divided (besides Albania) into, 1. Thessalia, 2. Macedonia (specially so called, and 3. Mydonia, which the Turke call Jamboli.

1. THESSALIE hath on the East the Ægean Sea, on the West Albania, on the North Macedonia and Mydonia, on the South Achaia. A sweet and delectable Country it is, the Pleasures and Delights whereof inclined the People to be very effeminate and dissolute in their course of life, made them in love with Luxury and Ease, and much like the Persians in Behaviour, whose Entrance into Greece they did therefore favour. Yet notwithstanding this Debauchedness, they were esteemed the best Horsemen of all the Grecians: by their excellent managing of which creature, (as if they had been one piece with it, and either lent the Horse their Minds, or borrowed his Body) they gave occasion unto the Fiction of the Centaurs, half Men, half Beasts.

It is now called Comenitaria, and of old was very famous for many things, especially 1. for the Hill Olympus of so great height, that it seemeth to transcend the Clouds and is therefore frequently by the Poets used for Heaven itself. 2. For the Hill Othrys, inhabited by the Lapithæ, over whom Pirithous, was King. 3. for the Mountains of Pelion and Ossa, the Dwelling-places of the Centaurs, who, intending to ravish Hippodamia, the new Bride of Pirithous, on her Wedding-day, were slain by Hercules and and the Lapithe. 4. For the delectable Valley of Tempe situate betwixt Ofsa and Olympus, extending in length fix miles, and five in breadth; so beautified with Nature's Gifts, that it was supposed to be the Garden of the Muses. 5. and lastly, For the Dolopes and Myrmidones, (who did here inhabit) over whom Achilles had Command at the Siege of Troy; these last by reason that they were a laborious and thrifty People, being fabled by the Poets to have first been Emmetts, transformed into men at the Prayer of Neptune, when he wanted Soldiers.

--- Mores quos ante tenebat

Nunc quos habent; parcam genus ex patris; laborum Quæstique tenax, & quod quæstia referret.

The custom they of Emmetts still retain,
A sparing Folk, and unto Labour set,
Strangely addicted to all kind of Gain,
And wary Keepers of what e're they get.

Places of most observation in it are, 1. Trica, the Episcopical See of Heliodorus, the Author of that ingenious Piece called the Athiopick History; which he professed, that he chose rather to lose his Bishoprick then consent to the burning of his Book, which a Provincial Synod had adjudged to the Fire. A Piece indeed of rare Contexture and neat Contrivances, without any touch of loose or lascivious Language: honest and chaste Affection being the Subject of it, not such as old or modern Poets shew us in their Comedies or other Poems. For here we have no Incessant mixture of Fathers and Daughters, no Pandarism of old Nurses, no unseemly Action specified where heat of Blood and Opportunity do meet; nor indeed any one passage unworthy of the chaste Ear. 2. Lamia, where the Athomians, after the death of Alexander, hoping to recover their Freedoms, befeged Antipater; which was the last honorable Enterprize undertaken by that great and renowned City, known in old Histories by the name of Bellum Lamiacum. 3. Larissa, situate on the South of Demetrius, but on the same Bay; memorable for the Birth of Achilles, from hence called frequently in the Poets Larissæ Achilles, which Birth of his is ascribed by others to the Town of Phthia, (from whence the Region called Phthiotis takes the nomination) frequently mentioned in the Poets upon that account: and possibly, being neighbouring Cities, the one might be the place of his Birth, and the other of his Habitation. 4. Demetrius, situate on the Bay called Sinus Pelagicus, (now Golfo dell' Armiro) of very great strength by Art and Nature. Which bei g held by the Macedonians, together with Chalcis in the Isle of Eubœa, and the City of Corinth, kept all Greece in awe, and were therefore commonly called the Fetters of Greece; the Græcians never thinking themselves at liberty till those Towns were disannihilated by the Romans. 5. Pharsalia, high to which was fought the great Battle betwixt Cæsar and Pompey for the Sovereignty of the Roman Empire. A Battle more famous then bloody, 6000 only of 300000 which were in the Field on both sides, being therein slain. A Battle before which the Pompeians were in such a miserable Security, that some of them contended for the chief Priesthood, which was Cæsar's Office: others disposed of the Consulship and Preferrments in the City of Rome. Pompey himself being to wretches, that he neither considered into what place it were best to fly if he lost the day, or by what means he might provide for his own Safety, and end the War; as if the War had been made against some ignoble Enemy, and not against that Cæsar who had taken 1000 Towns, conquered 300 Nations, took prisoners one million of men, and slain as many. 6. Philippi, so named from Philip the Macedonian, the first Founder of it; situate in the farther part of the fame Plains of Thessalia, and famous for as memorable a Battle as that before, and of no less consequence:

that namely betwixt Augustus and M. Antonius on the one side, against Brutus and Caïsius on the other; these latter being rather overcome by Chance then Valour. For either of them (thinking the other vanquished) flew himself in the Field; being the two last that ever openly stood out for the common Liberty, and are therefore called by Crematius Cordus Ultimi Romanorum, or the last of the true Roman Spirits. 7. Gomphi, a very ancient City bordering on Epirus. 8. Phœre, in which City Alexander the Tyrant reigned, against whom that noble Captain Pelopidas the Theban fighting was slain in Battle: the Tyrant being not long after murdered by his Wife's Brother, and by that means all Thessaly recovering liberty. 9. Pegafa, or Pagafa, situate on the Bay called Sinus Pelagicus which from hence is sometimes named Pegaficus; in which the Ship called Argo was said to be built, so famous for the renowned Voyage of the Argonauts. The Hill Pelion spoken of before is no far from hence. 10. Pythion or Pitheum, of great note (according to some) for the Pythian Games there celebrated in the honour of Apollo, who hercabouts killed the Serpent Python: the Conquerours in which Games were crowned at the first only with an Oak Garland, but afterwards with one of Laurel. Of which thus the Poet.

Næve operis samam posset abolere Venus;

Infantis sacros celebri carmine Ludos;

Pythia de domiti Serpentis nomine dicitur, &c.

Thus made to speak English by G. Sandys;

Then left the well-deserved memory

Of such an Act in future time should die;

He instituted the so-famous Games

Of free Contention, which he Pythia names

Who Ran, who Wrestled best, or rak'd the ground

With swiftest Wheels, the Oak Garland crown'd.

These Games, together with the Olympick, Isthmian and Nemean, spoken of before, made the four annual Meetings among the Græcians, renowned for the universal Concourse of the noblest Spirits. 11. Dolice, which, together with Pytheum, and 12. Azorum, another City of this Tract, standing near together, are called in Livius the Historian by the name of Tripolis. 13. Hypata, the Metropolis of Thessaly, so called by Heliodorus in his Athiopick History before mentioned, who placeth it near the Bay called Sinus Malianus, now Golfo di Zuni and not far from Mount Oeta, bordering on the Province of Doris: upon which Mountain Hercules, being tortured with a poisoned Shirt sent by his innocent Wife Dejanira, is said to have burned himself; thence called Hercules Oetaeus. Of all which Towns, Lamia, Pagafa and Demetrius, are in the Region called Phthiotis; Larissa, Dolice; Pytheum and Azorum, in that called Pelagis; Gomphi and Tricca in Sphæotis; the rest in Thessalia properly and specially to Naevius.

This Country, at first called Æmonia, afterwards Pelagis, then Pyrrhæa, from Pyrrha the Wife of Dæmon, and finally Thessalia, from Thessalus one of the Companions of Hercules; by Pliny is called Dryopis, Episthii by Strabo, Pelagis by Diodorus, and by Homæus Argis; the name of some chief City or particular Province being figuratively used for the whole. It was divided commonly into four parts, 1. Theffalotis, 2. Iphæotis, 3. Pelagotis, and 4. Phthiotis, the name of Thessalie, or Thessalotis in the end prevailing; and accordingly distributed to several Governments, united finally in the person of Philip, the Father of Alexander, who partly by Force, but specially by Art and Practice, made himself Master of the whole. Continuing in a mixt condition betwixt free and subject under the Macedonian Kings of the 2. Race; it became subject with that Kingdom to the state of Rome, which reckoned reckoned as a part of the Province of Macedon; after a Province of it self, when Macedon was made a Diocese, part of which it was. But from a Province of that Diocese, and a Member of the Eastern Empire, it was made a Kingdom, given with that Title to Boniface Marquis of Monferrat in exchange for Canada, together with the City of Thessalonica, and some part of Peloponessus; at the Division of that Empire amongst the Latines; which Title he affected, in regard that Reiner, the Brother of Boniface his Grandfather, had formerly been created Prince of Thessalie by the Emperor Emanuel, whose Daughter Cyri-Maria (or the Lady Mary) he had took to Wife: In him as it began, so this Title ended; Thessalonica falling to the State of Venice, Thessaly reverting to the Empire when the Greeks recovered it: from whom it was subdued, and added to the Turkish Empire, in the Reign of Amurath the second, Anno 1432.

2. MACEDON specially so called is bounded on the East with Mygdonia, on the West with Albania, on the North with Mount Hæmus, on the South with Thessalia. The Country is for the most part fruitful as before was said, but not surfeiting with Delights as to make the people wanton or effeminate in their course of life; they being naturally good Soldiers, exact observers of military Discipline, and inured to Hardihood, which many signal Victories do most clearly evince both in Greece and Asia.

The Greeks in the pride of their own wits reckoned them amongst the barbarous Nations; and yet, by a strange kind of contradiction, ascribe unto their Country the Seats of the Muses. For in this Country was Mount Pimple, with a Fountain of the same name at the Foot thereof both consecrated to the Muses, from hence called Pimplide. Here also was the Hill Libethirus and the Province of Pieria; from whence the Muses had the names of Libethrides and Pierides; by this last called more frequently than by any other name whatever, especially by the Greeks themselves. But the Birth of Arifotle in this Country does more convince the Græcians of this foolish Arrogance than all the Muses in the world. A man so admirable in the general course of Learning, so universally comprehensive of all Arts and Sciences, that the best witted Græcians might have been his Scholar, and thought it a great Happiness, as King Philip did, that they had any Children to be tutored by him.

The principal Rivers hereof (besides Erigon and Alion spoken of before) are, 1. Axius, at present called Vardaris, rising out of the Hill Scardus, a Branch of Mount Hæmus, and passing through the whole extent of this Country into Sinus Thermæicus, or the Gulf of Thessalonica, as it is now named: the fairest River of these parts, and of sweetest water; but such as maketh all the Cattel black which drink of it. 2. Chabrim 3. Echedorus; both rising out of the mid-land Countries, and both falling into the same Bay also. Besides which there are other three fair and capacious Bays ascribed to Macedon, though two of them belonging properly to Mygdonia; that is to say, Saguntis, now Golfo di monte Sinto, and Teronæica, now the Gulf or Bay of Aionæia, and the third common unto Thrace also, which is Sinus Strymonicus, now the Bay of Gentia.

Towns of most observation in it, according to the several Regions and parts hereof, were for the Almopi, 1. Hornæ, called afterwards Selenicia; 2. Enropus, of which name there were four in Macedon; 3. Apollonia, Of Sinica; 4. Trifolus, 5. Paræopolis, 6. Garsicus, 7. Heralia, for distinction called Heralæa Sinica; there being many others of this name in Greece. In Adonia, bordering toward Thrace, 8. Scardus, 9. Bergis, 10. Am- phipolis, on the River Strymon, with which it is encompassed, whence it had the name; feared to close on the edge of Thrace, that it is questionable to which of them it belongs of right; once garrisoned by the Athenians, and from them taken by Philip the Macedonian in the first of his Fortunes. 11. Panderis, bordering on Thrace also, and by some Writers laid unto it, but I think erroneously: repaired and beautified by Philip before mentioned, by whom it was called Philippi, and situate in a Country so rich in mines of Gold, that the said Philip drew hence yearly 10000 Talents, which make 600000 French Crowns or 140000000 English money. Afterwards made a Roman Colony; and accounted the chief City of Macedonia, as appeareth Act. 16. 12. to the People of which S. Paul writ one of his Epistles. Next in Amethia we have 12. Tyrris in the Mid-lands, bordering upon Thessalie, now called Ceræ, 13. Adessa, called afterwards Ægea, and now Vodena; the first Town of all this Country taken by Cæsar, the Founder of the first Race of the Kings of Macedon. 14. Beræa, on Sinus Thermæicus, honoured with the preaching of Paul and Silas, the Citizens whereof are by S. Luke commended for their readiness in receiving the Gospel, 15. Pella on the same Bay also, the Birth-place of Alexander the Great, from hence called Pellæus Pellæus. 16. Pydnæum upon the same Bay, at the influx of the River Alaconia, in which Cassander befieged and took Olympus the Mother, Roxane the Wife, and Alexander the Heir apparent of Alexander all whom he barbarously murdered. This Cruelty he committed, partly to revenge himself of Alexander, who had once knocked his head and the Wall together; and partly to cry quit with Olympus, who had before as cruelly murdered Aridanus the base Son of Philip, and Eurydice his Wife, with whom Cassander was supposed to be over-familiar. Memorable also is this Town for the great Battle fought near it betwixt Perseus the last King of Macedon and P. Æmilius the Consul, in which Perseus, having shamefully defeated his Army, lost both the Battle and his Kingdom, with no less than 20000 of his foot, which were therein slain; the Romans having to cheap a Victory, that it cost them not above an hundred or sixscore men. 17. Dium, not far from the Hill Olympus, and about a mile from the Sea, of which mile the River Helicon, becoming there a Lake, and called Bathyrus, taketh up one half. It is situate in the Borders toward Thessalie; the way unto it out of Tempe being straight and narrow, and almost impassable, by reason of the Spurs of the Mountains running overtwart it, which, had it been well defended by the Macedonians, would have kept their Country from the Romans, who that way attempted. But Perseus hearing that the Enemy had got into Tempe, only took care to get his Treasure out of Dium, and to abandoned both the Passage and the Town together. 18. Phylæa, more within the Land; as is 19. Eriboæa. But these four last are in that part hereof which is called Pieria.

3. MYGDONIA hath on the East the Ægean Sea, on the West Macedon properly and specially so called, on the North Edonis and Sinus Strymonicus, on the South Sinus Thermæicus, or the Gulf of Thessalonica; so that it is almost a Peninsula, environed on three sides with Water.

Here is in this Country the Hill Athos, standing in a Peninsula, the Isthmus being once cut through by Xerxes but since closed again; 't is to be 70 miles in circuit, 3 days journey long, half a day's in breadth, resembling the shape of a Man lying with his Face upwards: the highest point whereof, covered perpetually with Snow, is fable to cast a Shadow as far as Lemnos. It is exceeding fruitful both in Grains, Fruit, Oil, and Wine, and wondrous plentiful in Hares, according to that of Ovid.

Quot Lepores in Atho, quot Apes pascuntur in Hybla.
 How many Hares on Athos feed,
 What Swarms of Bees on Hybla breed.

It is inhabited only by Greek Monks, whom they call Culivres, of the order of S. Basil, to whom the Hill, commonly called the Holy Mountain, hath been long since dedicated: the place being so privileged by the Grand Seigneur, that neither Turk nor Gracian may inhabit in it, except such Gracians only as profess this life. Of these there are about 6000, dispersed in 42 Monasteries built after a military manner, for fear of Thieves and Pirates, wherewith they were much infested in times past: frequented with great Concourse of People coming thither to behold and adore some Reliques, (for which they are of much esteem;) the free Oblations of those Pilgrims, and some Benevolence from the Turk, which do much respect them, being the chief means of their Subsistence. The manner of their life is like that of the ancient Eremites: poorly clad, their Shirts of Woollen, which they both spin and weave themselves; none of them idle at any time, doing still somewhat for their Livelihood and the advancement of the House of which they are as dressing Vines, felling Timber, yea and building Ships. Few of them give themselves to Study, and some of them are of too gross an Ignorance, that they can neither write nor read. They are bound by their Order to lodge and entertain such Strangers as have occasion to pass that way, to their rank and calling, and that of free cost too, if it be desired.

Towns of most note, according to the several Regions and parts thereof, are, for Mygdonia specially and properly so called, 1. Antigonis, so called from Antigonis a King of Macedon, the first Founder of it. 2. Xylodis. 3. Terpius. 4. Phryse. 5. Afforus; all mentioned by Ptolemy, but not else observable. 6. Apollonia, for distinction sake called Apollonia Mygdonica, to difference it from Apollonia Albania, then a part of Macedon: famous for the Studies of Augustus Cæsar, who here learnt the Greek Tongue. For Amphixia, where was 7. Arithusa; 8. Stragira, now called Stragiras. 9. Thessalonica, situate on the bottom of Sinus Thermicus, now called the Bay of Salonichi; by the name of the Town. Anciently the Metropolis or Head-City of Macedon, the Seat of the Presidius Prætoris for Illyrium after the removal thereof from Sirmium; as also of the Primate of the Greek Church, who resided here.

To the people of this City did S. Paul write two of his Epistles. It continued in great power and credit till the Fall of the Constantinopolitan Empire into the hands of the *Latin*s: at which time it was bestowed first on Boniface Marquis of Monferrat, the new King of Thessaly; after whose death it fell into the State of Venice, who held it till the year 1432, when it was forced by Amurath the 2 to become Turkish. Which notwithstanding, it still preserves the reputation of a beautiful and wealthy City, inhabited by rich Merchants, who drive here a great Trade, especially for the commodities of the Indies; for beauty, Riches and Magnificence, little inferior unto Naples: and though the Turks and Tems make the greatest number of Inhabitants, yet here are reckoned 3 Churches for the use of Christians. As for the Tems, they swarm here in great abundance, that in this City and that of Constantinople only there are reckoned 160000 of them; but generally hated and contemned by all sorts of People, 10. Siderocassa, of old called Chryses, remarkable for its Mines of Gold and Silver, so beneficial to the Turk, that he received hence monthly 18000, and sometimes 30000 Crowns of clavo. Next for Chalcidice, there was 11. Parmus, a Port-

Town. 12. Stratonica, in the Peninsula of Mount Athos. 13. Athos, or Athosa, in the same Peninsula, with a Promontory of the same name, high which it flood. 14. Acauthus, now called Erizzo, on the Bay of the Holy Mountain. And finally in Paravia we have 15. Ampeius, 16. Torona, giving name to the Bay adjoining, called anciently Sinus Toronæus, now Gulf of Stronina. 17. Callandra, on the Sea-side, so called from Callandra King of Macedon, who repaired and beautified it; being before named Potida. 18. Dieris. 19. Mervilis. 20. Pellus, situate in the Cherfoneus or Demy-Iland called Patalus, and by some Patalis: formerly consecrated to the Muses, but before that infamous for the War which the Gians are fabled to have made here against the Gods, at what time it was called Phlegra, the Fields adjoining Campi Phlegras, in which this great Battel is supposed to be fought. The occasion of the Fable was, (as both Theophrastus and Endoxus do expound the fable) That the Inhabitants hereof in those elder times, being men of a most impious and insolent Life, got the name of Gians; when Hercules endeavoured to subdue and reduce to Reason, it happened that there fell a great Tempest of Thunder and Lightning, by which they were constrained to flee and submit themselves. Hence the Report that those Gians made War against the Gods. Others have placed these Phlegra Fields in Thessaly, and perhaps more probably. Certain I am, that some place nearer to the Hills of Pellon, Ossa and Olympus, doth agree best with it: if aless Ossa were not in its narration, who makes those Mountains to be heaped upon one another, for their better reaching to the Skies, and fighting upon even ground, as the saying is. For thus that Poet.

*Afflicte ferunt regnum caelestis Gigantes, Atque congestos fronsit ad sidera Montus.
 At pater omnipotens, missi per Olympum Finibus, & excessu feruntur Pelion Olli.*
 Which may be English in these words:
 The Giants once the throne of Heaven assailed,
 And Hills on Hills unto the Stars erected:
 Till Jove with Thunder his Olympus brake,
 And Pelion did from under Ossa take.

But from those Fables to proceed to more real Stories. This Country was first peopled by Cittim, the Son of Javan, passing over out of Asia minor: in memory whereof here was not only a Town called Cittim, spoken of by Livius l. 42. but the whole Land of Macedon is in the Book of Maccabees called the Land of Cittim, 1 Maccab. v. 1. and the Inhabitants hereof called Cittim in the 8. Chapter of the same Book, v. 5. Spreading in tract of time from one Sea to the other, from the Ægean to the Adriatick, some Colonies of them passed from hence to Italy, and first inhabited that Country, as hath been said. Such as continued in these parts, divided into several Tribes, as in all parts else, became in time to be united in the name of Macedons. A People not much taken notice of in the former times, living a poor and painful life, Goatherds and Shepherds for the most part, scarce able to defend their own Merds for the next Invaider, much less to dream of conquering either Greece or Perfis. And therefore Alexander told them, and not much unjustly, (though by him spoken in passion, and to their Disgrace) that his Father Philip had first made them Gentlemen. For Philip, having learned the Rudiments of War under Epanomachus, (being then an Hostage with the *Theban*s) and by that means becoming acquainted with the Temper and State of Greece, not only freed his own Kingdom from the Illyrians, Thracians, and other barbarous Nations, who had gained upon it; but taking advantage of the Factions raised amongst the Gracians, (which he knew how to feed and cherish for his own improvement)

ment) brought them at first wholly to rely upon him, and after to be subject to him. Inomuch that never any Monarchy had a swifter Growth, nor a more speedy Disolution: there passing not full 40 years from the first of Philip to the last of Alexander; in which space it was both begun, perfected, and broken to pieces. For the Foundation being laid in Murder, Perjury, and Treason, as at first it was, was never likely to be blessed with a long Continuance.

Of these 24 Kings only 6 are famous: viz. 1. Caranans, the first King, originally of Argos, of the Race of Hercules, and by an Oracle commanded to lead a Colony into this Country, and to follow the first Flock of Cattel he saw before him. Being here arrived in a tempestuous stormy day, he espied a Herd of Goats flying the fury of the Weather: These Goats he followed unto Ædella, into which, by reason of the darkness of the Air, he entered undiscovered, none the Town, and in short space became Lord of all the Country. On which occasion as the Goat afterwards became the Arms and Ensign of the Kings of Macedon, so by that Beast those Kings were figuratively designed in the Holy Scripture: of which see Dan, 8. 5. 21. 2. Perdiccas, the fourth King, who at Æge built a Burial-place for all his Successors, assuring his People, that as long as their Kings were there buried his Race should never fail; and so it happened. For the Kingdom of Macedon, after the death of Alexander the Great, who was buried at Babylon, was translated to the Sors of Demetrius, 3. Ewropus, who in his infancy was carried in a Cradle against the Illyrians his Enemies, and returned victorious: This the Macedons did, either because they thought they could not be beaten, their King being present; or persuading themselves that there was none so void of Honour and Compassion as to abandon an Infant, no way able to save himself from Destruction but by the Valour and fidelity of his Servants. 4. Alexander, the Son of Amyntas, famous for a notable Exploit on the Perfis Embassadors; who, being sent from Megabyzus, requested a view of the Macedonian Ladies. No sooner were they entred, but perulantis caris Perfis entrellamis, as Justine relateth the Story, they were called back by this Alexander, sending in their steads young Sprinkals maddently attired; who, upon the like Indignities offered flow these effeminate Asians. After which he behaved himself so discretely, that the Perfis Monarch gave him all Greece between Hæmus and Olympus. 5. Philip, Father to Alexander, who governed first as a Guardian to Amyntas, the Son of Perdiccas his elder Brother; but afterwards took unto himself both the Kingdom and Title of King; which he continued in the Deposition of his Nephew and natural Sovereign, the Murderer of the rest of his Brethren, and the Destruction of all such as opposed led his practice. But, being otherwise a man of approved Abilities, he cleared his own Country of the Illyrians, subdued Acchia Thracæ, and a great part of Peloponnesus, and was chosen General of the Greeks against the Perfis. But as soon as he had made all things ready for this Expedition, he was slain by one Pansanias, a young Gentleman whom he had formerly abused in the heat of his unnatural Lufts. 6. Alexander, the Son of Philip, who recovered such parts of Greece as on the death of his Father had befooled themselves with a hope of Liberty. He subdued Darius the great King of Perfis, Taxiles and Porus Kings of India; founded the Monarchy of the Gracians; and in the height of his Successes was poisoned at Babylon (as it is conceived) by Cassander, one of his great Captains: his Revenue at the time of his death amounting to 300000 Talents yearly. After his death his new-got Empire was much controverted in the point of Succession, he himself dying without lawful Issue, and having at the death bequeathed it to him who was thought most worthy by his Army: and his Souldiers, according to their several affections and Relations; thought their own Leaders most deserving. At last the Title of King (and in effect nothing but the Title) was by consent of the Commanders call on Arideus, a Ballard of Philip, to whom Perdiccas was appointed to be Protector, (for Arideus was a little crazed in his Brain) and to be General of the Army: by whose design he was also married to Eurydice, Daughter to Amyntas, whom Philip had before disposed of that Kingdom. As for the Provinces, they were assigned unto the Government of the chief Commanders, viz. Ægypt to Ptolemy, Syria to Laomedon, Cilicia to Philotas, Media to Pytho, Cappadocia to Eumenes, Pamphylia, Lycia and Phrygia major to Antigonis, Caria to Cassander, Lydia to Menander, Pontus and Phrygia minor to Leontanus, Armenia to Selenus, Perfis to Eusebes, Thrace to Lysimachus, and Macedon it self unto Antipater: the other parts of the Perfis Empire being left to them unto whose hands they were committed in the time of Alexander. But this Division held not long: for Perdiccas being once slain by Ptolemy, and Eumenes made away by Antigonis, these two became quickly too great for the rest; Ptolemy adding Syria and Cyprus to the Kingdom of Ægypt, and Antigonis bringing under his Command not only all Asia minor, but Assyria, Media, and almost all the Eastern parts of the Perfis Empire. Antipater in the mean time, succeeding in the Protectorship, banished Olympias the Mother of Alexander out of Macedonia, as bearing but a Step-dame's love unto Arideus. But he being dead the returned out of Epirus, (the place of her Banishment) into Macedonia, where raising a strong Party amongst the people, he put Arideus and his Wife Eurydice to death, proclaiming Alexander the Son of Alexander by Roxane, both slain not long after by Cassander the Son of Antipater, who, to make sure work, murdered also with the like Cruelty Hercules, the Son of Alexander by Barisue, (another Perfis Lady, as Roxane was) the last Survivor of that House. And so the Royal Family being rooted out, Antigonis took unto himself the Title of King: as did Selenus, who had now recovered all the Perfis Provinces beyond Euphrates. The like did Ptolemy in Ægypt; and Cassander in Macedon.

The second Race of the M A C E D O N Kings.

A. M.
3648	1. Cassander Son of Antipater supposed to have been the Poisoner of Alexander, rooted out the Blood-royal of Macedon. His Reign was full of Troubles and Difficulties. 19.
3667	2. Alexander and Antipater, Sons to Cassander, but but not well agreeing, called unto their Aid Lyfmacbus and Demetrius, by whom they were both in short time murdered. 4.

- 3671 3. Demetrius, son to Antigonus, the powerful King of Asia, after he had in one Battle against Selenus lost both his Father and all his Asian Dominions, settled himself in Macedon: but being there outed by Pyrrius, he fled to Selenus, and with him died. 6.
- 3677 4. Pyrrius, King of Epirus, was by the Soldiers, voluntarily forsaking Demetrius, made King of Macedon: but after 7 months the Soldiers revolted to Lyfmacbus, as being a Macedonian born. 1.

- 3678 5. Lyfmacbus, King of Thrace, being thus made King of Macedon, was in the end vanquished and slain by Selenus, the last Survivor of Alexander's Captains. 7.

- 3685 6. Ceranus, or Ptolemy Cerannus son to Ptolemy of Egypt, having traitorously slain his Friend and Patron Selenus, seized on Macedon: but lost it, together with his Life, unto the Gauls, who then plagued these Countreys. After whose death this Kingdom, being distracted amongst many Competitors, settled at last upon

- 3687 7. Antigonus Gonatus, the Son of Demetrius, who, for his Valour shewn in expelling the Gauls, was made King of Macedon. And though for a while he gave way to Pyrrius, then returning from Italy, yet after the death of Pyrrius he again recovered his Estate, but was outed once again by Alexander the Son of Pyrrius. 36.
- 3723 8. Demetrius II. Son of Antigonus, recovered Macedon from the power of Alexander the Son of Pyrrius. 10.

- 3733 9. Antigonus II. furnished Deson, left by Demetrius as Protector to his young Son Philip, usurped the Kingdom. He diverse times vanquished and crushed the Greacians, beginning then to cast off the Yoke of Macedon. 12.

- 3745 10. Philip, the Son of Demetrius. 42.
- 3787 11. Perseus, the Son of Philip, the last King of Macedon. The Subversion of which Estate was first begun in the time of his Father, who had not only warred upon the Aetolians and other of the Greeks whom the Romans had taken into their Protection, but sided with Antiochus against them. Upon which grounds they sent first Titus Q. Flaminius, one of their Consuls, by whom Philip was vanquished at the Battle of Cynoscephalus, and his Kingdom made Tributary unto Rome. After which picking a Quarrel against Perseus also, managed with variable Success by Licinius, Martius, and others of their Commanders, they dispatched Paulus Aemilius with an Army into Macedon, to bring him to absolute Subjection. Who sped so well, that Macedon was made a Province of the Roman Empire, and Perseus led captive unto Rome, Anno 3789. In which Triumph, besides the Pomp of leading a Captive King in Bonds, Aemilius caused the ready Money which he brought out of Greece to be carried in 750 Vessels, every Vessel containing three Talents; which made so infinite a Sum, that the Roman people were free for many years after from all Taxes and Impediments. A. M. 3789.

Macedon, thus made a Province of the Roman Empire, and afterwards divided into three parts or Provinces, that is to say, Macedonia Prima, Macedonia Secunda, or Salutaris, and Præsalutaria, in the new Model of Constitution became a Diocese, the Diocess hereof containing the Provinces of Crete, Achaia, Old and New Epirus,

Macedonia Prima, and the greatest part of Salutaris, the residue of Salutaris and Præsalutaria (which makes up the Country now called Albania) being laid to the Diocese of Dacia. It continued part of the Eastern Empire till towards the last fatal dissolution of it; though many times harassed and depopulated by the Scythians, Bulgarians, Rosses, and other of the barbarous People, at their several Invasions of it. Finally, it was conquered by the Turks, first, under the Conduct of Bajazet, their fourth King, taking Nicopolis, a Town hereof bordering on Thrace, and lying North of Sinus Strimonicus now the Bay of Contes; and after under Amurat the second their sixth King, making themselves masters of Thessalonica, the chief City of it, and therewith of all the Country. By reason of which many Invasions and last Defolation by the Turks, there is scarce one of all those many Cities before mentioned now of any eminence, except Thessalonica only; the rest being miserably destroyed. And for the Country it self, it is governed by a Turkish Sanzack, under the Beglerbeg of Greece; his annual Revenue being but 8000 Crowns, nor any thing else required of him then to maintain 100 Horse in ordinary pay for defence of his Province, and to find 400 Horse on extraordinary occasions, as the Grand Seigneur shall command him.

6. THRACE.

THRACE hath on the East Pontus Euxinus, on the North the Hill Hæmus, on the South the Ægean Sea and part of Macedon. It is a very large and goodly Province, extending 20 days journey in length, and 7 days journey in breadth; and, in relation to the Heavens, reaching unto the 44. Degree of the Northern Latitude; so that the longest Day in Summer is about 17 hours, three quarters.

By several men, according to the times they lived in, hath been called by divers names: by Stephanus Asia, by Suidas Odrisia, by Lycophron Cretania, by some Thraci, Scythia by Iosephus the Hebrew Thyras. But generally it is called Thrace, or Thracia, and that, as some from Thrax the Son of Mars, as others, from Thracia, an Indchantress: more probably from the Perity and barbarous condition of the first Inhabitants, the name in the Original Greek bearing that construction: most likely from Thyras, the Son of Japhet, who first planted here, in memory of whom it did retain the name of Thyras in the time of Iosephus, besides many other footsteps and remembrances of him in the names of many of their Towns, and some of their Princes, of which we have already spoken in our general Preface. Finally, by the Turks it is called Romania; either from the many Roman Colonies which were planted here, or because Constantinople, the chief City of it, was anciently called Novæ Roma: and by that name it is now called in most modern Writers.

The Country generally is neither of a rich Soil nor a pleasant Air: the Corn and other Fruits, by reason of the coldness of the Climate, scarcely ripening; the Vines yielding more Shade than Juice, and the Trees for the most part more Leaves than Fruit: yet in some parts there be many large and goodly Plains, where they reap good flocks of Cattle, but of Pulse especially; and towards the Sea side they have plenty of Wine, which Pliny much commended both for strength and goodness.

The People anciently were very bold and valiant, and called by some Antiochiæ, because every man was a Law to himself. So that it was truly said by Herodotus, that if they had either been all of one mind, or under one King, they had been invincible. Of Manners they were rude and savage somewhat near to Brutishness; buying their Wives, and selling both their Sons and Daughters, as in open Market: in that time facilitated by the Turks, who possess their Country. The men were more courageous than comely, wearing Cloaths according to their Conditions ragged and uncleanly. The Married-woman were in love to their Husbands so constant, that they willingly sacrificed themselves at their Funerals. The Virgins were betrothed not by their own Parents, put the common Fathers of their Cities. Such as brought neither Beauty nor Virtue for their Dowry, were put off according to their Mone; small times sold as other Cattel in the Markets.

In matters of Religion they worship Mars, Bacchus, Diana, Mercury, as did other Gentiles: wearing especially by the first, from whom they bragged themselves to have been descended. But their chief national Deities were one Zamolxis, sometimes a Native of this Country, who, having been brought up under Pythagoras, and returning home, prescribed them good and wholesome Laws, assuring them that, if they did observe the same, they should go unto a place when they left this World in which they should enjoy all manner of Pleasure and contentment. By this means having gotten some opinion of a Divinity amongst them, he absented himself, and after was worshipped as their God. Upon these Principles, when any one was born amongst them, his Parents and other Friends, sitting round about him, lamented bitterly his coming into the World, ripping up all the Miseries and Afflictions whereto he was to be exposed in this present Life, and so deplored his condition as absolutely miserable and unhappy. But, on the contrary, when any one chafed to die, they buried him with all Joy and Alacrity, highly rejoicing that by this means he was freed from the Crosses and Distresses of this wretched world. Which is expressed thus briefly (after his wonted manner) by my Author, Lugentur Puerperia, natiq; deflorant; Funera casta, Fœdæ, Junct, & voluti Sacra cantant Insuper celebrantur. A piece of such fond and orthodox Divinity, that I wonder how they hit upon it in those times of Darkness, and favouring very much of the Primitive Pity, by which the Obits of the Saints were kept as Festivals, no notice being taken of the day of their Births. According to that of the good old Writer, Non Nativitatem, sed Mortem, Sanctorum Ecclesiæ pretiosam & festam judicant.

Here lived the Tyrant Polymnestor, who villainously murdered Polixenus, a younger Son of Præmarus for which fact Hecuba, the young Prince's Mother, scratched him to death. Here also lived the Tyrant Ternus, of whom before in Ptolemy and Diomedes, who, using to feed his Horses with Man's Flesh, was slain by Hercules, and cast unto his Horses. And finally, here reigned King Corys, whom I mention not as a Tyrant, but propose as a pattern of rare Temper both in mastering and preventing Passion. For when a Neighbour Prince had sent him a Present of Glasses of the purest Metal, and no less accurate in the Workmanship or Fashion of them, (having dispatched the Messenger with all the due Complements of Majesty and Gratitude) he broke them all to pieces, least if by mishap any of his Servants should do the like, he might be stirred to an intemperate Choler.

Chief Mountains in this Country, besides Hæmus spoken of already, are 1. Rhodope, the highest next Mount Hæmus in those parts of the World; craggy and rough, and the Top thereof continually white with Snow: memorable for the Fate and Fable of Orpheus, who in a melancholic humour (having lost his Wife) betook himself to these Mountains, where with his Mute he affected both Woods and Beasts, who are said to have danced unto his Mute: from this place of his Abode called Rhodopeus, from his Country Thracius, Non me carminibus vincet nec Thracius Orpheus, &c. as the Shepherd boasteth in the Poet. The truth is that he was a man of an heavenly Mute, and by his Dictates and good Council, laid down in Verse, 'first of all civilized this People, and weaned them by degrees from their Bestiality. Hence the occasion of the Fable. But for Mount Rhodope it self, it is in the midst of this Country, towering it from Mount Hæmus towards the West; which, with the Spurs and Branches of it, and the Plains adjoining, lying betwixt the River Nessus on the West, and Mæis or Niger on the East, made up that Province of the Empire called Rhodope, by the name of the Mountain. 2. Pangæus, rich in Mines of Silves. 3. Melampus, shooting towards the Sea, full of Rocks and Cliffs. And 4. Orbelus, lying towards Macedon, where there is a little Region from hence called Orbelia.

Principal Rivers hereof, besides Strymon spoken of before, the Boundary in some places betwixt this and Macedon, are, 1. Nessus, by the Greacians now called Mæis, by the Turks Charafas, which rising out of Mount Hæmus, falleth into the Sea near the Isle of Traissus. 2. Athyra, in which name the memory of Thyras the Son of Japhet seems to be preserved; which, rising in Mount Hæmus also, leaveth it self in the Propontic; as doth 3. Bathyrius, another River rising from the same Mount Hæmus. 4. Hebrus, the most noted River of all this Country, rising out of Rhodope, and falling into the Ægean near the Isle of Samosbrace: a River or to flow a Course, that it is not easy to discern which way it goeth; but memorable in the Poets for the Fate of Orpheus, who, being torn in pieces by the Thracian Women, had his Limbs thrown into it by those Furies. 5. Therapsus, good against the Scab both in man and beast, issuing out of 30 Fountains, some hot, some cold, with the pleasantness of whose Waters Darius the King of Perfia was so delighted, that he erected a Pillar in honour of it.

The chief Towns were, 1. Abdera, now called Prolypsis, situate not far from the Fall of the River Nessus into the Ægean, the Birth-place of Democritus, who spent his whole Life in laughing at the Follies of others. 2. Ptoleida, of old a Colony of Athens, from whom it revolted, and submitted to the State of Corinth. But the Athenians, not enduring the Alliance, beleaguered it, and after two years Siege, and the expence of 2000 Talent, could not recover it again but on Com. offition. 3. Amis, on the Ægean Sea; a Town of great Strength and Safety, and therefore used by the latter Constantinopolitan Emperours for the securing of great persons. For hitler Michael Palæologus sent Jabbar, the Turkish Sultan, flying to him for Aid; and hitler Mahomet the great Fat Demetrius, Prince of Poloponnesus, when he yielded up his Country to him: both under colour of providing for their safe and Safety; but in plain terms to keep them in honourable Prisons. 3. Lyfmacbia, on the Sea-shore; one of great importance, built by Lyfmacbus, who after Alexander's death laid hands on this Country: afterwards garrisoned by Philip the Father of Perseus; on the withdrawing of whose Forces, for some other Service it was taken and raised to the ground by the barbarous Thracians, and all the People of it carried into Captivity; but by Antiochus the Great re-edified and new-peopled again, moved thereunto by the convenient situation and former glories of the place. 5. Philippopolis, so called from Philip King of Macedon, the Father of Alexander, who built and fortified it as a Bridge to hold in the Thracians; so called also Trimonium, from three Hills on which it was situate: beautified in the time of the Romans, with a goodly Amphitheatre, continuing entire and whole till these latter days, and might have lasted longer by many Ages, did not the Turks daily take away the Stones thereof, which are all of Marble, to make money of them. Here are also many other ancient Monuments, though the Town here was huffed and destroyed, the Scythians at one time killing in it above 100000 persons: which notwithstanding is a populous and well-frequented, by reason of the convenient situation of it on the River Hebrus, which they now call Mariza. 6. Trajanopolis, so called from the Emperor Trajan, by whom it was either founded or repaired; indifferently well peopled, and still preserving its old name. 7. Selymbria, on the Coast of the Propontic Sea; beautified with a commodious Port for receipt of small Vessels, and many Bays adjoining capable of greater; by Ptolemy called Selybria and Olybria by Suidas. 8. Apollonia, upon Pontus Euxinus or the Black Sea, now Sisopolis. 9. Phinopolis, on the same Sea also. 10. Nicopolis at the foot of the Mount Hemus, there being another of that name near the River Nessus. 11. Perinth on the Propontic Sea, near the Influx of the River Arvis. A Town of great note in the ancient Business of Greece; of great strength, and peopled formerly with men of such resolutions, that they maintained their Liberty against Philip of Macedon, after almost all the rest of Thrace had submitted to him. 12. Heraclea, at first a Colony of the Thebans, and afterwards of much request in the time of the Romans, as being beautified with the Palaces of Persian, Domitian, and Antoninus, Emperours of Rome, as also with an Amphitheatre cut out of one entire Marble, and accounted one of the World's seven Wonders; and finally, made the Metropolis of the Province of Thrace, one of the Provinces of the Diocese of Thrace, whereof more anon. 13. Olynthus, called by Xenophon the greatest City of Thrace; as possibly enough it was in Power and Riches, though not in greatness of Extent. A Colony of the Athenians, rich in Trade, and Mistress of a fair and goodly Territory adjoining to it: the People whereof had been malicious Enemies to the Kings of Macedon, which principally induced Philip spoken of before, to set upon them. In which Attempt he sped so well, that what he could not get by Force he obtained by Money, bribing some of the principal Officers to betray it to him. For the recovery whereof Demosthenes oft moved the People of Athen, in those elaborate Orations called the Olynthiacks. 14. Sestos, in the Thracian Chersonese, which, being a Peninsula abutting over against Troas on the Asian side, is now called Saint George's Arm. Opposite whereunto on the other side of the Water, is the Town or Abydos, remarkable for the Tragical Loves of Hero and Leander, celebrated by Metastasio in old Greek Poet. 15. Callipolis, on the Northern Promontory of this Chersonese, the first City of note that ever the Turks possessed in Europe; taken by Solyman, the Son of Orchan, the second King of the Ottoman Race, Anno 1358; from whence they easily and in little time spread themselves all over the rest of Thrace: the ordinary passage of late times betwixt Europe and Asia, by reason of the convenient Harbour and safe Anchorage. 16. Cardia, seated on the Western side of it, opposite to the Isle of Lenos; the Birth place of Emmenes, who, being a poor Carrier's Son, attained to such an ability in the Art of War, that after the death of Alexander the Great, under whom he served, he seized on the Provinces of Cappadocia and Paphlagonia, and siding (though a stranger to Macedon) with Olympias and the Blood Royal against the Greek Captains, vanquished and flew Craterus, and divers times drove Antigon (afterwards Lord of Asia) out of the Field. But being by his own Soldiers betrayed, he was by them delivered to Antigon, and by him slain. 17. Sardica, situate towards Mount Hemus, memorable for the Council there held against the Arrians, Anno 351. 18. Adrianople, seated near the middle of Thrace, called anciently Ufudama; but got this name from Adrian the Emperour, who repaired and beautified it: made subject to the Turks by Bajazet, Anno 1361: from the taking of it made the Seat of the Turkish Kings, till the taking of Constantinople by Mahomet the Great, by whom it was removed unto that City. 19. Pera, opposite to Constantinople, on the farther side of the Water, (the word doth signifie in the Greek;) by some called Galata; once peopled by a Colony of Genouefe, as the Mart and Factory of that State; taken by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1453; but still replenished, for the most part, with Christian Merchants and Artificers.

But the chief glory of this Country, and of all the East, is the renowned City of 20. Constantinople, seated in so commodious a place for Empire, that it overlooks both Europe and Asia, and commands not only the Propontis and Bosphorus but the Euxine Sea. First founded by the Byzants, and from him named Byzantium; but being taken by the Perfians, and from them recovered by the Byzants, (urwilling that the Perfians should grow strong in Europe) it was repaired and fortified by Constantine, one of their Commanders, 663 years before the Birth of our Saviour. In vain it was besieged by Philip of Macedon, and of great strength in the Flourish of the Roman Empire. The Walls were of a just height, every Stone whereof was joyned with Couplets of Brass, that the whole seemed but one entire Piece; adorned besides with Towers, Bulwarks, and other Arts of Fortification. Siding with Niger in his War against Severus the Emperour, it endured a Siege of three years against all the Forces of the Romans: during which time the people were so distressed by Famine, that men meeting in the Streets would draw and fight, the Conquerour feeding on the Vanquished. For want of Artillery to discharge on the Assaults, they call down upon them whole Stones made of Brains, and the like curious Imagery Houles they pulled down to get Timber for Shipping; the Women cutting off their Hair to inch out their Tackle: and having thus patched up a Navy of 500 Sail, it was left all by one Tempest. Compelled to yield by this Misfortune, the principal of the Nobility were put to the Sword, the Wealth of the Inhabitants given for a Prey to the Soldiers, the Walls thereof dismantled, and the Town left in rubbish. Yet there appeared so much of Majesty and Beauty in the very Ruins, Ut mireris utrum verum qui primi exstruxerunt, vel corum qui disceperunt, fuisse demeritis, vires sint potiores, as Herodian hath it. He edified it towards by the Emperour Constantine, he honoured it with his own name, and made it the chief Seat of the Roman Empire. The City was finished May 11. Anno 331; and, being so finished, was indowed with all the Privileges of Rome, an equal number of Senators, of the Annual Consul, and all other Officers of State, chosen out of both; the Citizens of the one being free of the other, and capable of all places of most Trust and Power. For that cause it was called NOVA ROMA, in Rome Fort that cause it was called NOVA ROMA, in Rome following times. This City be adorned also with magnificent Buildings, curious Statues, and such like Ornaments, transported hither from Old Rome; which City he spoiled of more costly Pieces than any twenty of his Predecessors had brought unto it. At this day the chief Buildings are the Turk's Seraglio and the Temple of Saint Sophia; which as they differ not much in place and situation, so as little in Magnificence and State. The Temple of Saint Sophia was, if not built, yet re-edified, by the Emperour Justinian. It is built of an Oval form, surrounded with Pillars of admirable workmanship, adorned with spacious and beautiful Galleries, roofed all over with with Mosaic work, and vaulted underneath; very strong for the Fabric, and pleasing for the Sight. The Doors are every curiously wrought and plated; one of which by the Superstitious people is thought to have been made of the planks of Noah's Ark. And yet this Temple is little more than the Chancel of the Ancient Church, which contained in length 263 foot, and 180 in breadth; and yet to our Saint Paul's in London may seem for the biggness to have been but a Chappel of Ease. But what it wants in Greatness, it hath gained in Beauty, and in the Elegancy of the Building, wherein it is thought to exceed all the Fabricks in the whole World. The Sides and Floor are all flagged with excellent Marble, and before the Entrance is a goodly Portico, or Porch, in which as well the Christians, who visit it out of Curiosity, as the Turks, who repair thither for Devotion, are to leave their Shoes. By Mahomet the Great, after the taking of the City, it was converted to a Turkish Mosque, as it still continueth; frequented by the Grand Seigneur almost every Friday which is the Sabbath of that People. Near hereunto standeth the Palace or Seraglio of the Ottoman Emperour, on the North-East Angel of the City, where formerly stood the ancient Byzantium; divided from the rest of the City by a Wall containing three miles in Circuit, and comprehending goodly Groves of Cypress intermixed with Plains, delicate Gardens, artificial Fountains, and all variety of Pleasures which Luxury can affect or treasure compass. The Palace it self, enjoying a goodly prospect in the Sea, was first built by Justinus the Emperour, afterwards much enlarged by the Ottoman Race, containing three great Courts one within another: the Buildings yielding unto those of France and Italy, for the neat contrivances, but far surpassing them for Cost and Curiousness.

As for the City it self, it is said to be 18 miles in compass, and to contain 700000 living souls; yet would be more populous than it is, if the Plague, like a cruel Terrible Angel, did not every third year to rage amongst them. It is fortified towards the Land with three strong and high Walls, the one higher than the other, the outermost highest of them all: towards the Sea with one Wall only, built after the old fashion with many Towers, which very strongly flanker and defend the same. But formerly both the Town and Chersonese in which it standeth were defended from the Incurfions of the barbarous people by a strong Wall built on the very Isthmus of it, some ten miles from the City, reaching from one side to the other: the work of Alexandrus who succeeded Zeno, Anno 494. A City which a far off gives to the Eye a most pleasing object: to intermix with Gardens and beset with Trees, that it seems a City in a Wood, but being entered, it much deceiveth the expectation which it promised, the Buildings of it being mean, if not contemptible. The Streets for the most part are exceeding narrow, but raised on two Stories high, for the greater Cleanliness: the Houses but of one Story high, frame of rough Stone, and some of Timber, without any outward Grace or exterior Ornamenting; in many places nothing but low Sheds or rows of Shops; and in some places long dead Walls belonging unto great men's Houses. The principal Beauty of the whole, next to some Monuments of Antiquity, which are still preserved, and the Tombs or Sepulchres of some of the Ottoman Kings, which are very sumptuous, are the Mosques or Temples of the Turks, about eight thousand in number; and the Port or Haven, so conveniently profound, that Ships of greatest Burthen may safely lay their Sides to the sides thereof, for the receipt or discharge of their Lading; and so commodiously seated on the Thracian Peninsula, that there is no Wind, whatsoever it be, which blows not in foule Shipping to it. But that which gives the greatest Pleasure to the sight from the Hills adjoining is the Situation of it on seven Mountains, most of them crowned with Magnificent Mosques, built all of white Marble, round in form, and finished on the top with gilded Spires, reflecting the Sun-beams with a marvellous Splendour. On the first whereof standeth the Ruines of Constantine's Palace, exceeding stately to behold. On the second; a fair Turkish Mosque, built on the Palace anciently belonging to the Greek Patriarch. On the third stands a stately Mosque, the Sepulchre of Mahomet the second; and a very large Hospital, for entertainment of Pilgrims and relief of the poor: the Annual Rents whereof are valued at 200000 Cheequines. On the fourth and fifth the Sepulchres of Selimus the first, and Bajazet the second. On the sixth the Mosque and Sepulchre of Solyman the Magnificent, numbered amongst the present wonders of the World. And on the seventh the Temple of Saint Sophia, and the Turks Seraglio, spoken of already. In which respect it is called Novus Jerusalem by Nicetas, Orbis sepelialis by Paulus Diaconus; and to acknowledge to be by Tamus Dunja, Phineas Morison, G. Sands, and other of our modern Travellers, the Eye-witnesses of it. So that if there be any Mystery in the number of Seven, or that the fitting of the great Whore on a seven-headed Beast, be an assured direction to find out the Antichrist; we may as well look for him in Constantinople, or Nova Roma, where the Great Turk, the professed Enemy of Christ and the Christian Faith, hath his Seat and Residence, as amongst the seven Hills of Old Rome, where the Pope resideth. Or, if his sitting in the Temple of God shew us where to find him; we may as well look for him in the Temple of Saint Sophia, now a Turkish Mosque, as in Saint Peter's Church at Rome, still a Christian Temple.

But to return again unto Constantinople. As it was made by Constantine the Imperial City, and consequently the chief City of the East in all Civil matters; for it came in little time to have a great Sway also in Affairs of Religion. The Christian Faith is said to be first preached in Byzantium by Saint Andrew the Apostle, the first Bishop thereof. Afterwards spreading over Thrace, and the Churches thereof being regulated by many Bishops, the chief Preeminence in matters which concerned those Churches was given unto the Bishops of Heraclea, Heraclea being at that time the Metropolis or principal City of the Province. But after that Constantinople was built by Constantine, and made the Imperial City, as before was said, it did not only over-top Heraclea, and draw unto it self the Metropolis Dignity, but stood in Competition with the other Patriarchal Churches for the supreme Power: inasmuch as at the second General Council holden in this City it was unanimously decreed, that the Patriarch thereof should in degree of Honour be next unto the Bishop of Rome, and above those of Antioch and Alexandria; the same Decree being confirmed in the Council of Chalcedon also. By which not only all the Churches in the Diocese of Thrace, but also of Natolia, or Asia minor, (except Cilicia and Isauria, which remained to the Patriarch of Antioch) containing no less than 28 of the Roman Provinces, were made subject to him. And though Pope Leo the first, pretending only the preservation of the Privileges of those two great Churches, but indeed fearing left New Rome might in the end get the Precedency of the Old, did oppose this Act, and some of his Successors persisted in the same Resistance: yet they were forced in the end to give way unto it, especially after the Emperour Justinian had by his Imperial Edict confirmed the same; by whom it was finally ordered, Seniores Romæ Papam primum esse omnium Sacrorum, beatissimum autem Archiepiscopum Constantinopolis.

populous, Novae Romae, secundum habere locum, that is to say, that the Pope of Rome should have the first place in all General Councils, and the Bishop of Constantinople, or New Rome, should have the second. Encouraged where-with, and with the countenance and favour of the Emperour Mauritius, John Patriarch of Constantinople, in the time of Gregory the Great, took to himself the Title of Universal or Oecumenical Bishop, the Pastor-General (as it were) of the Church of Christ. And though Pope Boniface, by the Grant of that bloody Tyrant Phocas, got that Title from him: yet the Patriarchs of Constantinople made good their ground, never submitting either themselves or their Churches to the Pope's Authority; being for that cause specially accounted by the Church of Rome for Schismatics, and accordingly reviled and persecuted with all kind of Indignities. How it succeeded with these Patriarchs in the times ensuing, and by what means their Jurisdiction was extended over all Greece, Asiatic, part of Poland, and many other Churches in the North and East, hath been said already. Certain it is, the constant Residence of the Emperours from the time of Constantine gave great ground unto it: of whom I should here add the names, but that I must first turn up the affairs of Thrace before the Building of this mighty and predominant City, and take a brief view of the rest of those Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Greece.

Concerning which we are to know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it had the names of Strymonii, Bardi, Dolenci, Sapei, Sai, and some others, united by most Writers in the name of Thracians. They were governed at first by the Kings or Princes of their several Tribes, as most Nations else, distinguished from the common People, as in other Pomps, do most especially by their Gods, which their Kings had to themselves apart, and were not to be worshipped by the best of their Subjects. These not agreeing well together for the common good, it gave the Athenians, Spartans, Thebans, and other Nations of the Greeks, a good opportunity to invade their Country, to seize on the Sea-Towns thereof, and plant Colonies in them: the Country in those times being meanly peopled, and consequently giving that advantage unto the Graecians as the Indies in these latter times have to the Spaniards, Portugueses, English, Hollanders, and all other Adventurers. Such of them as lay next to Macedon, proving bad Neighbours thereunto upon all occasions, at last provoked Philip the Father of Alexander, to put in for a share, who, being chosen Arbitrator betwix two Competitors for that Kingdom, (drawn at last into fewer hands) came not unto the Council with such poor Attendants as Justice and Piety, but with a great and puissant Army; wherewith having vanquished and slain the two Pretenders, he pronounced Sentence for himself, and made Thrace his own, compelling the Inhabitants to pay him the tenth part of their Revenue for his yearly Tribute. After the death of Alexander this Country was seized on by Lysimachus, as his part of the Spoil, who here built the City Lysimachia, from hence invading Dacia, Macedon, and the neighbouring Regions: and he being dead, the Thracians, now accustomed to a foreign Yoke, were either Subject, or at least Tributaries, to the Macedonians. Aiding them in their Wars against the Romans, they incurred the displeasure of that People; who, having ferried their Affairs in other places, and repulsed the Cimbri, thought he fit time to call the Thracians to account for their former Actions: but sped for ill in the Attempt, that Porcius Cato lost his whole Army in the Onset, cunningly intercepted in their Woods and Fastnesses. Dido the Prator, coming in whilst the Thracians were busy in the Chase, gave them such aid, that he deferred a Triumph for it, and made the Victory more easy to Metellus, who succeeded Cato in that Charge, and triumphed also over them; as also did Lucullus on another Victory A. U. C. 680. Broken with so many ill Successes, they were finally subdued by Piso in the time of Augustus; and became so obsequious to that fortunate Prince, that Rhemenaces, a great and puissant King thereof, aided him with a strength of Horse against the Pannonians and Ilyrians, who had then rebelled. Afterwards being made a Province of the Roman Empire, in Constantine's new Model it became a Diocese under the Præfatus Prætorio Orientis; Thrace it self being cast into four Provinces, that is to say, Thrace specially so called Hemimontum, Rhodope, and Europa; Scythia and the Lower Mæsia, spoken of before, being added to it: of which the Presidents of Rhodope and Hemimontum were to be appealed from to the Præfatus Prætorio, as the others were, but only to the Prefect of Constantinople, the Imperial City. But as Alfonsus King of Castile, funneled the Wife, was once heard to say, (never the wiser for so saying) That had he stood at the elbow of Almighty God when he made the World, he would have permitted him some things might have been better ordered: to give me leave to play the fool, and to say this here, that had I stood at Constantine's Elbow, I would have counselled him to lay the Diocese of Thrace to the Prefect of Ilyricum, who had originally only the Dioceses of Macedon and Ilyricum under his Command; and not have placed it under the Prefect of the East, who had both Asia and Aegypt under his Authority. For being that there lay Appeals from the Vickers or Lieutenants of the several Dioceses to their ferial and respective Prefects, how great a trouble must it be to the Subjects of Thrace on every occasion of Appeal to pass to Antioch, there to complain unto the Prefect of the Orient, when Serminum and Tusulanica, the ordinary Residences of the Præfatus Prætorio for Ilyricum, were so hard at hand? But Constantine was an absolute Prince, and might do what he listed. He had not else removed his Seat far towards the East, and left the Western parts of the Empire open to the Barbarous people, out of a fancy only to preserve the Eastern. For that it was a Fancy only the event did shew: the Persians for all this prevailing more than ever formerly, and Thrace it self, though honoured with the Imperial City, and planted with so many Roman Colonies, so ill inhabited, that a great part thereof lay waste and desert many Ages after. Inasmuch as the Goths, being by the Huns driven over the Danube, were by the Emperor Valens planted in this Country, (the Emperor having a design to use them in his following Wars, where not contented with the Portion allotted to them, they bid fair for all, wasting the whole Province, taking divers Towns, and ending, ering Constantinople it self, from whence they were not driven. Valens himself being killed in the War against them) but by the coming of some Saracens to the Aid of the Citizens. Nor could the Residence of the Emperours so protect this Country, but that it was continually harassed and depopulated by the Scelaves, Bulgarians, Russes, Saracens, and other Barbarous people falling in upon it; nor hinder one Bryennius in the time of Michael Duca and Nicephorus Bonatiates, from assuming to himself the Title of King of Thrace; nor finally prevent the Turks of the Ottoman Race from getting ground every day on the Lesser Asia, inreaching upon Thrace it self, and in the end obtaining the Imperial City.

And here perhaps it is expected, considering the Turks are now possessed of Thrace and the rest of Greece, that we should make relation of the Nature of that People, their Customs, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But

But the discourse thereof we will defer till we come to Trocomania, a Province of Asia from whence they made their first Inundations, like to some unrefillable Torrent, into Perfia, and after into the other parts of the World now subject to them. And therefore letting that alone till another time, we will proceed to our Description of the rest of Greece, consisting of the Islands scattered in the Ægean, Propontick, Ægean, Cretan, and Ionian Seas: leaving out such as properly belong to Asia, till our Description of that Country, though otherwise Greek Islands, and so accounted both for their Language and Original.

7. The Islands of the PONTICK and PROPONTICK Seas.

Before we come to the Descriptions of these Islands, we must first look upon the Seas in which they lie; beginning with the PONTICK first, because the greatest, and that which doth communicate and convey its Waters unto all the rest. Asen made up originally of the Confluence of those mighty Rivers (the greatest in those parts of the world) which do fall into it, that is to say, the Danubius, Rhithenes and Tanais, falling out of Europe, besides many other fair and large Rivers, (though of lesser note) to the number of at least an hundred, which pay Tribute to it: the whole compass of it being 2700 miles; in form by some resembled to a Scythian Bow when it is bent. A Sea not so salt as many others, and therefore much annoyed with Ice in Winter; seldom remitted in the Spring on the Northern Shore. The Traffick of it is wholly in a manner engrossed by the Turks, who is Master of all the Sea-coast of it, save what belongs to the Polonian and Crim-Tartar, at first it was called Ægeus from the Insolpitiableness, of the neighbouring People, which being brought to some Conformity caused the Sea to be called Ægeus. By Florus it is called Mare Sinifrom, because in the way from Rome to Asiaminor it lay upon the left hand, as the Mediterranean did upon the right. It is commonly called at this time Mare Maggiore, for its greatness; and the Black Sea, because of the great Mists thence arising. Others not unprobably affirm that it is called the Black Sea, from the dangerous and black Shipwrecks here happening; for it is a very dangerous Shore, full of Rocks and Sands; and for this cause there is on the top of an high Tower a Lantern, in which there is a great Pan full of Pitch, Rosin, Tallow, and the like, in dark nights continually burning, to give warning to Mariners how near they approach unto the Shore. This Sea, being the biggest of all those parts, gave occasion to them which knew no bigger to call all Seas by the name of Pontus, as Ovid, Omnia pontus erant, decenter quæque littora pontis; and in another place of the same Poet, —nil nisi pontus & ær: a better reason doubtless of the name, than that of the Etymologists, Pontus, quia ponte caret. Of this Sea the chief Isles are Tynarus, and Eritubius, little famous.

From hence the Sea binding Southwards is brought into narrower Bounds, not being fully a mile broad, and is called the Thracian Bosphorus: Thracian, for its Site next Thrace; and Bosphorus, for that Oxen have swam over it. It hath no Island worth naming. It is fortified on each side with a very strong Castle. That on the Asian side, being the older and the lesser, is by the Greeks called Asiaca-Prom, by the Turks named Accechisar; the other, just opposite to it, is by the Turks called Genichisar, by the Greeks named Neocæsion, or New Castle. This last was the work of Mamomet, furnished the Great, in the beginning of his Reign; in indignities not inferior to a little City, built by him in or near the place of the ancient Damalis.

environed with a Wall 22-foot broad, and containing three great Towers, their Wall exceeding 10. years in thickness; exceedingly well stored with all sorts of Ordnance and Ammunition. By the English they are commonly called the Black Towers; partly because seated at the Entrance of the Ægean or Black Sea, and partly because they serve as a Prison for Malefactors of principal note, who seldom are discharged thence till released by death.

This Streight, having continued 26 miles in length, openeth it self into the Propontis, 300 miles in compass, confined with Thrace on the one side, and with Bithynia on the other; so as they which fall in the middle may defy the Land on all parts. Now called Mæris di Marmara, from the Island Marmora, which, formerly called Proconnesus, hath for its abundance of Marble purchased this new name. The Soil is apt for Vines, and not deficient of Corn; yielding also Good Pasturage for Goats, whereof here is plenty; with an incredible number of Partridges amongst the Rocks: the Country of Asiaticæ, a famous Poet, who flourished in the times of Cæsar. Anciently it had in it two Cities of the same name with the Island, called the Old and New Proconnesus: the former first built by the Milefians, an Asian People; the latter by the Natives of this Island. But both these being long since decayed, it hath now only a small Village towards the North, with an Haven to it, inhabited by the Greeks, as is all the rest of the Island: such Christian Slaves as are in great numbers employed here by the Turks in digging Marble for their Mosques and other Buildings being only Sojourners, not House-keepers, and therefore not accounted amongst the Inhabitants. Here is also in this Propontick Sea the Isle of Cyzicus; but being it is on Asia side, we shall there speak of it.

The Sea having gathered her waters into a lesser Channel is called Hellepont, from Helle, Daughter of Atthamas King of Thebes, who here drowned. Over this famous Streight did Xerxes, according to Herodotus, make a Bridge of Boats to pass into Greece: when when a sudden Tempest had shrewdly battered, he caused the Sea to be beaten with 300 Stripes, and cast a pair of Fetters into it, to make it know to whom it was subject. Xerxes in this Expedition wasted over an Army consisting of two millions and 164710 fighting men, in no less than 2208 Bottoms of all sorts. When all the Persians footed the King in the unconquerableness of his Forces. Artabanus told him that he feared no Enemies but the Sea and the Earth; the one yielding no safe Harbour for such a Navy, the other not yielding sufficient subsistence for so multitudinous an Army. But his return over this Hellepont was as dejected as his Passage magnificent; his Fleet being broken by the Valour of the Greeks and the fury of the Sea, that, for his more speedy Flight, he was compelled to make use of a poor Filter-boat. Neither yet was his Passage secure; for the Boat, being overburthened, had sunk all, if the Persians by casting away themselves had not saved the Life of their King. The loss of which noble spirits vexed him, that having given the Steersman a golden Crown for preserving his own Life, he commanded him to Execution as a Co-author of the death of his Servants. It is now called the Cassius, or the Sea of the Two Castles; which two Castles stand one on Europe, the other on Asia side, in the Towns of Sestos and Aigaius. These Castles, commonly by the Turks called Dardanelli, are exceedingly well built, and abundantly furnished with Munition. They search and examine all Ships that pass that way; they receive the Grand Seigneur's Customs, and are in effect the principal Strength of Constantinople. At these Castles all Ships must stay three days, to the end that if any Slave be run away from his Master, or Thieves have stolen any thing, they may be in that place pursued.

and apprehended. So that these Castles are as it were the Out-works of Constantinople, to defend it from all Invasions, and from any Forces which may come unto it by Sea out of the Mediterranean, as for the Safety thereof from such as may find passage out of the Euxine, there are situate at the very entrance of the Thracian Bosphorus two strong Castles, the one above Constantinople on Europe side, the other on the Asian Shore, which before we speak of. No European Isle of note is in either of the Straights. And therefore we pass on unto

8. The Islands of the ÆGÆAN Sea.

Hellepont, after a forty miles course, expatiates its waters in the Ægean Sea: so called either from Ægeus, the Father of Troilus, who, so called either from his safe return from the Mountains of Crete, there drowned himself; or, secondly, from Æge, once a principal City in the prime Island Eubœa; or, thirdly, because that the Islands lie scattered up and down like the Leaps of a wanton Goat, from the Greek ἄλγος.

The chief Islands of it are, 1. Samos, 2. Thasos, 3. Imbros, 4. Lemnos, 5. Eubœa, 6. Salamis, 7. Ægina, 8. the Cyclades, 9. the Sporades, and 10. Cythera: all which especially from Eubœa Southwards, are called the Islands of the Archipelago, the Sea being by the Greeks called the Archipelago, in regard of its greatness compared unto the narrow Seas which lie about it.

1. SAMOTHRACE is a small Island opposite to the Coasts of Thrace, where the Hebrus falls into the Sea; so called quasi Samos Thracie, to difference it from the Asian Samos, bordering on Ionis. Formerly it was called Dardania, from Dardanus the Trojan, who fled hither when he carried the Palladium thence. But Aristotle, writing of the Commonwealth of these Samothracians, telleth us that it was first called Leucosia, and afterwards Samus, from Samus the Son of Mercury and Rhene, the letter M being interposed. It is now called Samandracis, and is plentiful in Honey and Wild Deer, and better stored with commodious Harbours than any other in these Seas. It hath a Town of the same name with the Island, situate on a high Hill on the North part thereof overlooking a capacious Haven; of late, by the Pirates frequent infesting of these Seas, wholly in a manner, desolate.

2. THASSOS, another little Island on the same Coast, opposite to the Influx of the River Nessus, lying betwixt that and Atthos in Macedonia, at the Mouth of the Strymonian Bay: by Pliny called Abria and Atthria, by Ptolemy Todalassa, at the present Tasso. It is in compass betwixt forty and fifty miles, fruitfully fruitful, well replenished with Woods, and yielding good store of the best Wines; mountainous in some places, but those Mountains fraught with Quarries of excellent Marble, which the Romans called Thasian, from the Island, and in the times of Philip and Alexander the Great so rich in Mines of useful Metals, that these Kings received yearly 80 Talents for their Customs of them. It hath one Town of the same name with the Island, situate on a large Plain in the North part of it, bordering on a goodly Bay, which serves for an Haven to the Town: and on the South parts where the Country is more mountainous and hilly, there are two Towns more, each of them situate on an Hill, but the names thereof occur not amongst my Authors.

3. Imbros, another small Island, now named Lembo, is situate betwixt Samos and the Thracian Chersonese, in compass about thirty miles, but more long than broad, stretching North and South, and distant from Samos betwixt about ten miles. The Island is mountainous for the most part, except towards the West; where it hath some pleasant and well-watered Plains; in it is a Town of the same name, situate at the foot of the Mountains once sacred unto Mercury, but not else observable.

4. LEMNOS, an Island of more note, both betwixt Thrace and Macedon, not far from Insula, memorable amongst the Poets for the fabulous Fall of Peleus, who, being but an homely Brat, hardly worth his own, was by Juno in great Passion thrown out of Heaven, and, falling on this Island, came to get his Healing. Howsoever, he was anciently worshipped by the People hereof, and from hence called Lemnos. It is in compass about an hundred miles, but more long than broad, extended from the East to the West, on every side well furnished with convenient Creeks and some pretty Havens, by which the want of Rivers is in some part recompensed.

The Country is for the most part plain, if compared unto the adjacent Islands, but otherwise fenced with rising Mountains, the interposed Valleys being very fruitful of Wheat, Pulse, Wine, Flesh, Chiefly, Wool, Flax, Linnen, and all other necessaries, only Wood is wanting. And though there be no Rivers, as before was said, yet have they good Fishing on the Sea-coast for their use and sustenance; and in some parts Baths for Health and Medicines. But the chief Rites of this Island is in a mineral Earth here digged, of excellent virtue for curing Wounds, stopping of Ulcers, expelling Poisons, a Preservative against Infections, and the like; called Terra Lemnia, from the place, and Terra Sigillata, from the Seal or Character imprinted on it. For being made up into small Pellets, and sealed with the Turk's Character or Signet, it is then (as before) sold unto the Merchants, by whom it is dispersed over most parts of the Christian World. Upon the sixth of August yearly they go to gather it; but not without much Ceremony, and many religious Preparations, brought in by the Venitians, when they were Lords of this Island, and still continued by the Greek Monks or Calvores, who are the principal in the work. There is one Hill only where it groweth, the Top whereof being opened, they discover the Vein, resembling the calling up of Worms; and having gathered as much of it that day as the Priests think fit, it is cloased again; certain Bags of it being sent to the Grand Signiour yearly, the residue sealed up, and sold to the foreign Merchant.

But to return to the Topography of the place. The Eastern parts hereof are said to be fat and fruitful, the Western very dry and barren: in both containing 57 Towns and Villages, all of them inhabited by the Greeks, except only three, and those three garrisoned by the Turks, who, being Lords of the whole Island, have now named it Stalimene. In former times, from two prime Cities in it, it was called Dipolis. Of which the first was called Lemnos, by the name of the Island, as a large and well-peopled now as ever formerly, but of no great estimation when it was at the best, feared upon a high Hill looking over the Sea, with a handsome Market place, from which Mount Atthos casts a Shadow, though distant 87 miles from it. It was formerly by another name called Myrina; but that held not long, the name of Lemnos still remaining. 2. The second of the two Cities was then called Hephestias, memorable for the Temple of Vulcan, hence called Hephestiades; since desolate and destroyed, destroyed, and a new Town built in the place of it, being called Cochin. This Town is not great, but of a reasonable strength, memorable for the stout Resistance which a notable Village, named Marulla, made against the Turks in the time of Mahomet the Great, the Venitians then being Lords of the Island. For suddenly landing, when they were not looked for, with a purpose to surprise this Town, they found more Resistance at the Gates than they did expect: none being more commended than this Maiden, who, seeing her Father slain, took up such Weapons as lay by him, and manfully made good the place, until the rest of the Citizens, wakened with the Alarm, came unto her Rescue, and forced the Enemy to retire. Near hereto is the Hill on which Vulcan is said to have fell, more eminent for the Mineral earth hereby gathered. And not far hence Pliny reports a Labyrinth to have stood in the days of old, little inferior unto that of Crete or Egypt: the Ruins of it being decayed, that Bellonius, who took great pains in it, was not able to trace them. 3. The third place of note is Sinra, though an ordinary Village, yet memorable for the Church in which the Greek Calvores begin their Orisons on the sixth day, of August, before their gathering of the Earth is often mentioned. In this Country anciently reigned Tonas, the Son of Bacchus and Ariadne, during whose time the Women of the Island upon some dislike murdered all the men, the King only excepted, preferred by Hippolyte his Daughter, whom they made their Queen, an I by whom Jason with the Argonauts were finally entertained for two years together, that they had almost forgot their intended Expedition for the Golden Fleece; the her self being got with Child by Jason whilst there, the other Women probably following her Example. Following the Fortune of the other parts of Greece, it came at last under the power of the Constantinopolitan or Eastern Emperours. In the Subversion of that Empire by the Latines or Western Christians (of which more hereafter) it fell to the share of the Venitians, who held it till the year, 1463, or thereabouts.

Besides these on the Coast of Thrace, there are also some of less note on the Shores of Macedon. The principal whereof are, 1. Peparethus, as Ptolemy, Euonymus, as Pliny calls it, containing about 40 miles in compass, now called Saragino, as Capaldinus; or Lemene, as Niger hath it; fortified on the Eastern part with a Castle built upon a Rock. Others of less note are, 2. Scyathos, now Sciathis; 3. Scopelos, 4. Halonesus, 5. Cythenus, now Pontico, and 6. Dromus: of which little memorable. All which, together with those formerly described on the Coast of Thrace, being but the Accessories of the several Continents upon which they border; followed the Fortune of the principal, and were conquered in them.

5. EUBOEÆA, known to the Ancients by the names of Macris and Abantis, to the Moderns by that of Negropont, frontiereth all along the Coast of Acchaia, parallel to which it is in Fertility; one part hereof being torn away from it by an Earthquake, and lying still so near unto it, that between the Island and the Continent is only a little Eurippus, which ebbs and flows seven times in one day. The reason of which when Aristotle could not find, it is said that he threw himself into the Sea, with these words, Quia ego non capio re, tu capies me. In this Island is the Promontory Capreus, where Nauplius, the Father of Palamedes, placed his false Fires, to the Destruction of so many Greeks. For understanding how his Son Palamedes, whom he deemed to have been slain by the hand of Paris, was treacherously circumvented by the Policy of Ulysses and Diomedes, he conceived such a Displeasure against the whole Host of the Gracians, that he intended their general Destruction. To this end he caused Fires to be made on the tops of the most dangerous and inaccessible Rocks in this whole Island; which the Greeks taking (according to the Custom of the time) to have been the Marks of some false Haven, made thitherward, and were there most miserably cast away, there perishing 200 Ships, and many thousand men. But when Nauplius understood how Diomedes and Ulysses, whose Ruine he principally intended, were escaped, he drowned himself for very Vexation in this very same place! Palamedes, this Nauplius's Son, is said to have invented four of the Greek Letters, viz. α, β, γ, δ, to have first instructed Centinels in an Army; and to be the first Inventor of the Watch-word.

It is in length 150 miles, stretched out from the North-west to the South-east; in breadth not above twenty, where it is broadest; the whole compass 365 Italian miles. It is the Queen of the Ægean Sea; not only for Greatness, but for Fertility and Strength; plentiful in Corn, Wine, Oyl, Fruit and Wood fit for Shipping; enriched with many fair Harbour and capacious bays, and those well fortified; watered also with the Rivers of Circus and Melas, two Rivers of so strange a nature, that if a Sinep drink of the former, his Wool turneth white, but coal-black, if he drink of the latter. For the credit whereof I refer the Reader unto Strabo. Here is also said to be a Stone called Amianthus, which is drawn into thread like Hemp, and good Cloth made of it; which, when it is stained, in stead of being set r unto the Fullers, is thrown unto the Fire and so cleaned. But whether this be for not, (for I see it only upon hearsay) certain it is that it was once enriched with Mines both of Brass and Iron, though those now decayed; and likewise with Quarries of pure Marble, which continue still.

The Island, before it was conquered by the Turks, was very populous: but the people most delighted to live in Villages; the Cities and walled Towns being only three. 1. Carysso, anciently Caryssus, with little or no variation, but by Pliny called Ægea and Chironia; memorable for its marble Quarries, of which were made the Pillars called Columnæ Carystia. 2. Chalcis, now Negropont, by the Turks named Eribo, seated on a Plain near the Water's side, there growing into a fair and goodly Bay called the Gulf of Negropont; a populous, strong and wealthy City, so fortified with Walls and Bulwarks, that in the judgment of most men it was held invincible when the Turks first fate down before it. Nor was it purchased by the Turks (though Mahomet, who had took Constantinople, undertook the business) at a lower price than the loss of forty thousand men, who were spent upon it; but taken at the last, and the people put unto the Sword, without consideration of Sex or Age. A Town in former times of so great Wealth and Power, that it sent Colonies abroad into Macedonia, (a principal Region of the which was hence called Chalcidice) as also into Sicily and some parts of Italy; and had a strong Influence on the Affairs of Acchaia also, as being situate so near the Continent, that it was joined to it by a Bridge. When it was in the hands of the Kings of Macedon, this Town, together with Demetrias in Thessaly, and the Castle of Aerocerinth, were called the Petters of Greece: inasmuch that when the Roman Senate commanded Philip, the Father of Perseus, to let the Gracians at liberty; the Gracians made answer, that in vain was their Liberty restored them, unless these three Towns were first dismantled. Permitted by the Romans to live according to their own Laws, in memory of that Benefit they refused to declare against them in behalf of Antiochus, who thereupon made himself Master of the Town, and consequently of the Island. But he was forced to leave the place upon the loss of the Battle at Thermopylae, it became free again; till finally made subject unto Rome with the rest of Greece, and with it made a part of the Eastern Empire. In the Division thereof amongst the Latines, it fell to the share of the Venetians; who from henceforth with their Gallies to infest the Shores of Spargia, and disturb their Trade: Provoked wherewith especially with their taking of Annu, a City of Thrace, under the Conduct of Nicolas Canalis, the Venetian Admiral, who in that Enterprize had taken 2000 Turks, which he carried with him into this Island, Mahomet the Great resolves upon the Conquest of it, and with a puissant Army sets before the Town. And though it cost him dear, yet at last he got it, and therewith all the Island also, which depended on the Fortune of it. An. 1471.

6. SALAMIS is high unto Megaris, one of the Provinces of Achaia, famous for the Overthrow of the populous Navy of Xerxes by the Athenians and their Confederates. What was the number of the Souldiers and Gallies of the Persian side hath been already declared. The whole Grecian Fleet consisted of no more than 270 Vessels, whereof 127 were rigged and set forth at the charge of the Athenians only, the rest by the Associates. Yet was the Admiralty committed to Eurybiades a Lacedaemonian, the Athenians preferring the main care of the comm. Safety before an unfavourable contention for Priority. The Spartans, seeing the inequality of Forces, intended not to have hazarded the Battle, but with full sail to have retired to Peloponnesus, into which Country the Persians had made IncurSIONs; respecting more the Welfare of their own Country yet defensible, than the desperate state of Attica. This Design was by Themistocles (as careful for the state of Athen as they for Sparta) signified to Xerxes; who getting between them and home, compelled them to a necessity of fighting, but to his own Ruine. For in the Conflict more than 200 of his Ships were sunk, and most of the rest taken; the Confederates having lost of their Navy forty only. Between the Athenians and the Megarenses were many Contentions for this Island; the Fortune of the Athenians in the end prevailing. It hath in a City of the same name, the Royal Seat of Telemon, the Father of Ajax, so famous in the War of Troy: more memorable for giving Birth to Solon the Legislator of Athen, one of the seven Wise men of Greece.

7. EGINA now called Engia, an Island situate over against Sinus Saronicus, being that Bay of Corinth which openeth into the Aegae, hence called Golfo di Engia; the Realm of Eacus, made for his Justice and Integrity one of the three Judges of Hell; the other two being his Brother Rhadamanthus, and Minos the King of Crete. It had formerly been called Oenone, and Oenopie; but took this name from Engina, the Daughter of Alpheus King of Bœotia, on whom Jupiter is said to have begot both Alpheus and Rhadamanthus. The people hereof are properly called Engienenses and Enginice, much spoken of in the Wars of Athen, from which they are distant about 12 miles. The Ground hereof is very stony, but good for Battle, of which it is very plentiful: inhabited in former times by a laborious and thriving People, to whom they gave in those days the name of Myrmidons, (the Island being also called Myrmidonis) quod Formicarum more Terram fuderunt, because Emmet like they digged up and under the Earth, to make it the more fit for Tillage; who dwell at first in Caves without any Houses. Hence the occasion of the Fable of turning Emmets into Men at the prayer of Æacus. Both Tale and People after

(I know not how) were carried into Thebais, where before we found them.

8. The CYCLADES, so called because they lie in a Circle round about Delos, are in number 52. They are also called the Islands of the Arches, because they are in the Sea called Archipelago. They stand of close together, that in a clear day a man may see 20 of them at a time; for which cause it is with good reason accounted to be a dangerous place for Sailors in a Storm. The chief of these Cyclades, are, 1. DELOS, quævis Δηλος, signifying apparent; because when all the Earth had abjured the sect of Latona at the request of Juno, this Island, then under water, was by Jupiter erected aloft, and fixt to receive her, and in it was the delivered of Apollo and Diana; of which thus Ovid:

Erratica Delos

Errantem accepit, tunc cum leviss Isula, nuda.

Illic incombens sub Palladis arbore, Palma,

Edidit invita geminos Latona novices.

Unsettled Delos floating on the Wave,

A little Island, entertainment gave

To wandering Laton, spight of Juno's Head,

Under Minerva's Palm-tree brought to Bed.

Notable also is this Island for the Temple of Apollo and a Custom, neither permitting men to die, or Children to be born in it; but sending sick Men and great-bellied Women to Rhene, a small Island, and not much distant. By a more ancient name it is called Orygia, and by that name mentioned in many of the Poets, both Greek and Latin. The chief Town of it, called also Delos, is situate on a Plain environed with Rocks, near the Hill called Cynthus, whence Apollo had the name of Cynthius, and Diana of Cynthia; as of Delius, and Delia, from the Island. In this Town had Apollo both his Temple and Oracle, delivered here more plainly than in other places, whence (as some say) it was called Delos, the word in Greek signifying manifest or apparent: made famous by the resort of people from all places thither, especially from the neighbouring Islands, who sent yearly multitudes of men and troupes of Virgins to celebrate his Solemnities with Herds of Sacrifices. More wealthy afterwards by the removing of the Trade of Corinth thither; that Town being utterly destroyed by the Romans, and this made choice of by the Merchant, partly by reason of the Immunities of the place, but principally in regard of the convenient situation betwixt Europe and Asia. It continued in great Wealth and Power till Antibridates laid it wast, and at last on the ceasing of the Oracles, was utterly forsaken, both Town and Island are now called Solides. By which name also Rhene, an adjoining Island, (before mentioned) is at this day known; chained to the other by Polyctor the Tyrant of Samos, and now united to it, at the least in name.

2. TENOS, by Aristotle called Hydruntis, by some Ophusis, by the Moderns Tina. The chief Town of it is of the same name, to be called from one Tenor the Builder of it, and giving name to the Island: memorable for a Fountain called Dipnosus of which Aristotle and Atheniens do both affirm, that the Waters will not mix with Wine: the only Island of this Sea which remaineth under the power of the State of Venice, the rest being subject to the Turk; deserving therefore the first place in our Description of those Islands that incompass Delos, though anciently.

3. ANDROS (prima inter Cycladus), was reckoned chief amongst the Cyclades, or first at least in order, because next to Delos: originally called Coros, afterwards Autandros, and at last Andros; from Andrus the Son of Eurimachus, who founded the chief Town in it, of the same same name also. Memorable for a pleasant Fountain mentioned by Pliny, the waters whereof on the Nones of January yearly had the taste of Wine. It still retains the name of Andros, or Andri.

4. NAXOS, now Nispha, one of the biggest of the Pack, as being about 80 miles in compass. In ancient times it was called Veneris Insula, or the Island of Venus; afterwards Dionysia, by reason of its abundance of Wine; and the goodne of those Wines together, consecrated to Bacchus, whom the Greeks call Dionysius. From its wonderful plenty of Wheat called by some Sicilia minor, or the Lesser Sicily, but at last Naxos, from one Naxus, who had the conduct of a Colony of Carians thither. But notwithstanding this new name, Bacchus did still retain the honour to be worshipped in it, in regard of his love unto the place; marrying here Ariadne, (as the Poets fable) whom Theseus had left upon the Rocks: whose Coronet or Chaplet, being by his means made one of the heavenly Constellations, is by Columella called Ardor Naxius, by the name of the Island, though commonly by Astronomers Corona Ariadnes, from the name of the Lady. The Women of this Island are said by Pliny to be delivered generally in the eighth month as Bacchus was born within that term. But it is more certainly famous in true Story for the Beauty and Fertility of it, and for a kind of excellent Marble called Ophites or Serpentinus; the ground whereof is green, diapered with blew or purple Spots, in much esteem amongst the Romans. When these Islands fell to the Venetians, they conferred this on one John Gyrgis, a Patrician or Gentleman of that City, (as they did divers of the rest on other undertakers) from whom it came to the Noble Family of the Crispi's, who held it till the year 1572, when James the last of that House lost it to Solyma the second.

5. GYAROS, a little Island, into which the Romans used to banish Delinquents. Hence that of Juvenal, cited by G. Sandys.

And aliq. delinquentis Gyaris vel carcere dignum,

Sive off. aliq. id: Probris laudatur, & alget.

If thou intend'st to thrive, do what deserves

Short Gyaris or Gyves: praise'd Virtue starves.

6. PÁROS, now Paros, by some of the Ancients called Paria, by others Minos, but it obtained this new name from Paria, son of Jafon: memorable for Quarries of the whitest Marble, of which commonly the Statues of the Gods were made, called from hence Marmor Parium by the Latins. It is in compass about 50 miles, running in a long Plain from East to West, having once a Town of the same name seated in the North, once famous, but now utterly ruined. The Inhabitants hereof were noted to be very careless of keeping their Promises and Contracts: whence Λαλιαντες grew into a Byword applied to those who made no reckoning of their Promises. There is now a Town in it called Cephale, but it is of no great note.

7. SCYROS, opposite to Megafina in Asia Minor, famous for the Birth of Neoptolemus or Pyrrius, and that it was the Lurking-place of Achilles. For his Mother Thetis, being forewarned by an Oracle that he should be slain in the Trojan War, sent him to Lycimedes King of this Island, where he was brought up in Woman's Attire amongst the King's Daughter's, and decreed a Virgin; till by getting Pyrrius on Deidamia the King's Daughter it was proved to be otherwise. Others relate that Ulysses discovered him by a Wife, who, coming thither like a Pedler or Peti-merchant with Arms and other Ware, to avoid distrust, exposed his Merchandise to the view of the Damozels: when the other Ladies falling on the Tires and Laces, Achilles took into his hand the Spear and Shield. Which when Ulysses had observed, he made him leave that Company, and away for Troy. The handfomness of the fraud take from Ovid, thus:

Conspici venturi Genitrix Nereia Fati
Disimulat Culin Natum, & deceptat omnes
(In quibus Jacem) sumpta salacia Vasis.
Arma ego famines animum molura virilem
Mertibus infraui, &c.

Thus Englished by G. Sandys in his Translation of the Metamorphosis:

The whole Design in order to relate:
Thetis, fore-knowing great Achilles Fate, Disguis'd her Son, to like a Virgin drest,
That all mistook, and Ajax with the rest.
When Arms with Women's Trifles, which might blind Suspect, I brought to tempt a manly Mind.
Yet was the Hero's Virgin-like array'd.
Who taking up the Shield and Spear, I said,
O Goddess-born, for thee the Fate of Troy.
Her Fall reserves: why doubtst thou to destroy Great Pergamus? then made him d'off those Weeds,
And sent the Mighty unto mighty Deeds.

There is another of this name betwixt Neopontus and Lefbor, which Orellius conceives to be the Scene of this Action: but the general opinion is for this, (though that be the greater Ile) to which the situation of it amongst the rest of those Islands where reigned so many of the Greek Kings interred in the War of Troy seems to give good countenance: the name and power of Greece not reaching in those days so much towards the North.

8. MELOS, situate betwixt Crete and Peloponnesus, and equally distant from them both. The Promontories of Scyllam in the one, and that of Diisymneum in the other, shooting out a point, inhabited in former times by a Colony of Phœnicians, who coming out of Babylon, a Town of that Country gave that name unto it: being called Melos afterwards by the Greeks, from its abundance of Honey. The Birth-place of Diogenes the Philosopher, hence furnished Melus, but more properly Asot or the Atthi, the first who in those dark times of Ignorance absolutely denied that there was a God. Protagoras Deos in dubium vocavit, Diogenes exclulit, faith Laërtius of him. It is now called Milo, round in form, and containing 80 miles in compass. The Soil is sufficiently fruitful in Corn and Oyl, but defective in Wine. Here is great plenty of Marble curiously bestowed, and no small store of M.-stones, as also great quantities of Pitch and Brimstone, and some Sulphury or hot Springs good for many Difficacies. The chief Town of it is called Milo also.

9. SERIPHUS, 20 miles from Delos, memorable of old for the Education of Perses the Son of Danae. It is reported of this Island, that the Frogs bred there are naturally mute; but such as are brought from other places keep their natural tone: from whence, Proverbially, silent and fullen persons were called Rane Scriptæ. It is now called Serphus or Serphene, a stony and rocky Island, and hath a Town of the same name.

10. CIJA, by some called CEOS, and now Zea, opposite to the Promontory of Achaia called Sinim, in compass about 50 miles, made towards the West, in fashion of a Crescent or half-Moon, mountainous and hilly, except towards the North; by Pliny said to have been torn from Endau, by a sudden violence of the Sea, many men perishing in the waters. Of old times it was beautified with three fair Towns; 1. Julis, 2. Carthæa, and 3. Careissus: of which there is nothing now remaining.

Others there are whose names occur amongst the Ancients: as 11. Miconus, now called Micole; 12. Cyrbus, now Cuuro; 13. Siphnus, now Siphano; 14. Therapsa, now Santorini; 15. Comolis, called formerly Echinus, out now Poline; 16. Oliarus, now Quinninia; 17. Sicennus.

cenus, now Sicino, 18. Polygor, now Falconara; 19. Amorgos, now Morge, one of the biggest of them all, but not else observable.

9. The SPORADES are so called from σποαί, spao, to quad in Mari parse sunt, & non in Circulo consta, because they lie dispersed and scattered, not formed into a Circle, as the Cyclades are. They are in number twelve. viz. 1. Anaphe, so called by the Argonauts, καὶ τὴν ἀναπαιάν (Anapainan), because the Moon did suddenly, and beyond her natural course, appear unto them, then grievously distressed by Tempest. Apollo worshipped here is hence called Anapheus. It is now usually called Nampho. 2. Astypalea, now Stam-palia, in compass 88 miles by some of the Ancients called Troen Trapaiza, or the Table of the Gods. In Astypale, the chief Town of it, was Apollo worshipped, from hence sometimes called Astypaleus. 3. Helene, so called from that fair Greek Dame, whom Paris is here said to have first deflowered; now called Macronisi. 4. Los, fifteen miles from Naxos, where Homer is said to have been buried: But others find his Grave at Naxos, and some at Chios; the difference being almost as great about the place of his Burial as the place of his Birth. Then are 5. Lagusa, 6. Phocaea, 7. Phocasia, 8. Philocandros, 9. Schinusa, 10. Strychia, of little note either in Poetry or Story. And finally, 11. Thera, not far from Aegina, before mentioned, formerly called Caliste; but named thus by Theras a Theban Gentleman, the Son of Antioch, conducting thither a Colony of Spartans and Myrians, (these last of Thessaly) cast out of Lemnos by Pelasgus: in memory of whom, as the Founder of their Name and Nation, the Islanders used to celebrate an annual Feast. A Sedition after happening amongst this People, the weaker party, under the Conduct of one Battus, admonished to do by the Oracle of Apollo, passed over into Africk, and there built Cyrene. The Birth-place of the Poet Callimachus, who ascribes his Original to this Island, as himself thus witnesseth,

ΚΑΛΛΙΜΑΧΟΣ ΠΕΡΙΕΛΕΙΟΝ, ὅς ἐστι γέννημα τοῦ Ἰσθμοῦ
Μήτηρ δὲ τοῦτο πόλις ἐστὶν Ἰσθμίου.

That is to say,

Calliste, which men Thera now do call,
Of my dear Country the Original.

10. CYTHERA, now called Cerigo, lieth in the bottom of this Sea, not above five miles distant from Capo Malio in Peloponnesus; formerly called Porphyris, from the abundance of Marble, whereof the Island yields good plenty. It is in compass about 60 miles, enriched with a delightful Soil, and having many Havens, but those small and unsafe, and very difficult of entrance. It is environed on all sides with Rocks, of themselves inaccessible, by which it is defended from the Turks, who hitherto have suffered the Venetians to enjoy it, to whom it fell in the division of the Spoil amongst the Latines, so often spoken of before. It had a Town of the same name: some two furlongs from the Haven stood the Temple of Venus, (the ancientest dedicated to that Goddess which the Grecians had), and the ein her Statua in complete Armour, like another Pallas. Out of this Temple (the Ruines whereof are still to be seen) was Helen, the Wife of Menelaus, willingly ravished by Paris, the Son of Priamus; but not enjoyed by him, till he had brought her to a small Island of the SPORADES by her name called Helene, as before said. From the Devotions of this People paid to duly to her, did Venus get the Adjunct of Cytherea, by which she is often called in the Poets. Thus, for one, in Virgil,

Parce metu, Cytherea, manent immota tuorum Fata tibi.

That is to say,

Drive Fear, fair Cytherea, from thy mind;
Thou thy Son's Fate immovable shalt find.

And so I pass from the Aegean to the Cretan Sea, observing this only by the way, that most of the 69 Kings which accompanied Agamemnon in the War of Troy were Kings only of these small Islands; or else of other places as inconsiderable for wealth and Potency; every small Town and Territory having in those early times amongst the Grecians (when Ambition had not taught the Great ones to devour the less) a peculiar King.

9. The Islands of the CRETAN Sea.

THE CRETAN Sea is properly that part of the Aegean or Ionian Sea which lyeth about the Shores of Crete, and formerly was under the Command and power thereof: as in those times, the Sea about Carpathus, another Isle of the Aegean, had the name of Carpathian; and that about Icaria, the name of Icarian, though situate in the Aegean also. The Isles hereof are, 1. Crete, 2. Claude, 3. Dia, and 4. Leia; for Meli and Cimoli, named by Ptolemy against the Islands which adjoin on Crete, having been already spoken of amongst the Cyclades, in the account whereof they pass by consent of Writers.

1. CRETAN, now Candie, hath on the East the Carpathian Sea, on the West the Ionian, on the North the Aegean, on the South the African or Libick. Inform it extendeth East and West with three Points or Promontories: whereof that towards the East, called anciently Samonium, is now called Capo di Salomone; that on the South-west, looking towards Africk, formerly named Hermæa, is now Capo Gabrasse, and finally, that on the North-West towards Peloponnesus, of old called Cmaru, is now called Capo Chiffin. This last is directly opposite to Malæa a Promontory of Laconia; the Sea betwixt them being so troublesome & tempestuous especially on Laconia side, that at last it grew into an ordinary Calent, Mæta prætervectus obfuscatur que sunt domo, viz. that he which was to Sail by the point of Malæa, should lay aside the care of all other matters, and attend his present Safety only.

It hath in several Ages and in several Authors obtained several names. By Homer and Aristarchus it is called Hecatompolis, from the number of an hundred Cities then contained in it: by Pliny and Solinus, Mæcaris, and Mæcaron; that is to say, the happy Island, from the goodness of the Soil and temper of the Air: by Stephanus, Idea, from a famous Mountain of it: by Giraldus, Telechini, from the Telechini, the Priests of Cybele, who was hereth ingreat request. At the present it is called Candie, either in regard to the Whitess of the Rocks wherewith it is Candore, or from Candia the Metropolis or chief Town thereof. But the general name which hath prevailed most in all sorts of Writers is that of Crete, so called quasi Creta, by a Syncope or Abbreviation, from the Cretæi, the first Inhabitants hereof; who, together with the phœnicians and Telechini, were the Priests of Cybele the principal Goddess of this Island: and they so called ἐκείνη κύβητις, from their Tonsure or Shaving of some of the Pagan Deities, and possibly enough from this Etymology to the Church of Rome. And to this Etymology I Crete, rather incline, than either to derive the name from Crete, the Son of Jupiter and the Nymph Idæa, or from Cyete the Daughter of Heperus, though both these have their Authority also. Nor dare I to reject the Conceit of Bocharius, who, who, fetching the Erymons of most people from the Phœnic Language or Original, will have the Cretans to be descended from the Cerebiths, a Nation of the Philistins, well known in Scripture; the word Cerebith being abbreviated into Cretib, from which into Crete and Cretans is not difficult passage. But in my mind his Conjecture is better than his Proof. For though it may be granted without inconvenience that the chief Arms of the Philistins were their Bow and Arrows, as appears 1 Sam. 31. 3. and that the Cretans anciently were expert at those Weapons also: yet this concludes no more that the Cretans are of the Race of the Philistins, than that almost all Nations else had the same Original; the Bow and Arrows being the ordinary Weapons of most People formerly, till Custom and Experience trained them up to others of a later date, as he himself acknowledgeth in many places of his excellent and elaborate Traſtates.

In respect to the Heavenly Bodies it is situate under the beginning of the fourth Climate, so that the longest Day in Summer is no more than 14 hours and a quarter: and in relation to the Earth, set in the middle of the Sea, as to even a distance from Europe, Asia and Africk, as if naturally designed to be what Aristotle hath pleased to call it the Lady and Mistress of the Sea. For it is distant from Peloponnesus an hundred miles, as many from Asia the less, and not above 150 from the Shores of Africk: so verifying that of Virgil, Creta Jovis magni medio jacet Insula Pontu.

Jovis Birth-place Creta, a fruitful Land, In'th' middle of the Sea doth stand.

It is in length 270, in breadth 50 miles, in compass about 750. The Soil is very fruitful, especially of Wines which we call Muscadells, of which they traſt yearly 12000 Butts, together with Sugar-Candy, Gums, Honey, Saffron, Olives, Dates, Apples, Oranges, Limons, Raisins, Melons, Citrons, Pomegranates. Yet, as other Countries of the like hot nature, it is not a little deficient in Corn; the most or greatest part of which is yearly brought thither from Peloponnesus.

The Island is very populous, inasmuch that it is thought that upon any sudden occasion the Seignoury of Venice can raise in it 60000 men able to bear Arms. The people have formerly been good Sea-fairing men; a Virtue communicated with many Vices, which they yet retain, as Envy, Malice and Lying: to which last they are so infinitely addicted, that an horrible Lie was called proverbially Cretan mendacium. This fault was aimed at by the Poet Epimachus, a Native of this Island, whose words are thus cited by S. Paul to Titus, Chap. 1. v. 12.

Καὶ οὗτοι ἀπὸ τῆς τοῦ θεοῦ δόξης γὰρ ἀπερίστατοι.

The Cretans always Liers are,
Unruly Beasts, of Labour spare.

To which this Proverb may be added, viz. Τελὸς ὅσον ἔδωκεν ὁ θεὸς τὸν τόπον, that is to say, There are three Nations whose names begin with the letter K worse than any others, viz. Karians, Karians, Karians, the Cappadocians, Cretans, and Cilicians: though some, I know, apply this Proverb to the Cities of Cerinth, Capna, and Carthage, beginning all with the same Letter, and all conceived to be very dangerous to the State of Rome. At this day they are sick of their old Distractions, as great Liers and as Idle as ever formerly; Covetous withal, and very subtle, impatient of Labour, and not caring to learn any Science perfectly: only well practised in Shooting, to which they are accustomed from their youth, and therein thought more expert than the Turks themselves.

The Language generally spoken is the Greek Tongue; though the Gentlemen and Merchant, by reason of their Dependence on the State of Venice, speak Italian also. Both Languages are used also in Divine Offices: the people being generally of the Communion of the Church of Greece; but the Latine Service is used also in many places, since the Subjection of this Island to the Venetians. They were converted first unto the Faith by S. Paul the Apostle, who, having planted the Gospel of Life amongst them, left the watering of it unto Titus, whom he made Bishop of this Isle; recommending unto him the Care of the Churches there, with power of Ordination and Ecclesiastical Censure, as appears clearly by the Text. Which power that it belonged to Titus as Bishop, and not as their Evangelist only, is affirmed expressly not only by the Subscription of the said Epistle, where he is plainly called ἐπίσκοπος ἐκκλησιᾶς ἐκείνης ἐν κρήτῃ, the first Bishop of the Church of the Cretans; but by the concurrent Testimonies of Euseb. Ecll. Hist. 13. c. 4. S. Amb. in Præfat. ad Tit. S. Hieron. in Tit. c. 1. v. 5. and in his Tract de Scriptor. Ecclesiasticis, Theodoret, cited by Oecumen. in Præfat. ad Ep. Tit. Oecumenius himself in Tit. 1. and finally by Theophylact in his Preface to the same Epistle. All which in plain terms call him Bishop, and the Bishop of Crete; according to that sense and meaning of the word Episcopus, as it was used in their times, till sent from Presbyter. The Church hereof, whilst wholly under the Greek Patriarchate, was governed by four Arch-bishops and 21 Bishops. But since the Subjection of this Island to the State of Venice, there is but one Archbishop, which is he of Candia, the chief City, and eight Bishops only; besides the titular Patriarch of Constantinople, who hath there his Residence; some Prelate of the Latine Church having been always honoured with that empty Title ever since the Recovery of that City from the Western Christians.

Famous was this Island amongst the Ancients for many things memorized both by the Poets and old Historians. For here reigned Saturn in the first Ages of the World, Father of Jupiter, who was born here, and secretly nursed in the Hill called Ida. For seeing that, by the Compact betwixt Saturn and his Brother Titan, Saturn was to enjoy the Kingdom for his own Life only, but all his Male-children to be murdered as soon as born; Jupiter, by the care of his Mother Cybele, was conveyed away, and secretly nursed in Mount Ida, as before was said: the Crying of the Infant being drowned by the noise of loud-sounding Cymbals, purposely used by his Rockers to avoid Discovery. Whence afterwards the Corymbans, or Priests of Cybele, used in her Sacrifices the like musical Instruments, continually founding, and withal shaking of their Heads, (like Fiddlers) in an antick and ridiculous manner, Aloud whereunto thus the Poet Claudian;

Non te progenitum Cybeleius Aëre canoro Lustravit Corybas.

That is to say,

No Cybeleian Corybas that day
That thou was born did in his Cymbal play.

Here also lived Aënos and Rhadamantibus, whose Laws were after imitated in the prime Cities of Greece, and who, for their Equity on Earth, are seized by the Poets to be (together with Eacus) the Judges in Heil. In this Island also lived the lowly-lustful Pisipha, Wife of Aënos, who is fabled by the Poets (if it be a Fable) to have doated on a white Bull, who, they say, begat on her the Minotaur: Daedalus having framed for her an artificial Cow, into which the conveyed her self, and by that means obtained her desire. The Fable is thus expounded, that Pisipha was in love with Taurus, one of Aënos's Secretaries: whose company by the Pandarism of Daedalus the enjoying, was delivered of two Sons, one called Aënos, the other Taurus. And whereas it is said that the Aënos, Taur was slain by Theseus, like enough that the annual Tribute of 7 Children, which the Athenians paid to Minos, was laid up in some Prison, Minos and Taurus being the Keepers or Gaolers. As for the action of Pasiphae, I think it not altogether impossible to be true, considering how Domitian, to verify the old relation, exhibited the like beastly Spectacle in his Amphitheatre at Rome: for thus saith Martial.

*Iunitham Pasiphaen Didmo, credite, Taurus Vidimus, accipit Fabula prisca fidem.
Nec fœmistrar (Cælar) longæva Venusas:
Quicquid Fama canit, donat Avena tibi.
The Fable's prov'd a Truth, our eyes did see
The Cretan Bull sport with Pasiphae.
What cause hath then Antiquity to glory?*

We saw it done, she only heard the Story.

Finally, here was the so-much-celebrated Labyrinth, made by Dædalus for the including and safe-keeping of the Minotaurus; so full of various Windings and turnings, that when any one was got to the end thereof, it was impossible for him to come out but by the help of a Clew of thread. By this Minotaur (half a Man, half a Bull) the Children of the Athenians, paid yearly to Minos in way of Tribute, are said to be murdered, till he was killed by Theseus, Son of Aegæus King of Athens, with whom Ariadne the Daughter of Minos falling in love, taught him a means to kill the Monster, and gave him the Clew of thread, before spoken of, to conduct him out again: the Moral or History whereof hath been shewn before. Nor must it be forgotten, that Strabo the Geographer, who flourished in the time of Tiberius Cæsar, was of Cretan Parents, (though born in the City of Amasia in the Realm of Pontus: which adds unto this Island as much true Renown as any of the Fictions or Stories (be which they will) of former times.

Things most observable at the present are these that follow. 1. That it breeds no Serpents, no venomous Worm, or ravenous or hurtful creature; so that their sheepraze very securely without any Shepherd. 2. If a Woman bite a Man any thing hard, he will hardly be cured of it were it true, then the last part of the Privilege foregoing (of breeding no hurtful creature) must needs be false, if this have an Herb called Alimos, which if one chew in his mouth he shall feel no Hunger for that day; if Quade may be believed, who speaks it. 4. Here is (besides many other medicinal Herbs) that called Diſtammum, or Diſtammus, of special virtue against Poison, either by way of Prevention or present Cure, peculiar only to this Island: it affordeth great Juice of Laudanum, a Juice or Gum forced with incredible labour out of a certain Tree called Cissus, of which the Mountains yield abundance; good to cause Sleep, if moderately and carefully taken; but if not very well prepared and taken with moderation; it brings the last Sleep upon a man, out of which he is not to be awakened till the Sound of the last Trumpet raise him.

Chief Mountains of it are, 1. Ida, now Pſiorri, situated in the midst of the Island, begirt about with many fair and pleasant Villages, sheltered by it from the violence of Wind and Sun; the Hill being so high, that from the Top hereof both sides of the Island may be easily seen. Here Jupiter is said to have been secretly nursed, from hence called Idæus. And at the bottom of it the Cretans use to shew some traſts of the ancient Labyrinth, being indeed no other than the Ruines of some larger Quarry: the Labyrinth made by Dædalus being so defaced in the time of Pliny, that he knew not where to find any Ruines of it. 2. Diſte, now called Sebia, in some places Lefth, so high, that all the Winter long it is covered with Snow; yet all the sides thereof are garnished with Cypress-trees: a Mountain of such fame, that the whole Island sometimes had the name of Diſtea, the City Diſtyra, the Promontory

Diſtyræum, and the Herb Diſtammum all seeming to take name from hence. 3. Leuci, a long Chain of Hills, so named from the Whiteness of them, now called Malakia, and by some La Spachia.

Rivers of any eminence here are few or none. The principal of those that be, are, 1. Milopotamus, 2. Scapnus, 3. Epicadnus, and 4. Diworo, towards the North; 5. Populiar, towards the East; 5. and 6. Limen, towards the West: none of them navigable, or capable of Ships of Burthen, scarce of little Barks. But that defect is supplied by the neighbouring Sea, which affordeth many Creeks and Bays, some capacious Havens, and greater store of Fish, among which a kind of bearded Mullet, reckoned among the Delicacies of the ancient Romans. By the convenience of which Harbours, their Fish-trade, and the situation of it in the midst of the Sea, the People of this were esteemed to good Sea-faring men, that when the people of those times did tax a man with any incredible report, they used to say, Cretensis pelagus, meaning thereby the matter to be as improbable as for one Cretan to be no Sailor.

In former times there were reckoned in this Island an hundred Cities, whence it was called Hecatompolis; which about 40 were remaining in the time of Pliny, for so many of their names he gives us. Those of most note were, 1. Gnosſus, the Seat-royal or Court of Minos, where Ariadne the Daughter of Minos had the name of Gnosſia; in former times called Ceratus, from a little River of that name running not far off. 2. Cydon, or Cydonia, a midland City, (as the former) memorable for an excellent kind of Apples, which the Latin called Poma Cydonia, amongst whom they were in great request, as they are this day (though by the name of Adam's Apples) amongst the Turks: the most ancient of all the Cities of Cretan, many of which were at first Colonies of this, for which reason it was called commonly Mater urbium. 3. Elythra, as Pliny, Erythra, as the printed Copies of Florus corruptly call it, one of the five Cities taken here by the Romans. 4. Milettum, mentioned by Strabo (though omitted by Pliny), the place in which S. Paul left Timothy sick, as is mentioned 2 Tim. 4. 20, which happened when the Apostle hovered about that Coast, as is said Aſt. 27. 7, 8, &c. For that it could not be that Milettum to which he congregated the Elders of Ephesus, appear by his being at Hierusalem, Aſt. 21. 17, and other circumstances of the Story. 5. Gortyna, now to which flood the Labyrinth made by Dædalus; memorable also for a Reed, growing on the River Lenaxa, (near to which it stood) of which they made their strongest Arrows; by Virgil Aeneid. 11. called Spicula Gortynia, as also for a light Guard much used by Hunters, which Clavdian calls Gortynum vestem, appareling Diana the great Huntress with it. 6. Diſtammum, as Pliny, or Diſtanna, as Pliny calls it, so named from the Hill Diſte, near to which it is situated: one of the chief Cities of the North parts of this Island; as 7. Amphicla, so named from its plenty of Vines, was upon the South. 8. Minos, a Port-town, (now Amara) so named from Minos, in the East; and 9. Corymbus, on a Promontory of the same name, in the West side of it. But these, and almost all the rest spoken of by Pliny, being so destroyed by Time and Wars that the Ruines of them are hardly visible, we must behold it in the present condition and estate thereof; divided into four parts or Provinces, according to the names and number of the four chief Cities; that is to say, 1. Sittia, 2. Candia, 3. Retimo, and 4. Canea.

In the first part, called SITTIA, lying towards the East, are 74 Villages, and but 17 Parishes, of which fix only are of the Church of Rome, the residue holding the Communion of the Church of Greece. The principal whereof are, 1. Sittia, or Cytia, conceived by some to be the Gnosſus of Pliny; a small Town but populous, and very well fortified. 2. Gierapetra, betwixt Sittia and Candia, seated on the Sea-side, on a lofty Rock, at the bottom whereof is said to be a dangerous Whirl-pit, supposed to be the Panormus of Pliny. 3. S. Maſcor, the dwelling-place of one of the Bishops of the *Latin*s.

2. In the second part hereof, called the Territory of CANDIA, lying directly West of Sittia, are reckoned 465 Towns and Villages, making up amongst them 99 Parish Churches; whereof 77 are of the Communion of the Church of Greece, the other 22 only of the Church of Rome. Of these the principal are, 1. Candia, an Archbishop's See, the Metropolis or Head City of the Island, which takes name from hence. It is situate on the North-Coast hereof towards the Aegean, beautified with a safe and commodious Haven, and fortified so strongly, that it seems impregnable, affirmed by some to be the Mastonia of the Ancients; but I find no such place in Pliny, nor in Orelinus his Thesaurus. The City is fair and large, built for the most part of Free-stone, with low Roofs, after the manner of Italy, the Streets broad and spacious from whence a fair and pleasant plain leadeth to a place called the Cave of Minos, reported by the common people to be the Sepulchre of Jupiter. 2. Maloſin, 3. Theneus, 4. Cassell town, 5. Bonifacio, 6. Belvedere, 7. Mardela, of which little memorable.

3. In the third part, being the Territory of RETIMO, formerly Rhithymna, lying North-west of the Territory of Candia, are accounted 265 Towns and Villages, making up 44 Parishes, whereof 36 are Græcians, and but 8 of the *Latin*s. The chief of which are, 1. Retimo, on the Shore of the Northern Sea, as Candia is, well fortified, and a Bishop's See, but not else observable. 2. Milopotamus, an Episcopal See also, called of the River Milopotamus, on which it is seated. 3. Agſiman, 4. Mandrus, 5. Lappa, hardly worth the naming.

4. In the fourth and last part hereof, being the Territory of CANEA, taking up all the West of the Island, are contained 240 Towns and Villages, distributed into 47 Parishes; of which 32 are of the Greek Church and the 14 remaining of the Church of Rome. Those of most note are, 1. Canea, built by a Colony or Plantation of Ionian Gentlemen, on the North Coast also, supposed to stand the same place where once Cydon did; second to none but Candia for Wealth and Beauty, but far before it for the commodiousness of the Port, commonly called Porto della Suda, capable of more than a thousand good Gallies at a time; and therefore strongly fortified with two Cittadels or Castles, on each side of the Haven one, as the Door and Entrance of the Country. 2. Chusano, in Latin called Cissamus, old and decayed, the Walls thereof only holding good against the Ruines of time; situate in a low Moorish place towards the Aegean.

3. Seling, built upon a Hill on the Sea-side, opposite to Chusano, 4. Spachia, or Spachia, situate at the foot of the Mountains of old called Leſke, now della Spachia, from this Town: unwall'd, but fortified with a Castle; built for a place of Refuge against the Incurſions of such Pirates as annoy the Coasts, in which the Governour for this part hath his chief Abode. By which account it will appear that in the whole Island are no more than 1044 Towns and Villages, and 207 Parish Churches, of which there be but 48 which are accounted Members of the Church of Rome, the residue, 159 in number, retaining their Communion with the Church of Greece.

As for the Story of this Island, we can ascend as high as the times of Saturn, for its Antiquity affirmed to be the Son of Uranus and Poseidon, or of Heaven and Earth;

who, better favoured by his Mother obtained the Kingdom of Crete, his elder Brother Titan being quite excluded. Hereupon Wars arising betwixt the Brethren, it was ordered thus, That Saturn for his own Life should enjoy the Kingdom, which after his decease should return to the Titans; and for the performance of this Contract, the Sons of Saturn were to be strangled as soon as born. But Cybele the Wife of Saturn unawares to her Husband, preserved first Jupiter, and after other of her Sons; which coming to the knowledge of Titan and his Sons, they made War against Saturn, but in conclusion were subdued by the Aid of Jupiter: whence grew the Fable of the Titans warring against the Gods, Saturn and Jupiter his Son being after reckoned in that number. The Titans being vanquished, a new War arose betwixt Saturn and Jupiter, occasioned only (as many unatural Wars since these times have been) by Fears and Jealousies: which ending at the last in the Flight of Saturn, Jupiter became sole King of Crete, reigning there in great power and honour till the time of his death; and dying was interred at Gnosſus, with this Inscription or Epitaph in old Greek Letters, Ὁ ΖΗΤΩΝ ΚΕΦΑ, that is to say Jupiter the Son of Saturn. After his death he was worshipped by the blind Gentiles as the chief of their Gods, and honoured frequently with the Title of Πατὴρ τῶν θεῶν καὶ ἀνθρώπων the Father both of Gods and Men: though most incongruously and absurdly, as Lactantius noteth, there being many thousands living in and before the times of Saturn, when Jupiter was yet unborn. But to proceed; he being dead, Minos, begotten by him on Europa, succeeded here; who, wisely taking the advantage which the convenient situation of the Island gave him, made himself Master of the Seas, and afterwards enlarged his Dominions by the Conquest of the Megarensis and Athenians, upon which last he imposed, amongst other hard Conditions, a Tribute of seven Male Children yearly to be kept as Hostages; which determined after three years by the Valour and good Fortune of Theseus. But Minos being slain in Sicily, and his Posterity extinct, the Cretans would no longer admit of Kings, but governed themselves after the manner of a Commonwealth or free State: The Laws and Ordinances whereof, first devised by Minos, were of such esteem that they were much imitated by Lycurgus, and are at large described by Aristotle in the 2. book of his Politics, ch. 8. Under this Government it continued till the Romans, having taken in all the rest of Greece, picked a Quarrel with them. For though it was pretended that they had been aiding unto Antisthenes in his War against them; yet Florus states the matter rightly, affirming that the War was undertaken on no other ground, but sola nobilitas Insulam vincendi cupiditate, out of a covetous desire only of subduing such a wealthy Island. And to this War they went with so proud a Confidence, that M. Anthony, who commanded in it, carried more Chains with him to bring home his Prisoners then Arms to conquer them. An Infelice which he paid right dear for, his Navy being vanquished by the Cretans, the bodies of his slain Souldiers hanged upon the Masts, and himself perishing in the Action by a fit of Sicknes. Marcus, who succeeding him in that charge, went on more successfully, first taking Gnosſus, Elythra, or (Erythra, as Florus calls it) and Cydon, their principal Cities, and not long after all the Island, during the vanquished Islanders with such Inhumanity, that most of them poisoned themselves to avoid his Cruelty: rewarded with no other Honour for so great a Victory, than that he got the surname of Creticus; his Triumph being denied by the Faction of Pompey, against whose will he had put himself upon that Service. This being added to the Roman Empire, it was after united unto Cyrenaica by Augustus Cæsar.

Cefar, both making up one Province only, governed by a Proconful till the death of Nero; afterwards fepared from it, but the time I find not. During the Reign of Conftantine, in 36 years together there fell no Rain, fo that this Ifland was in a manner wholly defolated. But Helena, the Mother of Conftantine, having obeyed Rain for it by her prayers to God, it was again new peopled by feveral Colonies brought out of Aegypt, Syria, Greece, and the parts adjoining. By Conftantine made a Province of the Diocle of Macedonia, it continued a Member of the Eaftern Empire till the time of Michael Palaeologus, when it was fubdued by the Saracens; from them recovered by the more fortunate conduct of Nicéphorus Phocas, who came unto the Empire, Anno 963. In the divifion of the Spoil amongst the Latines, it was firft given to Boniface Marquels of Montferrat; by him furrendered willingly to the State of Venice, who had a mind to be poffeffed of all the Iflands of that Empire: he being recompensed with the Kingdom of Theffaly, the fair and wealthy City of Theffalonica, and many Towns and Territories in Peloponnesus. Under that State it ftill continueth, in vain attempted by Sulimus the fecond in the year, 1571, at what time he invaded and conquered Cyprus; and gallantly defended for this year laft againft all the Forces of Ibrahim the late Grand Seignior. What the Succels of this War will be, we fhall fee hereafter.

For the Defence hereof againft the Injurments of the Inhabitants, who did at firft ill brook the Venetian Government, there are fome ftanding Forces kept in conflant pay; befides fuch as are maintained in feveral Garrifons, the City of Canea having in no fewer then fix Companies of Souldiers, Candia 2000 Souldiers, and the leffer Cities proportionably: over which there is fet fo ftroga Guard, that a Natural Cretan is not permitted to enter weaponed into any of them. And for the prefervation of their Intereft in it from foreign Power, they have furnifhed the Ifland with 70 or 80 Gallies for the defence of the Shores; and have exceedingly fortified the Haven of Snda with two ftroga Castles, this Haven being capable of more then 1000 Veffels, and therefore meritoriously reputed the Door and entry into the Countrey. It is reported that the King of Spain, Philip the fecond, did offer unto the Venetians for this Haven money more then enough; but it could not be accepted. For though the Spaniards feemed only to intend the Retreat and relief of his own Navy when he would undertake any Expedition againft the Turks, yet the wife Venetians faw, that by this Haven he might at all times ave, and when he lifted ferprize, the whole Countrey.

II. The other Iflands of this Sea, as of leffer note, will be paid to deliver in few words. The firft of which is called CLAUDIUS, mentioned Alds 27. 16. fituate on the South-weft of Crete, by Alds called Ganlos; wherein in Plinius's time was a Town or City named Gandos, now called Gozo, with the Ifland. 2. IALIA, now Strandia, a very fmall Ifland, and of note. 3. LETOIA, on the South-eaft of Crete, now called Chryfina. And 4. EGILIA, or Argilla, by Plinius Argilla, more in the Sea towards Peloponnesus; now called Cecirio by Sophianus. Of which and others of lefs note (if fells may be) there is no more to be faid, but that they have alwayes followed the Fortunes of Crete, on which they fecm to have their principal Dependence.

10. The Iflands of the IONIAN Sea.

THE IONIAN Sea is fo called either from Ionia, the Son of Dyrrhachium, whom Heracles having ignorantly killed threw into this Sea, giving that name unto it: to preserve his memory, as Dyrrhachium of opinion, or from Ionia a Region in the Extremity of Calabria, as Solinus; or from Is, the Daughter of Ionchus, as Lycophron the Poet hath it. It containeth all that part of the Mediterranean which lyeth from the Ægean or Cretan Seas unto the Adriatick, from which it is parted about Epidamnus, (otherwife called Dyrrhachium) as is faid by Plinius; or rather as the fhooting out of the Archeron Hills, as is affirmed by Pliny and other Writers; and fo along the shores of the two Calabria's to the Ifle of Sicily. Chief Ifles whereof which lyeth in the account of Greece (for of thofe lying on the Coaft of Italy we have fpoken elfewhere) are, 1. the Strophades, 2. Zacynthus, 3. the Echinades, 4. Cephalonia, 5. Coryra, and 6. Ithaca.

1. THE STROPHADES are two fmall Iflands, now called Strivali, lying againft Meflene in Peloponnesus, famous for nothing but the Harpyes, ravenous Birds, affirmed to have the faces of Women, but the Talons of Vultures, fent by the eftranged Gods (as the Fable goeth) for the punifhment of Phæacus King of Acadida, who had put out the Eyes of his Sons by a former Vice at the infatigation of their Stepdame: For which he was fo plagued by thefe Harpyes, that he could fit no Meats on his Table wherefore he was, but thefe ravenous creatures firft devoured it, and then bewrayed the Dishes in which it was. Much pittyed by the Argonauts, whom he had courteoufly entertained, they fent Zetetes and Calais, the winged Ifle of Boreas and Orion, who drove them thence, and having purfued them to thofe Iflands, turned back again: whence the name of Strophades. Under which Fable was conveyed the bad condition of ignorant or unhappy Princes, devoured by Flatterers, Informers, and falfe Accufers, by whom their name and Government was made diftaftful; till by good Council they had purged their Courts of fuch ugly Monfters: concerning which Alphonus King of Naples was ufed to fay, that thefe Harpyes had left the Strophades and dwelt at Rome. They are inhabited only by fome few Greek Friars: in one of them there is a Spring of Frith Water, which hath its Fountain in Peloponnesus, and paffing under the Sea arifeth here. The Greek Priests are called Calaires, quafi καλὰ ἱερὰ, boni Sacerdotes; about 30 in number. They wear long Hair, never cut fitch, and but feldom fith; feeding ufually on Herbs, Olives, Oyl, and the like. They never go out of the Iflands, neither do they on any occafion permit Women to come amongst them. They all labour for their Sufenance, fome in Tillage, fome in Vineyards, fome in Fifhing; fo that among very many of them, three or four only can read. But of thefe fomewhat hath been faid elfewhere already.

2. ZACYNTHUS, or Zant, is 60 miles in compafs, and diftant from Peloponnesus 20 miles, fo called of Zacynthus, Son to Dardanius. The Countrey is wonderfully ftored with Oyl, Wines and Currants: of which laft they made yearly 150000 Zecechins for their own Cofters, and 43000 Dollars which they pay for Custom to the Seigniority of Venice. They were a very poor people when the Englifh ufed to traffick there firft; but now they grow rich and proud. At our Merchants firft frequenting the Countrey, they much marvelled to what end they bought for many Currans, and demanded whether they ufed to dye Cloaths or fair Hogs with them, for fo they themfelves did: but now they have learned a more profitable ufe of them. Here are alfo very good Salt-pits, Frith water plenty, but little or no Wood, and lefs Corn: their ground being husbanded, as the cafe ftands with them, to their better advantage; but fo that many times they are ready to ftarve, if either the Wind or the Sea prove crofs unto them, and hinder them from fetching their Provifions both of Fifeh and Corn out of Peloponnesus, in which refpect they are faim to hold fair Quarter with the Turks, confidering how eafie it is for him to diftreff them for want of Victual. The Ifland is much troubled with Earthquakes, commonly once a week; in regard whereof they build their Houfes very low; and when they perceive them coming, the Priests are to ring the Bells, to rife the people to Prayers. They have a Custom here at Weddings to invite many young men, whom they call Compeers, of which every one giveth the Bride a Ring: which done, it is accounted as detestable a Sin as Inceft for them to accompany her in any carnal kind: and therefore they chufe fuch to be their Compeers who have formerly been fufpected of too much Familiarity with her.

The Ifland is very populous and well inhabited, but the people of a fpiteful and vindictive nature, not to be reconciled, if angered. It containeth in it 48 Towns and Villages, the chief whereof, which paffeth by the name of a City, is called alfo Zant, ftretched out about the length of a mile on the foot of a mountain, but in breadth not anfwerable; beautified with a fair and convenient Haven opening towards Greece, fafe from the danger of Pirats, though not of Winds, capable of great Fleets of fhipping both for bulk and number, and fo frequented from all parts, that he who hath a mind to go out of it need not itay for a paffage. Yet, notwithstanding this great Concourse and refort of Strangers, the Town is rather rich than well-built or beautiful; the Streets hereof being uneven and rugged, and the Buildings by reason of the often Earthquakes, very low. On the Eaft fide of it, on a round fteep Mountain, ftandeth a very ftrong Caffe, a little City of it felf, well garrifoned, impregnable fortified, and of a very difficult Entrance: which commandeth not the City or Harbour only, but a great part of the Sea adjoining. Upon the Wall thereof continually ftands a Watchman, to defcry what Shipping is at land, and hangeth out as many Flags as he difcovereth Veffels. And over the Door of the Town-Hall (the better to intruft the Magiftrates in their publick Duty) it is faid thefe Verfes are infcribed:

Heleus 1. edit, 2. amat; 3. punit, 4. confervat, 5. honorat, 1. Nequitiam, 2. Pacem, 3. Crimina, 4. Furas, 5. Probos. Thus enflified by George Sandys, whence I had the Latine. This place doth 1. hate, 2. love, 3. punifh, 4. keep, 5. requite, 1. Voluptuous Riot, 2. Peace, 3. Crimes, 4. Laws, 5. the Upright.

In matter of Religion, the people, being generally Greeks both in Birth and Language, are for the moft part of that Church alfo; but fome adhere unto the Latine; each party having their own Bifhop: of which the Greek Bifhop hath his Cathedral in the Church of S. Nicolas, near unto the Haven which it giveth name to; and therein a Moniftery of Calloires, or Monks of Bafil, the Latine Bifhop hath his Residence and Cathedral within the Caffe, and therein a Convent of Francifcans. The Jews have in this Town their Synagogue alfo: but there are not many of them, if not lately encreafed. In Civil matters they are fubject to the State of Venice, the Governour hereof (whom they call the Providore) having his Residence in the Caffe, affifted by a Chanceller and two Counfellors (all Gentlemen of Venice) whom they change every third year. The Fortunes of this Ifland in former times, and by what means it fell to the Venetians, we fhall fhew anon.

3. THE ECHINADES are certain little Iflands, or rather great Rocks, now called Curzolari, famous for nothing but the great Battel of Lepanto, fought nigh them betwixt the Venetians and the Turks; the Turks having in their Navy 207 fail of Ships, the Venetians and their Confederates but 145 of all forts. But it pleased God to give the Victory to the weaknet: the Ifue of it being fuch, that the Turks loft 20000 men who were killed in the Fight, 30000 more which were taken prifoners, 140 of their Gallies, 400 pieces of Ordnance, and 200 Chriftian Captives which were then redeemed: the Chriftians buying this great Victory with the death of 2656 men or thereabouts; too great a price, could it have been purchafed with a lefs. A Victory obtained not far from the point of Albium, wherein Auguftus overcame the Navy of Marcus Antonius, and thereby got the Empire to himfelf alone, of which before he was but Joint-tenant with his Adverfary. So that this place feems to be marked out for a Stage of eminent Actions, and that this later Naval fight was but the fecond part of the firft.

But to return unto thefe Islands. They ftand juft againft the Mouth of the River Achelous, of which thus the Poet, Tibullus obijctus Achelous Echinadas exiit.

Fierce Achelous with the Sea is mixt
Where the Echinades (great Rocks) are fixt.
Thefe Iflands are in number five, feigned by the Poets to be fo many Naiades or Sea Nymphs, whom Achelous the River-God upon fome difpleafure metamorphofed into thefe Rocky Iflands. But the truth is, that they were caufed by the Dirt and Mud which this River carried with it into the Sea, where at laft is fettled to firm Ground. Of which himfelf faith thus in Ovid,

*Fluvius noftrique marifque
Continuum deducit humum, pariterque revolvit
In totidem mediis: quot cernis Echinadas undas.*
The fury of the Sea waves and mine own Continual heaps of Mud and Earth drew down,
Which, parted by the inter-running Seas,
Made, as thou feelt, thefe five Echinades.

5. CEPHALENI A, the moft populous Ifland of this Sea, is fituate overagainft Acarnania, part of the Province of Epirus; having on the South-eaft Zant, on the North-weft Coryra or Corfu; in length containing 80 miles, 40 in breadth, the whole compafs being reckoned at 160. Once called Terrapolis, from the number of four Cities in it; but three of them were decayed in the time of Ptolemy, who takes notice of no more but one, and that of the fame name with the Ifland. It is woody and mountainous in moft places, but the Mountains intermixt with Valleys and the Woods with Champain: plentiful in Wheat, Honey, Currans, Manna, Oyl, incomparable, though not long-lafting, Mufcaddes; as alfo in Cheefe, Wool, Turkeys, and Powder for the dying of Scarles. So deftitute of Water, as having no River, and not many Fountains, that when their Cattel would drink, they gape both morning and evening to receive the Dew diffilling infenfibly from the Clouds.

The People are for the moft part Greeks; fome few Italians, naturals of the Seigniority of Venice, being intermixt: the whole number of the Inhabitants computed at 6000 Families, the number of the Towns and Villages to 200 or thereabouts. The principal whereof are, 1. Cephalonia, now Cefalonia, fortified with good Works and a very ftrong Caffe. 2. Argafoli, a Haven-town, diftant fix miles from Cefalonia: the Port whereof is capable of a fufficient Navy. 3. Sidra, another Port-town alfo, lying towards the South.

As for the Fortunes of this Ifland, it was firft called Melana, after Teleboe: and being known by that name was made fubject to Therbes, by the Valour and good Conduct of Amphirrhys, the Theban General, by whom

Perelas, the King hereof, was slain in Battle. During which War, and the Stay of Amphitryo in this Island, it happened that Cephalus, a noble Athenian, having by misadventure killed his Wife Procris with an Arrow which he shot at a Deer, not daring to abide in his own Country, fled unto Amphitryo his old Friend, then newly victorious over the Tebeans; who, pitying his case, made him the Governour of this Island, since, from his name, called Cephalonia. Having continued for some time in the power of the Tebeans, it passed, together with Zant and some other Islands into the hands of the Macedonians; from whom, in the declining of their Affairs, the Acheans got the Isle of Zant, and the Epirotes Cephalonia. But long they had not held them when the Romans began to look towards Greece, who under colour of setting the Continent at liberty, made themselves Masters of both the Islands; that to they might at leisure possess the whole, as in time they did. In the Division of the Empire they fell, as parts of Greece, to the Constantinopolitans; and on the takings of that City by the Western Christians, they fell, with almost all the rest of the Islands, to the State of Venice, the Governours whereof, retaining Corfu and some other of most Importance in the hands of the Seigneur, permitted these (as many other of less note) unto private Adventurers. At the conclusion of the Peace betwixt Mahomet the Great and the State of Venice, these two, with Nerios, or Leucas, (spoken of in Epirus) were seized on by that Tyrant in despite of that Treaty or Conclusion, as belonging unto private persons, not to the Republick; but were recovered afterwards by the Venetians in the Reign of Bajazet the second, in the name of the State, and as parts thereof are still governed and defended by them.

5. CORCYRA, (now CORFU) more anciently was called Phœacia; but took this latter name from a Nymph so called, whom Neptune is reported to have here deflowered. It is situate over against Epirus, from thence 12 miles distant, stretched out from East to West in the form of a Bow, the length thereof being 54 miles. 24 the breadth, and so it is the biggest of these Seas. Commodiously seated for the Trade and Estate of Venice, as the Centre of their Dominion and Command by Sea.

The Southern parts hereof are mountainous and defective in Water, much subject to be blatted with Southernly Winds; and therefore they sow little Corn, and plant less Fruits. The Northern parts are level and delightful, adorned with whole Groves of Limons, Oranges, Fig-trees, Olives, and Pomegranates; enriched with plenty of Grain, abundance of Wines, great store of Oyl and Olives, and most excellent Honey; blest with a very temperate and healthful Air, made odorous by most pleasant and sweet-smelling Fruits, which grow most plentifully in each part hereof. Alcious, who so courteously entertained Ulysses after his Shipwreck, was once King of this Island; whose Gardens, answerable to the natural Delights and Sweetness of it, are so much celebrated by the Poets. One of which thus;

Qui nunquam vacui proditis in aëthera Romi?*

Which may be Englished in these words,

Why should I name Alcinoi fertile Ground,
And Trees which never without Fruit are found?

Towns of most note and strength herein are, 1. Pagopolis, 2. Castello S. Angelo, of good esteem in respect of many others, but far short of 3. Corfu, the chief and strongest of the Island, which the Turks have found by their frequent Repulses to be impregnable. For it is situate at the foot of a Mountain, on the top of which are built two inaccessible Fortresses, as being strongly fenced with a natural Rock, the one called the Old Fortress, and the other the New: justly esteemed the chief Bulwarks of Venice, whose Trade and Power would soon decay should these Forts be lost. For which cause the two Governours (for each Fort hath one) are sworn before the State of Venice, never to hold Intelligence with one another by word or writing; lest by the Treachery of the one, the other might be wrought also from his Faith and Duty. Neither is their Command here for more than two years; their Commission then terminating, and new Successors being sent them. The Town is inhabited for the most part by Græcians, as is all the residue of the Island, beautified with one of the most commodious Havens in all the Adriatick, and the Residence of an Archbishop. A Town of such publick Concernment, in regard of the Strength and Situation, that it is accounted of as the Key of Venice, and one of the strongest Bulwarks of Christendom against the Encroachment of the Turks. The Story of it since dismembered from the Eastern Empire, at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, we have had before.

6. ITHACA, now called Val de Comper, lieth on the North-east of Cephalonia, being in compass 50 miles: most famous for the Birth of Ulysses, the Son of Laertes, of which thus the Poet;

*Esquimus Scopolus Ithacæ Laertia Regna, Et terram alticrem Ixvi exoritur Ulysses.
From th' Ithacan Rocks, Laertes Realm, we fled,
And cur'd the Land which dire Ulysses bred.*

It was also called Dulichium, or else there was some other Island of that name, not far from Ithaca, whereof Ulysses was also King, who is hence called Dulichius Heros among the Poets: and in this Taunt of Ajax to him, Dulichius vertex signifieth the Head of Ulysses,

Sed neque Dulichius, sub Achillis casside, Vertex Pondera tanta feret.

Achilles Helm's too great a weight, I trow, For weak Ulysses Head to undergo.

But as weak a man as Ajax thought him, he was the Master-Wit of Greece for the times he lived in, and one that did as good Service in the War of Troy as the best Soldier of them all. A War to which he went somewhat unwillingly, as fearing the sad Consequences and events thereof, inasmuch that he feigned himself mad, ploughing the Shore, and sowing Salt instead of Corn. But Palamedes, to make trial whether this was real, or but counterfeit only, cast young Telemachus, the Son of Ulysses, before the Plough, which he observing, either drove the Plough besides him, or lifted it over him. Discovers by this means, and engaging with the rest in the Trojan War, he found out the Design of Telemachus, and brought Achilles to it also: in the course whereof, by his Wit and Courage, he did very good Service; associated with Diomedes in the action against Rhodus King of Thrace; and with Palamedes in foraging the Country for Provisions. By his Policy was the Palladium stoln out of Troy, and consequently the City taken and destroyed, whose Fate depended on the preservation of that fatal Relick. Here was the ending of the War, which held out ten years, he was withheld from Ithaca ten years longer by Winds and Tempests and the Displeasure of the Gods which favoured Troy; in which he saved himself from the Enchantments of the Sirens, the Allurements of Circe, the Cruelty of Lycophemus, and after many Dangers come home in safety. A man of so compleat a Vertue, that Homer maketh him the Pattern of a Temperate and Prudent man in the Books called Odysses, (by his name, as the Greeks pronounce it;) as he doth Achilles, in his Iliads, of a compleat and perfect Soldier.

The Country is generally very rocky and barren, exceeding plentiful of Goats, but no Hares live in it; inhabited for the most part by Pirates and Exiles, men banished out of civil Society, and willingly acknowledging no Superior over them; but subject, if to any, to the State of Venice, which hitherto hath maintained these Islands against the Turks, though many times attempted by them in the most prosperous times of their Arms and Victories. For the Venetians being gratified, at the taking of Constantinople by the Latines, with almost all the Islands of the Ægean and Ionian Seas, (as being a People strong in Shipping, and so most able to preserve the Possession of them) some of the greatest and most considerable, either for their Riches or commodiousness of Situation, were furnished with convenient Garrisons in the name of the State. The rest they did bestow on the better sort of Citizens, to be defended and made good for their own Use and Charges; who accordingly possessed themselves of one, two or more of them, as they were of ability to set out their Gallies for the keeping of them: the Seigniorship having nevertheless a Care of all, and to that end keeping a Fleet at Sea continually under one of their Admirals; whereby they did not only preserve those Seas from the Genova Pirates, but for long time defended all their Islands also, as well against the Greeks as the Turks Emperours. But all the Isles of the Ægean being lost to the Turks, except Cythera and Tenos on the European, and Carpaphos or Scarpanto on the Asian side; they have now only Crete with the Isles adjoining, and those of the Ionian Sea under their Command, and these (but specially the Isle Crete) endangered at the present by the Turkish Tyrant.

Thus having taken a view of the several Provinces and Isles which belong to Greece, according to the ancient and present state of each particular: let us next take a view of the Græcian Emperours, who have had here their principal Residence, and possessed the whole (though for a while their Empire was extended over all the East) as they here follow in this ensuing Catalogue of

The CONSTANTINOPOLITAN, GRÆCIAN, or Eastern Emperours.

A. Cb.

- 331 1. Constantine, surnamed the Great, having reigned 12 years in Rome, translated his Imperial Seat to Constantinople, which himself had founded.
- 341 2. Constantius, the second Son of Constantine, in the Division of the Empire, had for this Partage Thrace, Constantinople, and all the Provinces of the East. After the death of his two Brethren he remained sole Emperour, but retired for the most part in the East; a great Patron of the Arrians, and as great a Persecutor of the Orthodox Christians.
- 366 3. Julian, surnamed the Apostate, Son of Constantine the Brother of Constantine the Great; at first a Christian, afterwards a professed Enemy of the Gospel: fortunate in his Wars against the Almans, Franks and other Transalpine Nations, whilst he was a Christian; prodigiously slain in the Persian War, When become a Persecutor.
- 368 4. Jovian, or Jovianian, chosen by the Army, a Religious Prince, made Peace with the Persian, and settled the Affairs of the Christian Church: who being dead, Valentinian, of mean Birth, but great Abilities in War, was elected Emperour.

- 369 5. Valens, the Brother of Valentinian, made Partner in the Empire with him, ruled in Constantinople and the East; Valentinian taking more delight in Rome and the Western parts. A great Patron of the Arrian Faction, and the first who brought in the Goths on this side of the Danow, whom he placed in the desert parts of Thrace. To the Destruction of the Empire, and himself to boot.
- 382 6. Gratian, the eldest Son of Valentinian, succeeded his Father in the West, and his Uncle Valens in the East, after whose death he left Italy and the West to Valentinian his younger Brother. Distressed by the Goths, he made Theodosius Partner in the Empire with him, and was treacherously murdered by Andragathius, at the appointment and command of the Tyrant Maximus.
- 383 7. Theodosius, a Spaniard born, revenged the death of Gratian on the Tyrant Maximus, and of Valentinian the 2. on the Traitor Eugenius. He vanquished the Goths, utterly suppressed the Pagan Superstitions, which till his time continued even in Rome it self, and strengthened the Church of Christ with good Laws and Ordinances.
- 399 8. Arcadius, the eldest Son of Theodosius, succeeded his Father in the East, as his Brother Honorius did in the West: the Roman Empire after this last Division of it being so distracted and torn in pieces, that it was never since united.
- 412 9. Arcadius II. Son of Arcadius, made Peace with the Goths, whom he employed against the Huns and Perthians; his more dangerous Enemies, and caused the Ephefene Council to be called against Nestorius.
- 454 10. Martianus, Lieutenant to Theodosius, succeeded his Master, and married with Pulcheria his Master's Sister. He called the Council of Chalcedon against Discorus.
- 461 11. Leo, a Thracian born, elected by the joynt consent of the Senate and Souldiery, sitting in the Council of Chalcedon; the Acts whereof he approved and ratified.
- 478 12. Zeno, the Son-in-law and Lieutenant of Leo, sent Theodoric and the Goths into Italy against Odoacer, A Tyrant and a great Drinker; in one of his drunken Fits buried quick by his Empress. In his time Constantinople was almost wholly destroyed by Fire; in which perished, amongst other things, 120000 Volumes of good Manuscripts.
- 497 13. Anastasijs, a mean Officer of the Court, by the power and favour of the Empress created Emperour: a great Patron of Eutyches, yet fortunate in his Wars against the Perthians and Arabians. In his time Constantinople besieged by the Seythians was likely to have fallen into great Distress; it Proclus, a famous Mathematician, like another Archimedes, had not fired their Gallies.
- 521 14. Justin, the Son of a Thracian Shepherd, and Captain of the Guard unto Anastasijs, a Catholic Prince, and Patron of the Orthodox Clergy, whom he called from Banishment.
- 528 15. Justinian, the Sister's Son of Justin, with whom he was at first Consort in the Empire, recovered Africk from the Andals by Belisa-

TINS

- rius, and Italy from the Goths by Narses; and finally reduced the Laws of Rome into form and method.
- 566 16. Justin II. Nephew of Justinian, instituted the Exarchate of Ravenna, and lost a great part of Italy to the Lombards. Unable of himself to oppose the Persians, he chose
- 577 17. Tiberius, one of his chief Commanders, to be Confort with him, who afterwards succeeded in the sole Command.
- 584 18. Maurice, a Cappadocian born, fortunate in his Wars against the Persians, from whom he recovered Mesopotamia in the time of Tiberius, by whom at his return he was married to Constantina his Daughter, and declared his Successor. Refusing to ransom some of his Soldiers, taken Prisoners by Caganus King of the Avars, he lost the Affections of his Army.
- 604 19. Phocas, a common Soldier, in a military Tumult chosen Emperor, murdered the Emperor Mauritus, with his Wife and Children, and made Pope Boniface Supreme Bishop or Head of the Church: slain in a popular Tumult by the Common people for his Lusts and Cruelties.
- 611 20. Heraclius, a Nobleman of Constantinople, chosen by the general consent, repaired the Ruines of the Empire, vanquished the Persians, recovered Hierusalem out of their hands: and brought home the Cross unto Constantinople in triumphant manner; whence the Feast called Exaltatio Crucis, September 14. In his time Mahomet began to disperse his Dorages.
- 641 21. Constantine, or Constantine II. Son of Heraclius, unfortunate in his Wars against the Saracens, who prevailed in all places. Picking a Quarrel with the Romans, he defaced Rome, robbing it of all the choicest Ornaments which the Goths and other barbarous people had left; and ransacking the Isle of Sicily, was there slain by the Women.
- 670 22. Constantinus III. Son of the former Constantine, from his long or early Beard furnished Paganatus, repulsed the Saracens from Constantinople, but could not hinder the Bulgarians from passing over the Danov.
- 687 23. Justinian II. Son of Constantine the 3. subdued Mesopotamia, Armenia, and some part of Persia, forcing the Saracens to sue for Peace, and become his Tributaries. Against whom Leontius on the one side, and Abdumarus, on the other, severally taking Arms; were declared Emperours. Justinian, taken by Leontius, hath his Nose cut off, and his person committed to Custody: but making an Escape, by means of Trebellen King of the Bulgarians, recovered his Imperial Dignity; and being too violent in the pursuit of his Revenge, was finally murdered at the Altar by the command of
- 713 24. Philippus Bardanes, Admiral of his Navy, elected Emperour by the Soldiers, a great enemy of Images, which he caused to be cast out of the Church, thereby incurring the Displeasure of
- 715 25. Anastasius II. called also Artemius, his principal Secretary, who thrust himself into the Empire; forced to relinquish it by that Army which he had raised against the Saracens: in which Tumult the City of Constantinople was sacked and spoiled.

- 717 26. Theodosius III. made Emperour in this Tumult by the Soldiers, hearing of the Approach of Leo, Commander of the Eastern Armies, resigned the Empire, and took Orders to preserve his Life.
- 718 27. Leo Isaurus, in whose time Caliph Zuleiman besieged Constantinople the space of three years, and when by Cold and Famine 30000 of the Saracens were destroyed, they desisted. At this Siege was that Fire invented which we, for the violence of it, call Wild-fire; and the Latines, because the Greeks were the Authors of it, Græci ignis: by which the Saracens Ships were not a little molested. He was also a great Enemy to Images, and for this cause hated by the Pope and Clergy of Rome, who gave him thereupon the Nickname of Iconomachus.
- 741 28. Constantinus IV. Son of Leo, furnished Copronymus, for that when he was baptized he bewrayed the Font, followed his Father's Zeal in removing Images, which created him much Trouble, one Artabardus being chosen Emperour against him, but at last defeated.
- 777 29. Leo III. Son of Constantine Copronymus, honoured with the Adjunct of Porphyrogenitus, but commonly called Leo the 4. (Leontius the Usurper (as I conjecture) being reckoned for one;) an enemy to Images, and fortunate in his Wars against the Saracens.
- 782 30. Constantine V. the Son of Leo and Irene, first governed the Empire with his Mother, by whom at last supplanted, and deprived of Sight, he died of Melancholy.
- 798 31. Irene, Wife of Leo the 3. first Confort with Constantine her Son, and afterwards sole Emperess of Constantinople: for her better support in which Estate she sided with the Popes of Rome, and called the second Council of Nice for defence of Images. In her time Charles, furnished the Great, was by the Pope and People of Rome created Emperour of the West, for the Popes, knowing their own Greatness to grow out of the Ruines of the Temporal Power, committed the Empire of the West unto the French Princes: whereby the Greek Emperours became much weakened; and the French, being the Pope's Creatures, were in tract of time brought to their Devotion. In following times, when Frederick Barbarossa was by Pope Alexander the 3. pronounced non-Emperour, Emanuel of Constantinople sued for a Re-union of the Empire: but the crafty Pope returned this answer, Nim licere illi conjungere quæ majores ejus de iustitia disjuncturunt: Let no man presume to joyn what the God of Rome, the Pope, hath put asunder.
- 803 32. Nicephorus, a Patrician, made Emperour by the Soldiers, persuaded that Irene had made choice of him to be her Successor: slain in a pitch Field against the Bulgarians.
- 812 33. Michael, furnished Cæsaropates, from his Office, (the Mayor of the Palace, as it were) Husband to Procopia, the Daughter of Nicephorus, assumed the Empire, which, finding his own Weakness, he did soon relinquish, and betook himself unto a Monastery.

- 814 34. Leo V. furnished Armenius, from his Country, General of the Horse to Michael, demolished the Images which his Predecessors had set up. He was slain in the Church during the time of Divine Service.
- 821 35. Michael II. furnished Balbus, having murdered Leo assumed the Empire, unfortunate in his Government, and died of Madness.
- 830 36. Theophilus, the Son of Michael Balbus, an enemy of Images, like his Father, and as unfortunate as he; losing many Battels to the Saracens, at last he died of Melancholy.
- 842 37. Michael III. Son of Theophilus, first ruling with his Mother Theodora, who took unto herself the supreme Command; and after of himself sole Emperour, his Mother being made a Nun.
- 866 38. Basilus, furnished Macedo, from the place of his Birth, made Confort in the Empire by Michael the Son of Theophilus, whom he basely and treacherously murdered, killed casually by a Stag.
- 866 39. Leo VI. for his Learning furnished Philosophus, the Son of Basilus, a vigilant and provident Prince: most of his time, with variable Success, was spent against the Bulgarians.
- 912 40. Constantine VII. commonly called the VII. Son of Leo Philosophus, first under his Uncle Alexander, next under Zoe his Mother, and after under Romanus Lacapenus, governed the Empire; by which last he was so miserably depressed that he was fain to get his livelihood by Painting. But Lacapenus being deposed, and turned into a Monastery by his own Sons, Constantine at last obtained his Rights, and restored Learning unto Greece.
- 961 41. Romanus, the Son of Constantine.
- 961 42. Nicephorus, furnished Phocas, first Governor or Protector of the young Emperour Romanus; after whose death, created Emperour by the Army, he recovered Antioch, Cilicia, and the greatest part of Asiaminor, from the power of the Saracens: slain in the night by John Zimisces, his Wife Theophania being privy to it.
- 971 43. John Zimisces, Emperour in the place of Nicephorus Phocas, governed the Empire better than he did obtain it, vanquishing the Bulgarians, Kosses, and others of the barbarous Nations; and left it at his death to the Sons of Romanus.
- 977 44. Basilus II. furnished Porphyrogenetus, as many of the Emperours had been before him, in regard that at their Births they were wrapped in Purple, (which the Greeks call Porphyrie) the Imperial Colour: the subdued the Bulgarians, and made them Homagers to the Empire.
- 1027 45. Constantine VII. or VIII. Brother of Basilus, and with him Partner in the Empire: after whose death he governed three years by himself, but did nothing memorable.
- 1030 46. Romanus II. for his Prodigality furnished Argyropates, Husband of Zoe, the Daughter of Constantine the 3. drowned in a Bath by the Treason of his Wife and her Adulterers.
- 1035 47. Michael IV. furnished Paphlago, from his Country, first the Adulterer and afterwards the Husband of Zoe; but died very penitent.
- 1042 48. Michael V. furnished Calaphates, a man of
- obscure Birth, adopted by Zoe, whom he deposed from the Government, and turned into a Monastery. Out of which being again taken in a popular Tumult, he put out the Eyes of Calaphates, and, being then 60 years of age, belted both the Empire and her self upon
- 1043 49. Constantine IX. furnished Monomachus, formerly Husband to a Niece of Romanus the 2.
- 1055 50. Theodora, Sister unto Zoe, after the death of Constantine, managed for two years the Affairs of the Empire with great Contentment of all people. But grown in age the succoured it to
- 1057 51. Michael VI. furnished Serratius, an old, but military man, deposed within 3 years by
- 1060 52. Isaacus, of the noble Family of the Comneni, valiant, of great Courage, and diligent in his Affairs: which having managed for two years, he left it at his death, with consent of the Senate and people, to
- 1063 53. Constantine X. furnished Ducas, a great Justiciar and very devout, but exceeding covetous, whereby he became hated of his Subjects and contemned by his Enemies.
- 1071 54. Romanus III. furnished Diogenes, married Eudoxia, the Wife of Constantinus Ducas, and with her the Empire. Taken Prisoner by the Turks, and sent home again, he found a Faction made against him; by which Eudoxia was expelled, himself at his return deposed, and so died in Exile.
- 1075 55. Michael VII. the Son of Constantinus Ducas, furnished Parapinatus, by reason of the Famine which in his time happened, made Emperour in the afore said Tumult. But being found unable for to great an Honour, (the Turks prevailing in all places) he was deposed again, and put into a Monastery.
- 1081 56. Nicephorus II. furnished Botaniates, of the House of Phocas, succeeded in the place of Parapinatus; deposed within three years by the Comneni.
- 1084 57. Alexius Comnenus, Son of the Emperour Isaacus Comnenus, obtained the Empire: in whose time the Western Christians with great Forces prepared for the Recovery of the Holy Land: of whose purposes being very jealous he denied them passage through his Country; but was in the end forced to find them Victuals and other Necessaries.
- 1113 58. Calo-Joannes, the Son of Alexius, had a good hand against the Turks, from whom he took Laodicea and some other places of Importance. He also vanquished the Scythians or Tartars passing over the Ister, most of which he either slew in Battel, or sold as Captives; permitting the remainder to abide on this side that River. He also conquered the Serrians and Bulgarians, transporting many of them into Bithynia.
- 1142 59. Manuel, or Emanuel, the younger Son of Calo-Joannes, an under-hand enemy to the Western Christians, and an open enemy to the Turks; by whom being entrapped in the dangerous Straights of Cilicia, and his Army miserably cut off, he was on honourable terms permitted to return again.
- 1180 60. Alexius II. Son of Manuel, deposed and barbarously murdered by Andronicus, Confingerman of his Father, with his Wife and Mother.

- 1183 61. Andronicus Comnenus, confined by Mannelto Oennum in Paphlagonia, by reason of his dangerous and ambitious practices, after his death, pretending to reform the State, came unto Constantinople: first made Protector, afterwards Confort in the Empire with young Alexius: whom having barbarously slain and got the Empire to himself, he was not long after cruelly torn in pieces in a popular Tumult.
- 1185 62. Isaacus Angelus, a Nobleman of Constantinople, and of the same Comnenian Race, designated to death by Andronicus; was in a popular Election proclaimed his Successour; deposed by Alexius his own Brother, and his Eyes put out.
- 1195 63. Alexius Angelus, deprived his Brother, and excluded his Nephew from the Empire; but it held not long.

64. Alexius Angelus II. Son of Isaac Angelus, who being unjustly thrust out of his Empire by his Uncle Alexius, had recourse to Philip the Western Emperor, whose Daughter Mary he had married, who so prevailed with Pope Innocent the 3. (upon a promise for subjecting the Church of Greece to the See of Rome) that the Army prepared for the Holy Land was employed to restore him. On the approach whereof Alexius the Usurper fled; Alexius the young Emperor is seated in his Father's Throne, and not long after slain by Alexius Ducas. In revenge whereof the Latines assault and win Constantinople, make themselves Masters of the Empire, and divided it amongst themselves: alotted to the Venetians Candia, many good Towns of Peloponnesus, and most of the Islands to Boniface Marquis de Montferrat the Kingdom of Thessaly; to the others of the Adventurers other liberal Shares; and finally to Baldwin Earl of Flanders the main Body of the Empire, with the Title of Emperor. The Seat of the Empire of the Greeks being transferred unto Nice, a City of Bythia in the Lesser Asia, by Theodorus Lascaris, Son-in-law to Alexius, the Usurper, continued there till the regaining of Constantinople by the Greeks again, after it had been 60 years possessed by the Western Christians.

Emperours of the LATINES in CONSTANTINOPLE.

- 1200 65. Baldwin, Earl of Flanders, first Emperor of the Latines reigning in Constantinople, taken in fight by John King of Bulgaria, coming to aid the Greeks, and sent Prisoner to Ternova, where he was cruelly put to death.
- 1202 66. Henry, the Brother of Baldwin, repulsed the Bulgarians out of Greece, and died a Conquerour.
- 1215 67. Peter, Count of Auxerre in France, the Son of Peter, youngest Son to Lewis the Gros of France, and Husband of Toland the Daughter of Henry, succeeded in the Empire after his decease. He was cunningly entrapped by Theodorus Angelus, a great Prince in Epirus, whom he had besieged in Dyrrhachium: but of an Enemy being persuaded to become his Guest, was there murdered by him.
- 1220 68. Robert, the Son of Peter, having seen the miserable usage of his beautiful Empress, whom a young Burgundian, formerly contracted to her, had most despitely mangled, cutting off both her Nose and Ears, died of Heart's grief as he was coming back from Rome, whither his Melancholy had carried him to consult the Pope in his Affairs.

- 1227 69. Baldwin II. Son of Robert by a former Wife, under the Protection of John de Brenne, the titular King of Hierusalem, succeeded in his Father's Throne: which having held for the space of 33 years, he was forced to leave; the City of Constantinople being regained by the Greeks, and the poor Prince compelled to fly in vain for Succours to the French Venetians, and other Princes of the West. And though both Philip the Son of this Baldwin, and Charles d'Valois, Father of Philip de Valois the French King, in right of Catherine his Wife, Daughter of that Philip, did sometimes plead themselves with the Title of Emperours of Constantinople, yet neither of the two had ever any footing or possession there.

The Empire restored unto the G R E E K S.

- 1260 70. Michael VIII. surnamed Paleologus, extracted from the Comnenian Emperor, Emperor of the Greeks in the City of Nice, most fortunately recovered Constantinople; the Town being taken by a party of secretly put into it by some Country-Labourers under the Ruins of a Mine. Present in person at the Council of Lions, at the persuation of the Pope he admitted the Latine Ceremonies into the Churches of Greece; for which he was greatly hated by his Subjects, and denied the honour of Christian Burial.

- 1283 71. Andronicus II. vexed with unnatural Wars by his Nephew Andronicus, who rebelled against him.
- 1328 72. Andronicus III. first Partner with his Grandfather, afterwards Sole Emperor.
- 1341 73. John Paleologus, Son of Andronicus the 3. In whose Minority Contaczenus his Protector usurped the Empire, and held it sometimes from him, and sometimes with him, till the year 1357, and then retired into a Monastery, leaving the Empire unto John, during whose Reign the Turks first planted themselves in Europe.

- 1384 74. Andronicus IV. the Son of Joannes Paleologus.
- 1387 75. Emanuel Paleologus, the Son of the said John, and Brother of Andronicus the 4. In whose time Bajazet the sixth King of the Turks did besiege Constantinople; but found such notable Resistance, that he could not force it.
- 1417 76. John II. Son of Andronicus the 4.
- 1420 77. John III. Son of Emanuel Paleologus, in person at the Council of Florence for reconciling of the Churches in hopes thereby to get some Aid from the Western Christians, but it would not be.

- 1444 78. Constantinus Paleologus, the Brother of John the 3. In whose time the famous City of Constantinople was taken by Mahomet the Great 1453; the miserable Emperor, who had in vain gone from door to door to beg or borrow money to pay his Souldiers, (which the Turks found in great abundance when they took the City) being lamentably trod to death in the Throng. Now concerning this Empire of the Greeks, we may observe some fatal Contraries in one and the same name. As first, that Philip the Father of Alexander laid the first Found.

Foundation of the Macedonian Monarchy, and Philip the Father of Perseus ruined it. Secondly, that Baldwin was the first, and Baldwin the last Emperor of the Latines in Constantinople. Thirdly, that this Town was built by a Constantine the Son of Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch; and was lost by a Constantine, the Son of a Helena, a Gregory being Patriarch also. And fourthly, the Turks have been Patriarch also. As it was won by a Mahomet, so shall it be lost by a Mahomet. So Augustus was the first established Emperor of Rome, and Augustulus the last: Darius, the Son of Hystaspes, the Restorer; and Darius, the Son of Artabanus, the Overthrower of the Persian Monarchy. A like note I shall hereafter tell you of Hierusalem. In the mean time I will present you with a fatal Observation of the letter H, as I find it thus versed in Albin's England.

Not superstitiously I speak, but H this letter still hath been observed ominous to England's Good or Ill. First Henricus, Hefene and Helen were the cause Of war to Troy; Aneas Seed becoming fo Outlaws. Hamlet the Ham with foreign Arms did first the Brutes invade:

Hereto Rome's Imperial Throne the British Crown conveyed.

Henric and Horsus first did plant the Saxons in this Isle: Hangar and Habbra first brought Danes, that swayed here long while.

Atharold had the Saxon end, at Hardie Canute the Dane, Harries the first and second did restore the English Reign.

Fourth Henry first for Lancaster did England's Crown obtain.

Seventh Henry jarring, Lancaster and York unites in Peace.

Henry the eight did happily Rome's Irreligion cease.

A strange and ominous Letter, every Mutation in our State being as it were uttered by it.

What were the Revenues of this Empire since the Division of it into the East and West, I could never yet learn.

That they were exceeding great may appear by three circumstances. 1. Zonaras reporteth that the Emperor Basilius had in his Treasury 200000 Talents of Gold, besides infinite Heaps of Silver and other Moneys. 2. Lippus relateth, how Benjamin a Jew in his discourse of Europe saith, that the Custom due to the Emperours out of the Vituals and Merchandise sold at Constantinople only did amount to 20000 Crowns daily. 3. We find that at the Sack of Constantinople there was found an invaluable mass of Gold, Silver, Plate and Jewels, besides that which was hid in the Earth. For so the covetous Citizens chose rather to employ their Wealth, than afford any part of it to the Emperor, who with Tears in his Eyes went from door to door to beg and borrow Money, wherewith he might wage more Souldiers for the defence of the Town.

The Arms of the Empire were Mars, a Cross Sol between four Greek Beta's of the second: the four Beta's signifying (as Bodin saith) Banhus, Banhus, Banhus, Banhus.

It may perchance be expected that we should here make an additional Catalogue of those Turkish Emperours who have reigned in Constantinople since the taking of it; and, being they are possessed of Greece, and do now inhabit it, that we should here also speak of the Turks themselves, their Customs, Forces, Policies, Original, and Proceedings. But the discourse of those things we intend to reserve for Turcomania, a Province of Asia, from whence they made their first Inundation into Persia, and afterwards into other parts of the World now subject to them, the only Province which retains any thing of their name. And though the Peninsula called anciently Taurica Cheronesus (now part of Tartaria Precopensis) be within the Bounds of Europe also; yet we will defer the description and story of it till we come to the Affairs of the Tartars, and will here conclude our Discourse of Europe, and prepare for Asia.

And so much for GREECE, the last of the Provinces of EUROPE.

The Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Isles thereof.

Of ASIA.

ASIA is bounded on the West, with the Mediterranean and Aegean Seas, the Hellepont, Propontis, Ibracian, Eosphorus, and the Euxine Sea, the Palus Maeotis, the Rivers Tanais and Dniava, a Line being drawn from the first of the two said Rivers unto the other, by all which parted from Europe; on the North, it hath the main Scythick Ocean; on the East, the Straits of Anian (if such there be;) the Indian Ocean, and Mare del Zur, by which separated from America; on the South, the Mediterranean, or that part of it which is called the Carpathan Sea, washing the shores of Anatolia, and the main Southern Ocean, passing along the Indus, Perseus, and Arabian Coasts: and finally, on the South-West, the Red Sea or Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Africa. Environed on all sides with the Sea, or some Sea-like Rivers, except a narrow Isthmus in the South-West, which joins it to Africa, and the space of ground (whatsoever it be) betwixt Dniava and Tanais, on the North-west, which unites it to Europe.

It took this name, as some will have it, from Asia, the Daughter of Oceanus and Tethys, the wife of Lepetus, and (by him) Mother to Prometheus: as others say, from Asius the Son of Atis, a King of Lydia, from whence that Country first, afterwards all Anatolia, or Asia minor, and finally, the whole Continent had the name of Asia. Others again (but more improbably) derive the name from Asius the Philosopher, who gave the Palladium unto the Trojans; in memory whereof that Country first, and after the whole Continent did receive this name: But these Originations being very uncertain, Bochartus (out of his great affection to the Phoenick or Phoenician Language) will have it called so from Asia, a Phoenician word, signifying Medium, or the middle; because Anatolia, or the lesser Asia, which gives name (as he conceiveth) to the Greater also, lieth in the middle, as it were, betwixt some parts of Europe and Africa. And so far the Conjecture doth find countenance from some ancient Writers, that Asia is said by Pliny to be inter Africam & Europam, to be betwixt Africa and Europe; by Mela, medius nostris agoribus excipit, to be embraced in the middle of the two Seas (he meaneth Pontus Euxinus, and the Mediterranean.) and finally, by Eusebius (conceive them all of Anatolia, or the Lesser Asia) μεστω ἀπὸ τῶν ἑξῶν ἀνέχοντες, to have a middle situation betwixt Europe and Africa. But by what name, and on what grounds forever it be called by the Greeks and Latines, it is otherwife, and with better reason called in Holy Scriptures by the name of Sem, as being that portion of the world, wherein the whole Posterity of Sem had their seats and dwellings, if the observation of Magnus be of any weight.

It is situate East and West, from the 52 to the 169 degree of Longitude, and North and South, from the 82 degree of Latitude, to the very Aequator; some only of the Islands lying on the South of that Circle: so that the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, is but twelve hours only; but in the most Northern parts hereof, for almost four whole months together no night at all. And for a measurement by miles, it stretcheth in length 5200, and in breadth 4560 miles.

This Country hath heretofore been had in especial honour, 1. For the Creation of man, who had his first making in this part of the world; 2ly. Because in this part of it stood the Garden of Eden, which he had for the first place of his habitation; 3ly. because here flourished the four first great Monarchies of the Asyrians, Babylonians, Medes, and Persians; 4ly. Because it was the

All of them falling into the Euxine Sea. 6 Afcianus, 7 Rhyndacus. 8 Asparus, and 9 Granicus, passing into the Propontis. 10 Simiceis. 11 Scamander, called also Xanthus, ending their short course in the Hellspont. 12 Caicus, 13 Hermus, 14 Caystrus. And 15 Meander, joining themselves in the Aegean. 16 Calpis. 17 Xanthus, called also Lycus. 18 Limicrus, 19 Cataractis, discharging into the Mediterranean, and 20 Melas, adding to the waters of the great River Euphrates. Of most which we shall speak more particularly in their several places.

In reference to the State of Rome, it contained the whole Diocese of Pontus, except Armenia the Greater, the Asian Diocese intirely, without any exception; and the peculiar jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia, together with the Provinces of Ilyria and Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East. But because the names of many of those Provinces were of new invention, and some of them as of short continuance, we will consider it according as it stood divided anciently, and before the Romans had made any conquests in it, into the Provinces of 1 Bithynia, 2 Pontus, 3 Paphlagonia, 4 Galatia, 5 Cappadocia, 6 Armenia Minor, which (together with Armenia Major) made up, though in other names, the Pontic Diocese, 7 Phrygia Minor, 8 Phrygia Major, 9 Mysia the greater and the lesser, 10 Asia, specially so called, comprehending Asia and Ionia, 11 Lycia, 12 Caria, 13 Lycia, 14 Lycania, 15 Pisidia, 16 Pamphylia, 17 The Province of the Rhodes, all comprehended under the command of the Vicarius and Proconsul of Asia, 18 Ilyria, 19 Cilicia, parts of the Diocese of the East, as before was said.

1 BITHYNIA.

BITHYNIA is bounded on the East with Pontus, and the River Sangarius; on the West, with part of the Euxine, and Thracian Bosphorus, and part of the Propontis; on the North, wholly with the Euxine; and on the South, with Mysia, and Phrygia Minor: Formerly called Bebrycia, afterwards Mygdonia, and at last Bithynia, and that as some say from Bithynius, once a King heretofore probably from the Thyni, a people of Thrace, who passed over the Bosphorus, and subdued it, called therefore by some Writers Thracia Asiatia. So witnesseth the Poet Claudian, saying:

By Justin the Historian it is called by the name of Metapontus, by reason of its neighbourhood to the Euxine and the Pontic Regions.

The Country naturally rich, and in those parts heretofore which lieth next the Bosphorus, opposite to Constantinople, so plentifully enriched with fruitful hills, and pleasant Orchards, when kept by the more curious Christians, that it was thought not to be inferior to the so much celebrated Tenpe: now robbed of all those former beauties by the carelessness of the Turks, who affect neither art, nor sumptuousness, in their retirements and delights.

Chief Rivers thereof are Phyllis. 2 Sangarius, now called Savris, both falling into the Euxine Sea; this last arising from Mount Dindymus, in the fittest parts of Phrygia Major; and making two long reaches in his journey hither. 3 Afcianus, which rising also in Phrygia Major, but more near the borders of this Country, falleth into the Propontis, making the Bay called Sinus Afcianus; which with a Lake in the same Country, called Lacus Afcianus, doth plainly manifest, that the Bithynians are derived from Askenaz, the Son of Gomer, and grand-son of Japhet.

The principal Towns hereof are 1 Scutari, over against the Haven of Constantinople, called anciently Chrysipolis; for that there the Persians received their tribute from the other Cities of all these parts of Asia Minor. An ample Town, well garrisoned within, and surrounded round about with most pleasant Orchards, and honoured with the neighbourhood of a Royal Straglin. Not far off is a Tower, called the Maiden-Tower, serving both for a Fort and Watch-Tower; and being furnished for defence with 20 Pieces of Ordnance. 2 Chalcedon, on the same shore also, a Colony of the Megarenses, called blind by the Oracle, for neglecting Byzantium, and choosing the less convenient place for their habitation. And yet did Constantine the Great resolve upon the same place also for his Regal City; but changed his resolutions on a kind of miracle: it being observed, that when his workmen began to draw the Platform, some Eagles conveyed away their Lines to the other side of the Bosphorus, and let them fall directly upon Byzantium. Memorable after that for the fourth General Council there assembled by command of the Emperor Martinianus, for repelling the Heretic of Nestorius; in which were 530 Bishops: now so decayed, that it can only show some few of the ruins of it, 3 Scutari being risen on the fall thereof. 4 Nicomedia, so called from Nicomedes King of Bithynia (the Son of Zepus, and Grandchild to that Bithynian King, who so valiantly defended his own and his Country's liberty against Calanus, one of Great Alexander's Captains) by whom founded: Situate on the top of an Hill, environed with a pleasant and delightful Plain, honoured with the Seat and Residence of many of the Roman Emperours, when their affairs called them into the East, before the building of Constantinople: on that occasion made the Throne on which many of Gods Saints received the Crown of Martyrdom, especially in the Persecution under Dioclesian. In those times wealthy, and of fame, now much decayed; but notwithstanding well inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, for the commodiousness of the fresh springs which are thereabouts. 4 Libussa, betwixt Nicomedia, and the River Afcianus; memorable for the death and sepulture of the famous Annibal, who to prevent his being made prisoner to the Romans, when Prusias King of Bithynia intended unworthily to betray him, here made away himself by poison. 5 Prusa, founded by another Prusias, whose name it beareth; a large and wealthy City as most in Asia: honoured for a long time with the residence of the Turkish Kings, till the removal of their Seat to Adrianople, by Mahomet the first; and still ennobled with the sepulture of the Princes of the Ottoman Race, except the Emperours themselves. By the Turks called Bursa, 6 Nice, or Nicea, by the Turks called Nicchia, but most commonly Nicibus, situate near the Fens of the River Afcianus, occasioned by the frequent overflowings of that River: by some affirmed to be the Metropolis of Bithynia; but I think Nicomedia hath more right to claim that honour. First named Antigonina, from Antigonus the founder of it; and afterwards Nicea, by the name of Nica, Wife unto Lysimachus: both of them Captains of the Great Alexander; which last had the happiness to survive the overthrow of the former, and was the longest liver of those Great Commanders. Sufficiently famous both in Ecclesiastical and Civil Story, for the fifth General Council there held, by the appointment of Constantine the Great, Anno 314, for settling the peace of the Church, then miserably distracted by the Arian Heretic. The number of Bishops there assembled, no more than 318, yet of such high esteem for Learning and Piety, that that never Council hath been held in so great an honour. Here was also held the Council by the Empress Irene, for establishing the veneration of Images; that passing by the name of the Niceene Council, the Acts thereof might be of greater reputation amongst ignorant men. In which it was decreed by such doubtful Arguments, as Let us make man after our own Image, once mainly insisted on by a Legate of the Eastern Churches, that they should be revered and adored in as ample and religious manner, as the blessed Trinity it self. This City was also the Imperial City of the Greek Emperours, after the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, and there continued till the expulsion of the Latins, under these

Emperours of the GREEKS residing at NICE.

ACh.

1500 1 Theodorus Lascaris, Son-in-law to Alexius Angelus the Usurper, upon the taking of Constantinople by the Latins, passed over into Asia, and fortifying the City of Nice, made it the head City of this Kingdom, containing Bithynia, both the Phrygia, both the Mysia, Lycia, Adalia, and Ionia.

1223 2 John, surnamed Ducas, the Husband of Irene, Daughter of Theodore Lascaris, succeeded his Father-in-law in the Empire; to which he added Pontus, most of the Isles of the Aegean, and not a few places of importance in Thrace it self.

1256 3 Theodorus II. the son of Ducas.

1259 4 John II. the son of Theodore the second, an Infant about six years old, supplanted first, and after cruelly deposed and deprived of sight.

1259 5 Michael Palaeologus, descended from the Imperial family of the Comneni, first took upon him as Protector of the Infant-Emperour, and afterwards as his officer in the Empire: in which confirmed by many fortunate successes well against the Latins, as some Greek Usurpers in Thessaly and Epiloponessus, especially the taking of Constantinople, he deprived the young Emperour of his sight, made himself sole Emperour, and left it unto his posterity, who held it with a great deal of trouble and continual disputes, till the year 1452, when conquered by Mahomet the Great, as before was said. But this recovery of Constantinople was the loss of Nice, taken not long after the removal of the Imperial seat, by Sultan Otoman, Anno 1299, who presently thereupon took on himself the style of King, from which before he had abstained.

As for the fortunes of Bithynia it self, I look upon the Bithynians as a Thracian people, whom both Strabo and Herodotus speak of, as the founders of the name and Nation. Of such a King of theirs as Bithynius I find mention in my Authors; and possibly it might be he who had the leading of the Thyni, or Bithyni in this expedition, that being the name rather of this Nation, than his proper Family. But for the line of Kings which held out till the flourishing of the Roman greatness, they began to reign here some few generations before the time of Philip, and Alexander, the Macedonians: by which last, having other employment, and lying out of the road towards Persia, they were little troubled. Calanus, one of Alexander's Captains, made an expedition into their Country, and was vanquished by them: and afterwards they had to do with one of the Lieutenants of Antigonus (one of Alexander's greatest Princes) who though he humbled them for the present, yet got he neither title nor possession by it. And thus they held it out till the time of Prusias, so shuffling with the Macedonian and Syrian Kings, that betwixt both they still preserved their own estates. This Prusias, when the Romans became so inconsiderable, as that no danger need be feared from Greece, or Syria, pieced himself with them; and having aided them in their wars against Philip and Antiochus both and most unworthily promised to deliver Annibal (who had fled to him for succour) unto their Embassadors, made all sure to this end. His son and successor Nicomedes, being outed of his Kingdom by Mithridates King of Pontus, and restored again unto it by the power of the Romans, held it as their Federatory, as did Nicomedes his next Successor, surnamed Philometor, who dying without issue in the time of Augustus, gave his whole Kingdom to the Romans. By them, with the addition of that part of Pontus which lay next unto it, it was made a Province of their Empire, by the name of Pontus and Bithynia, continuing to till the division of that Empire into the Eastern and Western; when falling to the share of the Constantinopolitans, and with them to the power of the Turkish Tyrants, who do still possess it.

2 PONTUS.

PONTUS is bounded on the East, with Colechia, and Armenia; on the West, with Bithynia, and the River Sangarius; on the North, with the Euxine Sea; and on the South, with Phrygia Major, Paphlagonia, Galatia, and Cappadocia. So that it taketh up the whole length of Anatolia, or Asia Minor, from Bithynia to the River Euphrates, which parts it from Armenia Major, but not of answerable breadth; and gives name to the Sea adjoining, a Ponto regione ibi adjacentis ita appellari, as Strabo hath it, called from hence Pontus by the Latins, the adjunct of Euxinus coming on another occasion, which we have spoken of before. A Country of a large extent, and therefore divided by the Romans (when Masters of it) into these four parts, viz. Metapontus, or Pontus specially so called, 2 Pontus Galaticus, 3 Polemoniaceus, and 4 Pontus Cappadocius.

1 PONTUS S. especially so called, or Metapontus, bordering on Bithynia, and bounded on the East with the River Parthenius, which divided it from Paphlagonia, had for the chief Cities thereof, 1 Claudiopolis, so called in honour of Claudius, the Roman Emperour; and 2 Flaviopolis, in honour of Flavius Vespasianus; and 3 Julianopolis, in honour of the Julian Family, all midland Towns. 4 Diospolis, on the Euxine Sea, so called from a Temple consecrated to Jupiter of great report. 5 Heaclea, a Colony of the Phocians, called for distinction sake (there being many of that name) Heaclea Ponti: memorable of late times for being the seat or residence of a branch of the Imperial Family of the Comneni, when at the taking of Constantinople by the Western Christians, David and Alexius Comneni fled into these parts: the first fixing here his Royal residence, commanded over this part of Pontus, and Paphlagonia; the other possessing himself of Cappadocia and Galatia, made Trabzon his Regal or Imperial City. But these two Empires, though of the same date, were of different destinies: that of Heaclea and Pontus, being partly conquered by the Greek Emperours residing at Nice, and partly seized on by the Turks in the beginning and first fortunes of the Ottoman Family; the other keeping up the Majesty and State of an Empire, till the year 1461, when subdued by Mahomet the Great. 6 Phylum, at the mouth or influx of the River Phyllis, upon which it is seated. 7 Amisus, the furthest Town of this part towards the East, on the sea-side also, once of great strength; but taken by Lulusius, together with Heraclea, Synope, Amisus, and other Towns in the war against Mithridates, the great King of Pontus.

folia, que sunt turpia vicia. And 4 The Heneti, to whom the Venicians, as we have already said, do owe their first original. The Kings who ruled in this Country, derived themselves from Philonen, who allied Prismus King of Troy in his defence against the Greeks: in memory of whom, this Region for a while was called Philonia. Applying themselves unto the times, they were always favourable to the strongest, serving the Persian, and submitting to Alexander as he passed that way; and so maintained their estate without much molestation, till the time of Mitridates King of Pontus: who finding them firm unto the Romans, then growing to great power in the Lesser Asia, depriving Philonen, then King thereof, and took the Kingdom to himself, fortifying the chief Towns and places of it. Retorted again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he gave it to them at his death. But the Country being much wasted, and most of the Cities of it destroyed and dilapidated in the course of that War, it was not thought worthy a particular care, and therefore laid unto Capria. Not reckoned a distinct Province in the time of St. Peter, who writing to the 7, dispersed in Pontus, Cappadocia, Galatia, Asia, and Bithynia, takes no notice of this Paphlagonia; nor was it otherwise esteemed than as a member of Galatia, in the time of Paulinus. Afterwards it was joined to Pontus, by the Emperor Constantine: part of it after that, with some parts of Pontus and Bithynia, being made into a new Province by the Emperor Theodosius, and called Honorius, in honour of his Son Honorius, whereof Claudiopolis, a City of Pontus, properly so called, was made the Metropolis. But by Justinian the name of Honorius being abolished, and that of Paphlagonia revived again, the whole Country, as before limited, was governed by an Imperial Officer, whom he called Praetor Justinianus: continuing under the command of the Constantinopolitan, till the taking of that City by the Latins. After which made a Member of the Empire of Trabzon, till the conquest of it by the Turks, by whom called Rom.

4 GALATIA.

GALATIA is bounded on the East, with Cappadocia; on the West, with the River Sangarius; and some part of Pontus specially so called, or Misopontus; on the North, with Paphlagonia, on the South, with Lycania. So called from the Galli, who having ranged over Greece, passed into Asia, and brought a great part of it under their command: but being broken by Attalus King of Pergamus, and drove out of Asia and the lesser Phrygia, we are last confined to this Country. It was at first called Galla-Graecia, from that mixture of Galli and Graeci, who uniting into one body when they came for Asia, were commonly called Galla-Graeci. By Sidon, Graeco-Galli, and the Country futable Graeco-Galia. Which mixture of Graeci and notwithstanding, the Galli (being both the greater and prevailing Party) not only preserved their own Language, but in short time made it the common Language of the whole Country. And it continued so till S. Hieronim's days, who tells us in the Preface to his Commentaries on St. Paul's Epistle to this people, that it was Similitudo Treverorum, a language like to that of the Treveri, or people of Arver. A sure and certain Argument of their first Original.

The Country very plentiful of all manner of fruits, even unto volucrauntia; and providently provided of the stone called the Amethyst, which is said to preserve from drunkenness the man that wear it. The name doth signify, as much, derived from a prasion, and adversus, clivus, which cometh from adversus, signifying wine.

The people had a custom in their publick funerals, to cast letters fairly written, into that last and last fire, wherein the dead body was to be burned, supposing that their friends should read them in the other World. Much given to Sacrifices, in the number and frequency whereof they excelled all Nations: insomuch that Athenes telleth us of one Arimorus, a rich Galatian, that he sacrificed the whole Nation for a year together with the Sacrifices of Bulls, Sheep, Swine and other Provisions, bought in great Chaldrons made for that purpose, and distributed amongst them in Tents and Booths erected for that entertainment. A brave flath of vain-glorious hospitality.

Rivers of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with their neighbouring Nations, as Haly, Sangarius, and some others. The Towns of most consideration in it were, 1 Ancyra, on the banks of the River Sangarius, the chief City of the Telissages, a Gallia Nation, and the Metropolis of the whole Country; memorable in Church-history for a Synod here held in the Primitive times, Anno 359. called Synodus Ancyrae, but of most note at the present for the making of Chamelet: now called Auguri. 2 Olcus; Agrinoma, Cities of the same people. 4 Tavium, or Tavium. (For I find both names) the chief City of the Toci, or Tregni, where was a privileged Sanctuary. 5 Androsia; 6 Phabarena, Cities of the same Nation. 7 Therma, a Roman Colony, so called of the hot Baths there: the chief City of the Tolissagi, as Paulinus, or Tolissagi, as Sirabo nameth them. 8 Talababara, belonging also to that people.

Besides the Nations above-named, here dwelt also the Byceni and Priselimitine; who had also their peculiar Cities, mentioned by name in Paulinus, but of little or no observation in the course of story. Of all which Nations, only the Telissages, were of the Gallia Original; who with others of their Country-men under the conduct of Belgus and Brennus, having ranfacked Pannonia and Illyricum, fell at last into Macedon; where having tyrannized a while, and laid waste the Country, they were at last vanquished and expelled by Antigonus Genetis. After this overthrow, under the conduct of Lamachus, and Latus, they ferried over the Hellefpon, and subdued almost all Asia Minor on this side the Taurus; employed there by those petty Kings and States against one another: their reputation grown so great, that no Prince thought himself secure without their alliance, or able to make war without their assistance. The very Spiziers of that age; as mercenary, but more faithful unto those that hired them, but being over-rigorous in compelling their neighbouring Princes to become their Tributaries, and too loose in the exacting of their Tributes, they enforced Antas King of Pergamus, by whose favour they had settled about the Hellefpon, to become their enemy. Vanquished by him, they were constrained to contain themselves within the bounds of this Province, which from them in the following times was called Galatia, and Galla-Graecia. Here for a while they kept their ancient courage and estimation, mooting many times their neighbours, & sometimes letting themselves to hire in the wars of others: but in the end they lost both courage and esteem, and were Galli only in name, retaining little in the form of their ancient valour. For as most plants and trees lose much of their virtue, being transplanted into another soil: so these men lost their native courage, strength, and hardiness, being weakened by the Asia pleasures and delicacies. And as Tully saith, for a man to be good in other places is no matter; but in Asia to lead a temperate life, is indeed praise-worthy: so might one have said to the Galli, that to be courageous & patient of travel amongst the mountains, was no whit to be admired, but to have continued to amitt the delights of Asia, had been indeed meritorious in them. But these men were so far from assailing the Romans in the Capital, that they lost their own Country to Mitridates, a Roman General. A war, which Mitridates undertook for no other cause, but that they had been aiding to Antiochus against the Romans; nor was there any memorable act performed herein: but that of Chimenes the Kings Wife, who being ravished by one of the Roman Captains, took her advantage while he builed himself in telling the money agreed on for her ransom, to cut off his head, which he presented to her husband, But Mitridates got little honour by his success, not being welcomed with a Triumph at his coming home, according to the Roman custom, because he undertook the war of his own accord, without Commission from the Senate. And yet the Senate was content to enjoy the fruits of it, keeping the Galatians as their Subjects, and the Kings their Federates. This happened A. D. C. 564. After which time I find Deiotarus, by consent of the Romans, to reign here as King: who siding with Pompey in his war against Cesar, incurred the anger of the Victor; and had died first, had not Tully pleaded his cause, and obtained his pardon. But he being dead, his Country in the time of Augustus was made a Province of the Empire: Lollius Paulinus being the first President or Governor of it; enlarged afterwards with the addition of Paphlagonia, and some part of Pontus, from whence called Galaticum. Reduced to its first bounds by the Emperor Constantine, and divided into two Provinces by Theodosius, the one called Galatia Prima, the other Salutaris from its medicinal waters. Of both which Ancyra remained the Metropolis. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was partly seized on by the Turks, not totally come into their hands, till the subverting of the Empire of Trabzon, upon which it depended. By the Turks at this day called Chiangir.

5 CAPPADOCIA.

CAPPADOCIA is bounded on the East, with Armenia Major, and some part of Armenia Minor; on the West, with Galatia; on the North, with Pontus Polemoniacus, and Cappadocia; and on the South, with Lycania, and the rest of Armenia Minor. So called of the River, as Pliny telleth us, which runneth betwixt it, and Galatia.

The Country very plentiful of wine, and most kind of fruits, rich in mines of Silver, Brass, Iron, and Allom; affording also besides a mean sort of Alabaster, good store of Crysil, Jasper, and the Omyx stone: But the greatest wealth hereof is their breed of Horses, infinite almost in numbers, and fit for any service they can be put to. And this is universal in all parts of the Country, but not the other; there being some parts of it mountainous and very barren, especially about the spurs and branches of the Taurus, which is a chain of hills, thrusting out on the edges of this Country, and the two Armenias. Here is also in this Country the mountain Argens, said to be so great an height, that from one of the summits or tops thereof, a man of perspicuous eyes may discern the Euxine on the one hand, and the Mediterranean on the other.

The People of this Country in the time of the Romans were of ill report, so vicious and lewd of life, so monstrously addicted to all kind of wickedness, that besides the thare they had in the old Greek Proverb, of Tetrasus et sedus, they had some Proverbs to themselves, Herodotus and Herodotus River, that is to say, a man of Cappadocia, and a Cappadocian Monster, being used proverbially, to signify a man most extremely wicked. The words so used by Gregory Nazianzen, speaking of Gregory or George, the Arian Patriarch of Alexandria; if either Suidas or Erasmus, two right learned Crickies, understand him rightly. And they made good the Proverb ill the times of the Gospel, Gregory that bloody butcher of Alexandria, Alexandrius, Alesterius, Enstathius, principal Patrons of the Arians, and that Arch-heretic Eusebius, being all of this Country. Yet such is the influence of Christianity, where once entertained, that this lewd disposition of the Cappadocians was so corrected and retrained by it, that this Country afforded as many godly Prelates, and courageous Martyrs, as any other whatsoever. Highly commended for it by Nazianzen before remembred, who with Gregory Nyssa, and St. Basil, all learned and religious Bishops, were all Cappadocians. And amongst many Martyrs of great faith and constancy, St. George, a noble Cappadocian, Colonel or Tribune of Soldiers under Diocletian, more celebrated in the Churches both East and West, than any other Saint in the Calendar, the blessed Apostles and Evangelists excepted only, and for that reason made Patron of the Order of the Garrier by Edward the Third. Finally, it is reported of these Cappadocians, that they were not only morally wicked, but naturally venomous also; insomuch that if a Serpent did bite any of them, the mans blood was a poyson to the Snake, and killed him.

Principal Rivers of this Country, were 1 Haly, spoken of before, which had here its Fountain and Original, the end of Crasus Empire both in life and fate, the utmost bounds of his dominions on that side: which purposing to pass over in his way to Media, which he intended to invade, he was encountered with, and vanquished by Cyrus the great King of Persia. 2 Iris, which ariseth in this Country also, and passing through, and a part of Pontus, dischannelleth it self, as the other doth, in the Euxine Sea.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Mazaca, beautified and enlarged by the Emperor Tiberius after the uniting of this Province to the Roman Empire, and in honour of Augustus Cesar, by him called Cesarea, the Metropolis of Cappadocia, and the Episcopal See of renowned St. Basil, 2 Nyssa, the See of Gregory, named Nyssinus, the brother of Basil, 3 Nazianzen, the Episcopal See of another Gregory, named Nazianzenus, three men, which as for the piety of their conversation they were not equalled in those times: so for their admirable abilities in all kind of learning, nothing more inferior to the most eminent of the ancient Graecians. 4 Tyana, the Metropolis of Cappadocia second, after the subdivision of it by the Emperor Valens. 5 Archebis in the Prefecture of Guardus Arca, so called from Archebis a Cappadocian King, the founder or reparer of it. 6 Comana, for distinctions sake called Comana-Cappadocia, so difference it from another of that name in Pontus, by Paulinus placed. I know not why, in Armenia Minor, as is also Nyssa before mentioned. Memorable in old times for a Temple consecrated to Bellona, whose Priests and other inferior Officers of both Sexes, amounted in the time of Sirabo to 5000 and upward; for maintenance of whom the Priests received the Revenue of the Region next adjoining to it; in honour next unto the King, and commonly of the same kindred also. 7 Dio-Caesarea, called formerly Cabira, as we find in Sirabo, 8 Eusebiopolis, so called in honour of Eusebius, wife of the Emperor Antonius. 9 Andrus, 10 Pharia. 11 Salambria. 12 Campe, spoken of by Paulinus, with many others as obscure, and not worth the naming. Of more note, though not found in the ancient Writers, is 13 Erasmum, situate on the very confines of the the Greater Armenia for that cause made the Rendezvous, or place of meeting for the Turkish Soldiers when there is any expedition in hand against the Persians; at which place also after the ending of the War for the present years. And 14 Perium, not named, in Ptolomy, but memorable for the great Battle fought in fight thereof, between Crasus King of Lydia, and Cyrus of Persia; in which Crasus having lost the field, and with it his Kingdom, found the Oracle true (though not in the sense that he expected) that Crasus falling over the River Halys, should overthrow a great Empire; indeed he did; but it was his own, and not the Persians.

The Cappadocians are derived from Togarma, the Son of Gomer, hath been so fully proved already in our General Preface, that we shall not trouble our selves to repeat it here. Nor shall we need to say more in confutation of their opinion, who would fetch Cappadocia out of Egypt from the rest of his brethren, to plant him in this Country, than hath there been said. Their fortunes in the former times I find little of: subjected by the Persians, with the rest of Asia Minor, after the overthrow of Crasus, who before had given the Law unto it, as to the Phrygians, Ephlagonians, Bithynians, Mysians, and others of the neighbouring Nations. By Cyrus given together with Assia his Sister, to Pharnaces, a Noble Persian, who had saved him from the fury of a ravenous Lion running upon him with full mouth, as he was hunting. A noble loyalty and no less royally rewarded. From him descended Artabazus King heretofore in his duty to the Great, continuing faithful in his duty to the Kings of Persia, when almost all the rest of the Kings of Asia yielded to the Enemy. Nor did Alexander call to account in his march for Persia. But after his decease, Perdiccas having the command of the Army, set upon him, vanquished him, and most cruelly crucified him, together with as many of his kindred as could be found. One of his Sons, who fortunately had escaped this slaughter, spying his time when the Macedonians were at wars amongst themselves, recovered his estate again, and passed it over to his off-spring; continuing in his line, without any subjection, till the time of that Arabisarxes, who by Mithridates was deprived of his dominion, as was told before. Restored again unto his Kingdom by the power of the Romans, he became their Homager, holding, as did his Successors, by their own right: Continuing yet in state of Kings, till the death of Archelaus the last King heretofore; who having engaged Tiberius for not attending on him when he lived at Rhodes, during the late time of Augustus, as did others of the Tributary States and Princes, was by him possessed of the Empire, cited unto Rome under colour of projecting somewhat against the State. Where the old Prince, even spent with Age, the Gout, and some other Diseases, had without question been condemned by the servile Senate, but that one of the witticisms deplored, that he had said, That if ever he went back into Cappadocia, Tiberius should find, quales nervi sibi essent, what a man he was. Which moved such a laughter in the Senate, the old King being neither able to sit nor stand, that he was dismissed; Tiberius thinking that he could not punish him more effectually, than to let him live. A favour which the old King construed to the best, and in the way of gratitude bequeathed his Kingdom at his death to the Empire of Rome. Being added to the Roman Empire, it was exceedingly enlarged by the addition of the greatest part of the Kingdom of Pontus: and so it stood in the time of Ptolomy, who reckoned Pontus, Galatians, Cappadocians, and Polemoniacs, as parts and Members of this Province. Divided besides those into three chief Prefectures that is to say, Clanianiensis, Sargaranfene, Gardisene, Gilicia, Tyanidis, Lycania, Antiochiana, and Catanis. But Pontus, Lycania, and Antiochiana (he means Pisidia as I take it) being made Provinces of themselves, by the Emperor Constantine, it returned unto its natural bounds, and made one Province of the Empire, of which Cesaria, as is said before, was the Metropolis; and so remained, till the Emperor Valens, a great Patron of the Arian faction, of purpose to depose St. Basil, who opposed that Heretic, created another Province out of it, called Cappadocia Secunda, whereof the Metropolis was Tyana. After this it continued part of the Eastern Empire, till the erecting of the new Empire of Trapsand, together with which it fell into the hands of the Turks; by whom the whole Province, with the addition of Pontus, is now called Anatolia, after the name of that City, which the Beglerbeg of Anatolia honoureth with his residence, and is said to yield yearly to the Grand Signior 60000 Ducks.

ARMENIA MINOR.

ARMENIA MINOR is bounded on the East, with Euphrates; which parteth it from Armenia Major; on the South, with Mount Taurus, which separates it from Gilicia; on the West, and North, with long chain of Hills, called Mons Scordiscus; by some called Mons Amanus, by others Antidiscus, according to the change of places; by which divided from Cappadocia. Of the reason of the name hereafter.

The Country of the same nature with Cappadocia, before described; in some parts overgrown with Mountains, by which, and by the River Euphrates is inclosed and fenced, that it is difficult of entrance in other places and delightful, well watered with sweet streams and some fair Rivers issuing out of the Mountains the principal whereof is Meas, so called from the bigness of the water thereof, which falleth into the Euphrates.

Divided in the time of the Romans into three four Regions, that is to say, Laviana, Arzene, Militene, lying on the Euphrates, Mariana more within the land towards Cappadocia; each of which had their several Cities, whose names are to be found in Ptolomy. The principal, Militene, the chief City of the Region so called, and the Metropolis of the lesser Armenia, called afterwards Malasia, and now Smyr; the Territory thereof abounding in Oyl and Wine, not inferior to the best of Greece. The City said by Onguribus to be a Colony of the Romans, much spoken of by Eusebius, and other Writers of Ecclesiastical story, for the piety of the Christians there inhabiting in the fiery times of Persecution. A Nicopolis, and 3 Oremundus in the Mountain Countries; the former built by Pompey, in memory of his victory there obtained against the forces of Tigranes, King of Syria, and both Armenia's. 4 Garnae, a well-fortified Town, mentioned by Tacitus in the twelfth book of his Annals, and by him called Gornea, 5 Caucasis, and 6 Arsharis, memorable for the exile of St. Chrysostom. Patriarch of Constantinople, confined unto these places by the power and malice of the Empress Eudoxia, by whom hated for his Orthodoxy in points of faith; who dying afterwards at Comana of Cappadocia, was there interred.

This Country was once part of Cappadocia, till the Armenians, by their incursions and Colonies possessed themselves of it, and gave unto it the name of Armenia Minor; continuing part of their estate till the war of Antiochus against the Romans, who being discomfited by Pharidates against the Romans, who had married his daughter, Lucullus, fled with two thousand Horse to the Court of Tigranes the Armenian, who had married his daughter, by whom at first neglected, and not suffered to come into his his presence; but afterwards on the apprehension of the common danger, more esteemed and let by: inasmuch that his royal entertainment there, and the refusal of Tigranes to yield him up when required by the Romans, occasioned Lucullus to bring his forces into these parts, subduing all before him to the banks of Euphrates. His Victories being seconded by Pompey, and confirmed by Augustus, this Country was made a Province of the Roman Empire: the greater Armenia, lying on the other side of that River, though conquered also in that war, not being taken into the account of the Roman Provinces, till the time of Trajan Augustus, thinking it an high point of wisdom (as no doubt it was) not to extend the Empire beyond those banks. After this it continued Roman, till the declining times of the Eastern Empire; when, with the Persians, and subdued by the Turks; by whom called Geech, or as some say Pegia.

And so much of the Provinces of the Pontick Diocese, lying within Anatolia, or Asia Minor, converted to the Christian faith by the two great Apostles of the Jews and Gentiles, as appears by St. Paul's Epistle to the Galatians, and St. Peter's to the Strangers dispersed in Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia.

7. ASIA PROPRIA.

Come we now to the ASIAN Diocese, and first to that part thereof which Ptolomy and others (for the reasons spoken of before) call Asia Propria. Anciently the most rich and flourishing part of all this Peninsula; and so affirmed to be by Tully, who telleth us, That the Tributes which the Romans had from other places, hardly sufficed to defray the publick charges for defence thereof, Asia vero tempore illi et fertilis, et uberrate agrorum, et varietate fructuum, et magnitudine pastuum, et multitudine earum rerum quae exportantur, facit omnibus terris antecellat. But as for Asia (saith he) it is so fertile and fruitful, that for the fruitfulness of the fields, variety of fishes, largeness of pasture-grounds, and quantity of commodities which were brought from thence, it very easily excelled all other Countries. The fortunes of the several Provinces we shall see anon. Brought under the command of the Persians, they continued subject to that Crown, for some generations; but at last taken from them by the Greeks, under the prosperous Ensigns of victorious Alexander. After whose decease, the Empire being divided among his Captains, Asia fell to the share of Antigonus, whose Son Demetrius reigned on the Kingdom of Macedonia, and left Asia to Seleucus Nicator, King of Syria and the East, being also one of Alexander's heirs. The sixth from this Seleucus, was Antiochus called the Great, who waging war with young Ptolomy Philopater, King of Egypt, committed by his father to the protection of the Romans; and otherwise practising against their estate, provoked the Senate of Rome to send Scipio (surnamed from his Asian victories) Asiatens, against him; who compelled him to forsake Asia, which the Romans presently took into their possessions. But finding it agreeable to the present estate of their Affairs, (the Kingdom of Macedonia standing in their way) to make further use of Antiochus King of Pergeum, and the people of Rhodes, who had been aiding to them in the former war, they gave unto Eumenes, the Provinces of Lycania, Phrygia, Mysia, Ionis, Lydia, Lycia and Caria to the Rhodiens; knowing full well, that they could easily take them back again, when they fall occasion. More heretofore in the story of the Kings of Pergeum, on the decease of Antalus the last King thereof; these Provinces returning fully to the power of the Romans.

It contained only after the account of Cicero, the Provinces of Phrygia, Mysia, Caria, Lydia, as he reckoneth them up in his Oration for Flaccus: computing the two Phrygias for one Province only, and comprehending Æolia and Ionis, under that of Lydia. But for our more punctual and particular proceeding in it, we will consider it as divided into 1 Phrygia Minor, 2 Phrygia Major, 3 Mysia, 4 Æolia and Ionis, or Asia more especially so called. 6 Lydia, and 6 Caria.

8. PHRYGIA MINOR.

PHRYGIA MINOR, is bounded on the East, with Mysia, interpolating betwixt it and the Greater Phrygia on the West, with the Hellepontus on the North, with the Propontis on the South, with the Ægean Sea. Called Phrygia from Phryx, a River in the Greater Phrygia; or as some say, from Phryxus, the son of Atreus King of Thebes, who flying from the treacherous snares of his Mother-in-law, did here slay himself. Minor was added to it to distinguish it from the other Phrygia, which being the bigger of the two had the name of Majior. It was also called Phrygia Hellepontica, from its situation on that Streight, and Troad, from Troas the chief City of it, by which name it occurth in the book of the Acts. It was called also Epistene, but the reason of the name I find not, except it came from the Episteni, a people dwelling on the East parts of Bithynia, and consequently near this place.

Chief Rivers of it Scamander, on whose Banks stood the renowned City of Troy, honoured by Hesiod with the Title of Divine Scamander: in which the Virgins of this Country a little before they were to be married, used to bathe themselves, and to say these words, Αδελφαι μεν εδωκαν απορροειναι, that is to say, Take O Scamander my Virginity. Which opportunity Cimon an Athenian taking, clapped a Coronet of Reeds upon his head, like a River god, and so deflowered Callirhoe a noble Virgin, then betrothed to another, occasioning thereby the leaving off of this foolish custom. It was also called Xanthus by the Poets, Xanthumque bibissent, as in Virgil, and watered a little Region called Lycia, whence Virgil in his first Epistle unto Lycian basili, (Sanguine Tlepolemus Lyciam respexerat basili) to signify a Trojan Spear. But of this more anon in the greater Lycia, 2 Asopus, parting this little Region from the lesser Mysia, the boundary of it on the North, as the Promontory called Lethium, is the furthest point of it towards the South. 3 Simois, now called Simores, falling into the Hellepontus, not far from the Promontory called Rhætanum (memorable for the Statue and Sepulchre of Ajax); but rising out of Mount Ida, an hill of this Region, on which Pæris (being by his Father exposed to the fury of wild Beasts) judged the controvercie of the golden Ball in favour of Venus; respecting neither the great riches of Juno, nor the divine wisdom of Pallas, but transfixed with a sensual delight, fatal in the end to the whole Country.

Cities of most observation in it, 1 Dardanium, or Dardania, the Town and Patrimony of Troas, 2 Affus, mentioned Acts 20. 13. by Pliny called Apollonia who telleth us that the earth about it is of such a nature, that it will consume a dead body in forty days. 3 Trojanopolis, whose name declareth its founder. 4 Lyrrhesius, on the Sea-side, opposite to the Isle of Lebros, destroyed by Achilles and the Greeks in the first beginnings of the Trojan war, who brought thence amongst other captives the Lady Briseis, reserved by Achilles to himself for his part of the booty, and after taken from him by Agamemnon, which caused such a deep displeasure in him, that he would not go into the field till he were restored.

5 Sigam, the Port-town to Troy, near a noted Promontory of the same name. 6 Troy, situate on the River Scamander, the beauty and glory of the East, called Ilium, and Pergamus, for the reason to be shewn anon. A famous Town, from the people whereof, all Nations derive to fetch their original. The beauty of it may be (as some write) yet seen in the ruins, which with a kind of Majesty entertain the beholder: the walls of large circuit, consisting of a black hard stone cut four-square; some remnants of the Towers which stood on the walls, and the fragments of great Marble Tombs and Monuments of curious workmanship. But certainly these are not the ruins of that Ilium, which was destroyed by the Grecians, but 7 Troas, or New-Troy, built some four miles from the situation of the old by Lysimachus, one of Alexander's Captains, who peopled it from the neighbouring Cities, and called it Alexandria, or Troas Alexandri, in honour of Alexander the Great, who began the work, but lived not to bring it to any perfection. In following times called Troas only, and by that name mentioned, Act 20. 6. then the Metropolis of this Province, now a ruin only, but every day more ruinous than other by the Turks, who carry daily the stones and Pillars of it to Constantinople, to adorn the houses of the Bassas. 7 Scamandria, a strong piece, but of latter foundation, cunningly surprised by Ottoman the first King of the Turks, in the time of a Funeral. Now concerning old Ilium, the buildings, glories, and fall of it, take this story with you.

THE KINGS OF TROY.

- A.M.
2487 1 Dardanus, son to Corinthus King of Corinth, having killed his brother Jafus, fled into this Country, where he built this City, calling it Dardania: according to that Verse of Virgil, Dardania Iliacæ primus pater urbis, & autor. Both of Troy Town, and Trojan race, Dardanus the first founder was.
- 2518 2 Erichonius, of whom little memorable.
- 2593 3 Tros, the son of Erichonius, who so much beautified and enlarged the City of Dardania, that from thenceforth it was called Troja, and the people Troes. By supporting the unnatural malice of Saturn against his son Jupiter, he lost his own son Ganymedes: who being taken prisoner by Jupiter, who carried the Eagle for his Ensign, is by the Poets said to have been snatched up to Heaven by an Eagle, 60.
- 2653 4 Ilus, the son of Tros, who built the Regal Palace called Ilium; and did wish to enlarge the City, and added so much Ornament and beauty to it, that it is frequently called Ilium, and the People Iliaci. The many Towers and Towers of it, were of his erection, which being by the Greeks called Iliupis, and sometimes Iliupis, occasioned the whole City to be called Pergamus, 54.
- 2707 5 Laomedon, who new built Troy, which afterwards Hercules and the Grecians (justly) conceiving displeasure against the treacherous King) twice took and defaced; Laomedon himself being slain the latter time, 36.
- 2743 6 Prismus who re-edified Troy, being giving leave to his son Paris to ravish Helen wife to Meneleus King of Sparta, forced the Greeks to renew their ancient quarrel: who, after a ten years siege, forced the Town, having lost of their own men 860000, and killed 666000 of the Trojans, and their Associates,

A. M. 2783. Ios that of Ovid was most true.

Jam seges est ubi Troja fuit rificandæ fide
Luxurians Phrygio sanguine pinguis humus.
Corn now for sythes now grows where Troy once stood,
And the soil's fattened with the Phrygian blood.
Concerning the taking of this Town, two things are to be considered. First, whether the Grecians in ten years lay continually before it and it seems they did not: but rather that they did beat up and down, wasting the Country, and robbing the Seas for the first nine years in the tenth only laid a formal siege. This is the more probable, because that in the tenth year of the war, Paris is recorded by Homer in the third of his Iliads, to have fate on a high Tower, and to have learned of Helen the names and qualities of the Greek Commanders, which he could not be thought ignorant of if they had so long together lain in eye-reach. Secondly, by what means the Town was taken: here we find a difference. For some Historians tell us, that Aeneas and Antenor, being either of the war, or discontented that it was not managed by their sole advice, or other wise corrupted by the Grecians, betrayed it to the Enemy: but this Virgil could not brook, as prejudicial to his Aeneas, whom he intended to make the pattern of a compleat Prince. He therefore telleth of a Wooden-horse, wherein divers of the Greek Princes lay hidden, which by Sinon one of the Grecians, was brought to Troy gates; and that the people deluded of that monument of the Enemies might, made a breach in their walls, the gate not being high enough to receive it. And that this fiction of Virgil might be grounded on History, it is thought by some, that over the Scam Gate where the Greeks entered, was the portraiture of a huge and stately Horse: and by others, that the walls were battered by a wooden Engine, called an Horse, as the Romans in after ages used a like Engine called a Pern. Neither of which is much improbable: but with me remains the integrity of Antenor or Aeneas, for whose sake the tale of the wooden Horse was first invented.

The City being thus destroyed, the Trojans who remained in the Country, when Æneas and Antenor had forsaken it, began to think of some other place for their habitation, which having often shifted, they fixed at last by advice of an Oracle, some four miles from the former, giving it the name of Ilium. A poor and sorry Village, when Alexander came thither, who in the Temple of Minerva, (the only one they had) and a mean one too) offered up his own shield, and took down another, which he used after in his fights against the Persians, honoring it with gifts, and promising the people to rebuild and enlarge their City. But what he lived not to see done, was performed by Lysimachus, who gave it the name of Alexandria, next called the Alexandrian Town, as he first simply. A free City it continued till the war of Antiochus against the Romans; in the course whereof Antiochus the Roman Quæstor having seditiously slain the Consul Valerius Flaccus in Bithynia, and made himself Master of the Army, being refused entrance here as a Thieland Rebel, besieged the City, and in the space of eleven days took it. And when he boasted that he had done as much in it, as Agamemnon and the Greeks could do in as many years, one of the Ilions tartly answered, That they wanted an Hector to defend them. Afterwards Julius Cæsar, emulous of Alexander's attempts, and desirous to enlarge the Trojans race, restored them to their liberty, and the Romans of no mean esteem. But time and war, and the barbarity of the Turks, have brought it unto rubbish, as before was said.

In the distributing of the Provinces of the Roman Empire,

Empire, this little Region, with that of Myfia Hellepontica adjoining to it, made up the Province called by the name of Hellepontus, subject with Æolia, Ionica, and the Asian Isles, to the exempt Jurisdiction of the Præconsul of Asia. Following the fortunes of Constantinople till the taking of that City by the Latines, it became then subject to the Greek Emperours residing at Nice; conquered not long after by the Turks of the Selzucian family. In the division of whole Empire on the death of the second Aladine, the whole Province of Hellepontus, with part of the greater Myfia and Æolia, adjoining to them, and some part of Lydia, were seized upon by Carasus, a man of great power amongst the Turks, who here erected a small Kingdom, called from him Carasia, or Carasi-ili; long since swallowed up by the Ottoman Race, in the time of Orchanes, Son of Ottoman, and the second King of that house.

8. PHRYGIA MAJOR.

PHRYGIA MAJOR is bounded on the East, with Galatia; on the West, with Myfia, interposed betwixt it and the Lesser Phrygia; on the North, with Metanopis, or Pontus specially so called; on the South, with Lydia. Called Phrygia for the reasons before laid down; the word Major being added for distinctions sake, because the greater of the two.

The People of this Country were anciently more superstitious than the other Asians, as appeareth by the rites used in the Sacrifices of Cybele, and some other Goddesses: said to be all the Inventors of Aurgus, and other kinds of Divination. And yet for the most part men of afterwards, and all for bad itself; whence the Proverb, Serô Phryges, applied to those who wanted foresight, and knew better to lament misfortunes than to keep them off; and used not to bethink themselves of what would follow, till it was too late. A people noted for effeminacy and lightness of conversation; and for fear they should not themselves be wanted enough, their very Musick was so fitted as to dispose them to lasciviousness. Where by the way, I find three sorts of Musick spoken of amongst the Ancients: the first, that which Aristotle calleth Idiolum, because it settled and composed the affections; and Bœtius, the Lydian Musick, because much used by that people, before corrupted by long ease and ill example. It consisted principally of long notes or Spondees, such as that supposed to be which Elitha called for, 1 Kings 3. 15. to invite the Spirit of prophecy to him; and was played by David before Saul; to drive away the ill spirit from him. And of this sort was the Church-Musick of the Primitive times, fitted to calm mens passions, and raise their devotions. Per ubi oblectamenta aurium (as St. Augustine hath it) disjunctat animas ad pietatis affectum, that by the pleasure of the ears the passions might be calmed, and the soul inflamed with pious and devout affections. The second sort is that which Aristotle calleth diastoron, or diastoron (as he other Idiolum or moral) commending it before the other in the education of youth, because more stirring them to action; consisting of Dactyles, or one long note, and two short ones, by him and Bœtius both called Dorian, as most peculiar to that people. The third and last by the Philosopher called edonastoron, or ravishing, because it unlooseth the affections, and stirreth men to lascivious thoughts, and wanton thoughts; consisting of short notes or Tribolies. Bœtius terms it Phrygian, as most in use amongst this loose and ungoverned Nation: such as the French-Musick in our age. A sort of Musick forbidden to be used by Aristotle, but upon the Theatre, for contentation of the rude and unpolished people, by reason of that influence which it had upon mens behaviours. Mutatâ Musicâ (saith the Orator) mutatur & mores; Curandum itaque ut Musica quàm gravissima & modestissima reatuatur, that is to say, the change of Musick maketh an alteration of manners; care therefore is to be taken in the Common-wealth, that the Musick be composed and grave, and fish only used. But see how this hiding humour hath led me out of the way; I return again.

The Country very rich and pleasant, well watered with the Rivers Sangarius and Marlyas. Of which the former hath its Spring or Fountain in this Country, but its fall in the Euxine; on the banks whereof standeth the City Gordium, and many others of good note. The latter was so called from one Marlyas, who striving with Apollo for preeminence in Musick, was by him dead, which fact (say the Poets) was so lamented, that from the tears of the mourners grew this River. The chief Towns 1 Gordium, the seat of Gordius, who from a Plowman being raised and chosen King of this Kingdom, placed the furniture of his Wain and Oxen in the Temple of Apollo, tied in such a knot, that the Monarchy of the world was promised to him that could untie it, which when Alexander had tried and could not undo it, he cut it with his Sword. 2 Midæum, the seat of Midæus, son to this Gordius, who being not a little covetous, intreated of Bacchus, that what ever he touched should be turned into gold; which Petition granted, he was almost starved, his very victuals turned into Gold, till he had repaled his with; and afterward for preferring Pan's Pipe before Apollo's Harp, his head was adorned with a comely pair of Alps ears. 3 Celsus, where dwelt the Celsojans, to whom St. Paul wrote one of his Epistles. 4 Pissus, where the Goddess Cybele being worshipped, was called Dea Pessinuntia. The Romans were once told by an Oracle, that they should be Lords of the world, if they could get this Goddess into their possession. Hereupon they tend to the Phrygians to demand it. The Phrygians willing to please a potent neighbour, especially the Romans, being their Country-men, as descended from Æneas and his Trojans, granted their requests, and the Goddess is shipped away for Rome. But behold the unlikelihood of fortune: The Ship, Goddess and all made a stand in Tiber's neither could it be advanced forwards by force or Art. It hapned that one of the Vetal Virgins, named Claudia, being suspected of unchastity, resolved to put her self upon this experiment: and fastening her girdle to the Ship, prayed to the Goddess, that if she were carefully suspected, the ship might be suffered to go forward, which was no sooner heard than granted, Claudia drawing the ship up the water to Rome; where I leave the people wondering at the miracle, as well they might. But to return unto the City, it stands in the borders of Galatia, and is by some made to be the City of Gordius, and the Gordian knot placed in it also; but neither rightly. Not far off stood the Mountain Dindymus, overlooking the City, in which the Priests of Cybele had their usual residence, thence called Dindymene. 5 Apamea, situate not far from the banks of Aladon, anciently a most flourishing Emporie, and the Metropolis of the whole Country, till Constantine divided it into the two Provinces of Salutarina, and Pactiana: making 6 Symada the Metropolis of the first. 7 Hierapolis, and 8 Laudicea, two noted Cities in those times, the principal of the other Province. 9 Zulipolis, or to Tiberiopolis, so called from the Emperour to whose honour dedicated. 11 Doryleum, &c. Not known unto the ancient Writers, but of more note in modern histories are 1 Sagaa, the habitation of Ereogol, Father of Ottoman the first King of the Turks. 2 Chara-chisar, by the Grecians called Mcimpyrgus, or the Black Tower, 3 Cilicurga, 4 Eneigid, places places of consequence and importance, taken by the said Ottoman from the Christians, in the first rise of his fortunes.

As for the Phrygians, they defended (as was shewn before) from Gomer the eldest Son of Japhet, and Akennaz, the eldest Son of Gomer: of which, Gomer first placed himself in the mountainous Counties of Albania, and afterwards in the more pleasant Plains of the Greater Phrygia, where the City of Cimmeris (the posterity of Gomer being generally called Cimmerians) did preserve his memory. And as for Akennaz, he first took up his dwelling in the Lesser Phrygia, and the banks of the Hellefpont; where was anciently a City and Territory called Afcania, some Isles adjoining called Infulæ Afcaniæ, the name of Afcanus also very frequent in Troy it self. An ancient people they were doubtless, esteemed the ancientest of the World by Plamistius King of Egypt, upon this Experiment. Delirious to inform himself to what Nation the privilege of greatest Antiquity did of right belong, he caused two children to be kept in a fold, where they were suckled by Goats: all mankind being prohibited upon very great penalties to have recourse to them. All the language which the children learned from their speechless Nurses, was more than Bee, which in the Phrygian language signifieth bread; and being of no signification at all in any other which was then known to the Egyptians, gave up the Verdict in their side: But other Nations of the world not yielding to this sentence, by a Writ of Error, or an Ad melius inquirendum, impelled a new Juris, wherein it was pronounced on the Syrians side, Soytharon goss Imper antiquissima. Where by the way, Gorgius Becanus makes the like use of this experiment, to prove the High Dutch to be the Original or Mother-tongue of the world; because Becker in that language signifieth, as with us, a Baker, or a maker of bread. In this Country reigned Niohe, who preferring her self before Latona, the mother of Phebus and Diana, had her children slain before her face by an unkind means, and was her self turned into a stone, as the Poets fable. Here also reigned Tantalus, who being rich, and wanting wisdom to make use of it, is feigned to stand in Hell up to the chin in water: and that under a tree whose fruit toucheth his lips: yet both the one and the other lie from him, when he offereth at them. Of which thus Ovid.

In English thus,

Thou canst not, Tantalus, those waters taste;

The tree juft at thy lips, flies off as fast.

But this race of Kings being worn out by the tyranny of time or war, the Phrygians were made subject to the Kings of Lydia; continuing under their command till the Conquest of Lydia by the Perfians, with which they fell together to the Crown thereof, not made the stronger by the accession of effeminate Subjects. Gained from them by the Sword of Alexander, they fell unto Antigonus one of his great Captains, and on his overthrow at the battle of Ipsus, to Seleucus the Conqueror, the first King of that race: following the same fortune after that with the rest of Asia, till they came to be possessed by the Romans, and made a Province of that Empire. But Constantine laying to it the Greater Mysia, made two Provinces of it: the one called Salutaris, from some miraculous cures there wrought by the Arch-Angel Michael, as was then generally believed; the other called Pactiana, from Pactianus, who in the time of the said Constantine was Præfēt for the Pretorium of the East, and divers years before had begun his honours with the Lieutenants of Britain. In the declining of the Constantinian politics, it became a prey unto the Turks of the Selæucian Family; possessed by them till the death of Aladine, the last King of that race: when seized upon, together with the Greater Mysia, and those parts of Lydia which lay next unto it, by Aidin, a great Turkifh Prince, and made a peculiar Kingdom, called by his name Aidinia, or Aidinli: extorted shortly from his heirs by the house of Ottoman.

9. MYSIA.

Interposed betwixt the two Phrygias lyeth the Country of MYSIA bounded on the East, with Phrygia Major; on the West, with Phrygia Minor, and the Ægean Sea; on the North, with parts of Bithynia, Preponis, and the Hellfpont; and on the South, with part of Lydia, Æolis, and the Ægean. So called from the Mysians, the Inhabitants of it.

Whether these Mysians were Originally a Phrygian Nation, or some interlopers which thrust in afterwards amongst them, I find not determined. Most probable is, they were natural Phrygians, being as superstitious in the worship of their several Deities, as any Phrygian of this age; and that they had this name given them by the Lydians, and that they had this name given them by the Lydians, from the abundance of Beech-trees which grow amongst them, by them called Mysia. A people of low & contemptible quality, that it grew into a common proverb to call a fellow of no worth, Mysiorum patrem.

The principal Mountain of this Country is that called Olympus, situate in the North-parts hereof bordering towards Bithynia: from which as it is called Olympus Mysiæ, to difference it from Olympus in Græce; so the people of the Greater Mysia, where this Mountain is, are called Olympiæ, to difference them from the Mysii or Æoliæ of Ærope. And as for Rivers, those of most note besides Æscopus, parting it from Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, are, 1. Caucus, on whose banks stands the City of Pergamus, and from thence passeth into the Ægean Sea, at the Bay of Elea; and 2. the famous River of Gangetic, which hath his fountain in Mysia Major, and passing through Mysia Minor, falleth into the Propontis. A River memorable for the Victory which Alexander obtained on the banks hereof, in his first essay against the Perfians: by whom upon the first noise of his preparations he was so flighted, that Darius King of Persia, gave command to his Lieutenants residing in Asia Minor, that they should take him alive, whip him with Rods, and so convey him to his presence. A notable example of the pride and folly of the Perfians. But Alexander soon taught them another Lesson. For though the Perfians were possessed of the higher banks of the River, with an intent to stop his passage; yet he resolved to charge them in the face of their strength knowing full well, that if he could beat them on a place of so great advantage, he should not only lessen them in point of reputation, but beget an opinion of himself that he was invincible. And so accordingly it proved, the Perfians being vanquished by him, and all the Kingdoms and Provinces of this Asia submitting to him on the noise of the Victory (as an enemy not to be resisted upon equal terms) some few Towns excepted. And therefore it was wisely advised by Machiavel, that he who takes upon him to defend a passage, should with his ablest forces oppose the Affiliates, because in all Invasions where of place, as defence of Rivers, Streights, and Mountains, they do not only dishearten their Soldiers from dealing afterwards on even ground with that Enemy, but leave no hope unto their fellows and partakers, of being succoured and defended by such weak Protectors. Which caution if the Perfians Commanders had observed either here, or at Pyla

Cilicia, spoken of hereafter, Alexander had not so easily subverted the Perfian Monarchy. But the fatal period of it was now drawing on, and the men either naturally Cowards, or did prodigiously befothed.

It is divided commonly into Mysia Minor, or the Lesser Mysia, which lying on the West towards Troas and the Hellefpont, is called sometimes Mysia Hellefpontica; and joyned unto Troas by the Emperor Constantine, made up that Province which he called the Consular Hellefpont; and Mysia Major, called from Olympus which was in it, Mysia Olympica, and the Inhabitants Olympiæ; which joyned by that Emperor to the Western parts of Phrygia Major, made up that Province which he caused to be called Phrygia Salutaris, for the reason formerly delivered.

Places of most observation in the Lesser Mysia, were 1. Abydus, standing on the narrowest of the Hellefpont, opposite unto Sestos in Thrace; first built by the Milefians with the consent of Cyzer King of Lydia, to whom the Country then belonged; Memorable both in the ancient and modern Stories. In ancient story for the famous resolution of the Inhabitants, when besieged by Philip the father of Perfian King of Macedon. For being brought by him into some districts, and hopeless of good conditions from him, the young men of the Town who had bound themselves by oath to die rather than fall into his hands, let fire thereof, and barbarously slew themselves, with as many of the women and children as could be met with. Which news being brought to Philip, moved to little compassion, that he said he would give the Abydians three days leisure to die; and therefore would not suffer any of his soldiers to enter the Town, then let open to him, either to take the spoil thereof, or hinder this bloody execution, till the three days end. In Modern story no less memorable for the taking of it by the Turks, in the reign of Orbanes the son of Ottoman, through the treason of the Governours Daughter: who bewitched with the person and valour of Aderach-men, a young Turkifh Gallant, whom she had beheld from the Towers of the Castle, threw a Letter to him as he drew near the wall, wherein he manifested her affection, and promised to make him Master of that Fortress, if he would persuade his General to raise the siege, and come with a strong Party in the dead time of the night to receive it from her, which was done accordingly. The Town continuing ever since in the power of the Turks, well fortified, and one of the two Castles spoken of before, which defend Constantinople on that side from all force by Sea. 2. Cyzicus, seated in the Propontis, in an Island of the same name also, but so near the Continent, that it joined to it by two bridges. The Metropolis of the Consular Hellefpont, by consequence an Archbishopric See in the prosperous times of Christianity; as were all other Cities in the Roman Empire, which were the Mother-Cities or Metropoles of their several Provinces. A Town of wonderful strength and beauty, when first known to the Romans, called therefore by L. Florus, the Rome of Asia, who gives this Character also of it, Cyzicum nobilis ciuitas, are, maritima, portu, turribusque munita. Asiaticæ plage littora illustrat, that is to say, that the noble City of Cyzicum by the excellency of the Walls, Bulwarks, Haven, and Towers of Marble, doth beautify and illustrate the shores of Asia. Honoured amongst many other goodly and magnificent buildings, with a glorious Temple, the Pillars whereof being 4 Cubits thick, and 50 Cubits high, were each of one entire stone; the whole Fabrick all of polished Marble, every stone joyned unto the other with a line of Gold. In vain besieged by Mithridates in the time of his war, who lost before it by the Sword, Pestilence, and Famine, no fewer than 300000 men, and yet could not force it. Afterwards ruined by an Earthquake, the Falings-Sickness of the East, as before is said, it could never be restored to its former lustre: the very ruins of it daily made more ruinous, by transporting the Stones and Marbles to Constantinople for the Embellishing of that City. 3. Pampisus on the same Propontis, in which the beauty god Priapus was worshipped in as beauly a figure: Quem non denudis (as wittily Lactantius scoffeth it) que quid appareat visu dignum, supposed to be the same with the Syrian or Phœnician Baal, so often mentioned in the Scriptures. For this and on some other reasons, Alexander had conceived against it such an high displeasure when he was in Asia, that he resolved to raze it to the very ground. And seeing Anaximenes coming to him as an Ambassador from the Town to obtain his favour, commanded him to hold his peace, and swear as by way of prevention, that he would deny whatsoever he requested of him: whereupon Anaximenes entreated him to destroy the City, which now for his Oaths sake he could not do; and so this wicked City at that time escaped. 4. Parium, so called, as some say, from Paris the son of Jafon, a Colony at first of the Mylefians, of the Romans afterwards: Troas and this, the only two Roman Colonies in all the Province. By Homæ called Adragia; as Lampiscus in the same Author, is called Pisylla. More in the land, are 5. Scæpis, 6. Hiræ, both mentioned by Plutarch, but of more antiquity than fame.

Chief Cities in MYSIA MAJOR or OLYMPIA are 1. Dainia, in the North-parts, not far from Olympus. 2. Apollonia, near a large Lake sacred to Apollo, in the same parts also. 3. Pala Scæpis, or Scæpis Vetus, on a Bay of the Ægean Sea, joyning upon Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia. 4. Adramyttium, mentioned Acts 27. where St Paul took ship to go to Rome; 5. Antandarus, on the same Sea also, now called St Dimitri, named at first Cimmeris from the Gomerites or Cimmerians here inhabiting (which sheweth that Mysia anciently was a part of Phrygia) afterward Edonis, and at last Antandarus, and that either because built or repaired rather by the men of Andros, an Island of the Ægean, spoken of before, amongst the Cyclades, or because the Grecians having taken Polydorus the son of Friam, from the King of Trace, received this City for his ransom or rather in exchange for him as the word doth intimate. 6. Persicene, on the same coast also. More in the Land. 7. Præpessillus, 8. Trasjanopolis, 9. Alydus, of which little memorable. 10. Pergamus, the Regal City of this tract, situate in a goodly Plain on the banks of the River Caycus; of a small Town or Fortrefs made a stately City by the Kings hereof, and beautified with an excellent Library containing 20000 Volumes; for the writing or transcribing whereof, Parchment was here first invented, which from hence to this day is called Pergamentum. Here also were those costly hangings first invented, which we now call Tapestry; by the Romans called first Antica, from Aula, signifying a Hall; the Hall of Antalus King hereof (by whom invented) being the first room furnished and adorned herewith. Here was born Galen the famous Physician, living very healthfully to the age of 140 years his health preserved to so great age, by the means especially, 1. Never eating or drinking his fill. 2. Lying. Never eating any thing that was raw, 3. Always carrying about him some sweet Perfumes. Finally, this was one of the severn Churches to which St. John writ his Revelation. For though it were originally a City of Mysia, yet being near unto the borders of Lydia, it was reckoned as a City of Lydian Asia; within the limits whereof those severn Churches were all comprehended.

As for the Kings hercof which flourished here for some boasting of themselves to be Aborigines, men growing as it were out of the Soil it self, without any Ancitors, report that those Ionians were a Colony of their Plantation. But Heateus in Strabo doth affirm the contrary. Saying, That the Athenians or Iones of Greece, came from those of Affias that Atica was anciently called Ionis, Plutarch in the life of Theseus doth declare expressly. Most probable it is, that Heateus was in the right these parts of Asia lying so directly in the way from the Valley of Shinar into Greece, that Javan may very well be thought to leave some of his company here, when he perished the rest over to the opposite Continent. I know Phanias, ignorant of their true antiquity, deriveth them from Ion the son of Xuthus, and grandchild of Deucalion: where, in he came to near the truth, though he missed the men, that it was the Grandson of that man who escaped the flood, from whom both the Athenians and those Ionians had their true original. In regard of which relations betwixt the Nations, the Athenians gave aid to those Ionians against the Persians, who on the overthrow given to Croesus, pretended to the Lordship or Dominion of Asia, and conquered them in the time of Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch. Upon which revolt in the time of Darius, that King first undertook the invasion of Greece: Xerxes with great animosities. After this yielding to the times, they followed the fortune of the stronger, subject successively to the Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Constantinopolitans, and Turks, till the death of Aladine, before-mentioned: when both Eolis and Ionis got a new name, and are now called Sarcas, from Sarcas a Turkish Captain, who on the death of that Aladine, seized upon this Country, and erected here a petit Kingdom long since subdued by those of the race of Ottoman.

II. LYDIA.

LYDIA is bounded on the East, with Phrygia Major, and some part of Pisidia, from which separated by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West, with Eolis and Ionis, or Asia specially so called; on the North, with the Greater Mysia; on the South with Caria. So called from Lud, the son of Sem, by some of whose posterity it was first inhabited. In the full Latitude and extent thereof, as anciently, comprehending Eolis and Ionis, the adjoining Provinces, it made the Lydian Asia, spoken of before; within the verge whereof of all the seven Churches were contained, mentioned by St. John in the Revelation.

The people of this Country are said to have been the first Coyners of Money, the first Hacklers and Pedlers, and the first inventors of Dice, Ball, Chefs, and the like Games: necessity and hunger thereunto enforcing them, according to that of Persius, Artis Magister, ingenuique largitor venter. For being forcibly vext with famine, in the time of Ais, one of the Progenitors of Omphale, they devised these Games; and every second day playing at them, beguiled their hungry bellies. Thus for 22 years they continued playing and eating by turns: but then seeing that themselves were more fruitful in getting and bearing children, than the soil at that time in bringing forth sustenance to maintain them, they sent a Colony into Italy under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, the son of Ais, who planted in that Country, called at first Tyrrhenia, and afterward Tuscany.

This Country was also called Maonia, and was thought to have been the native soil of Homer, in regard that Colophon and Smyrna, two of the seven contending Cities, and those which seem to have most colour for their claim, were anciently accounted as parts of Lydia, as was said before. Hence Homer hath the name of Maonides and Maonian Vates: and in some Authors Cornelius Maenium is used for Homer's Poetical authorities, as Cornelius Maenon confingere, in Ovid. Baculus is also called sometimes by the name of Maenius; but for a very different reason, viz. because anciently there were no trees in all this Country but the Vine only.

Principal Mountains of this Country are 1 Sipylus, and 2 Tmolus, this last of most account in regard of the great fruitfulness of it, covered over with Vines, and yielding abundance of the best Saffron. Chief Rivers of it are 1 Hermus, which rising out of Phrygia Major, passeth only by the skirts hereof, and so falleth into a fair Bay of the Aegean, opening towards the Isle of Clazomenae. 2 Pactolus, which rising at the foot of Mount Tmolus, falleth not long after into Hermus; famous amongst the Poets for its golden Sands. 3 Caystus, no less notable for the abundance of Swans which swim therein, whose Fountain is in Phrygia Major also, near the borders hereof; and his fall into the Aegean also over against the Isle of Samos. 4 Meander, which rising out of a branch of the Taurus, in the furthest parts of the said Phrygia, towards Lycania, passeth by Magnesia, and endeth his course in the same Sea, near the City of Ephesus. A River famous for its many turnings in and out, 600 at the least, as Plinius counteth them. Of which in general thus the Poet,

Et lassas in se; sepe retortque aquas.*

That is lay:

*Meander wandering in the self-same soil,
Whose waters meeting do as oft recoil.*

And in another passage thus,

Quique recurvum ludis Meander in undis, Mæander plays his watry pranks,

In his so many winding banks.

The Country by reason of these Rivers was exceeding fruitful, abounding in all sorts both of wealth and pleasures, well cultivated and manured above ground, and underneath enriched with prodigious veins of Gold and Silver, and some precious Gems. Which made the people, after their overthrow by Cyrus, to become more sensual and voluptuous, and less fit for action, than any plot of their new Masters could have brought them to, had not the natural delicacies of the soil it self contributed to the advancement of their design. And yet before, they were sufficiently infamous for their luxury, and excess of riot, when best seen in wars: so that it is a marvel they were able to prevail on the neighboring Nations, and bring them under their command: as in the times of some of Croesus Predecessors, it is said they did. Unless perhaps they did participate of the temper of Minotus, the great favourite of Augustus Caesar, of whom Paterculus hath left this Character: Ubi res vigilanter, erat sane infans, providens, et agendi sibi simulacrum aliquid ex negotio remitti possit, eis ac nullius penitus humanam fluens: No man more vigilant than he in times of business, nor woman more effeminate in his times of leisure.

Principal Cities of this Country were, 1 Sardis, on both sides of Pactolus, the Seat Royal of Croesus, and the Kings of Lydia, till the Conquest of Lydia by the Persians. After which time, being taken by the Greeks, it so startled Xerxes, that he commanded one of his attendants to fly aloud every day, whilst he was at dinner, That the Greeks had taken Sardis; continuing that Menemio till it was recovered. Which cometh (I note this only by the way) was commonly observed in the Parliaments of France, as long as Calice did remain in the hands hands of the English; and might be profitably revived, till again recovered from the French. Overthrown by a most terrible Earth-quake (to which Disease most of the Asian Cities had been very much subject) it was re-edified again at the cost of Tiberius; continuing long after the Metropolis of this Province, and one of the seven Churches of the Lydian Asia, of which the Holy Spirit took such special notice. The others (besides Pergamus already mentioned in the Greater Mysia; and Ephesus, and Smyrna in the Proper Asia) were 2 Philadelphus, near or on the Banks of the River Caystus, the second City in account next to Sardis it self, and honoured with the dignity of a Metropolis, as appears by the Acts of the Constantinopolitan Council, where Eustathius Bishop hereof doth subscribe himself, Episcopus & the Metropolitanus Metropolis, Bishop of the Metropolis of Philadelphus, in the Province of Lydia. 3 Thyatira, honoured with the same Privilege also, as appears by the constant Order, observed as well in the Civil as Ecclesiastical Catalogues of the Cities belonging to this Province. The Reason whereof for otherwife it was contrary to the practice both of Church and State, to have in one Province more than one Metropolis was the respect had to those several Churches in regard of their Primitive Antiquity, and the Foundation of them by St. John the Apostle, as it was generally believed. 4 Laudicea, by Palmy placed amongst the Cities of this Province, as it stood in his time, and before: but afterwards laid by Constantine to the Greater Phrygia, and made the Metropolis thereof (which honour Ephesus had before enjoyed) it being well observed by Strabo, that the Romans did not dispute of their Provinces according to Nations, sed ad eas res spectant diuturnas res, antiquas, in eas res antiquas diuturnas, but according to those Districts, or Circuits, in which they kept their Courts of Justice. Next unto these, there were of especial consideration, 5 Magnesia ad Meandrum, so called because situate on that River, to difference it from 6 Magnesia pene Sipylum montem, another of the same name near the Hill Sipylus. The first assigned over to Themistocles, together with Myus and Lampsaenus, as was said before. The other memorable for the great Battle fought near unto it, betwixt Antiochus and the Romans; the loss whereof falling unto Antiochus, occasioned the loss of all his Asian Provinces on this side of Taurus, and the payment of 15000 Talents for the charge of the War, besides some other hard Conditions then imposed upon him. 7 Alabanda, opposite to Magnesia on the other side of Meander, the People whereof, immediately on the overthrow of Antiochus, not only sent Embassadors to Rome, to congratulate with them, as many other Nations did; but built a Temple to it, and appointed Anniversary Games to be celebrated in the honour of that new-made Goddess. A thing more to be wondered at in the Roman Senate for receiving, than in this poor People for bestowing on their City so divine an honour. 8 Tralles, on the banks of Caystus, to the Inhabitants whereof, Ignatius that Reverend Bishop and Godly Martyr writ the Epistle ad Tralesenses.

That the Lydians were derived from Lud the Son of Sem, is testified by the general consent of such ancient Writers, as treat of the dispositions of the Sons of Noah; to which opinion the nearness of the Names of Lud, Ludim, and Lyd (or Idum, as the Greeks call them) seems to give good countenance. Nor shall I here dispute it further, as a point unquestioned: the tale of Lydus, I know not what Nobleman, that should name this Country, being taken up amongst the Greeks for want of more certain truths: Once settled here, they grew up suddenly to a Kingdom amongst the ancient Kings whereof are numbered Manes as the first, Cotus, and Ais, and then Aisus (from whom Lydia first, and after, all the Continent, had the name of Asia) as his immediate Successors. After whom I find mention of one Cambites, said by Athenæus to be so great a Gormandizer, that in his sleep he eat his Wife, and finding her hand in his mouth next morning, flew himself for shame: and of another named Andramyter, as infamous for his filthy lusts, as Cambites for his gluttony. But the Race of these Kings ending in Omphale, the Mistress of Hercules, who made that valiant Champion spin amongst her Damocels, the Heracleids or Posterity of Hercules succeeded next; of whom there is no constant and continued Succession till the time of Ardisius, the nineteenth in order of that Line, who began his Reign not long before the building of the City of Rome. Under his Successors the Affairs hereof so exceedingly prospered, especially under Halyates the Father of Croesus, that Phrygia, Bithynia, Paphlagonia, Mysia, Caria, Eolis, Doris, and Ionis, acknowledged themselves Vassals to this Crown: Conceived both in Wealth and Power to be equal to the Aegyptian, Babylonian, or Median Kingdoms, till the Conquest of Syria and Aegypt by Nebuchadnezzar gave him the pre-eminence. But being come unto the height, it received a fall in the Person of Croesus the Successor of him who so much advanced it. The Kings hereof, from the time of the said Ardisius, take in order following.

- |      |   |  |
|------|---|--|
| A.M. |   |  |
| 3190 | 1 | Ardisius , 36.  |
| 3226 | 2 | Halyates , 14.  |
| 3240 | 3 | Melos , who overcame the people of Sardis , 12.  |
| 3252 | 4 | Candaules , who fiewing his Wife naked to Gyges , was by him slain; who marrying his Wife, succeeded him in his Kingdom. The whole Story is this: Candaules had to Wife a Woman of unparalleled beauty, and supposing the greatness of his happiness not to consist so much in his own fruition, as the notice which others might take of it, intended to shew her in Natures bravery to Gyges the Master of his Herds. Gyges , at first dissuaded him from an attempt so foolish; but seeing no persuasion could prevail, he consented. When he had seen the naked Queen, and was ready to depart, Candaules cried to him, Ego scilicet Gyges : Which words the Queen marking, and seeing the back of Gyges as he left the Chamber, the next morning sent for him: When holding a Ponyard in her hand, she gave him his choice, either presently to be slain, or else to kill the King, and take her to wife, with the Kingdom of Lydia for her Dowry. Of which two evils he made choice of that which he thought the least, and so killed Candaules . |
|      | 5 | Gyges , the first of this new Line added Ionis to his other Dominions. A Prince of so great widom, for the time he lived in, that all other Kings his neighbours (as it were) in the light to him; and he as in the dark to them: occasioning thereby the fiction of a King he had, by which made invisible, when, and as often as he pleased.   |
| 3305 | 6 | Ardis II. the son of Gyges , 37.   |
| 3342 | 7 | Sardiatres , 15.  |

3357 8 Halyastor II. of whom before.
3408 9 Craesus, the last King of Lydia, subdued Doris and Æolis; after which Victories, he was overcome by Cyrus King of Persia: in which Battle, a son of Craesus who had been dumb from his Cradle, creating a Souldier ready to kill his Father, suddenly broke out into these words, Rex est, cave ne occidas. After his overthrow, and the Captivity of Craesus (one of the richest Kings that ever was of old) Lydia was made a Persian Province, A.M. 3420.

The Lydians after this rebelled, but being again subdued, Cyrus bereaved them of all their horfices of services; dispoysed them of all their Armour, and trained them up in all manner of loofe and effeminate living; weakening by this means a powerful Nation, which before that time had not only maintained its own liberty, but aved all the Provinces adjoining. After this they continued Persian till the Conquest of Asia by the Macedonians, in the division of whose spoils they fell to the portion of Selenus and the Kings of Syria: following the common fortune of the rest of this Asia, till they came under the power of the Romans. Made by them one of the Provinces of their Empire, it had the Lower Mysia, or Asya Olympica annexed unto it: by means whereof the limits of each became so confounded, that the Towns and Cities of the one, are many times ascribed to the other. In the falling of the Eastern Empire it was made (as all the rest of Anatolia) a prey to the Turks: that Part of it which lieth next to Æolis, subject to the Cararum Family: as the other parts towards Phrygia Major were to the Aidinian.

12 C A R I A.

C A R I A is bounded on the East, with Lydia; on the North with Lydia and Ionis; on the West, with the Ææan or Ægean Sea; and on the South, with the Carpathian. So called from Cares, the son of Phoronius King of Argos, once the Lord hereof, who is said to have invented the Science of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Augury; though others ascribe it to the Phrygians, and others unto other Nations, all alike uncertain.

In this Country is the Hill called Læmus, the dwelling, or rather trying place of Eudymion, who being much addicted to the study of Astronomy, found out the changes and courses of the Moon, and is therefore by the Poets feigned to have been his Paramour. Others add, that Jupiter hid him in a Cave under this Hill, and cast him into a dead sleep: (which notwithstanding, the defended sometimes to kiss him) whence came the old By-word, of Eudymionis somnum dormit. Here is also in this Country the River Salmacis said to infest all such as either drink of it, or bathe in it: from whence the Poets raise the fiction of Salmacis and Hermaphroditus, described by Ovid; and the Proverb of Salmacis ipsa sine sanguine & sudore, mentioned by Tully in his Book of Officer, and there used for effeminate and wanton excesses.

Places of most note in it, is Miletus, not far from the hill Læmus, the birth-place of Thales, one of the seven Wise-men of Greece; from hence called Milesius; and the Mother of no fewer than 75 (or as Pliny faith of 80 Colonies, dispersed in several places of Greece and Asia: anciently honoured with the Oracle of Apollo, famed Miletus, whose Temple being burnt by Xerxes, was again rebuilt by the Myletians, to wit a greatness, that it remained without roof; compassed about with a Grove, and dwelling houses, and sumptuously set out with costly workmanship. This is that Miletus mentioned Aristo, to which St. Paul called together the Bishops of Ephesus, and of other the adjoining Cities, Ab Ephebo & reliquis proximis Civitatibus, faith St. Irenæus, the renowned Bishop of Lions, lib. 3. cap. 14. Anciently it was called Legis and Anatolion. 2 Mindus, which being but a small Town, had 40 great Gates, that Diogenes the Cynic cited out, and said, Te men Mindus, take heed that your City run not out at your Gates. 3 Haradus ad Læmon, so called because situate at the foot of that Mountain, to difference it from many others of that name: 4 Bergylus, or Bergylus, as Pliny calleth it, where anciently Diana had another Temple, though not to be compared with that of Ephesus. 5 Mylæ, in old times famous for two Temples sacred unto Jupiter; the way to which for 60 furlongs was paved with stone for the easier travelling of Pilgrims, and the better ordering of Processions; the principal of the Citizens serving there as Præfets, which office they held unto their death. 7 Primæssus, memorable for the Stratagem by which it was taken by Philip of Macedon, the Father of Persius. Who meaning to force it by Mine, and finding the earth so stony that it would not work, commanded the Pioneers notwithstanding to make a noise under the ground, and caused great Mounts of Rubbish to be raised secretly in the night, at the mouth of the Mine, as if the Work went very well forwards. At last he sent word unto the Townsmen, that two parts of their wall stood only upon wooden props, to which if he gave fire, they should find no mercy; which heard, the Citizens yielded up the Town unto him. Souldier in the Art of War is a piece of wit, that it prevails sometimes more than Mines or Batteries.

In the South-west of the Province, thrusting it self to the Sea like a spacious Promontory, stands the Country of DORIS, so called of the Doræ, a Greek People, who there inhabited. The principal Cities whereof were 1 Cnidus, not far from a Foreland or Promontory of the same name, famous of old times for the Marble Image of Venus, called hence Dea Cnidia. 2 Cressa, a noted Haven-Town in the time of Ptolemy. 3 Halicarnassus (now called Nesi) the birth-place of Herodotus and Dionysius, named hence Halicarnassus, two famous Historians, and the seat-Royal of Artemisia Queen of the Carians; called from hence sometimes the Queen of Halicarnassus, who in the honour of her husband Mausolus, built a stately Monument, accounted one of the Worlds seven Wonders, of which thus Martial, speaking of the Roman Amphitheatre erected by Domitian,

Laudibus immo dicis Cares ad Astra ferant.*

That is to say,

Mausolus Tomb filling the empty Air,

Let not the Carians praise beyond compare.

That the Carians were so called from Cares, the son of Phoronius, King of Argos, hath been said before. But Bochartus will rather have them so called from Car, which in the Phœnician Language signifieth a Sheep or a Ram; with numerous flocks whereof they did once abound. And this may seem more probable, in regard that the Ionians next neighbours to Caria, borrowing this word from the Phœnicians, called sheep by the name of Caræ, Kæg, lowæ, & ægiabra, faith Hebæus, the old Grammatician. From whomsoever they had their name, certain it is, they were a very warlike people. Es amaron pugnaque amantes, (faith Pomponius Mela) in aliaq. vitem bella appetentes, who when they had no wars at home, would seek out for action. A little before the time of Xerxes, Mausolus reigned here, whose wife Artemisia (lately mentioned) aided that King in his undertakings against Greece. Afterwards, in the time of Alexander the

the Great, we met with Ada Queen hereof, who aided him against the Persians; adopting him for her son and Successor; Subject after her decease to the Macedonians, it followed the same fortune with the rest of these Provinces, till the defeat of Antiochus near Magnesia: in the division of whose spoils it was given to the Rhodiens, incorporated not long after to the State of Rome, and made a Province of the Empire. Wreathed from the Eastern Emperours by the Turks of the Selæmian Family, the greatest part hereof, on the death of Aladin II. was raised unto a petty Kingdom by the name of Mentesis, so called from Mendos (or Mindus) the chief City of it; the residue being laid to the Caraman Kingdom, both long ago subdued by the Ottoman Family: that of Mentesis by Mahomet surnamed the Great, who dispossessed Eliat the last Prince thereof, Anno 1451.

13. L Y C I A.

L Y C I A is bounded on the East, with Pamphylia and Lydia, and Phrygia Major; on the North, with parts of Lydia, and Phrygia Major; on the South, with the Mædian and Taurus. Environed on three sides with the Mountain Taurus, which part it from the Countries above mentioned, by consequence naturally strong, and not very accessible: the Sea for the space of 20 miles thrusting up the fourth. And here is to be observed, that besides this, there was a little Region of the same name, not far from Troy, not much observed by our Geographers either old or new; but mentioned sometimes by the Poets; as in Virgil, Æneid. 4. Quæsi ubi bybernæ Lyctiam, Xanthique fœcunda Deserti, &c. which is meant plainly of the Byrgian, or Troyan Lyctia; the word byberna being added because of its Northern situation in respect of this. Of this somewhat hath been said before in Phrygia Minor. In which also that there was a River called Xanthus, appears not only by those words of Virgil which are cited there, but by two passages in Oenone's Epistles unto Paris no less and evident.

The people hereof were sometimes called Xanthi, from Xanthus the chief River hereof, which rising in two Springs from the foot of Mount Cadmus, passeth by a Town called Xanthus also, and falleth into the Sea. But generally they were called Lycti and the Country Lyctia, from Lyctæ the son of Pandion King of Athens; who either conquered them, or did some memorable act amongst them, which deserved that honour.

The principal Mountain of this Country, and indeed of Asia, is the Mountain Taurus, which hath his beginning in this Province, extending Eastward to the great Oriental Ocean: of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said hereafter, when these hills are grown unto the greatest.

One of the branches of it, and the most notable in this Country, is that called Chimæra, vomiting flames of fire like the Sicilian Ætna: the bottom whereof was infested with Serpents, the middle parts grazed upon by Goats, and the higher parts made dangerous by the dens of Lions. Hence by the Poets made a Monster, having the head of a Lion, the body of a Goat, and the tail of a Serpent; according unto that of Ovid in his Metamorphosis:

Quæ Chimæra juvo mediis in paribus Hircum, Quæ & ora Leo, caudam Serpentis habebat.

In English thus,

Chimæra from a Goat her mid-part takes,

From Lions head and breast, her tail from Snakes. This dangerous Mountain was first planted and made habitable by the care of Bellerophon, a noble Grecian, who is therefore fabled by the Poets to have killed this Monster, employed upon this business by Jobares the King of Lyctia, to whom he had been sent by Prætus King of Argos, who was jealous of him, and sent his Letters to require that King to kill him. Whence came the saying, Bellerophonis literas portare; applied to those, who were unawares employed to carry Letters tending to their own destruction: such as those carried by Urial to Joub the General, by command of David.

This Country was so populous, that anciently there was reckoned threefold Cities in it, of which fix and thirty remained in the time of St. Paul, now nothing left of them but the names and ruins. Those of chief note were 1 Myra, the Metropolis of Lyctia, when a Roman Province; by consequence an Archbishop's See, when Christian. St. Nicolas one of the Bishops hereof in the Primitive times, is said to have been a great Patron of Scholars: his Festival annually holden on the sixth of December, is celebrated in the Church of Rome with several Patentes; and still in some Schools here in England (as in that of Burford in the County of Oxon, where I had my breeding and my birth) for a feast and a play-day. Of this City there is mention Acts 27. 5. 2 Talmesius, the Inhabitants whereof are famous for South-saying, and accounted the first Interpreters of dreams. 3 Patara, or Patras, (formerly called Satara) beautified with a fair Haven, and many Temples; one of them dedicated to Apollon, with an Oracle in it, for wealth and credit equal unto that of Delphos. 4 Phaselis, on the Sea-side also, a nest of Pirates in the times of the Roman greatness, by whom then haunted and enriched, as Algiers is now: but taken by Servilius, a Roman Captain, at such time as Pompey scoured the Seas. And unto the Pirates of this Town the former ages were indebted for the first invention of those swift Vessels, which the Romans called a Phaselus, by the name of the Town; we may render it a Brigantine. 5 Cragus, with the Mountain of the same name, thrusting out eight points or Promontories near to the Chimæra. 6 Rhodia, or Rhodiopolis, as Pliny calleth it, most probably of the Foundation of the neighbouring Rhodiens. 7 Solyma, on the borders hereof towards Pisidia, the people of which were conquered and added unto Lyctia by the sword of Bellerophon, whom Jobares, with a mind to kill him, according to the request of Prætus, employed in that service. 8 Corydalla, near the Mountain called Masigram, the Majesties of Pliny. 9 Podaleus, the chief Town of Myliæ; as to Oenananda is of OE-BALIA, two little Regions in this Country.

The Lyctians were in former times a puissant people, extending their power upon the Seas as far as Italy. Subjected to the Persian not without great difficulty; the people with such obstinacy defending their liberty, that some of them being besieged by Harpages, Lieutenant unto Cyrus, the first Persian Monarch, they first burnt their wives, children, servants, and riches, in a common fire; and then made a furious rally upon the Enemy, by whom put all unto the sword. To Alexander in his march this way towards Persia, they submitted without any resistance. After whose death they fell with the rest of these parts into the hand of Selenus. On the defeat of Antiochus at the battle of Magnesia, it was given to the Rhodiens for their assistance of that War; but governed as a Free Estate by a Common-Council of 14 Senators, elected out in their principal Cities: over whom was called by the name of Leictarchus. In these remained the sole power of imposing taxes, making War and Peace, appointing Judicial and inferior Magistrates, and all things appertaining to the publick Government. A shadow of which power they retained when brought under the Romans, and a shadow only: the Supreme power being no longer in the Senate of Lyctia, but in that of of Rome. Nor had their Lyciarch any thing but an empty name, and the vain privilege of ordering and disposing the public Games, wherein by his Office he presided. When made a Province of the Empire, it had the same fortune as the others had, till it fell into the power of the Turks; after the death of the second Aladine made a part of the Kingdom of Caramania; of which more anon.

14 LYCAONIA.

LYCAONIA is bounded on the East with Armenia Minor, from which parted by a branch of the Mountain Taurus; on the West, with the Greater Phrygia; on the North, with Cappadocia; and on the South, with Pisidia. So called from the Lycæones a People of Lycia, or from the Lycæonians, Inhabitants of Lycæonia, a Town of Phrygia Major; who enlarging themselves into these parts, gave this name unto it. Either of which I should prefer before their conceit, who derive it from Lycæon King of Arcadia, dispossessed by Jupiter of that Kingdom; or think that Lycæon was a King of this Country, and not of that.

Places of note herein, 1 Iconium (now Cogui) the Metropolis hereof when a Roman Province: A place of great strength and consequence; situated advantageously in the Mountains for defence and safety, and therefore chosen for the Seat of the Turkish Kings in Lesser Asia, at such time as they were most distressed by the Western Chalybians, who under the Command and presence of the Emperor Conrade did in vain besiege it, forced to depart thence with great loss both of men and honour. Afterwards made the Seat-Royal of the Aladine Kings, the former Race being extinguished by the Tartars; and finally of the Kings of the house of Caraman, whose Kingdom called the Kingdom of Caramania, contained all the South part of the Lesser Asia, that is to say, part of the Province of Caria, all Lycia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, Pisidia, and this Lycaonia. 2 Lystra, the birth-place of Timothy the Evangelist; where Paul and Barnabas, having miraculously healed a Cripple, were adored as Gods; and not long after, on the instigation of some Jews which came down from Antioch and Iconium, most deliberately treated; Paul being stoned into the bargain, though it pleased God to raise him to life again, Acts 14. v. 19, 20. Such was the divine pleasure of Almighty God, that he that did consent to the stoning of St. Stephen the Protomartyr, and took charge of the cloaths of his Executioners, should suffer in the same kind wherein he had trespass'd, and feel some smart remembrance of his former Actions. 3 Derbe, honoured by the preaching of the said Apostle. 4 Laranda, so called by Ptolemy, and still preserving its old name, the second place for reputation next unto Iconium. 5 Adopsus, 6 Paralizi, 7 Canna, 8 Caratha, with others named by Ptolemy, but not else observable.

Whomsoever they defended, of any great note or observation in the former times: subject to Cappadocia when it was a Kingdom, and reckoned as part of it in the time of Prohomy, when made a Province of the Empire. Disinherited from it by some of the following Emperours, either to create new Offices and Preferments for some Court-Favourites, or to satiate the ambition of some Prelates, aspiring to the dignity of a Metropolitan, it was made a Province of itself. Torn from the Empire by the Turks, it was at first a member of the Selæucian Kingdom, as afterwards of the Caramanian, which last founded by Cargman a great Prince of the Turks, on the death of Aladine the second, the last King of the Selæucian Family, was a great eye-fore unto that of the House of Ottoman from the time of Amir the first, who first warred upon it, to the Reign of Rahim the second, who in fine subverted it, Ann 1486, as may be shewn hereafter, when we come to Cilicia, the last of the Provinces of that Kingdom, in the course of this Work.

15 PISIDIA.

PISIDIA hath on the East, Armenia Minor; on the West, some parts of Lycia and Phrygia Major; on the North, Lycaonia; on the South, Pamphylia, and some part of Cilicia; from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus. So called from the Piside, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not amongst my Authors.

The Country small, but furnished with great plenty of all provisions, as appears by that passage of Luc, where speaking of the Expedition of Marinus into these parts, he telleth us that he came into the Fields of Sagalassa (one of the Cities hereof) being of a rich soil, and plentiful of all manner of Fruit, Iste ventum est (with he in agrum Sagalassarum, ubere fructu feracem omni genere frugum). But this is to be understood only of the Plains and Champaign, the Mountainous parts hereof being (like others of that nature) poor and barren.

Towns of most observation in it, 1 Antioch, the Metropolis hereof, when a Province of the Roman Empire, called for distinction sake Antiochia Pisidia; mention of which is made Acts 4. and of the Jews Synagogue therein, honoured by St. Paul's preaching, the sum of whose divine Sermon is there repeated. Built by Silvanus, the first King of Syria of the Macedon Race, and by him so called in honour of his Father Antioch. 2 Selæucia, the foundation of the same Selæucus, called also, to distinguish it from others of that name, Selæucia Pisidia. 3 Lyssinia, on the borders heretofore towards Phrygia. 4 Selge, a Colony of the Lactemonians. 5 Sagalassa, situate in the most fruitful part of all this Country, as appears by that of Luc before-mentioned. 6 Cremna, which only had the honour of a Roman Colony. 7 Termessus, strongly situate in the Syrinch of the Mounts, the hilly Country about which both the name of Milyra. 8 Olbanassa. 9 Platanassa, of which little memorable.

As for these Piside, they were originally defended of the Solyms, Inhabitants of the Borders of Lycia. A valiant People, and so affirmed to be by Luc, who calleth them longè optimos bello. Nor did he speak it without cause, this small Nation holding out against the Persians, and not conquered by them, when their great neighbours were subdued. Against these Cyri the Emperor Arsaxerxes Mueon King of Cyria did pretend a Quarrel, as if they had trespassed on the borders of his Province. Which though perhaps they had not done, yet this gave him good occasion to levy an Army, preying tending revenge on them, but intending to dispossess his Brother of the Persian Monarchy: But Tigermes Lieutenant to the King in Asia, seeing greater Preparations than were sufficient to oppose the weak Piside, made the King acquainted with his suspicions, who accordingly provided for resistance. The Army of Cyri consisting of 120000 Grecians, and 100000 Persians; the Kings Forces were no fewer than 90000 fighting men. They met at Cunaxa, not far from Babylon, where Cyri lost both the Victory and his Life. The Grecians who had made their side good, and stood in honourable terms of Composition, being by Tigermes betrayed, left the best of their Company. The rest under the the conduct of Xenophon, made safe retreat home in despite of 200000 men which followed at their heels. This Xenophon was an Agent in and the Historian of this Expedition; whose example the Spartans first and afterwards the Macedonians, were encouraged to attempt the Conquest of Persia. But to return to these Pisidians, they fell, with others of their neighbours, under the power of the Macedonians, and were made part of the Dominion of Selæucus. Abandoned by Antiochus by the will of the Romans, and settled in obedience by the Military progress of Marinus, spoken of before; they were in Prohomy's time annexed to Pamphylia, as a part thereof. Afterwards made a distinct Province of itself, and so continued till those parts of the Eastern Empire were subdued by the Turks: first part of the Selæucian and Aladine Kingdoms, after of the Kingdom of Caramania; whereof more anon.

16 PAMPHYLIA.

PAMPHYLIA is bounded on the East, with Lycia, from which parted by a branch of the Taurus; on the North, with Pisidia, separated from it by the main body of that Mountain; and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea, which in those parts which lie next to it, is called Mar Pamphylum. The reason of the name I find not, unless we think with Metaphrastes, that it was so named, quæ ex omnibus gentibus constat esse, because inhabited by a mixture of many Nations; for so Pamphylia in the Greek Tongue doth expressly signify. And probable enough it is that lying near unto the Sea, with an open Shore, opposite to Afric, near Syria, and not far from Greece, several Nations from those Parts might repair unto it; and from thence the Name.

The Country for the most part is very Mountainous, over-run with the branches of Mount Taurus; but these branches feed great flocks of Goats, of whose hair are made abundance of Chambers and Gregariis, not inferior unto Silks for fineness. Towards the Sea, which for the space of an hundred and fifty miles coasts along this shore, more pleasant, populous, and fruitful; well watered, and as well planted. The principal Rivers hereof, being 1 Cataradus, 2 Cestrus, and 3 Erismus; next to which last, Simon the son of Mithridates, Captain General of the Albanian Army, overthrew in one day both the Sea and Land Forces of the Persians. The manner thus having by plain force broke their Navy, of which he took and sunk no fewer than forty Ships, and three thousand Gallies, he towed the Persians westwards with his best men, attired in the Habit, and wearing the Colours of the Persians in the tops of their Ships. In their approach the Camp was opened, and all prepared to entertain their victorious Countrymen; but the Greeks, once in, suddenly put them to the Sword, and took twenty thousand of them Prisoners.

Principal Cities of it, 1 Attalia, founded by Ptolemy Philadelphus King of Ægypt, and for long time the greatest and most flourishing City of all this Province; well fenced, and seated very commodiously for Trade, on a very fair Bay, now called Golfo di Satalia, by the name of the Town, but little altered. And though the Romans did confer the honour of the Metropolitan City upon Aspendus, yet still Attalia had the first in point of Riches, and is to this day a wealthy and well-traded Empery, the wealthier for the fair Taperies which are therein made. Of this Town there is mention Acts 14. v. 25. 2 Perga, famous in old times for a Temple of Diana, and the yearly Festivals there held in honour of her, from hence called Diana Pergæ; of more famous in the salings of time, for St. Paul's Preaching in it, mentioned Acts 14. v. 25. 3 Syde, renowned in times of Gentilism for a Temple of Palus. 4 Magydus, on the Sea-side, not far from Syde. 5 Aspendus, an in-land Town, but strongly situate; made the Metropolis of the Province in the time of the Romans; remarkable for the Elders or Musicians of it, who with one hand both held their Harps and plaid upon them, keeping the other free for more gainful uses; whence the Proverb of Aspendus Citharista, an Aspendian Harper, by which they signified a Thief. The Town first founded by the Argives, the Colony sent thither being led by Mopsus, from whom the Country heretofore had the name of Mopsia. 6 Olbia, not far from Attalia. 7 Carcassum, and 8 Colobrasus, two of the Towns of that part hereof which had the name of Cilicia aspera; as 9 Cretopolis, and 10 Menedemium, of that part which was called Carbalia.

Of these Pamphylians there is little to be said in point of story, but that they were for the most part on the suffering hand; subject from time to time to those mighty Princes, who would not let their neighbours rest in quiet by them. Being on the same side of Taurus, and of easy access, they became first Vassals to the Syrians, and after to the Persian Kings. When Alexander passed that way, in his March towards Persia, he took all the Sea-Towns of it: The whole brought under with the rest of the Asian Provinces, by Antigonus first, after by Selæucus the great King of Syria. In the expiration of whose Line, this people and their neighbours of Cilicia, being left to themselves, and tempted by Mithridates to his Faction, began to be troublesome on the Seas, and proved notable Pirates, and were the first Authors or Inventors of those Gallies of an hundred and forty, or an hundred and sixty Oars apiece; which the Indians call from hence by the name of Pamphylia. But forced to leave this Trade at last, being warred upon by the Romans with great Forces both by Sea and Land (a fuller narrative whereof we shall have in Cilicia) in the conclusion of that War, they lost that liberty which so small a time they had enjoyed, and were made Vassals unto Rome. Afterwards made a Province of the Asian Dioecse, they ran the same fortune. With the rest, till subdued by the Turks; and at the death of Aladine, were seized on by Caraman, and so became a part of his Kingdom; of which we shall hear more when we come to Cilicia. And so much for the Provinces of the Asian Dioecse (the Provinces of the Isles excepted, whereof more anon) converted to the Christian Faith by three great Apostles; but most especially by Saint Paul, of whose Travels through most Cities and Regions of it, there is such pregnant evidence in the Book of Acts. And that Saint Peter and Saint John had also their parts herein, appears by the Revelation of the one, and the first Epistle of the other: Paul planting, John and Peter watering, but God himself giving the increase. Pass we on next unto ISAURIA and CILICIA, which though Provinces of the Dioecse of the Orient, were parts of the Caramanian Kingdom: of which having taken a Survey, and so cleared our selves of this Pamphylia, we will then fall about with Illyands as make up the remainder of the Asian Dioecse.

17 ISAURIA. 18 CILICIA.

These two, though distinct Provinces, I have joyned together, because the first was only a part of the last; Cilicia anciently comprehending both: The fortunes of both being the same also in point of story, which makes the conjunction the more natural.

ISAURIA, a mountainous and hilly Province, seated on both sides of Taurus, hath on the East and South, the rest of Cilicia, whereof anciently it was a part, on the North, Psidia; on the West, Pamphylia. So called from Isaurus, the chief City of it, when first made known unto the Romans; which being taken by Servilius the Proconsul, employed by Pompey in that Service, reduced the conquered Country under the command of Rome, and gave unto the Conquerour the firname of Isauricus.

The quality of the Soil, and whole Estate of this small Province, take thus from Ammianus Marcellinus, who had seen these Countries. Cilicia lateri dextra adnata Isauria, ubi palmitis vires, & frugibus multis quam mediam, fumen navigabile Calicadnus interfecit, &c. i. e. "On the right hand of Cilicia lieth Isauria, a Province of a wealthy Soil, plentiful of Vines, and much other Fruits, which the River Calicadnus parteth in the very midst. Beautified, besides many Towns, with two principal Cities. 1 Seleucia, founded by Seleucus; and 2 Claudiopolis, into which Claudius the Emperor brought a Roman Colony. For as touching 3 Isaurus, heretofore a walled City, and of most esteem, it hath been long ago destroyed, as yielding too secure Refuge to the neighbouring Rebels: inasmuch that now there are scarce any visible Tracts of its former greatness. And not much after, He due Provincia bello quondam Piratico cateris mixta Predonum, a Servilio Proconsule missa sub jugum, facta sunt veltigales. i. e. "These Provinces (Cilicia and this heretofore in the Piratical War joining with those Robbers, were brought under by Servilius the Proconsul, and made subject to the State of Rome. And here we have in brief the nature of the Country, the names of the chief Rivers, and the principal Cities, with so much of the Story as relates to the first subjugation of it. What further doubt concern it we shall hear in Cilicia, upon the which it did depend.

CILICIA is bounded on the East with Syria, or rather that part thereof which is called Comagena, separated from what parts by a branch of the Mountain Taurus, called Amanus; on the West, with Pamphylia; on the North, with Isauria, and Armenia Minor; on the South, with the Mediterranean, and Syria, specially so called. It was thus named, as the old tradition was, from Cilice the Brother of Cadmus the Phœnician, a near neighbour to it; but as Becharius (of whose humour I have told you often) from Callicum, a Phœnician word signifying Stones, quia lapidosa est Regio, because in some parts, especially in that which is called Cilicia Trachea, or Cilicia Aspera, it was very stony. It is now called Caramania, as the last Province of the Caramanian Kingdom, which held out for those falling Princes, when the rest was conquered by the Turks of the Ottoman Race.

The Country laid by Marcellinus to be terra dives omnibus bonis, wealthy and fruitful of all necessities, which Chæcæder holdeth good, chiefly in the Eastern parts, which heretofore had the name of Cilicia Campestris: the Western parts lying towards Pamphylia, formerly called Cilicia Aspera, being rough and stony. But generally where the Lands lie in several, and are duly cultivated, it answereth to the former Character; being also very well watered, and having a fair and large Sea-coast for the space of three hundred miles and upwards. Which notwithstanding, it is not much traded, and but meanly inhabited: a great part of the Country lying in large and common Fields, to which none can lay any proper claim, and therefore planted only with Goats and Sheep: out of which the Commoners on all sides raise good profit by Cheese and Butter, by their Fleeces chiefly. Here is also a good breed of oxen, which fix hundred yearly are called out for the Service of the Grand Signeur. But as they are profitable and useful Creatures, so they are dangerous and hurtful to them; especially those of the vulgar Grecians call the Squillachi, of a mixture between a Dog and a Wolf, which go in troops to be bold, and thewifh wihal, as they use to be upon a man as he is asleep, and leave him neither hurt, dead, nor fardel, nor any thing they can conveniently get from him.

Chief Rivers hereof are, 1 Pyramus, now called Malmejra, which rising on the North side of the Taurus, and forcing his passage through that Mountain, makes such a noise in falling down the precipices and rocks thereof, as resemblanceth at a great distance a deep of Thunder. 2 Orymagus, 3 Calicadnus, spoken of before. 4 Cidnus, which riseth in the Anti-Taurus; a River of a violent course, and so cold a water, that Pliny writes, it cureth the Gout: the waters of which proved very dangerous to Alexander the Great, the coldness of them striking violently into his stomach, and deadly to Frederick the first Emperor of the Germans, as he here bathed himself, the violence of the stream tripping up his heels, and he not able to recover, was presently drowned.

Of their chief Hills I need add nothing, having it already said that the Country is parted by Amanus Syria, and by Taurus it self from Psidia and Armenia Minor; not ease of entrance by the first, but very difficult by the last: The Streights thereof called the Cilicia, or the Ports of Cilicia, being indeed high, and almost impassable, that had they been guarded or regarded by the Persians, as they should have been, the Progress of Alexander's Victories might have checked there. But Asperus, who had the charge of them, durst not stand his ground, and so left them open to the Enemy, whom by those Ports he put into the possession of the Kingdom of Persia. With better faith, though no better fortune, did the Souldiers of Persennius Niger make good these Streights against the Emperor Severus, the Monarchy of the World lying the second time at the stake, and to be tried for in this Cock-pit. For the Nigrians possessed of these Streights and Entrances, courageously withstood the Severian party, till at last a sudden Tempest of Rain and Thunder continually darning in their faces (as if the very Heavens had been armed against them) they were fain to leave the Passes, and therewith the Victory to the adverse Faction: having sold that at the loss of 20000 of their own lives, which Alexander had the happiness or the hap to buy for nothing.

In the borders of this Country towards Pamphylia, lived a Tribe or Nation called the Soli, originally of Armenia: But in long tract of time diffused from converse and communication with their Countrymen, they spoke that Language so corruptly, that from their barbarous manner of pronunciation, and as rude explication, came the word Solacismus. Yet amongst these were born three men of eminent note, that is to say, Cyprius the Philosopher, Philemon and Aratus the Poets; out of the Writings of which last, St. Paul vouchsafeth to use this Passage, 1<sup>o</sup> 2<sup>o</sup> 3<sup>o</sup> 4<sup>o</sup> 5<sup>o</sup> 6<sup>o</sup> 7<sup>o</sup> 8<sup>o</sup> 9<sup>o</sup> 10<sup>o</sup> 11<sup>o</sup> 12<sup>o</sup> 13<sup>o</sup> 14<sup>o</sup> 15<sup>o</sup> 16<sup>o</sup> 17<sup>o</sup> 18<sup>o</sup> 19<sup>o</sup> 20<sup>o</sup> 21<sup>o</sup> 22<sup>o</sup> 23<sup>o</sup> 24<sup>o</sup> 25<sup>o</sup> 26<sup>o</sup> 27<sup>o</sup> 28<sup>o</sup>. That blessed Apostle thought himself never the worse Preacher, for being brought up in humane Learning at the feet of Gamaliel, nor held it any disparagement to the Influences of the Holy Ghost, to make use of it in his Sermons and divine Discourses: and therefore to prevent those Cavils which ignorance or misprision might chance to make in times succeeding, he hath with three vouchsafed the words and testimony of the Heathen Writers; viz. of Epimæides, Tit. 1. 1. 212, of Menander, 1 Cor. 15. 233, and that of Aratus, before mentioned. So lawful is it in this kind, for those of the Christian Israel to rob the Egyptians; and to make this Scripture serviceable to her Militrils Sarah.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1 Sola, the habitation of the Soli, before remembered; by some said to be built by Solon the Athenian: but generally affirmed to have been planted by those of Rhodes and Arica: militarily called Heliospolis, by Qu. Curtius, which is as much in Latine as Solis Civitas, or the City of the Sun. On the site hereof then decayed and ruinous (the Town having been destroyed by Tigranes the Armenian King in his late War against the Romans) did Pompey build his City of Pompeipolis after his victory over the Pirates; who not only Lured it over the Seas, and consequently obstructed Trade and Merchandize, but wasted and spoiled the Villages of Asia itself. Pompey being Victor, and having inflicted exemplary punishment on the Ring-leaders, with the rest, peopled this new Town, and the Country adjoining, allowing them competent possessions, lest want and necessity should again enforce them to the like courses. An action truly commendable, and worthy to great a Captain, rather to take an occasion of offending from the people, than after offence done, to punish them. Hyblodæus in the Utopia, somewhat bitterly, though perhaps not unjustly, inveigheth against the Laws of these, Quem multo potius providendum fuerit, ut aliquis esset princeps vite; ne cuiusque sit tam dira furandi primus, deinde perniciis necessitas. Whereas (saith he) the Laws ought to make provision for putting men into some orderly course of life, and not let them run upon the necessity of stealing first, and then being hanged for it. 2 Tarsus, the birth-place of St. Paul the Apostle; for that sufficiently famous, were there nothing else to commend it to consideration: But it was a Town withal of great note and consequence, the Metropolis first, of all Cilicia; and after the division of Cilicia Prima. The Inhabitants thereof had the privilege of Roman Citizens. Situate in a goodly Plain on the banks of the Cydusus, and by some said to be the work of Sardanapalm the last King of Assyria; it being engraven on a Monument erected to him, that in one day he had built this Tarsus. And 3 Antiochia, another City of this Country, near the Sea-side, and not far from the Promontory Zephyrium. Of the same date (if the said Monument speak truth), but neither of the same fortune nor continuance, that being utterly decayed, but Tarsus still remaining of great wealth and strength. Much spoken of in the Wars of the Holy Land, and in the stories of the Caramanian and Ottoman Kings. And though the Tarsians to ingratiate themselves with Julius Cæsar, would needs have their Country called Julioptolis; yet the old name survived the new, and it is to this day called Tarsus or Tarsissa by the vulgar Grecians; but Hamsi by the Turks, as Belonius telleth us. 4 Adena, the Adena of Protolyma, a large Town, but unvalled, instead whereof defended by a very strong Castle. Situate in a fruitful soil, both for Wine and Corn, wherewith the Town is always furnished for the use of those that are to travel over the Taurus; who commonly take in here three days provision. 5 Epiphania, the birth-place of George the Arian Bishop of Alexandria; thrust on the world of late by some learned men (but of more industry than judgment) for George the Cappadocian Martyr. 6 Mysus, as famous, or infamous rather, for giving title to Theodosius Mysus, Bishop hereof, and a great Patron of the Nestorian heresies, in the time of St. Chrysostome. The City otherwise of good note, and of great consequence, in the course of the Roman Wars, described at large by Ammianus Marcellinus, 7 Isso, upon a spacious Bay, called hence Sinus Issus, near the borders of Syria; memorable for the great battle here fought between Alexander and an handful (in comparison) of his Macedonians, and that vast Army of Darius, (himself then in prison) consisting of 60000 undisciplined Assians; whereof so many lost their lives, that the dead bodies seemed to have buried the ground. For partly by the unskillfulness of the Commanders, who chose to fill a place to fight in, that they could make no use of their mighty numbers; and partly by the effeminateness of the Asian Souldiers, unable to endure the charge, there fell that day no fewer than 200000 of the Persians, 40000 of them being taken Prisoners, amongst them the Wives and Daughters of Darius, and not above 100 of the Alexandrians, if Qu. Curtius be not partial in relating the Story. A victory which assured Alexander of his former purchases, and opened a way unto the rest: the Persians not being able to make head again, till he had pierced into the bowels of their Empire, and added Syria, and Egypt to his former Conquests. Of so great consequence is one full Victory to the toiling and getting of a Kingdom. This Town it self now called Alisceda, and the great Bay on which it standeth Gulph d'Alisceda. 8 Alexandria, built by command of the Conquerour near the place of battle, commodiously for Trade, as upon the Sea; but otherwise in a Fenny and Boggy soil, which make the air there to be very unwholsome to men not used to it: little now remaining, but a few houses on the Sea-shore built of straw and mud, hardly affording it the reputation of a sorry Village; and would not long continue such, but that it is the nearest Haven to the Town of Aleppo (whereof more in Syria) which draweth unto it the rest of some Christian Factors, whose houses are of Clay and Timber; but of them not many. The Town at first called Alexandria, as before was said, diminished first to Alexandretta, now called Scanderone. 9 Nicopolis, another of Alexander's foundations, so named in memory of his great Victory before mentioned. 10 Amavracia, a City of great Antiquity in the time of Strabo, and the Metropolis, of the Province of Cilicia Secunda. 11 Heraclea, mentioned by Belonius, and by him placed in a fruitful and well-cultivated Plain, at the foot of Mount Taurus, a fair and large Town, as he reporteth it, and distant from Adana towards the Northwest about three days journey. But I find no such Town in Strabo, or Protolyma, or any other of the Ancients. 12 Scanduloro, a City of Cilicia Aspera, or that part of Cilicia, which lieth towards Pamphylia, heretofore with the adjoining Territory governed as a State distinct, when all the rest of this Country was under the Kings of Caramania: against whom the Prince hereof, being a Mahometan, had preserved his liberties, by the assistance of the Knights of Rhodes, and the Kings of Cyprus. And when the Caramanian Kingdom was subdued by Bajazet, he made so good conditions for himself, that he had other lands and estates in the Lesser Asia assigned to him in exchange for this, and so surrendered this to the will of the Conquerour.

The first Inhabitants of this Country were of the Progeny of Tarshish, the son of Javan, by whom, or some of his posterity, to preserve his memory, the City of Tarsus was first built. Increased in tract of time by some new Colonies out of the Neighbouring parts of Syria, it followed for the most part the fortunes of its successive together subject to the Assyrians, Persians, and Macedonians. In the declining fortunes of the house of Seleucus they began to stand upon their own legs, and might have continued longer in so good a posture, had they not hearkened to ill Counsels. Tempted by Mithridates to join with him against the Romans, of whose greatness all the Eastern States were grown very jealous, and being naturally good Sea-faring men, they began together with the Pamphylians, to infect the Seas. At first they ventured no further than the shores adjoining, but after emboldened with success, and finding that the Romans were sufficiently employed in domestic troubles, and a sharp war with Mithridates, fell upon the Coasts of Greece, and in fine of Italy it fell: Publius Servilius the Proconsul first employed against them, gave them an overthrow at Sea; and following his good fortune, set upon them in their Harbours and retiring places. In which pursuit he not only took from them Phigalia, a strong Town in Lycia, one of their Retreats, and others of their best and strongest Receptacles; but wasting the whole Country of Cilicia, fell upon Isauria, the most defensible Town thereof, which he took and ravaged. No sooner was Servilius departed home, but they broke out more violently than before: filling all the Creeks and Ports of the Eastern Seas with their Frigates, Brigantines and other light Privateer Vessels, in which that Pompey himself thought it to be an action not unbecoming his greatness, undertook the War against them. And he pursued it to such purpose, that having armed 500 sail of all sorts, and stored his ships with 130000 men, he set upon them all at once; and in the space of one sole month made an end of the War. An action not sufficiently to be wondered at, if we consider either the speediness of it, done in so little time as a month; or the cheapness of the Victory, purchased without the loss of one Roman Vessel; or finally, the importance and consequence of it, the Pirates from that time not daring to infect the Seas; and all Cilicia subjected to the State of Rome. How they were afterwards disposed of hath been shewn already. After this they did very good service unto Pompey in his War against Caesar; of whom thus Lucan, reckoning up his Allies and Aids:

And the reformed Cilician now
No Pirate, in his fleet did row.

Nor were they pliant unto him only, as unto their Conqueror; but generally for sale and tractable in the time of Cicero, one of the first Proconsuls or Lord Deputies which were sent to govern them: that he writ merrily to Rome, that he found all quiet in his Province: save that the Panthers (some of which, one of his Friends had prayed him to send to Rome, for the adorning of his triumph) were for fear of him fled into Pamphylia. At the first conquest by the Romans, it was divided only into Campistrem and Tracheam, as was said before; of which Campistria was reduced immediately to the form of a Province. Aspera or Trachea was a while continued under the Government of Kings, till the time of Vespasian, and then made a Province as the others. By the succeeding Emperours, on some reason of State (if not those intimated in Lycania) the number of Provinces being increased (though the bounds of the Empire were no larger than they had been formerly) the whole was divided into three: that is to say, Cilicia prima, taking up all Campistria wholly; Cilicia secunda, containing the Maritime parts of Cilicia Aspera; and Isauria, taking up the Mountainous part of this last division. Laid by the Emperor Constantine to the Dioecese of the Orients, and consequently subject in spiritual matters to the Patriarch of Antioch, where the Præfatus Prætorio Orientis had his usual residence. In the falling of the Eastern Empire, it was conquered by the Saracens in the time of Muhamedus or Muavi, the sixth Caliph. Continuing under their command till their declination, it was recovered by the Greek or Eastern Emperours, and from them conquered by the Turky in the course of their victories. But the first race of Turkish Kings being worn out by the Tartars, and the Aladinian Kings ending in Aladine the second, it was part of the new Kingdom of Caramanians, continuing theirs till the destruction of that line by Bajazet the second, Anno 1486, by whom incorporated with the rest of the Ottoman Empire.

Thus having made our progress over all the Provinces of the Lesser Asia, and shewn how every one of them was made subject to the Turkish Tyranny: we must next draw down the succession of such Turkish Kings as have reigned herein, till it was wholly conquered by the Princes of the house of Ottoman. Concerning which we are to know in the way of Preamble, that the Turky having made themselves Masters of the Kingdom of Persia, and following their successes into Syria also, fell to a breach amongst themselves. For making up whereof it was once defended unto by Asan, the then Persian Sultan, that Melech and Ducet, two of his discontented Kinmen, should be incoffed in the Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, and their several Territories with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Egypt, possessed at that time of most part of Syria, Cilicia, and some of the adjoining Provinces. It was also then agreed upon, that a third, but nearer Kinman, called Cutis Mefes, another of the Lords of the opposite faction; should have leave to conquer for himself, whatsoever he could win from the Christian Princes: And he accordingly being furnished with a competent Army, subdued the Provinces of Media and Armenia in the Greater Asia, with Cappadocia, Pamphylia, and Bithynia in Asia Minor. Which, and the rest of their affairs, take here in the ensuing Catalogue of

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor of the Sultanian Family.

1075. 1. Cutis Mefes, Nephew to Tungulshir, the first Persian Sultan of the Turky, won Media, part of Armenia Major, Cappadocia, Isauria and Bithynia.
2. Solyman, Son of Cutis Mefes, lost a while dispossessed of most of his estates by the Western Christians, in their first passage towards the Holy Land; the Northern parts of which by those Christians were restored to the Christian Empire, never recovered afterwards by the Kings of this house.
3. Nahomet, the son of Solyman, recovered some part of his estates in the Lesser Asia; but ousted of them, and subdued by
4. Musaf, Sultan, or Lord Deputy of Isauria for the Kings of Damascus; and of the line Selzucian Family, who was thereby possessed of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia.
5. Cassiflan, the son of Musaf (to whom his Father left Iconium, with the adjacent Provinces) wrested Amasia, and Angora, his brother Jagupasan; Sebastia, and Celaria, from his brother Dodune: which with their several Territories were bequeathed unto them, by the will of their Father. He overthrew the Emperor Emanuel Comnenus, and united Phrygia to his Kingdom.
6. Reueratine, the third son of Cassiflan, having dispossessed his three brethren, Musaf, Cappadocia, of the estates left them by their Father, became sole Monarch of all the Turkish Provinces in the Lesser Asia. In the latter end of whose reign, the Tartarian Chom having driven the Turky out of Persia, many of them under the conduct of Aladine, a Prince of the same Selzucian Family, joyined themselves to their Countrymen here, with whose help they won Cilicia from the Grecian Emperours, who in the reign of Calo-Jhanus, (the Turky being then embroiled by the Western Christians) had not long before regained it and after the decease of Reueratine, advanced him to the whole estate.

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the race of Aladine.

7. Aladine, descended in a direct line from Cassiflan, the last Turkish Sultan in Persia, having with many of his Nation seated himself in Cilicia, first made Sebastia, one of the Cities thereof, his chief seat or residence: which after the death of Reueratine, he removed to Iconium, as the ancient Regal City of the former Kings.
8. Azalide, by some called Azadine, eldest son of Aladine, wasted the most part of his reign in wars with his brother Jahbatine, whom at last he forced into exile.
9. Jahbatine, on the death of his brother possessed the Kingdom, slain afterwards in single combat by Theodoros Lascaris, Emperor of the Greeks, at Nice.
10. Jahbatine II. Son of the former, driven out of his Kingdom by the Tartars, and died in exile: the Turky becoming Tributaries and Vassals unto the Tartarian.
11. Musaf, and Cei-cubades, of the same Selzucian Family (but whether the sons of the second Jahbatine, I am not able to say) substituted in his place; as Tributaries to the conquering Tartars.
12. Aladine II. Son of Cei-cubades, succeeded his Father in the Kingdom, but as Vassal and Liegeman to the Tartars. After whose death, leaving no issue of his body, the great Princes of his Family, divided amongst them his Dominions. To Saracban fell Æolia, Isauria, and part of Lydia, from him named Saracban, Saracban, or Saracha-III. to Aidin the rest of Lydia, Phrygia Major, and the greatest part of the Greater Mysia, from him called Aidin, or Aidin-III. to Carafus, the Lesser Phrygia, with the rest of Mysia, from him denominated Carafan, or Carafa-III. to the Family of the Isfendiars, the Cities of Heraclea, Sinope, and that part of Pontus which lie next to Bithynia. There were also lesser Toparchies or subdivisions, from whence we find a Prince of Smyrna, a second of Amasia, a third of Amisus, a fourth of Sandalar, besides many others. But the main body of the Estate was seized by Caraman, who for his share had the whole Provinces of Lycia, Lycania, Pisidia, Pamphylia, Isauria, Cilicia, with the Regal City of Iconium, the greatest part of Caria, (the rest of it appertaining to the Prince of Mentezia), with part of Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor, and some Towns in Phrygia, containing in his Family for as many descents (as either of the former had held before) in great power and lustre, under

The Turkish Kings in Asia Minor, of the house of Caraman.

13. Caraman, the first raiser of this Family, Contemporary with Ottoman the first King of that race.
14. Aladine, son of Caraman, and Son-in-law of Amurath, the first of the house of Ottoman, by whom subdued, but pardoned and restored unto his Estate, on the humble entreaties of his wife.

15. Aladine II. son of the former, subdued by Bajazet the first, and hanged by Tertumshir, one of Bajazet's great Commanders.
16. Mahomet, son of Aladine the second, recovered his Kingdom on the death of Bajazet, vanquished and led captive by the mighty Tamerlane. Afterwards warred upon and vanquished by Atahmet the son of Bajazet, deemed his peace, by yielding up unto him many of his principal Towns: and was finally slain at the siege of Attalia.
17. Ibrahim, the son of Mahomet, and son-in-law of Amurath the second, against whom unadvisedly raising War, he was forced to submit and become his Tributary: after whose death, rebelling against Mahomet the Great, he was then also vanquished, and a reconciliation made betwixt them.
18. Ibrahim II. by some called Piramus, the son of Ibrahim the first, supported Zemet, brother of Bajazet the second in his War against him for which Bajazet having settled his affairs, invaded and subdued the Kingdom of Caramania, killed the unfortunate King in battle, and so united that Estate unto the rest of the Dominions of the house of Ottoman. The strange success of which house, from the first rising of it to these present times, shall be deferred till we come unto Turcomania; from whence this Nation first attempted and achieved the conquest of Persia, and which only of all their large possessions doth retain any thing of their name. In the mean time we will survey the Islands of this Lesser Asia, and so proceed to their possessions in the Greater, as they lie before us.

19. The Province of the ASIAN ISLES.

The Province of the ASIAN ISLES comprehendeth all the Islands in Asia Minor, from the mouth of the Hellespont to the Rhodus, reckoning that for one: united first into a Province by the Emperor Vespasian, next reckoned as a part of the Asian Dioecese; and afterwards, together with the Province of the Hellespont, and that of Asia properly and specially so called, making up the peculiar or exempt jurisdiction of the Proconsul of Asia. Those of most consideration are, 1. Tenedos, 2. Lesbos, 3. Chios, 4. Samos, 5. Cos, 6. Karia, 7. Pattara, 8. Clazomenae, 9. Rhodes. Others of less note, having nothing memorable but their names, are scarce worth the naming.

1. TENEDOS, is situate at the mouth of the Hellespont, over against the noted Promontory called of old Sigeum (but now Cape Tanizarie) a Promontory of Troas, or the Lesser Phrygia, from which distant not above five miles. The Isle it self in circuit no more than ten swelling, with a round Mountain towards the North, in other parts level: both producing as good Wines as the best of Greece. It took name, as the general Tradition was, from Tenes the son of Cyrenus, King of a little City in the Lesser Phrygia, who being falsely accused by his Stepdame for soliciting her to that incestuous mixture which she had violently importuned, and he as piously refused, was by the command of his Father put into a chest, expedit to the mercy of the Sea, and here miraculously preserved. Here for a time he is said to reign, with great commendation for his justice; and afterwards going to the aid of the Trojans, to have been slain by the hand of Achilles: of whom therefore it was not lawful to make gave over the Siege. At last they became subject to the Romans with the rest of Greece, and followed punctually the same change of fortunes, as did those of Lesbos, which we have spoken of before: till given by Andronicus Paleologus, one of the last Greek Emperours, to the Justinians, a noble Græciæ Family, affiant to him in his wars. Under them it continued as Tributaries to the Turks (after the Turks had made themselves Masters of Constantinople) to whom they annually paid eighteen thousand Ducats, till the year 1566. When Solyman the Magnificent picking a quarrel with them for some suspected correspondence with the Knights of Malta, commanded Pial, one of his greatest Bells, to seize the Island. And he accordingly presenting himself before the City, with a strong Fleet of eighty Gallies, did so astonish and amaze the Inhabitants of it, that without any other summons than the sight of his Navy, they surrendered themselves unto his disposing, upon Easter-day being the first day he came before it. Since that time it hath continued Turkish, save their Religion, enjoyed by them with like liberty, as in former times.

4 SAMOS, is on the South-east of Chios, distant above five miles from the shores of Asia, about eighty, or eighty seven in compass, environed for the most part, especially on the North-west, with inaccessible rocks, but beautified with a fair and capacious Haven; of little use by reason of Pirates which infested those Seas. The soil sufficiently enriched with most kind of fruits, abundantly plentiful of Oyl and Olives, but of Vines altogether untimured; which is the more to be admired in regard all the Islands and shores about it, produce them in so great a plenty. It stretcheth from the East to the West: and on the South part of it stood the City of Samia, near unto the Haven before spoken of. In former times populous, and well inhabited, as was the rest of the Island, now wholly desolate in a manner, because of the Pirates, and in most places very much over-grown with woods: becoming thereby very useful to those public enemies, who find here Timber enough for Shipping, and can upon the sudden put a ship to Sea, for pursuit of their Robberies. The chief commodity it affordeth besides those above, is a medicinal Earth, useful for Chirurgery and Physick: of which in former times were those Vessels made, called Vasa Samia, in great request amongst the Romans.

Anciently it had the names of Dryusa, Anabemusa, Melampylus, and Cyparissia: outworn by that of Samos, which it still retaineth. Memorable in old times for the birth of Juno, of one of the Sibyls, hence called Samia; and finally of the wife-man Pythagoras (a philosopher than any of the seven wise Masters so renowned amongst them) who first brought Philosophy into Greece, and from thence into Italy. Once a free Commonwealth of no small esteem, the Inhabitants whereof are mentioned by Heraclides, in his Books of the several Commonwealths then being afterwards made subject to the Tyrant Polycrates, a man so fortunate, that for a long time he never fell into any mischance. Fearing lest such a long calm would bring on a tempest, he let fall into the Sea a most precious Ring, by him deservedly esteemed, that so it might be said he had some misfortunes. Which after he had found again in the belly of a fish, brought accidentally to his Table, he was overcome by Orantes a Persian, and brought to a miserable death. Leaving a notable example, that fortune is certain in nothing but uncertainties; and like a Bee with a sharp sting, hath always some misery following in the train of a long concatenation of felicity. From this time forwards it ran the same fortune with the rest of these Islands, subject successively to the great Monarchies in former times, as of late times to the Venetians, Greeks, and Turks, who do now enjoy it.

5 ICARIA, (now called Nicaria) lyeth not far from Samos, to the West-ward of it, narrow, but extended out in length; the whole compass seven and thirty miles: neighboured by two great Rocks, or little Islands of old called Melanibis, now the Fernaces: formidable at all times to Mariners, in the night especially. Meantime inhabited at the present, though abounding in passages, and yielding sufficiency of corn; Havenless, and therefore less frequented, yet that defect supplied by commodious Roads. In former times called Dolichis, then Macris, after Ischisla: which name it held till the flight of Dædalus out of Crete, who justly fearing the anger of Minos, for being Pandor to his wife, in her loves with Taurus, secretly with Icarus his son, fled out of that Island. And because he would be sure to out-strip the Romers who pursued him, he added fails unto his Boat, which it is said he first invented. But Icarus, coming after in another Bark, delighted with the new device, clapped on too much Canvas, and bearing too great a sail, was here cast away. Hence the new name both to this Island, and the Seas adjoining to it, and the occasion of the Fable of Dædalus putting wings upon his shoulders, when he fled from Crete; and of his flying too high, whereby the wax melted which his wings were fastened with, and so he perished in the water. Of which thus Ovid.

In English thus,

Whilst Icarus weak wings too high did four
He fell, and gave name to the Icarian shores.

6 PATMOS, now called Palmatza, is situate on the South of the other two; a little Island, not above 30 miles in compass. Mountainous, but indifferently fruitful, especially of wheat and pulse; of other commodities, and fruits, not so well provided. On one of these Mountains stands a Town of the same name with the Island; having on the top thereof a Monastery of Greek Caloites; and on the bottom a fair Haven (I mean in reference to the Island.) Forty fails of Ships are said to long unto it; by the trading whereof they bring in those provisions which the soil affordeth not: the soil about the Town being so incomparably barren, that nothing groweth on or near it, but on such earth as is brought thither from other places. Unto this Island (as to others in other parts of the world) did the Roman Emperours use to confine offenders. A punishment laid by Domitian on St. John the Divine, who in this place writ his Revelation to the Churches of Asia. So much the Text affirms for certain, as to the writing of it in this Island. And the Inhabitants by tradition point unto an house on the North-side of the Town, in which it was written, and not far off the Cave where it was revealed. Both places equally honoured by the Greeks and Latines. They also shew a dead mans hand, which they ascribe to be his, the nails whereof grow again as they cut. But the Arabians (saith Maginus) claim it for the hand of one of their Prophets. Let them dispute the controversy, whilst we halt to

7 CLAROS, another Island not far off, containing about 40 miles in compass. Well stored with commodious Harbours, but very mountainous, some of the hills of such an height, that from the tops thereof, the City of Ephesus in Asia, (though distant at least eighty miles) may be easily seen. It is now called Calano. Neighbouring by Lero (of old called Ileron) a little Island not above eighteen miles in circuit, but very populous, inhabited both by Greeks and Turks, and furnishing the neighbouring Countries

Countries with some store of Alices. Sacred in former times was Claros to Apollon, reckoned by him amongst his honours, in his brags to Daphne: where he declares,

Mhi Delphica relas,

Et Claros, & Tenedos, Pataraque Regia servit.
Tharisto to lay,

The folk of Delphos, Tenedos, and Clare,

And Royal Patara, my Vassals are.

8 COOS, COS, or COUS, for by all these names it was called of old, is situate over against Caria, in the very bottom of the Ægean, that is to say, in that part thereof which is called Mare Myrionum, the Myrian Sea. A Sea so called, as some say, from one Myrtilus, Coachman or Charioteer of Oenomaus, who having betrayed his race with Pelops, and importunate for his reward, was by Pelops precipitated into this Sea. Pliny less probably conceiveth that it took name from Myrtus, a little Island not far from Eubœa, a little too far off to extend its name to the shores of Caria. And therefore considering that Lydia anciently was called Myrtus, and that in those times Æolia and Ionis, lying on this Sea, were accompanied but as parts thereof, I think we may resolve with more probability, that it derived this name from that Lydian Myrtus.

In this Sea stands the Isle of Cous, now called Lange, affording Saylor as they pass by a most beautiful prospect, lying for the most part flat and level, but swelling towards the East with some graceful Mountains, out of which issue many sweet and pleasant springs to refresh the Island which maketh it more than ordinary fruitful. Productive of Cypress trees, Turpentine, and sundry others, both delightful and medicinal; but most especially celebrated for those rich wines, which the Good fellows of Rome so much loved to quaff, called Vinum Cos. It is in compass 70 miles, having a Town of the same name, in the suburbs whereof stood anciently the Temple of Asclepius, famous and rich with the offerings of those, who having by his assistance (as they supposed) recovered health, came hither to make payment of their vows, and express their gratitude. It is now fortified with a strong Castle, held by a Garrison of Turks: and besides this two Villages only in the Island, and both inhabited by Greeks.

In elder times it had the name of Mevepe, Caria, and Nymphaea, and at last Cos. Memorable in being the Country of many famous men who were here born; viz. of Hippocrates, the Reviver of Physick, then almost decayed, who is hence called Hippocrates Cos. 2 Sinias, a Physician also. 3 Aviston, a Peripatetic Philosopher. 4 Pileatus, as good an Orator, as a Poet. 5 Nictas, who for a time oppressed the liberty of this people. And 6 of Apelles, the famous Painter; who to express his Art in the Picture of Venus, (sitting naked out of the Sea) assembled together all the most beautiful women of this Island, uniting in that piece their divided perfections. Which famous piece being afterwards hanged up in the Temple of Stomalime, one of the principal of this Island, was thence conveyed to Rome by Augustus, and there dedicated to Cæsar, as the mother of the Julian family: the Gæns in regard hereof, being caled of a great part of their annual tributes. Not much less memorable for that fine thin stuff (such as now called Tissanis) so much in use amongst the chief Ladies of Rome: which at once they then clothed and naked. Periclitus astutus visit, ita, ut munda conspici p'sint, as my Author hath it. These they called Vestimenta Cos, and Vestes Cos, so often mentioned by the Poets, especially in their Amatoria; as Cæcia Pællis in Tibullus; Indue me Cos in Propertius; Sive eris Cos, saith the Poet Ovid. So in others also; too many, and too long to be added here. I pass to 9 CARPATHOS, situate on the South of Caria, in the Mediterranean, from this Island, called hereabouts the Carpathian Sea. A rugged and unpleasant foil, full of difficult Mountains, but those Mountains stored with quarries of most excellent Marble. In circuit about 60 miles, extending more in length than breadth. Heretofore beautified with four Cities, and thence named Te-trapolis. But three of the four Cities are long since perished, that of Carpathos being still remaining, and still the principal of the Island; both now called Scarpanto. Some other Towns it hath all along the shore, and every one of them furnished with some Port or Haven; but small, and for the most part very unsafe. Situate in the middle as it were betwixt Crete and Rhodes. It hath continued hitherto in the possession of the State of Venice (if not taken from them very lately); to whom being given with one of the Islands of these Græciæ Seas, at the taking of Constantinople by the Western forces, it had the fortune or felicity to continue theirs, when almost all the residue were subdued by the Turks. The people Greek, of the communion of that Church, notwithstanding their subjection to a state of Italy.

10 RHODES, situate in the Rhodian or Carpathian Sea, lyeth over-against the coast of Lydia in Asia Minor, from which distant about 20 miles. Formerly called Ophiasia, Alteria, Eubœa, Trinacria, Pæssa, Corymbia, Atalyria, and at last Mactaria, it settled finally and fortunately in the name of Rhodes. So named by the Greeks from the abundance of Roses, which the soil produced. Rhodes in that language signifying a Rose, the Isle of Roses, as it were: but as the Poets say of Rhoda, a Nymph of these Seas, here deflowered by Apollon, or rather of Rhoda, one of the daughters of Apollon begot on Venus. For one of them thus declareth;

Insula Dida Rhododæ Sole & Cypride nata est.

Rhoda, from whom this Isle took name.
Of Venus and Apollon came.

The Island 140 miles in compass, enriched with a most temperate air, and a fertile soil, producing fruits in very great plenty, full of excellent pastures, adorned with trees which always do continue green; and in a word, so blest with the gifts of nature, that it gave occasion to the Fable of those Golden Showers, which were once said to have fallen upon it. The wines hereof so excellent, and so rich of taste, that by the Romans they were used in their second courses, or reserved for the sacrifices of the Gods, as too good for mortals, as affirmed by Virgil in the Georgicks. The cause of which perpetual flourishing, and continual spring, is to be ascribed to the powerful influences of the Sun, so dearly cherishing this Island, or so much in love with it, that it is constantly affirmed, that no day passeth wherein he shinneth not clearly on it, be the air in all other places never so much over-cast with clouds, or obscured by mists. Feigned for that cause to have been naturally a meer Maris, altogether inhabitable, if not covered with waters; till loved by Phæbus, and erected above the waves by his vigorous influences.

Of the People we shall speak anon. Look we in the mean time on the places of most observation. 1 Lindus, (now Lindo) a petty town but formerly of more esteem; of note in those times for the Temple consecrated to Minerva, by Danaus King of Ægypt, landing here when he fled out of that Kingdom. As also for the birth of Chares, the Architect of the huge Colossus, whereof more presently; but specially for the nativity of Cleobulus, one of the seven wise-men of Greece: the other six being Solon of Athens, Periander of Corinth, Chilon of Sparta, Bias of Priene, Thales of Miletum, and Pittacus of Mitylene. Seven men of whom the Greeks most immenely bragged, as if the World could neither afford them equals, or an equal number: for which decided handily by Ladantius, an old Christian Writer, who coasts their paucity, and calteth it a miserable and calamitous age, In quo septem soli fuerunt qui hominum vocabula mererentur; in which there were more than seven who deserved to be accounted men. 2. Rhodes, anciently, as now the chief City of it, the Island from hence taking name, and formerly, as well as in latter times, depending on the fortunes and strength hereof. No place in elder times held superior to it, for the convenience of the Haven, magnificent buildings, delightful Orchards, and other excellencies. Situate on the East part of the Isle, on the declining of an hill, and near the Sea, where it enjoyeth a safe and common Haven: treble walled, fortified with thirteen Turrets, and five strong Bulwarks, besides divers Scones, and other out-works; this Town, and Famagusta in the Isle of Cyprus, being conceived to be the two strongest holds in the Turkish Empire. In former times, one of the principal Universities of the Roman Empire, this Rhodes, Marfilius, Tarsus, Athens, and Alexandria, being reckoned the old Academies of that Monarchy. And to this Town, as a most noted place of Study, Tiberius (afterwards Emperor) did withdraw himself, when Augustus had declared his two Nephews Lucius and Caius, for his Heirs: pretending only a desire to improve himself in the ways of Literature; whereas the true cause was his envy at their pre-eminence. Honour'd in those times with that huge Colossus, one of the seven Wonders of the World, made by Chares of Lindus, before mentioned. Composed of Brass, in height seventy Cubits, every finger of it being as great as an ordinary man; and consecrated to the Sun, as the proper Deity of the Island. Twelve years in making, and having stood but 66 years was pulled down in an instant by an Earthquake, which terribly shook the whole Island. The Rhodian being forbid by an Oracle to erect it again (or possibly pretending such an Oracle to give that charge) yet held the brass and other materials off (in a manner) sacred. Not meddled with, nor scirefully purloined till Mnasius, the General of Ojman, the Mohometan Caliph, finding in himself no such scruple of conscience, (after he had subdued this Island) made a prey hereof, loading nine hundred Camels with the very brass of it. From this Colossus was the Island sometimes called Colossia, and the people Colossians: not those Colossians (as some have very vainly thought) to whom St. Paul writ his Epistle, those being of Colosse, a Town of the Greater Phrygia, as hath been no ed. Here was also in this City anciently a Temple of Bacchus, enriched with many presents both of Greeks and Romans, of both which People the Rhodian were then held in a fair esteem; but the God and the good Wine in greater Towns of less note, are 3. Vilanova, 4. Rassicare, and sometimes others, but as little memorable.

This Island was first peopled by Dadantius the son of Javan, and the Grand-child of Japhet, whom the Greeks call commonly, but corruptly, Rhodian; mistaking the Hebrew Letter Daleth for that of Reph, letters so like as easily it might draw them to that mistake. Finding this Island too narrow for him, he left here a Colony, and with the main of his people passed into Greece; where he planted the Country of Epirus, as hath there been said. Those which staid here being mistakenly called Rhodian (or called so by the Greeks, not looking with too curious eyes into their Antiquities, from the abundance of Rhodes here growing) making the best use of their Haven, and other the advantages of their situation, became so expert in maritime affairs, that by Flours they are styled Populus nauticus, and that not only in the way of Trade and Merchandize, but of power and government: holding for many years the command of these Seas, and prescribing Laws for the Reiglement of Navigation. Which being called the Rhodian Laws, became the general Rule for deciding marine causes, and ordering the affairs of Sea, in all the parts and Provinces of the Roman Empire: and so continued till supplanted in these Western parts by the Laws of Oleron. Fearful of falling under the Macedonians, they applied themselves unto the Romans, whom first they aided in their wars against Philip, the Father of Perseus; and afterwards in that also against Antiochus. Rewarded for this last service with Lycia and Caria, two of the Asian Provinces, which Antiochus was to leave on his composition; they became so faithfully affected to the State of Rome, that when all the other Islands of the Mediterranean and Egean Seas revolted to Mithridates King of Pontus, this only adhered unto the Romans. Proud either of their strength at Sea, or of those good offices, they began to take upon them as Mediators, and thought themselves fit men to advise their Masters. Grown troublesome by their frequent interpositions, and losing much of their esteem by such impertinencies, they began to grow jealous of the Roman, and incline to Perseus King of Macedon: whose Father they before opposed with their utmost power. A change which Paterculus expressed with some admiration. Rhodium ipsi fidelissimi antea Romanis, dubia iam sui promissum in Regis partes visum sunt, as his words there are. But yet they held for them against Mithridates, before was said, and served their turn on all occasions, until insensibly they betrayed their liberty to the power of their friends and of Confederates and Allies, became their Vassals. Made by Vespasian into a Province with three of the Isles, the Governour or President of that Province fixing here his residence, as the chief of those Islands; which gave the title of Metropolitan to the Bishop of Rhodes. Under that Empire it continued (or under that of Constantinople after the division) till the year 1124: when taken from the Greeks by the State of Traite; again recovered by the Greeks, in the time of their Emperor John Ducas, then residing at Nice. Won from the Greeks by the Turks, the Knights of St. John of Hierusalem, being utterly driven out of Asia, possessed themselves of it, by the favour of Emmanuel the then Emperor, who aided them in the conquest, Anno 1508. Rhodes proving bad neighbours to the Turkish Tyrants, whom they ceased not to insult upon all occasions, they were many times in vain invaded; Mohomet the Great, famous for taking Constantinople, and the Empire of Trebizond, spending some time before their City, with both loss and flame. At the last Anno 1522, it was again besieged by Solyman the Magnificent, Liladimus Viktor being then great Master, who did as much in defence hereof as policy and puissance could extend unto. But multitude in the end prevailed, and upon Christine day, the Turk entered Rhodes as Conquerors; though possibly he might have fled as Pyrrhus once said (of his Victory against the Romans): that such another Victory would have quite undone him. Since that a Province of the Turks, by whom, and by some Jews banished out of Spain, the City of Rhodes is wholly inhabited: the Christians which are licenced to dwell in the Country, and have leave to trade there in the day time, not suffered upon pain of death to stay there all night. And we pass from the Islands of the Asian Diocesis, to the Isle of Cyprus, a near neighbour unto Anatolia, but no member of it: the rest of that Diocesis, and those Seas, is 11. Paphlagonia, 12. Arctonia, 13. Buglaia, 14. Mynia, 15. Sirina, 16. Cypris, and the rest, yielding but little matter of observation besides their names.

OF C Y P R U S.

CYPRUS is situate in the Syrian and Cilician Seas, extended in length from East to West two hundred miles, in breadth sixty; the whole compass reckoned five hundred and fifty. Distant about sixty miles from the rocky Shores of Cilicia in Asia Minor, and about an hundred from the main Land of Syria; towards which it shooteth it self out with a long sharp Promontory, extending heretofore to the main Land, from which rent in former time by a violent Earthquake, as is said by Pliny, and worn into this narrowness by the continual working of the Sea upon it.

No place hath often changed his name, or at least had more names on the By than this. Called at first Cetibus, or Cethibus, from Ketim the son of Javan, who first planted it. 2. Cersifin, from the abundance of Promontories, thrusting like Horns into the Sea, (as the word importeth in the Greek); 3. Amastusia. 4. Paphia. 5. Salaminia: These three hail from the principal Towns in those parts heretofore. 6. Macaria, from the fruitfulness and felicity of it. Besides these, it hath in some times had these By-names also: as, 7. Asperia, from the roughness of the Soil. 8. Colonia, from the frequency of Hills and Mountains. 9. Ardea, from the Mines of Brass, which abound therein. 10. And finally, all those forgotten and laid by, it settled at last in the name of Cyprus. So called, say some, from the abundance of Cypress Trees, with which most plentifully provided; as others, from Cyprius a Greek word, signifying Concealment, because sometimes concealed by the Surges from the eye of Sailors; but most improbably said by others to take name from Cyprus, who founded here the City of Apreadia; whereas indeed six hundred years before Cyprus his Birth, we find it by this name in Homere. More rightly Stephanus, who deriveth it, and Kypria the Myth's Kypria, from Cyprus daughter of Cinyras, one of the Kings hereof, living before the Trojan Wars: though many mind the first comes nearest to the truth, the Cypris Tree not only growing here in so great abundance, but being anciently peculiar in a manner to this Island only.

But on what ground forever it was called Cyprus, certain I am it had the name of Cersifin upon very good reason: the Island or Region that I know of (for the big words of it) thrusting out so many sharp Promontories. For on the West there is, 1. The Promontory called Acamas, now Capo S. Pifano. 2. Drepanum, now Trepana and Melechia. 3. Zephyrium, or Caput Calidani, now Punta Malata. On the South, 4. Phurium, now Capo Basso. 5. Carrion, or Capo della Cattri. 6. Gades, or Capo Chiti. 7. Throni, or Capo Pile. On the East, 8. Pendulum, now Capo di Griego. 9. Clides, now Capo S. Andea. And on the North, 10. Coronyon, now Capo Corniche, besides some others of less note. Some of the Poets give another reason of this name, as that Venus of olden times with the People of Amastus for sacrificing their Guests, should turn them into burned Cattle, Unde etiam nomen traxere Cersifin, as it is in Ovid, but that merely fabulous; somewhat of kin unto the Legend of Thomas Becket, and the Kenfig-Lang-tail. Yet so far we may join with Ovid, that the Island was not only called Cersifin, but that the People were also called Cersifin, of which there wants not proof from some other Authors; with which we need not trouble our selves, that name being altogether worn out of use, and no other but that of Cyprus given it in common Speech. Nor is it a matter of more strangeness, that Cyprus should be called by the Greeks, from its abundance of Cypress Trees; anciently and originally peculiar to this Island, as before was noted: that the same Greeks should give unto the neighbouring Island the name of Rhodes, from its great plenty of Roses; or to the neighbouring Continent the name of Phoenicia, from its great plenty of Palm-trees; the word so signifying in that Language.

It is situate under the fourth Climate, so that the longest day in Summer is no more than fourteen hours and a half; and for that cause the Air in Summer time exceeding hot and foully: The Soil moistened with some few Brooks, meriting rather the name of Torrents than Rivers, which being generated for the most part by rain-water, are not seldom dried up by the heat of the Sun; inasmuch that in the Reign of Constantine the Great, this Island was for 36 years together almost utterly forsaken, no rain falling all that time. These inconveniences notwithstanding, it is stored with such plenty of all things, that without the help of any Foreign Nation, it is of it self able to build and rig a tall Ship from the Keel to the Top-sail, and to put it to Sea furnished with all things needful for a Voyage, or a Sea-fight. It also aboundeth in Wine, Oyl, Corn, Sugar, Cotton, Honey, Wool, Turpentine, and Allom, Verdegreece, all sorts of Metals, store of Salt, Grograins, and other Commodities, whereupon this Island was once called Macaria (i.e. Happy). By reason of which wonderful affluence of all necessaries, and that variety of Pleasures (even to sensuality) which the place afforded, it was anciently consecrated unto Venus, who is hence called Venus Cyprina, and Dea Cypr: Sic et diva potens Cypr in Horace; and in Ovid,

Venerat: ipsa suis aderat Venus aenea fissis.
Venus Feels hallowed through all Cyprus came,
And Venus with her presence grac'd the fane.
The People hereof are war-like, strong, and nimble; of great civility and hospitality to their Neighbours, and love to Strangers of all Nations, Jews only excepted. For in the Empire of Trajan, the Jews inhabiting Egypt and the adjoining Countries, drew themselves together, and chose one Alexander for their Captain; under whose conduct they entered into this Island, and laid it desolate, killing in it 240000 Persons of all Sexes and Ages; not without much blood shed vanquished and slain by Lucius the Emperours Lieutenant. Since which time the Cypriots permit no Jew to enter into the Island; but come he hither voluntarily, or by force of Tempests, they lay hands on him, and lead him presently to Execution. A hated Nation, that neither innocence can protect, or equity relieve from that cruel custom.

The Women in former times much noted for their Unchastity, to which their worshipping of Venus was no small incentive; it being the custom of these Women to prostitute themselves on the Shores, to the passers by: their very Virgins not refusing to be handfelled there, before their Marriage; either to raise their Portions by the sale of their Bodies, or else to please their Goddels with such beastly sacrifices. And if Volaterranus may be credited (as I think he may) the Ladies which attended on Queen Carthage, when she came to Rome, to seek for aid against James the Bastard, who had dispossessed her of this Kingdom, shewed themselves little chaster than those ancient Cypriots. Somewhat more fortunate in the Men; Aeschylades, the Author of the Verse so named; 2 Xenophon, an old Poet; 3 Zeno; and 4 Apollonius, the Philosopher; 5 Epiphanius, the learned Bishop of Salamis; and 6 above all, Saint Barnabas, the dear Associate of Saint Paul, being all Natives of this Country.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by Saint Paul and Barnabas, as the very first fruits of their Apostleship, after they had been separated to the Work of the Ministry by the Impulsion of hands, as appeareth Acts 13, &c. The Church hereof, by reason of the Antiquity of it, and the honour of this joint Foundation, so privileged in the best Ages of Christianity, that the Archbishop of this Island had all Prerogatives of a Primate, consecrated by his own Suffragan Bishops and acting in all Sacred and Ecclesiastical Affairs, without dependance on, or relation to the See of Antioch, whereunto all other Bishops in the Eastern Dioecese were either subordinate or subject. Which Privilege being questioned in the Council of Ephesus, was by the Fathers there assembled, on a full hearing of the Cause, approved and ratified; confirmed by the Civil Sanction of the Emperor Justinian, whose Wife was a Native of this Island; and by the name of Jus Cyprium, the Privilege or Exemption of the Cyprian Church, transmitted to the Prelates of succeeding times. Which notwithstanding, they continued in good correspondence with the Eastern Churches of the Greek Communion, and officiated all Divine Acts after the Rites and Forms thereof, till the Venetians became Lords of it, who brought in the Latin Service into some of their Churches, and appointed Bishops and other Ministers of the Papal party, for execution of the same. And for the Government of these Churches, they had at first fourteen Bishops and Archbishops, to gratify Queen Alice, (who had a mind to enrich her friends with some of the Spoils of them) reduced by Innocent the third to four only, that is to say, the Archbishop of Nicosia, the Bishops of Famagusta, Paphos, and Amathus; but each See furnished with two Prelates, the one for the Greeks, the other for the Latins: of which the Bishops for the Latins have all the Lands, and Annual Revenues, which of right belong to those Cathedrals; the Greek Bishops living upon Stipends levied on the Priests and Deacons of their Jurisdiction.

Rivers, as formerly was said, here are very few; and of those few, the principal are called Lycus and Lapithus; the first running towards the South, the last towards the North; both not seldom so dried up, that they leave their empty Channels without any water. Both also have their Source from the Hill Olympus (the highest Mountain of the Island) garnished with Trees and Fruits of all sorts; in compass about eighteen Leagues (which make four and fifty Italian miles) and at the end of every League a Monastery of Greek Monks, or Calabres, and a Fountain of fresh water for the use of the House. Here are also two other little Rivers, the one called 3 Bodrus, the other 4 Tolus; but of the late nature as the former.

By Polomy, or in his time, divided into four parts or Provinces; but since it fell into the hands of the Lugian Family, distributed into twelve Counties or Cantredes; most of them called by the names of their principal Towns: viz. 1 Nicosia. 2 Famagusta. 3 Paphos. 4 Andania. 5 Limissa. 6 Maforum. 7 Salinis. 8 Messoria. 9 Crispocum. 10 Pentasia. 11 Carpathia. 12 Cerines. The whole containing, besides these Cities and great Towns, 805 Villages or thereabouts, which they called Casales, whereof the one half anciently belonged unto the Crown, the other half divided betwixt the Lay Nobility, and the Ecclesiastick; the Patrimony of these last being computed at 80000 Crowns of Annual Rents, besides Casualties, and the Vails of the Altar. But because the tracing out of these Cantredes will be very difficult (as a way which none have gone before me) I will adhere to the division made hereof in the time of Polomy, into the Provinces of 1 Paphia, 2 Amathia, 3 Lapethia, and 4 Salamine.

1 PAPHIA is called of Paphos the chief Town thereof, taken up the West part of the Island; in which the Towns of most importance and observation are, 1 Paphos, on the Sea-side, by Pliny called Talepaphos, or old Paphos, built, as some say, by Cynus, the Father of Myrrha, and so named in memory of Paphos his Father; but, as others say, by Paphos, the son of Pygmalion, King of Phoenicia and Cyprus: to which last Ovid doth agree, who speaking of Pygmalion's Statue, turned into a Woman by the power of Venus (or rather of his beautiful Wife, fabled, for the surpassing whiteness of her skin, to be made of Ivory) heads this of her,

She Paphos bare, from whom the name.

Of Paphia to the Island came.

Here Venus had her so much celebrated Temple; hence the name of Paphia; and here her Votaries of both Sexes in their natural nakedness, did perform her Sacrifices. Both Town and Temple ruined by a fearful Earthquake; or as the Legends have it, by the prayers of St. Barnabas; the ruins of it fill remaining. 2 Paphos Nova, or New Paphos, now called Baffo, five miles from the old, built by Agapenor, one of the Nephews of Lycurgus the Spartan Law-giver, after the Sack of Troy forced hither by a violent Tempest; consecrate to the same impure Goddels, and much frequented, but without injury to the other; those which here offered not thinking they had done her sufficient service, unless they went in a solemn manner of Procession, and paid their Vows also at the other. 3 Asione, situate betwixt both; built by, or called so in honour of Asione, daughter of Polomy the first King of Ægypt, and Lord of Cyprus, of that House. 4 Trepiano, a daughter of Trepiano, under the Promontory so named, a well-traded Port, but miserably decayed by the Turks, when they took this Island. 5 Conelia, one of the richest of the Island, by reason of the plenty of Sugar and Cotton-wool, growing thereabout. Built in the place of 6 Cubera, dedicated to Venus also, but differing from the Island of that name in the Ægean Sea, rather in pronoun.

pronunciation than the purity of her oblations; the last syllable save one, in the name of that Island, being short in verse, but this of Cyprus sounding long, as in this of Vergil.

Æt Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphos, atque Cithera.
Cithera, Amathus divine,
And lofty Paphos are all mine.

2 On the South-East of Paphia lieth the Province or District of MATHYSIA, taking up the South-parts of the Island which look towards Ægypt. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Amathus, giving name unto this division, then of most note, and much frequented for the annual sacrifices made unto Adonis the darling of Venus, who had here another of her Temples; the ruins of both hardly now discerned. Built, as some say, by Amasis, King of Ægypt, when he conquered this Island; but as others say by some of the Anatibites, defended from Anah one of the sons of Canaan. 2 Cetinus, or Cittium, (for it is so called by both names) the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, hence called Stoickos, or Cittensis; and memorable for the death of Simon the Athenian General. A Town wherein the memory of Cittium, the son of Javan, is most anciently preserved. 3 Episcopia, one of the chief of all the Island, built on the place, or out of the decay of 4 Curus, not far from the Promontory of the same name, founded by the Argives, where Apollis had both a Grove and a Temple, by the name of Apollis Hyalensis Altars in those times held so sacred, that whosoever presumed to touch them, was thrown into the Sea from the Promontory or rocks adjoining. 5 Salines, or Salina, so called from the rich Saltpit; one of the chief Towns of this part, and giving name to one of those twelve Cantredes, into which the whole is now divided.

3 LAPETHIA, the third part of the Island, lieth on the North thereof, opposite to Cilicia in Asia Minor. Places of most importance in it, 1 Nicosia, the Regal City of the Kings, the See of the Archbishop, and the chief of the Island: anciently called Ledronis, and Lentainis; but those names long ago laid by. Situate in the midst of the Isle, and in a plain and champaign Country abundantly fruitful and delightful. Environed with a fair wall, so exactly round as if it had been drawn with a pair of Compasses in circuit about five miles, and both for situation, numbers of people, and magnificent buildings of all sorts both publick and private, compared by some to the most beautiful City of Florence. Fortified by the Venitians, when in their possession, with new walls, deep ditches, and eleven high Bulwarks, with three great Out-works, all of them built according to the Art of modern Fortification. But notwithstanding all these works, and the help of 250 pieces of Cannon planted on the walls, and about the City, it was by the Turks taken at the second or third assault, Sept. 9. Anno 1570. So evident a truth it is, that Fortifications are more strengthened by the gallantry and courage of the Defendants, than the Defendants are by their Fortifications. 2 Cerines, situate near the Sea, strong by Art and Nature, and furnished with all things necessary to endure a Siege; but yielded to the Turks by Alphonso Palacius the unwearied Governor, terrified with the great slaughter made at the sack of Nicosia before the Enemy came near it. At first called Gennania, and said to have been built by Cyrus the great Persian King, when he first subdued the nine Kings hereof, and united the Island to that Crown; built with a more temperate and wholesome air, than any other in the Country. 3 Tremuris, the birth-place of Spiridon, a Bishop of the Primitive times, renowned for miracles; many of which reported by Sozomen, lib. 1. chap. 10, and other Ecclesiastical Writers. Wholly decayed, the ruins of it much contributing to the rise of Nicosia. 4 Lapithus (by Pliny called Lapeto) on the banks of a small Rivert of that name, of so great note in former times, that it gave to this Division the name of Lapethia, in that part standeth the hill Olympus; (now the Mountain of the holy Cross) described before.

4 SALAMINE, the fourth and last Province of this Island, taken up the whole East-parts hereof: So named from 1 Salamin, once the chief City of the Isle, and the See of the Primate, or Metropolitan hereof in the Primitive times. Destroyed by the Jews in the reign of Trojan, and re-built again; but being after that taken, sacked, and razed unto the ground by the Saracens, in the time of Heracles, it never could again recover: the Metropolitan See after that subversion, being removed to Nicosia. It was sometimes, and by some Writers, called Constantia also, but that name could give it no more perpetuity than the other of Salamin. Memorable whilst it stood for the founder of it, being Tenex, the son of Telamon King of Salamin, an Isle of the Ægean Sea; banished his Country by his Father, and settled in this Island by the power of Belus, King of Phoenicia: as also for a famous Temple sacred unto Jupiter, hence called Salaminus. Out of the ruins hereof arose, 2 Famagusta, now the prime City of these parts; built as is said by Ciciliæ, the Father of St. Catharine; but that uncertain. Situate at the East end of the Island, in a plain and low ground betwixt two Promontories, the one called the Cape of St. Andrem, and the other Cape di Griego, or the head of Græcia. In compass not above two miles, in form four-square, but that the side towards the East stretcheth out more in length than the other three. On two parts beaten on with the Sea, the other parts towards the Land defended with a Ditch not above fifteen foot in breadth, an old stone wall, and certain Bulwarks. The Haven (opposite to Trispolis, a Town of Syria) penteth towards the South-east, defended from the injury of the Sea by two great Rocks, betwixt which the Sea cometh in at a narrow passage not above forty paces broad, but after opening wide and wide maketh a convenient Harbour, rather safe than large, assured both by the difficult entrance, and a chain crossed over it. The whole Town, when the Turks appeared before it, but meanly fortified; the works of it of the old fashion, generally decayed except one Bulwark, which was by according to the modern Arts of Fortification, with Palisades, Curtains, Cafemates, and all other Additions: most gallantly defended by Brigadine the noble General; to the wonder and envy of the Turks, who spent no less than 118000 great shot upon it and at last yielded upon honourable terms, had they been as punctually performed. 3 Abrodisium, so named of Venus, whom the Greeks called Abrodite, who had here another of her Temples. 4 Asione, built also by one of the Asiones Queens of Ægypt, there being two of these of this name, and the same foundation, now called Lefcare, and anciently renowned for the Groves of Jupiter. 5 Tamassus, of good note in the time of Strabo for rich mines of Brals, as afterwards for abundance of Verdegreece and Vitruol found plentifully in the fields adjoining. 6 Idalium, near a Mount of the same name, so called by accident. For Calsenor the founder of it being told by the Oracle, that he should fear himself, and build a City, where he first saw the rising Sun: one of his followers, seeing the Sun begin to rise, cried out Idus Idus, that is to say, Behold the Sun. Which Omen taken by Chalcenor, he here built this City. But whether this were so or not (as for my part I build not very much upon it) certain it is, that Venus had here another Temple, neighboured by the Idalian Groves, so memorized and chanted by the ancient Poets. So strong an an influence had lust and sensuality on this wretched People, that every corner of the Island was defiled with those brutish Sacrifices, which day by day were offered to that impure deity: though to say truth, it was no marvel if having made their Belly their Gods, they made in the next place their glory their shame.

The first Inhabitants of this Island were the posterity of Cittim the son of Javan, and grand-son of Japhet: who having seen his brother Tarshish settled in Cilicia, (where his memory is still preserved in the City of Tarsus) planted himself and his retinue in this opposite Island. The City of Cittim, as Prothomy, or Cittim, as Pliny call it, one of the ancientest of the Island; taking name from him: which with the authority of Josephus, and others of the ancient Writers, put it out of question. But being this Island was too narrow to contain his numbers, and willing to seek further off for a larger dwelling, he left here to many of his followers as might serve in time to plant the Country; and with the rest passed into Macedon, where we have already spoken of him. Made tributary first to Amasis King of Ægypt, from which distant about three or four days sailing, Subjected afterwards to the Phœnicians, a near neighbour to them, who being a Sea-faring people, made themselves Masters of the Sea-coasts and maritime places, Cinyras the Father of Myrrha, (by whom both Father and Grand-father to Adonis) is said to have been King of both. The like ascribed of Belus one of his Successors, who is said to have been the founder of the City of Cittim, named fo (if not rather repaired than new built by him,) with reference no doubt to Cittim, the first Proprietor of this People. By the power and favour of this Belus, Teucer, the son of Telamon, banished his Country, accompanied with many followers from Salamis, Athens, and Arcadia, was settled in the East parts herof; where the City of Salamis, by him built, was his first Plantation. Yet so that the Phœnicians kept their former hold: it being evident in Story that Eleusus one of the Successors of this Belus, (but a King of Tyre), and a Co-temporary with Salmassar King of Assyria passed over into Cyprus with a puissant Navy to reduce the Citizens to obedience, who had then rebelled. The Island at first coming of Teucer hither so infinitely overgrown with woods, that the people were not able to till the Island. In such manner, notwithstanding the great waste made of them, both in building ships, and casting metals, a Law was made, that every one which would should fell them, and take as much ground in fealty for his own inheritance, as he could overcome and make fit for tillage. Encouraged herewith, the natural Cypriots, together with the Colonies of Grecians, Phœnicians, Ægyptians, so belaboured themselves, that at last they brought it unto Champey: parcelled out in succeeding times, amongst nine Kings, for so many Cyprus the great Persian Monarch found at his coming hither. But Cyrus, though he did subdue all those petty Princes, yet he took not from them their Estates or Titles: contented with the conquest of it, and an annual tribute. For ever this, in the time of Artaxerxes Mnemon, we find Ezra, and Necoctes, to whom Isidore inscrib'd two of his Orations, to be Kings herof. And in the time of Alexander the Great, Cittim it self (such was the honour born unto the Mother-City) had a King apart, not subject unto any other. The King whereof to render himself with the Conquerour, gave to him a sword, μαχάριον δαμασκήν, faith Plutarch, an admirable sword, both for colour and lightness, which he used often in all his fights. And after the death of Alexander, his great Commanders cantoning his estates amongst them, the Princes and People of this Island were in great distractions, not knowing to whom they might submit for their best advantage. But Prothomy, who had seized on Ægypt for his part of the spoil, being strong in shipping, settled them by a personal visit; and fortifying some of the best pieces in it, assured the Country to himself. To him and his posterity it continued subject till the time of Prothomy Auletes, the ninth King of this Line in our Account, who gave it for a portion to one of his Brethren: in whose time, the Romans, without any colour or pretence of quarrel, but only to enrich themselves with the spoil of the Island, sent Portius Cato to subdue it. And he at first assayed to get it with the Kings consent, offering him in the name of the Roman Senate, the Priest-hood of the Temple of Paphos, being a rich and gainful Office, and of high esteem among that people. But when Prothomy for fear of worse mischief had made away himself by poison, Cato without more ceremony takes possession of it. And because Annianus Marcellinus the Historian, hath so significantly expressed this business, and withal described so punctually the Estate of this Island; we will add this discourse from him, though somewhat be repeated which was said before. Cyprus insulam prociat à Continente distantem portusjam, &c. "The Isle of Cyprus, far distant from the Continent, and well stored with Harbours, is famous, besides many Municipal Towns, for two principal Cities, that is to say, Salamis, and Paphos: the one sacred to Jupiter, and the other to Venus. An Isle admirably fruitful, and with all things furnished, that without the help of any foreign Nation, it is able of itself to build and rig forth a Ship, from the very keel unto the top-sail, and trim it with all tackle necessary for a pleasant voyage. Nor do I shame to say, that with greater Avarice than Justice, the Romans did invade this Island, King Prothomy, our old Confederate and Ally, being unworthily prohibited, for no other reason, but that our Treasury was bare, our Exchequer empty. And he no sooner had prevented this dishonour by a quick and voluntary death, making away himself by poison, but the Island was forthwith made tributary, and the riches of it, Vetus hostiles exarce clasti imposte & in urbem addita per Catonem, as the spoils of some conquered enemy, were brought on Ship-board, and conveyed by Cato unto Rome. So far, and to this purpose he.

I know there is another cause alleged for the sending of Cato on this Errand, viz. that Clodius who was then Tribune, and spied the Edili, might have opportunity by his absence to revenge himself on Cicero, and some others of the opposite faction: but the main business was the money, as before was said; the prey amounting to 7000 Talents, which comes to two Millions, and one hundred thousand Crowns of Coin now current. Which money and moveables, amounting unto so vast a sum, he feared to lose by Sea, divided it into many small portions, which he put into several Boxes, viz. in every Box two Talents and fifty Drachms. At the end of every Box he fastened a long rope with a piece of Cork; by which, floating above the water, the money, if by Shipwreck lost, might be espied again: which was not much unlike the way which Mariners fasten by long ropes to their Anchors, that they may be sooner found. We see by this, that the pretence of the Romans to this Country was very weak: Avareis magis quam justis summi assenti, are the words of Sextus Rufus also. But being made a Roman Province, it was in the division of the Empire assigned to the Constantinopolitan Emperours, under whom it suffered, as all other parts of the Empire did by the violent invasion of the Saracens, who spoiled and ransacked it in the time of Constantine the second, destroying the City of Salamis or Constantia. But that tempest being overcome, they returned again unto that Empire, governed by a succession of Dukes, till the year 1184. At which time Andronicus Comnenus usurping the Greek Empire, compelled Iacacius Comnenus, one of the blood Royal, to shift for himself: who seizing on this Island made himself King thereof, and ruling till the year 1191, when Richard the first of England, being denied the common courtesy of taking in fresh water, and seeing his Soldiers abused by the Cypriots, not only took the King Prisoner, but subdued the whole Island. And as Paterculus telleth us, that when Marcus Antonius had captivated Artamides King of Armenia, Catenis, sed ne quid honoris desisset, aureis vinxit; So did our Richard keep a Decorum towards this Prisoner, binding him not in bonds of Iron, but Silver. King Richard having thus possessed himself of this Country, sold it for ready money, (which for the managing of his intended wars against the Turks, he most needed) unto the Templers: and taking it, upon I know not what discontent, again from them, he bestowed it on Guy of Lusignan, the titular and miserable King of Hierusalem; receiving in way of exchange, the title of that lost and shipwrecked Kingdom, with which title he and some of his Successors for a time were honoured.

In the posterity of this Guy, this Island continued free and absolute, till the year one thousand four hundred twenty three; when Melechella (or Melechiasar) Sultan of Ægypt, invaded this Country, took John King her of Prisoner, ransomed him for 150000 Sultanes, restored him to his Kingdom, and imposed on him and his Successors, yearly tribute of 40000 Crowns. This John was father to another John, whose two children were Carlote a legitimate Daughter, and James a bastard Son. James after the death of his father, dispossessed his sister Carlote of the Crown, by the consent and help of the Sultan of Ægypt; and the better to strengthen himself against all opposition, he took to wife Catharine Cornari, daughter by adoption to the Venetian Senate: whom at his death he made his heir, if the child he went withal (having then none by her) should die without issue, as it did, not long after it was born; and the seeing the seditious Nobility too head-strong to be bridled by a female authority, like a good child resigned her Crown and Scepter to the Venetian State, Anno 1473. These defended it against all claims, (paying only as tribute to the Ægyptian, and after to the Turkish Sultans, the 40000 Crowns before mentioned) till the year 1570, when Musapha, General of the Turks, wrested it from the Venitians, to the use of his Master Selimus the second, who pretended title to it as Lord of Ægypt. The Governour of the Venetian Forces at the time of this unfortunate loss was Signior Bragadino, who as long as hope of succours, means of resistance, or possibility of prevailing continued, with incredible valour made good the Town of Famagusta, in whose defence consisted the welfare of the whole Island. At last he yielded it on honourable conditions, had they been as faithfully kept, as punctually agreed on. But Musapha the Turkish General inviting to his Tent the principal men of worth in the Town, caused them all to be murdered: and as for Brigadino himself, he commanded his ears to be cut off, his body to be flayed alive, and his skin stuffed with straw, to be hanged at the main yard of his Gally. The chief of the prisoners and spoils were in two tall ships, and one Gallion sent unto Selimus; but he never saw them. For a Noble Cyprian Lady, designated to the lust of the Grand Seigneur, fired certain barrels of powder; by the violence whereof both the vessels and the booty in them, were in part burned, in part drowned. A famous and heretick dissoluterious unto none of the Roman Dames, so much commended in their Stories, though more to be commended in a Roman than a Christian Lady.

Thus having summed up the affairs of this Island from the first plantation of it, till this last said conquest, I will lay down the succession of the Cyprian Kings of the Noble Lusignan Family, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of C T P R U S.

- 1 Guy of Lusignan, the titular King of Hierusalem, created in the Kingdom of Cyprus, by Richard the first of England.
- 2 Amiericus, the brother of Guy.
- 3 Hugh, the son of Amiericus.
- 4 Henry, the son of Hugh.
- 5 Hugh II. son of Henry.
- 6 Hugh III. son of Hugh the second.
- 7 John, son of Hugh the third.
- 8 Henry II. the brother of John.
- 9 Hugh IV. son of Guido, the younger brother of John, and Henry the second.
- 10 Peter, the son of Hugh the fourth.
- 11 Petrinus, the son of Peter.
- 12 James, younger brother of Peter, and Uncle to Petrinus.
- 13 James, the son of James, made Tributary by Melechiasar, to the Kingdom of Ægypt.
- 14 John II. the son of James.
- 15 Carlote, sole daughter and heir of John the second, first married to John the Prince of Portugal, and after to Lewis Prince of Savoy, out of her Estate and Kingdom.
- 16 James II. the bastard son of John the second, who by a strong hand seized upon it, and by help of the Venitians kept it during life.
- 17 James III. born after the decease of his father, where he survived not very long. After whose death, being the last of this Family, the Venitians possessed themselves of Cyprus: which they invaded with no better title, than the Romans had done in former times; not likely to be blest with a long fruition, of that which they had so unjustly got into their hands. But of that already.

And here is to be observed, that these Cyprian Kings retaining the title of Hierusalem (towards which they sometimes cast an eye) bestowed upon their greatest Subjects, and deservest Servitors, both titles of honour and Offices of State, belonging anciently to that Kingdom. So that we find amongst them a Prince of Antioch, a Prince of Galilee, a Count of Tripoli, a Lord of Cesarea, and a Lord of Mount Tabar; a Seneschal of Hierusalem, a Constable, Marshal, and High-Chamberlain of that Kingdom also. With better reason, though no doubt with as little profit, as the Pope gives Bishopsricks and Archbishopsricks in Greece or Ægypt. But those titular Offices are now quite extinct, though possibly some of the Titles of honour which were took from thence, may be still remaining.

But to return unto the Turks, having thus taken Famagusta and Nicosia, on which the whole Island did depend, all other Cities of it, and the whole by consequence, were forced to submit to the Turkish Tyranny. The Noblemen, and Citizens of principal quality, either most cruelly massacred in the Sack of those Towns, or banished for ever their Native Country, as men whose living there might possibly endanger their new Conquest. But the Country people, Artificers, and Pers

amongst themselves, and a devout invocation on the Name of God, to direct them in it. The word Χριστιανισμός used in the Original, importeth somewhat of Oracular and Divine direction. And certainly it standeth with reason that it should be so. For if upon the giving of a name, to John Baptist, there was not only a consultation had of the Friends and Mother, but the dumb Father called to advise about it; and if we use not to admit the Christ's Church by the door of Baptism, but by the joynt invitation of the Name of God for his blessing on it: with how much more regard of Ceremony and Solemnity, must we conceive that the whole body of Christs people, be baptized into the name of Christians? And there is some proof of it too, besides probability and conjecture. For Suidas, and before him Iohannes Antiochenus, an old Cosmographer, do expressly say, that in the days of Claudian Caesar, ten years after the Ascension of our Lord and Saviour, Eudius received Episcopal consecration, and was made Patriarch of Antioch the Great in Syria, succeeding immediately to St. Peter: then addeth, that at that time the Disciples were first called Christians. ἡ ἀρχὴ τοῦ βαπτισμοῦ τοῦ ἀποστόλου πάλαι καλεῖτο τὸν ἐπίσκοπον τὸν ἀρχιεπίσκοπον. Eudius their Bishop calling them to a Solemn Assembly, and imposing this new name upon them, whereas before they were called Nazareites and Galileans. A people loathed by the Heathens, that they caled not to slander them from the first beginning. For as concerning this Señ we know that it is evēry where spoken against, laid the Jews of Rome to the Apology, Act. 28. 22. Tacitus a Roman, but a Gentile goes yet further with them, calling them Homines per flagitia infestis. Quosdam meritis exemplis: the calamity in his time being strong and general, that at their private meetings they devoured Infants, and had carnal company with their Mothers and Sisters. Which defamations notwithstanding, they grew in few years to so great numbers, that they were a terror to their Enemies; though grievously afflicted, tortured, and put to several kinds of death, under the ten Famous Persecutions, raised against them, by Nero, Anno 67. 2 Domitian, Anno 96. 3 Trajanus, Anno 110. 4 Marcus Antoninus, Anno 161. 5 Severus, Anno 195. 6 Maximinus, Anno 237. 7 Decius, Anno 250. 8 Valerianus, Anno 259. 9 Aurélianus, Anno 278. 10 By Dioclesianus, Anno 293. All, but this last especially, so extremely raging, that (as St. Hieron writeth in one of his Epistles) that there were martyred 5000 for each day in the year, except the first of January, on which they used not to shed blood. But Sanguis Martyrum, Semen Ecclesie. This little grain of Mustard-seed, sowed by God's own hand, and watered by the blood of so many hol, men, grew to great a Tree, that the branches of it spread themselves over all the world; and got such footing even in the Roman Army it self; (Men commonly so of the strictest kind of Religion) that when Julian the Apollate had vomited out his Soul, with Vicius tandem Galilee, they elected Iovinian, though a Christian, for his Successor, with this acclamation, Christiani omnes sumus. We are also Christians. But see how the baptizing of God's people by the name of Christians, in the City of Antioch, hath drawn me out of my way. I return again, both to the place, and to the Author. In whose evidence, besides what doth concern the imposition of the name of Christian, upon the body of the faithful, we have a testimony for St. Peter's being Bishop of Antioch, the first Bishop thereof (of the Church of the Jews therein at least) as is said positively by Eusebius in his Chronology, St. Hieron in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Writers, St. Chrysostom in his Homilie de translatione Iegnatii, Theodore Dialog, 1. St. Gregory Epist. lib. 6. cap. 37. and before any of them by Origen, in his sixth Homily on St. Luke. With reference whereunto, and in respect that Antioch was accounted always the principal City of the East-parts of the Roman Empire (the Prophet of the East for the most part residing in it) the Bishop hereof in the first Ages of Christianity, had jurisdiction over all the Churches in the East, as far as the bounds of that Empire did extend that way. To which by Constantine the Great the Provinces of Cilicia and Galatia, with those of Mesopotamia and Osfrene were added, containing 15 Roman Provinces, or the whole Dioecesis of the Orient. And though by the subtracting of the Churches of Palestine, and the decay of Christianity in these parts by the Conquests of the Turks and Saracens, the jurisdiction of this Patriarch hath been very much lessened; yet William of Tyre, who flourished in the year 1130. reciteth the names of 13 Archiepiscopos, at Metropolitans, and 127 Episcopos Sees, yielding obedience in his time to the See of Antioch. Since which that number is much diminished, Mahometanism more and more increasing, and Christianity divided into Sects and Factions; inasmuch that of three sorts of Christians living in these Countries, viz. The Maronites, Jacobites, and the Melchites, only the Melchites are subordinate to the Church of Antioch, the others having Patriarchs of their own Religion.

And first for the Melchites, who are indeed the true and proper Members of the Church of Antioch, and the greatest body of Christians in all the East; they are so named in way of scorn, by the Jacobite and Maronite Schismatic, separating without just cause from their Communion. The name derived from Melch, signifying in the Syriack Language a King or Emperor; because adhering to their Primate, they followed the Canons and Decisions of preceding Councils, ratified by authority of the Emperor Leo, by whom subscription was required to the Acts thereof: and were in that respect (as we use to say) of the Kings Religion. Conform in Points of Doctrine to the Church of Greece, but that they celebrate Divine Service as solemnly on the Sundays as upon the Sundays: Subject to the true and Original Patriarch, who since the destruction of Antioch doth reside in Damascus; and on no terms acknowledging the Authority of the Popes of Rome.

Next for the Maronites, they derive that name, either from Marona, one of the principal Villages where they first inhabited; or from the Monastery of St. Maron, mentioned in the first Act of the Council of Constantinople holden under Mennas, the Monks of which called Maronites, were the head of their Sect. Some Points they hold, in which they differ from all Orthodox Christians, others in which they differ only from the Church of Rome. Of the first sort, 1. That the Holy Ghost proceedeth from the Father only without relation to the Son; 2. That the Souls of men were created all together at the first beginning. 3. That male Children are not to be baptized together, but at several times by one and one. 4. That Heretics returning to the Church are to be re-baptized. 5. That the Child is made unclean by the touch of his Mother till her Purification; and therefore not baptizing Children till that time be past, which after the birth of a Male-child must be forty days, of a Female eighty. 6. That the Eucharist is to be given to Children presently after Baptism. 7. That the fourth Marriage is utterly unlawful. 8. That the Father may dissolve the Marriage of his Son or Daughter; 9. That young men are not to be ordained Priests or Deacons, except they be married. 10. That nothing strangled, or of blood may be eaten by Christians. 11. That Women in their Monthly courses are not to be admitted to the Eucharist, or to come into the Church. 12. And finally (which was indeed their first discrimination from the Orthodox Christians) that there was but one will and action in Christ; the Followers of which opinion had the name of Monobeltites. Of the last kind, 1. That the Sacrament of the Lords Supper was to be administered in both kinds. 2. And in Leavened bread. 3. That bread to be broken to the Communicants (and not each man to have his Wafer to himself) according to the first institution. 4. Not referring that Sacrament. 5. Nor carrying any part of the consecrated Elements to sick persons in danger of death. 6. That Marriage is nothing inferior to the single life. 7. That no man enter the Kingdom of Heaven till the General Judgment. 8. That the Saturday, or old Sabbath is not to be fasted. 9. Nor the Sacrament upon days of fasting to be administered till the Evening. They withdrew themselves from the See of Antioch, and set up a Patriarch of their own, many ages since (but the certain time thereof I find not) conferring on him for the greater credit of their Schism, the honourable title of the Patriarch of Antioch. His name perpetually to be Peter, as the undoubted Successor of that Apostle in the See thereof. Dispersed about the spurs and branches of Mount Libanus, where they have many Townships and scattered Villages, of which four are reported to retain in their common speech the true ancient Syriack: that is to say, 1. Eden a small Village, but a Bishop See, by the Turks called Achora, 2. Hachshet, 3. Sherry, 4. Bolfa, or Blonfa, little superior to the rest in bigness or beauty, but made the seat of their Patriarch, when he comes amongst them. At such time as the Western Christians were possessed of these parts, they submitted to the Church of Rome; but upon their expulsion by the Turks and Saracens, they returned again to the obedience of their own Patriarch, on whom they have ever since depended. His residence for the most part at Trapolis, a chief Town of Syria; but when he came to visit his Churches, and take an account of his suffragan Bishops (who are nine in number) then at Blonfa, as is said before. Won to the Papacy again by John Baptist a Jesuite, in the time of Pope Gregory the thirteenth, who sent them a Catechism from Rome Printed in the Arabian Language (which is generally spoken by them) for their instruction in the Rudiments of that Religion; yet to that their Patriarch still retains his former power, and the Priests still officiate by the old Liturgies of those Churches, in the Syriack tongue. So that this reconciliation, upon the matter, is but a matter of complement on the one side, and ostentation on the other: without any increase of Power or Patrimony to the Pope at all. And for the Jacobites, though dispersed in many places of this Country; yet since they are more lately settled in Mesopotamia, where their Patriarch also hath his abode or residence, we shall there speak of them.

The Language vulgarly here spoken is the Arabic Tongue, continued here ever since the subjugation of these Countries by the Saracens. But anciently they spake the Syrian and Phoenician Languages. Of which, the first (for of the other we shall speak when we come to Phoenicia) was the very same with the Chaldean, (as the learned Breuerius hath observed) either originally so, or else received by them when first conquered by the Babylonians. In which respect the Jews, when they returned home from their long Captivity, gave to the Language which they brought with them, the name of Syriack, Chaldean for a great part of it as to the substance of the words: but Hebrew as to the notation of Points, Conjunctions, Affixes, and other properties of their former and original speech. And of this more hereafter also, when we come to Palestine. But whatsoever their language was in former times it is now so overtopped by the Arabic, that it is spoken in four Villages of the Maronites only in all these Countries; the Arabic being generally used in all the rest, as was said before.

Principal Rivers of these parts, are, 1. Chorasan, called Chabon by the Hebrews, which hath its fountain in Palestine, but his fall in Phoenicia, not far from Mount Carmel. 2. Orontes, now called Saldun, and by some Writers Jordan the less, ariseth out of the hills called Pierus, not far from Mount Libanus; and after a while running under the ground, breaketh forth again about Apamia, and passing by the great City of Antioch, falleth into the Sea not far from it. It was first called Tiphon, and took this name from one Orontes, who built first the Bridge over it, as we find in Strabo, 3. Eleutherus, which vith out of some part of Libanus, and glided with a speedy course throw a tragly intricate Channel, into the Mediterranean Sea: guilty of the death of the Emperor Frederick Barbarossa, who falling from his horse as he pursued the Isfidsels, and oppressed with the weight of his Armour was here drowned, and lyeth buried at Tyre. It is now called Cajner, 4. Singor, by whom said to be called Marfus also, which ariseth in the mountainous parts of Comagene, and passing by the City of Aleppo, falleth into Euphrates. 5. Euphrates, the most famous River of the East; of which more hereafter.

Chief Mountains of it, 1. Carmel, which being properly of Phoenicia, we shall there speak of it. 2. Fieria, out of which the River Orontes hath its first Original, 3. Cafus, not far from Antioch, said to be four miles high perpendicularly. 4. Libanus, famous for its multitude of Cedars growing thereupon; affording materials unto Solomon for the holy Temple. Besides which it affordeth such store of Frankincense, that it did formerly the name from Albanus, signifying Frankincense in the Greek; and so replenished with Honey falling from the Heavens, and hanging on the Boughs of the Trees, that the Husbandmen used to ting (as Galen telleth us) that God raised honey; and yearly filled their Pots and Vessels with the sweets thereof. This the most famous and greatest Hill of all these parts, extending in length 150 miles, that to say, from Sidon, a City of Phoenicia, to Smyrna, one of the Cities of Asia; and taking seven hundred miles in compass. Inhabited wholly in a manner by the Maronite Christians, who to keep that dwelling to themselves without the intermixture of Mulomedians, do yearly pay to the Great Turk, seventeen Sultanes a man, for every one above twelve years of Age; each Sultany being reckoned at seven fillings & six pence of our money. And yet the Maronites, though intire, without intermixture, are held to be the smallest Señ, for number, in all the East; not estimated to exceed twelve thousand households, by reason of the indispotion of this Mountain, in most places unfit for habitation. For besides the cragginess and steepness of it, which makes many parts thereof to be inaccessible; the higher Ridges of it are in a manner perpetually covered with snow, nor melted in so hot a Climate at the nearest approaches of the Sun. And thence no doubt it took this name: the word Leban, in the Hebrew and Phoenician Language, signifying White, or Whiteness; seven as from the like whiteness of snow, the highest part of the Pyrenean hills had the name of Camus; and that perpetual Ridge of Mountains, which parts Italy from France and Germany, had the name of Alpes. 5. Anti-Libanus, opposite to the former, and from that so called, a rich, but little Valley only being interposed; out of which Valley the Orontes hath its Spring or Fountain, the hill Fieria there beginning to advance it self. Some make but one Mountain of them both, divided into two great Ledges or Chains of Hills. Of which the main body is lying towards the North, hath the name of Libanus; that on the South, being but a branch or excursion of it, called Anti-Libanus. And to this the Scripture gives some hint, in which both pass for one, by the name of Libanon.

The whole Country was anciently divided into these fix parts, viz. 1 Phœnicia. 2 Palestine. 3 Syria specially so called. 4 Comagena. 5 Palmyrene. And 6 Calo-Syria, or Syria Cana. But Palestine coming under a more distinct consideration, we shall now speak only of the rest.

I P H O E N I C I A.

PHŒNICIA is bounded on the East and South, with Palestine; on the North, with Syria, properly and specially so called; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called by the Grecians, from the abundance of Palm-trees therein growing, the word Phoenix in that language signifying a Palm. And for a further proof hereof, (for I know there are other Etyms and Originations pretended for it) the Palm was anciently the special Cognisance or Ensign of this Country; as the Olive-branch, and Cory of Spain, the Elephant of Africk, the Camel of Arabia, and the Crocodile of Egypt, being peculiar to those Countries. And in an old Coyn of the Emperor Vespasian's, stamped for a memorial of his conquest of Judea, the Impress is a Woman sitting in a sad and melancholic posture, at the back of Palm-trees, with these two words, Judea Capta, inscribed thereon; in which, no question may be made, but that the desolate Woman signifieth the Land of Judea, and the Palm Phœnicia; Phœnicia being seated immediately on the North, at the back of Tenry.

But it was thus first called by the Grecians only, the Latins and other People after them taking up that name. For by themselves, and the people of Israel their next Neighbours, they are called Canaanites, or the Posterity of Canaan, five of whose sons, viz. Zidon, Harzi, Arvadi, Senari, and Chamathi, were planted here; the other six inhabiting more towards the South and East, in the Land of Palestine. For further evidence hereof we may add these reasons; first, that the same Woman which in St. Matthew's Gospel, Chap. 15. 22. is named a Canaanite, is by St. Mark, Chap. 7. 26. called a Syro-Phœnician. Secondly, where mention is made in the Book of Jeshub, of the Kings of Canaan; and the Septuagint (who very well understood the History and Language of their Country) call them Βασιλεις τῶν φαινικίων or the Kings of Phœnicia. Thirdly, the Pœni, or Carthaginians, being beyond all dispute a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, when they were asked any thing of their Original, would answer that they were Chamei; meaning (as St. Augustine that Countryman doth expound their words) that they were Originally Canaanites, of the stock of Canaan. And lastly, from the language of it, which anciently was the old Hebrew, Canaanitish, or the Language of Canaan; spoken both here and in Palestine also, before that Country was possessed by the House of Jacob: as appears plainly by those names, by which the places and Cities of Judea were called, when and before the Israelites came first to dwell amongst them, which are merely Hebrew. And so much as unto the Language is acknowledged by Bochartus also, who in the entrance of his Book inscribed Chanaan, declares what profit may ensue from that undertaking to the Hebrew Tongue; Cujus Phœnicia lingua dialectus fuit, of which the Phœnician language was a dialect only.

The Country of it self not great, extended in a good length, from the further side of Mount Carmel, where it joyes with Palestine, to the River Volanus on the North, by which parted from Syria: but withal so narrow, that it is little more than a bare Sea-coast, and therefore very rightly called Terrarum angustissima by a modern Writer. Rich rather by the benefit and increase of trade added, than by the natural commodities which the land afforded; yet for the quantity thereof, no place could be more plentifully furnished with Oyl, Wheat, and the best sort of Balm, and most excellent Honey; the lower part hereof being designed for the feat of Abner, of whom Moses prophesied, Deut. 33. 24. that he should dip his foot in Oyl. So that the Country generally, was well-conditioned, lovely to look upon, populous, and adorned with more beautiful Cities, than such a span of earth could be thought to hold. Of which thus writeth Ammonius, Actibus monti Libano Phœnicia Regio, plena gratiarum & vernalis, arboribus decorata magnis & paleis &c. i. e. falling from Mount Libanus, yeth the Country of Phœnia, full of all graces and elegancies, adorned with great and beautiful Cities, of which the most renowned for the fertility of their soil, and the fame of their achievements, are Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, &c.

The People anciently, by reason of their Maritime situation, were great Adventurers at Sea, trading in almost all the Ports of the then known World, and sending more Colonies abroad upon foreign Plantations than any Nations in the Earth. An active and ingenious people, did to have been the first Navigators, the first builders of Ships, the first inventors of Letters, (of which hereafter more on some other occasion) and the first Authors of Astronick, the first that brought Astronomy to an Art or Method, and the first makers of Glas. Defamed in Holy Scripture for their gross Idolatry, by which they laid a stumbling-block at the feet of the Israelites; Astarte (or Astarte) the goddess of the Sidonians (but whether Juno, Venus, or some other, I dispute not) being to highly prized amongst them, that Salomon himself, when he fell from God, made this one of his Idols. Once yearly, as Ensebius telleth us, they sacrificed some of their Sons to Saturn, whom in their Language they called Melech; And in the inmost retreats of Libanus had a Temple to Venus, defiled with the practice of most filthy lusts, intemperately using the natural Sex, and most uncharitably abusing their own. Nor could the purity and piety of the Christian faith prevail so far, as to extinguish the ungodly rites, till Constantine finally destroyed both the Temples and Idols, and left not any thing remaining of them, but the shame and infamy. St. Augustine addeth that they did prostitute their Daughters unto Venus, before they married them; and it is most likely to be true. For the Phœnicians and Cyprians being so near neighbours, and subject for a time to the same Princes also, could not but impart their impure Rites and Ceremonies unto one another.

Rivers of note there can be none in so narrow a Region, but what are common unto others, and shall therefore be spoken of. Most proper unto this is the River of Adonis, (now called Cank), so named most probably from Adonis the Darling of Venus, whose Rites are here performed with as much solemnity, as they be in Cyprus, his Obsequies celebrated yearly in the month of June, with great howlings and lamentations, Lucian fables that the River usually streameth blood upon that Solemnity (as if Adonis were newly wounded in the Mountains of Libanus), to give the better colour to their Superstitions. But the truth is, that this redness of the water arises, not from the Winds; which at that time of the year blowing very vehemently, do thereby carry down the stream a great quantity of Minion or red Earth, from the sides of those hills, wherewith the waters are discoloured.

discoloured. Such use can Satan make of a natural Accident, to blind the eyes and captivate the understandings of befotted People.

Chief Mountains of this Country are, 1 Libanus, spoken of before, which hath here its first advance or rising. 2 Carmel, which Ptolomy placeth in this Country, of which it is the utmost part upon the South, where it joyneth with Palestine. Walked on the North-side with the Brook Chifon, on the West with the Mediterranean Sea; steep of ascent, and of indifferent altitude; abounding with several sorts of Fruits, Olives, and Vines in good plenty, and stored with Herbs both medicinal and sweet of smell. The Retreat sometimes of Eliab, when he fled from Jezabel; whose Habitation here, after his decease, was converted to a Jewish Synagogue. To this place (being then in the possession of the Kings of Israel) did that Prophet assemble the Priests of Baal; and having by a miraculous Experiment confuted their Idolatrous Follies, caused them to be cut in pieces on the Banks of the River Chifon near adjoining to it. Upon this visible declaring of the Power and Presence of the Almighty, the Gentiles grew perwaded that Oracles were there given by God; by Suetonius called the God Carmelus. Where speaking of Vespasian, who had then newly took upon him the Imperial Dignity, he addeth, Apud Judæam Carmeli Dei Oracula consuetudinem sua confirmantes fortis, &c. That consulting in Judea with the Oracle of the God Carmelus, he was assured that whatsoever he undertook should succeed well with him. In after-times the Order of the Friars Carmelites, as Successors unto the Children of the Prophets left here by Eliab, had their names from hence: the Ruins of whose Monastery are still to be seen, with a Temple dedicated to the Blessed Virgin; and under that a Cave or Chappel, said to have been the lurking place of that Holy Prophet, in the time of his troubles.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Ptolomais, now nothing but a ruin of what it hath been, but formerly of great strength and consequence. Named Ace at the first Refuge for the Persian Kings in their Wars against Agypt; Enlarged, or rather new built by Ptolomy, the first of that Race, by whom called Ptolomais, which name still continued, though Claudius's heir planting there a Roman Colony, would vain have had it called Colonia Claudia. After the Conquest of it by the Saracens, in the time of Omer the great Caliph, it returned towards its first name, and was called Acon, or Acre; both names still remaining in vulgar speech, as that of Ptolomais amongst Latin Writers. Situate in the flourish of it on a flat or level, in form of a triangular Shield; on two sides neighbored by the Sea, which comes up close to it; on the third looking towards the Champaign: environed with a double Wall, to each Wall a Ditch, fortified on the outside with Towers and Bulwarks; within the Walls so strongly bouled, as if the whole Town had been a Conjunction of Fortresses, and not ordained for private dwellings. In the midst of the City was one Tower of great strength and beauty, which had sometimes been the Temple of Belshazzar, and was therefore called the Castle of Flies; on the top whereof was maintain'd a perpetual Light, like the Pharos of Egypt, to give comfort and direction in the night to such Mariners as made towards this Port. Took from the Christians by the Saracens in the time of Omer, and from them wrested by the Turks with the rest of Syria. It came Cibranic again Anno 1004. in the Reign of Baldwin the first, Brother of the famous Gedfrey of Beaulieu, and second King of Jerusalem, by the help of the Genoese, who for their pains had the third part of the City assigned unto them. Recovered by Saladine to the Turks, and from him taken again by the Western Christians, under the conduct of Philip of France, and Richard the first of England, Anno 1191. it continued in the possession of the Kings of Jerusalem, notably defended by the Hospitallers (now Knights of Malta) till the year 1291. When besieged by an Army of an hundred and fifty thousand Turks, it was forced to yield, though lost by inches; and the Turks fearing lest the Christians would again attempt it, razed it to the ground, demolishing the large Walls and Arches of it, which lie like massy Rocks on their old Foundations. Memorable in those times for the brave service here done by the Christians of the Western parts, of which none more renowned than those of our Richard the first, and Edward the first. This latter here treacherously wounded by an Infidel, with a poisoned Knife, the venom whereof could by no means be awayed, till his most virtuous Wife (herein proposing a most rare Example of conjugal affection) sucked it out with her mouth. And for the former, he became so terrible and redoubted among the Turks, that when their Children began to cry, they would say, Peace, King Richard is coming; and when their Horses started, they would spur them, saying, What you Jades, do you think that King Richard is here? By the Mammalukes, when Lords of Syria, it was patched together, and made fit for habitation rather than defence: not peopled by above 300 Inhabitants, nor would it have so many, but for the Haven adjoining; which though a small Bay, and of very ill Anchorage, is much frequented by the Merchants of our Western World, trading here for their Cotton Wools, with which the neighbouring Country is abundantly furnished. I have said the longer in this place, by reason of the great fame and importance of it, as being the last Hold which the Christians had of all their Conquests with the loss whereof, they laid aside all thoughts of that Holy Wars. 2 Tyre, seated in a rocky Island, about seventy paces from the main Land; well built, and circular of form, as well by Art as Nature impregnablely fortified. A Colony of the Sidonians, and therefore by the Prophet Isa ch. 23. v. 12. called the Daughter of Sidon: but by them built upon an high Hill, the Ruins whereof, by the name of Palatyrus, or old Tyre, are remaining still. Removed unto the Islands by Ager nor King of the Phœnicians, and by him named Sor, or Tzor, from the rocky situation of it (as that word importeth.) Mollified by the Greeks to Tyrus, and from them taken by the Latins, though known to them also by the name of Sarra (the Tyrian Purple being by Virgil, and some others of the ancient Poets, called Sarrum Oltum;) and now at last returned to its first original name, vulgarly at this day called Sor. A City in elder times of great Trade and Wealth; the Prophet Isa ch. 27. v. 8. calling the Merchants herce Prince, and her Chapmen the Nobles of the World. Excelling all others of those times both for Learning and Manufactures, specially for the dying of Purple, first here invented; and that as Julius Polux said, by a very accident; the Dog of Hercules, or if not his, some Dog or other, whose lips by eating of the Fifth called Conyliis, or Purpura, had been made of that colour. Grown to great pride, by reason of the Wealth and Pleasures, her destruction was fore-signified by the holy Prophets, accomplished in God's own time by Nebuchadnezzar, who with great industry and toil joyed it to the Continent. But his Works being demolished by the fury of the Sea, and the labour of the Tyrants, it was after seventy years again re-edified; and having flourished after that for two hundred years, by Alexander the Great was again demolished, to whose indefatigable perseverance nothing was impossible. For having filled the Channel with the

Stones and Rubbish of old Tyre, and rammed them in with huge Beams brought from Libanus, he made a passage for his Army; and having once approached the Walls, he over-topped them with Towers and Frames of Timber, that at last he made himself Master of it, putting to the Sword all such as resisted, and causing two thousand of them to be hanged in cold blood, all along the shore, for a terror to others. This Rendition of the Town was divided by the South-Sayers, who followed the Camp of Alexander, upon a dream which he had not long before; For dreaming that he had disparted himself with Satyrs, the Diviners only making of one word two, found that Satyrs was no more than 22 Tys; that is, Tua Tyrus: and it happened accordingly. Recovering once again both her Riches and Beauties, she became a Confederate of the Romans in the growth of their Fortunes; endowed by them with the Privileges of their City, for her great fidelity. Made in the best times of Christianity the Metropolitan See for the Province of Phœnicia, the Bishop hereof having under him fourteen Suffragan Bishops. Subjected to the Saracens in the year six hundred thirty and fix, and having groaned under that yoke for the space of four hundred eighty and eight years, was at the last regained by Ghurimud Patriarch of Hierusalem, in the Reign of the second Edwinn, the Venicians contributing their assistance to it, Anno 1124. In vain attempted afterwards by victorious Saladin; but finally brought under the Turkish thraldom, Anno 1289, as it still continueth. Now nothing but an heap of Ruins; but the very Ruins of it so fair a prospect, as striketh both pity and amazement into the beholders, shewing them an exemplary pattern of our humane frailty. Subject at the present to the Emir or Prince of Sidon, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, one of the best of the Levant, but of no great trading. 3 Sarepta, by the Hebreans called Sarphat, situate on the Sea-coast betwixt Tyre and Sidon. Memorable in Holy Writ for the Miracle here performed by the Prophet Elijah, in raising the poor Widows Son; in Heathen Writers for the purple Wines, little inferior unto those of Falerum in Italy, or Cibos in Greece: Of which thus the Poet

Vina mibi non sunt Gazetia, Chia, Falerina, Quæque Sarcapano palmite missa bibas.

In English thus,

I have no Chian or Falerian Wines,

Nor those of Gazet or Sarcap Vine.

4 Sidon, the ancientest City of all Phœnicia, and the most Northern of all those which were assigned for the Portion of the Sons of Affer; beyond which the Country of Phœnicia having been hitherto nothing but a bare Sea-coast, beginneth to open towards the East in a fine rich Valley, having Libanus upon the North, and the Anti-Libanus on the South; once closed up from the rest of Syria with a very strong Wall, long since demolished. It was so called from Zidon, one of the Sons of Canaan, who first planted here; not (as some say) from Sida the Daughter of Belus, once a King hereof; this City being mentioned in the Book of Job, when so such Belus was in being. Situate in a fertile and delightful Soil, defended with the Sea on one side, and on the other by the Mountains lying betwixt it and Libanus, from whence defended those many Springs with which they watered and enriched their most pleasant Orchards. The Inhabitants hereof are said to be the first makers of Chrysal Glasse, the Materials of the Work brought hither from the Sands of a River running not far from Ptolemais, and only made fusible in this City. And from hence Solomon and Zorobabel had their principal Work-men, both for Stone and Timber, in their several Buildings of the Temple. The People hereof so flourishing in Arts and Trades, that the Prophet Zachariah, chap. 9. v. 2. calleth them the wise Sidonians. A City which at several times was both the Mother and Daughter of Tyre; the Mother of it in the times of Heathenism, Tyre being a Colony of this People; and the Daughter of it when instructed in the Christian Faith, acknowledging the Church of Tyre for its Mother-Church. The City in those times very strong both by Art and Nature, having on the North-side a Fort or Citadel mounted on an inaccessible Rock, and environed on all sides by the Sea; when that it was brought under the command of the Western Christians, was held by the Order of the Dutch Knights; and after on the South-side of the Port, which the Templers guarded. Won by the Turks, with the rest of this Country, from the Christians, and ruined by those often interchanges of Fortune, it only sheweth now some marks of the ancient greatness; the present Sidon standing somewhat West of the old, and having little more than a particular Description, in respect of what it was in her ancient Glories. The Haven at this time decayed, or serving at the best for Gallies; with a poor Blockish, rather for show than service: The Walls of no great strength, and as little beauty, and the Buildings ordinary; but that the Mosque, the Bannia of Bathy, and the Cane for Merchants, are somewhat fairer than the rest: yet gives a Title at this time to the Emir of Sidon, one of the greatest Princes of all this Country, of whom more hereafter. 5 Berytus, originally called Gêris, from Gerges the fifth Son of Canaan, took this new name from Berith, a Phœnician Idol herein worshipped; and now called Barruth. Destroyed by Typhon in the Wars of the Syrians against the Jews, it was re-edified by the Romans, by whom made a Colony, and honoured with the name of Judæa Felix, Augustus giving it the Privileges of the City of Rome. By Herod and Agrippa Kings of the Jews, much adorned and beautified; and of no mean esteem in the time of the Christians, when made an Episcopal See under the Metropolitan of Tyre. Being a place of no great strength, nor aimed at by every new Invader, it hath sped better than the rest of these Cities (though stronger than this) retaining still her being, though not all her beauties; well stored with Merchandise, and well frequented by the Merchant. Nigh to this Town is a fair and fruitful Valley, which they call St. Georges, in which there is a Castle, and in that an Oratory of the same name also: All sacred to St. George the Martyr, who hereabouts is fabled to have killed the Dragon, and thereby delivered a Kings Daughter; but what Kings I know not, nor they neither. 6 Biblos, sometimes the Habitation of Heva, the fourth Son of Canaan, and then called Heva. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of Cinyon, Father and Grandfather of Adonis by his Daughter Myrrha; whereof we have already spoken when we were in Cyprus. Of such esteem in the Primitive Times of Christianity, that it was made a Bishops See; desolate and thrall unto the time it lost that honour, and became thrall unto the Turks. 7 Orbolia, called also Antarados, because opposite to Aradus, another old City of this Tract; but in after-Ages called Torofa, and by that name well known in the Histories of the Holy Wars, undertaken by the Western Christians: To whom it made such stout and notable resistance, that though besieged on all sides with united Forces (the whole Army formerly divided, sitting down before it yet after three Months hard siege, they were fain to leave the Town behind them, and content themselves with spoiling the adjoining Plain, more 8 Tripoli, seated in a rich and delightful Plain, more fruitful than can be imagined; one of which Fruits they called by the name of Annazzaza Franchi, i.e. Kill Frank, because the Western Christians, whom they call by the name of Franks, died in great numbers by the intemperate eating of them. A Valley which is said to have yielded yearly to the Counts of Tripoli no less than yoccoo Crowns. As for the Town, it standeth about two miles from the Sea, at the foot of Mount Libanus; so called because built by the joint Purges of three Cities, that is to say, Tyrus, Sidon, and Aradus. Of no great note among the Romans, for ought I can find, till made one of the Episcopal Sees, belonging to the Archbishop of Tyre in the Primitive times. But thriving by degrees, it grew to principal account by the time that the Western Christians warred in the Holy Land: When conquered by them, it was made one of the Tetrarchies, or Capital Cities for the four Quarters of their Empire, which were Jerusalem for Palestine, Edessa for Comagena or Mesopotamia, Antioch for Syria, and this for Phœnicia. Committed at the first taking of it, to the custody of Raymond Earl of Toulouse in France; whose Pollicy, whilst it lasted, had from hence the Title of Earls of Tripoli. A City, which I know not by what good hap, hath sped better than any of those parts, retaining still as much in strength and beauty as ever it had, if not grown greater by the ruin of all the rest. Situate two miles from the Sea, as before is said; but not above half a mile from the Haven, which lieth upon the West side of it: Compaffed with a Wall, and fortified with seven Towers, of which the fourth is commonly called the Tower of Love, because built by an Italian Merchant, who was found in Bed with a Turkish Woman; for which he had forfeited his life, if not thus redeemed it. Before the Haven is an ill-neighbouring bank of Sand, which every day groweth greater and nearer to it; by which in time there is a Prophetic which faith it shall quite be choked: On both sides of it many Store-houses for the Merchant to stow his Goods in, and Shops to sell them: the way from thence unto the City, having on both sides very pleasant Gardens, more curiously kept, than usually amongst the Turks. The Town it self stretched out in Length from South to North is situate, as before was said, at the foot of Libanus, conveying a Brook into the Streets, and many pleasant Springs into the Chief of their Gardens: in which, and in those towards the Haven, and on other sides of the Town, the Inhabitants keep great store of Silks-worms, selling their Silks raw unto the Italians, and buying them again of them in the Stuff or Manufacture. Their Buildings generally low, and the Streets but narrow, except that leading towards Alppo, which is fair and open. Over the Brook at the East-side of the City, are built two Bridges; and on the South-side a strong Castle mounted on an Hill, built by the French when they had the Custody hereof: now Garrisoned for the Grand Signior with two hundred Janizaries. At this time it is looked on as the Metropolitan or chief City of Phœnicia, honoured with the residence of the Patriarch of the Maronites, for the most part dwelling in this Town and enriched with a great part of the Trade of Scanderone, or Alexandrette, removed thither some forty years ago by the Turk appointment; that Haven lying unopened, and more open to Pirates.

That the Phœnicians were descended of the Sons of Canaan, hath been proved already. And being descendants of that Stock, they were at the first governed like them, by the Chiefs of their Families, whom they honoured (as most Nations did) with the Title of Kings. But most of the Canaanitish Kings being overcome and slain by Jehoyas, Agenor a stout and prudent man, one of those many Kings, which commanded in those parts of the Country, seeing how impossible it was to resist that Enemy, borrowed some Aid from Agypt, where he had his Breeding, to make good the Sea-coasts of his Country; in which the Phligians, who interposed upon those Coasts betwixt him and Agypt, concurred also with him. By which assistance, and by the fortifying of Sidon, Tyre, and Ace (or Ptolemais) which were all the Cities of this Country that were then in being, he did not only preserve his own Estate from the present danger, but left it so assured to the Kings succeeding, that neither Solomon, nor David, nor any of the Kings of Israel, durst attempt upon them. To Agenor succeeded his Son Phœnix, (Cadmus, his elder Brother, going into Greece in search of his Sister Europa, ravished by Jupiter, where he built Thebes, and therein reigned till his death) from whom, as some conceive, this Country had the name of Phœnicia. And though I have declared my self for another reason of this name, which I like much better; yet I shall rather yield to this, or to any other, than to that of Bocharus, who will have it derived from Ben-Anak, or the Sons of Anak, (as if the old Phœnicians were such Giantly men) which must first be contradicted in Beauck, then by the Grecians turned into Phœnace, and at last into Phœnix. Such a stretched and extorted Originations never please my fancy, who had much rather hearken to the old received opinions touching the first Originals of Names and Nations, where there is not very pregnant Reason to persuade me otherwise, than strain my self so far for a new Invention, or hearken unto those that do. But for what cause soever they were named Phœnicians, certain it is, they were a very active and industrious People, trading in most parts of the Mediterranean, and planting Colonies in many. Thebes and Sephyra in Bœotia, Nola in Italy, Gades in Spain; Utica, Lepcis, Carthage in Africa, were of their foundation. Nay, if we may believe Bocharus, there was no Island or Sea-coast in the Mediterranean, or on the Cantabrian, Gallick, or British Ocean, wherein they did not keep some Factory, or erect some Colony. What Kings succeeded Phœnix in a constant and continued course, I can no where find. Most like it, they were not under the command of any one Prince; and that besides the Kings of Sidon, where Agenor reigned, there were some others who called themselves Kings of Phœnicia also, as well as they. Of which sort were Cynirus, Paphus, and Pigmalion, who had their Regal Seat at Biblos, and Lorded it over a good part of Cyprus, as did also Echus, who gave some part of that Isle to Tener, as is said before. There is also found mention of one Phasis, a Phœnician King, at such time as the Grecians conquered Troy. After him none, till the subjugation of this Country by the Babylonians; Tetramictes, Tomer, and Sirato, mentioned in succeeding times, being Tributaries to the Persian, and no absolute Princes. Whether it were that the Phœnicians were made subject to the Kings of Tyre, or that the Kings thereof did nothing to preserve their memory, I am not able to determine. Certain it is, that the Kings of Tyre came in short time to be of very great repute, and to possess themselves of the Coasts of Syria and Phœnicia, and a great part of Cyprus; whereby, and by the benefit of their Trade and Shipping, they grew rich and powerful, and of great consideration in Affairs of the World. The Names and History of whom I shall here subjoin, in this ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of TYRE.

A. M.

1 Abibalur, as Josephus, Abemalur, as Theophrastus, philus Antiochenus calleth him, Co-temporary with Samuel; supposed to be the same which the Son of Syrach mentioneth, Ezechiel. 46. 18.

2 Saron, the Son of Abihah, whom David, as Enfibus faith, compelled to pay tribute; complained of by that Prophet, Plal. 83. 7.

2931 3 Hiram, the Son of Saron, confederate with David, to whom he sent Cedars, with Carpenters and Malons, towards his Buildings in Jerusalem, after he had beaten thence the Jebusites; as he did afterwards to Solomon when he built the Temple. Much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles. 53.

2955 4 Balestarnus, or Bazarnus, succeeded Hiram. 7.

2983 6 Atharim, brother of Abdasturnus, recovered the Kingdom to his house, out of the hands of the Chittriers. 12.

2995 7 Athurnus, or Athurnus, as Theophilus calleth him, the younger Brother of Athurnus. 9.

3004 8 Phelles, the Brother of these three Kings, and youngest Son of Balestarnus, reigned eight months only.

9 Ishabab, called Eibbas, 1 King, 16, 13. Son of Athurnus, slew his Uncle Phelles, and so regained his Fathers Throne; before which he was the High-Priest of the Goddels Altairah, or Altair, (a Dignity next to that of the King.) He was the Father of Jezebel, the Wife of Ahab, to often mentioned in the Scripture. 32.

3037 10 Badezar, or Bazar, Son of Eibbas. 6.

3043 11 Mertimus, by some called Matimus, Son of Badezar, the Father of Elia, whom Virgil celebrateth by the name of Dido.

3052 12 Pygmalion, the Son of Mertimus, who slew Stebus the Husband of his Sister Elisa to get his riches; but yet was confuted by her prey; his Sister Elisa accompanied with her brother Barras (the founder of the Noble Barras Family, of which Anahab was) and her Sister Amia, flying into Africa, where she built the renowned City of Carthage. These names of his Successors we find not till we come to 13 Eblurus, descended from a Son of Pygmalion, who overthrowed the Fleet of Salmanassar, the Affrian, in the Port of Tyre.

14 Eshobaler, or Eshbaal II. who vaunted himself to be as wise as Daniel, and to know all secrets, as faith the Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 28. 1, 2. And yet not wise enough to preferre his Kingdom from Nabuchodonosor's who after a Siege of 13 years took the City of Tyre, and subject ed it unto his Empire.

15 Baal, the son and successor of Eshbaal the second, but a Tributary to the Babylonians.

After whose death the Tyrians had no more Kings, but were governed by Judges, or by such titular Kings only as were sent from Babylon. And though Tyre and Sidon did recover breath in the fall of the Babylonian Empire, and the usefulness of the Persian: yet being of the Persian faction, and having dependance on that Crown, they were by Alexander held unworthy to continue. Who therefore deposed Strao the King of Sidon, and overthrowed the City of Tyre; in the taking whereof he had spent more time, than in forcing all the Cities of Asia.

After this time Phoenicia, being reckoned as a part of Syria, followed the fortune of the whole, subject unto the Syrian Kings of the house of Seleucus, till made a Province of the Romans; subject to the Constantinopolitans till the fatal year 636. when subdued by the Saracens. Successively conquered by the Turky Christians, and after their expulsion by the Turky again, then by the Mamelucks of Egypt, and finally with the rest of Syria, by Selimus the first united to the Turkish Empire. Subject at this time, or of late, to the Emir of the Drusen, (commonly called the Emir of Sidon) of which people we have spoken before. A people who in the time of Amrath the third, were governed by five Emirs or Princes, one of which was Man-Ogli, who so resolutely refused his Court or residence at Andriene, a strong place situate on a hill, and was of that wealth, that he sent to make his peace unto the above-named Ibrahim 320 Arcubus, 20 Packs of Andriene Silks, and 50000 Ducats. At a second time he presented him with 50000 Ducats more, 480 Arcubus, 1000 Goats, 150 Camels, 150 Bulls, 1000 Oxen, and 200 Weathers. By these rich gifts we may not a little conjecture of the Revenue of the present Emir of Sidon: who since the year 1600. hath ruled almost all the Countries belonging once to five Princes, under his own Empire, containing the Towns and Territories of Gaza, Barus, Sidon, Tyre, Acra, Saffet, (or Tiberias) his seat of residence, Nazareth, Cana, Mount Tabor, Elkiffe, &c. This present Emir, by name Faccidine, was not long since driven out of his Country by the Turks, and forced to fly to Florence; but he again recovered his own, laid siege to Damascus, and caused a notable Rebellion in Asia; not quenched in a long time after. And finally, having possessed himself of the City and Castle of Damascus, prepared for the taking of Hierusalem also, threatening to make the Chitians once more Masters of it. This was in the year 1613. How he sped afterward, and whether his Son, as stout and valiant as himself, hath since his death succeeded him in his Estates, I am not able to say: having of late heard nothing of them.

S Y R I A P R O P R I A.

S Y R I A P R O P R I A, or Syria especially so called, is bounded on the East, with Palmyrene; on the West, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Cilicia; on the South with Phoenicia; and some part of Cala-Syria.

This part of Syria I take to be the Land of Hamath, so often mentioned in the Scriptures, the Kingdom of Ti or Tou, next neighbour, and sworn Enemy to Adadazar King of Aram-Sobab: who hearing of the great discomforture which David had given unto that King, sent his Son Joram, or Adoram, for the Scripture call him his Son Joram, with Presents to him, as well to congratulate his success, as to be assured for times to come of his love and amity. So called from Hamath one of the Sons of Canaan, who fixed his dwelling in these parts, and left many Cities of that name in Syria and Palmyrene (which we shall meet withal in the course of this work) either built by him or his Pottery. Now that the Land of Hamath was this part of Syria, I am persuaded to believe by these following reasons, viz. 1. From the neighbourhood hereof to Arpad or Arphad, as in other places, as in Ifa. 10. 9. and Tier. 49. 23. So in other places, as in Ifa. 10. 9. and Tier. 49. 23. 2. King. viz. Where are the gods of Hamath and Arphad? 2 King. 18. 34. The Kings of Hamath, and the King of Arphad.

1637. 13. And we know well that Arpad was the name of an Island over-against the mouth of the River Euphrates, one of the Rivers of this Country: so called from Arpad, one of the Sons of Canaan, alluded to by the Greeks and Romans in the name of Aradus; by which this Isle was known unto them. 2ly. By the vicinity which it hath to Palmyrene, the Aram-Sobab of the Scriptures, to which it joyneth on the East, with the King whereof (as bordering Princes use to be) the Kings of Hamath for the most part were in open War. Of which see 2 Sam. 8. 9. 10. and 1 Chron. 8. 9. 10. 3ly. From the authority of St. Hierom, who finding mention in the Prophet Amos, Chap. 6. 2. of a City named Hamath the Great, determineth it to be that City which afterwards was called Antiochia (the principal City of this part, and indeed of Syria: ) the title of Great being added to it, to differentiate it from some other Cities of this name of inferior note. And 4ly. from comparing the places in Scripture, with the like passage in Josaphat the Historiographer. The Scripture telleth us, that Hierusalem being possessed by the Babylonians, Zedekiah the King was brought Prisoner to Nebuchodonosor, being then at Riblah, 2 King. 2. 6. to Riblah in the Land of Hamath, ver. 2. 1. where the poor Prince first saw his Children slain before his face; and then miserably deprived of sight, that he might not see his great misfortunes, was led away to Babylon. Ask of Josaphat where this sad Tragedy was acted, and he will tell us that it was at Reblath (or Riblah) a City of Syria, Antiq. l. 10. c. 10. And if we ask Saint Hierom what he thinks of Reblath, he will tell us that it was Urbs ea quam nunc Antiochiam vocant, the City which in following times was called Antioch. On these grounds I conceive this part of Syria to be the land of Hamath intended in the Texts of Scripture above-cited; though there were other Towns and Territories of the time name also.

The Country is naturally fertile; the hedges on the high-way sides affording very good fruits, and the adjoining fields affording to the Passenger the shade of Fig-trees. Were it not naturally so, it would not be much helped by Art or Industry as being very meagrely peopled, and those few people without any encouragement either to plant fruits, or manure the Land. Their Sheep are commonly fair and fat, but so overlaid in the tail, both with flesh and fleec, that they hang in long wreaths unto the ground, dragged after them with no small difficulty. Pliny observes it in his time, that the tails of the Syrian Sheep were a Cubit long, and had good store of wool upon them, Natur. Hist. l. 8. c. 48. and Modern Travellers report, that the tails of these sheep do frequently weigh 25 pound weight, and sometimes 30 pounds and upwards. The like hath also been affirmed of the sheep of Palmyrene comprehended in old times in the name of Syria. And that may probably be the reason why the rumps and tails of Sheep (and of no beast else) were ordained to be offered up in sacrifice, of which Lev. 9. But besides the store of Wool which they have from the sheep, they have also great plenty of Cotton Wool, which groweth there abundantly; with the seeds whereof they sow their fields, as we ours with Corn. The stalk no bigger than that of Wheat, but as tough as a Bean; the head round and bearded, in the size and shape of a Medlar, and as hard as a stone; which ripening breaketh, and is delivered of a white soft Bomb, intermixed with seeds; which parted with an instrument, they keep the seeds for another sowing, and sell the Wool unto the Merchant: a greater quantity thereof issuing from that little shell, than can be imagined by those who have not seen it.

The people heretofore were very industrious, especially about their Gardens; the fruitful effects whereof they found in the increase of their Herbs, and Plants. Whence the Proverb, Multa Syrorum Olera. But whilst they were observed to be very gluttonous, spending whole days and nights in feasting, great scoffers, and much given to laughter. Crafty and subtle in their dealings, not easily to be trusted but on good security; and so were the Phoenicians, their next neighbours also. Hence came the Greek: Adage which Suidas speaketh of, Σύροι ὄρεσι θοῖνας, Syri contra Phoenices, used by them when two crafty Knaves endeavored to deceive each other. They were noted also to be superstitious, great Worshipers of the Goddels Fortune, but greater of their Syrian Goddels, whatsoever she was. Affirmed by Plutarch to be a Womanish and effeminate Nation, prone unto tears, and such as on the death of their friends would hide themselves in caves from the sight of the Sun. Herodian addeth, that they were wavering and unconstant, lovers of Plays and publick Pastimes, and easily stirred up unto Innovations. But at this time, they are almost beaten out of all these humours, having been so often cowed and conquered, that they are now grown fervently officious to them that govern them: not without cause, defective in that part of industry which before enriched them.

Where by the way we must observe, that this Character of the people, and that of the Country belong not to this part alone, exclusively of those which follow to it, to all Syria, and every part and Province of it, except Phoenicia, which being planted by a people of another Stock, hath had its character by it self. The whole by Plutarch divided, besides Comagena, Palmyrene, and Cala-Syria, into many petit Regions, and Subdivisions, as 1. Pieria. 2. Casius, from the hills adjoining, 3. Seleucia. 4. Apamene. 5. Laodicea. 6. Cyrrhestica. 7. Chalcidice. And 8. Chalybanotis, from their principal Cities. Of which in all he murther up the names of an hundred and upwards, then of some note, most of them now grown out of knowledge, and many of them of no mark or observation in the course of business. So that omitting his method, we will follow our own, and take notice only of such places as ancient were, or at this present are, of most observation and importance in the course of Story: with reference notwithstanding to the subdivisions made by Plutarch, as they come in my way, reckoning Cyrrhestica, Chalybanotis, Casius, and the Territories of Seleucus, Laodicea, and Apamene, into Syria Propria; and Pieria into Comagena.

First then to begin with those Cities which lye most towards the East, we have in Cyrrhestica, 1. Zengma, on the banks of the River Emphrates, memorable for the passage of Alexander the Great, who there passed over his Army on a Bridge of Boats. 2. Berras, supposed by some both ancient and modern Writers, to be that which is now called Aleppo, but the position of the place agreeth not with that supposition; Aleppo being placed by our modern Geographes, in the 72 degree of Longitude, and the 38 of Latitude: whereas Berras is assigned by Plutarch, to the 36 degree of Latitude, and the 71 of Longitude. Besides that, the River Sigus, on which Aleppo is situate, keepeth it self almost on an even course in the Latitude of 37 between 20 and 30 minutes over: which is more by a degree and a half than the site assigned unto Berras. 3. Cyrrus, as in the Latin Copies of Plutarch, mistook for Cyrrhus, once the chief City of this part, from hence called Cyrrhestica. 4. Heraclea, near which Minerva had a Temple; in which, as in that sacred to her in Lacedaemon, they used once yearly to offer a Virgin for a Sacrifice, but afterwards on the sight of that gross impiety, changed it to an Hort. 5. Regia, now Ragia, two days journey from Antioch, took by the Christians in the be-gaining of the Wars for the Holy Land. 6 Hierapolis, of great renown in those dark times of Ignorance and Idolatry for the Syrian Goddess therein worshipped from whence it had the name of Hierapolis, or the Holy City: being formerly by the Grecians called Callinice by the Syrians, Magog; one of the first seats of Magog the Son of Japhet, and from him denominated. The Goddess so elevated in those wretched times, that from all parts, Affrica, Babylonia, Arabia, Gilicia, Cappadocia, and indeed what not, they brought her many rich gifts and costly offerings. Now himself, who scoffed at all Religions else, being for a while a great Votary of this Syrian Idol, though afterwards he grew weary of her, and defiled her with urine. The Temple built by Stratonice, the wife of Selenus, in the middle of the City, compassed with a double wall, about the height of 300 fathoms: the roof thereof inlaid with Gold, and made of such fragrant and sweet-smelling wood, that the cloaths of them which came thither retained the scent thereof for a long time after. Without the Temple there were places inclosed for Oxen, and Beasts of sacrifice: and not far off a Lake of 200 fathom in depth, wherein they kept their sacred fishes: the Priests attending here for their several Offices, amounting in number to three hundred, besides many more subservient Ministers. The tricks and jugglings of these Priests to deceive the people, he that list to see, may find them copiously described in the Metamorphosis of Apuleius: which, changing both the names and names may serve for a relation of those galleries and Arts of Leger-de-main which the Friars and Pardoners have practised in the Church of Rome: Chalybeatus, whence the parts adjoining were called Chalybeum, or Aleppo, Joffelus, and some others were called Chalybeum, or Aleppo, but on no good grounds: this City having one degree less of Northern Latitude, than Beræa had. 8 Barbarus, in the same subdivision, near the banks of Euphrates, 9 Chalce, the principal of that part of Syria Propria, which is called Chalcidice, but not otherwise memorable, 10 Telmessus, another Town of the same division, and as little famous. 11 Selenus, so named from the Founder of it, the first Eastern Monarch of that Race, and the greatest Builder of the World, founding nine Cities of this name, sixteen in memory of his Father Antiochus, six by the name of Laudice his Mother, and three in honour of Amama his first Wife; besides many others of great note in Greece and Asia, either new built, or beautified and repaired by him. From this the Country hereabouts had the name of Selenus. 12 Laudice, one of the Cities founded by Selenus, in honour of Laudice his Mother, from which the Region adjoining is called Laudice: Built by him in the place where formerly stood the City Rhamnus, so called from a certain Shepherd, who being strook with a flash of lightning, cried out amazedly Rhamnus, that is to say, Deus ad excelsis; before which time it had been named Lemæa Ad excelsis, from the whiteness of the Sea-cliffs near to which it is situated: the Country round about commended anciently for the best Wines, and choice of very excellent Fruits. 13 Amama, so named in honour of Amama, the Wife of Selenus; which together with Laudice and Selenus before mentioned, having the same Founder, and maintaining a strict League of amity with one another, were commonly called the Three Sisters. From this the Country near is called Amama. 14 Emesa, (now Hama) the Episcopal See of Exephinus, hence called Emesus, who flourished in the time of Constantinus, the Son of Constantine: in whose name are extant certain Homilies, justly conceived to be of a later date. The City seated in a spacious and fruitful Plain of Amama, watered with many pleasant and cheerful Rivers: once of great note, as may easily be conjectured from the walls thereof, which are still perfect and entire, built of polished stone, and of very large circuit; but the dwelling-houses so decayed, that it affordeth nothing worthy observation. 15 Epiphania, in the castræ or subdivision of Casius, called at first Hamath from Hamath a Son of Canaan, the founder of it; and upon that account mistaken by Strabo for another Town of the same name; in the Tribe of Naphthali; so different from this place both in Longitude and Latitude (as we shall shew hereafter when we come to Palestine) that they can by no means be the same. But that old Town being gone to ruin it was repaired, if not re-edified by Antiochus Epiphanius King of Syria, who thereupon commanded it to be called Epiphania; obeyed therein as Josephus telleth us, by the Maccedonians, though the Syrians still called it Amath, as in former times. Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. 16 Larissa, which still preserveth its old name, being now called Lara; much mentioned in the Wars of the Holy Land, especially for the death of Baldwin the first, Brother of Gedry of Bouillon, and second King of Hierusalem, Anno 1118. 17 Gebel, the Gabala of Ptolemy, and others of the ancient Writers, situate on the South of Laudice, from which twelve miles distant; mentioned Plin. l. 5. c. 22 confederate with Tyre, and other uncircumcised Nations, in their hatred and designs against the Israhelites: at this day called Gabella (with little difference from the old name of it) and by that name remembered in the Stories of the Holy Wars. 18 Albaria, distant two days march from Antioch, remembered also in the Wars of the Holy Land; 19 Aradus, one of the Co-founders of Triphis, situate in a rocky Island of a mile in compass, directly opposite to the mouth or influx of the River Eleutherus, and distant from the Continent about twenty furlongs. So called from Aradus, one of the Sons of Canaan, and mentioned by that name in the Prophet Ezekiel 27. 8. 11. This once a Kingdom of its self, containing not this Island only, but some part of the Continent; especially about Antaradus (so called because built over against it) situate on the Northern banks of the River Eleutherus, of which we have spoken in Phoenicia. 20 Daphne, about five miles from Antioch; but afterwards by the continual enlargements of that City, accounted as the Suburb to it: so named of Daphne, one of the Mistresses of Apollon, who was here worshipped by the name of Apollon Daphneus, and had here his Oracle and his Grove, with other the Additaments appertaining unto those Idolatries as much esteemed of, but more sumptuous than those of Delphos. The Grove about ten miles in circuit, environed round with Cypresses, and other trees, so tall and close to one another, that they suffered not the Sun to enter in his grateful heats: the ground perpetually covered with the choicest Tapestry of Nature, watered with many a pleasant stream, derived from the Cappalian Fountains as it was given out; and yielding the most excellent Fruits both for taste and suture, to which the wind and air participating the sweetness of the place, did add a most delightful influence.

A place devised for pleasure, but abused to lust: he being held unworthy of the name of a man, who transgressed not himself unto a Beast, or trod on this unholy ground without his Circus, inasmuch as they which had a care of their good names, did forbear to haunt it. A fuller description of it he that lists to see, may find in the first Book and eighteenth Chapter of Solomon's Ecclesiastic History, who is copious in it. The Temple said to have been built by Selenus also, renowned for the Oracle there given, by which Adrian was foretold of his being Emperour; and therefore much referred to by Julian the Apokata, for that purpose also. But the body of the Martyr and Bishop of Antioch, being removed thither by the command of his Brother Gallus, then created Cesar by Constantinus, the Devil and his Oracles were both frightened away, as the Devil did himself confess to Julian, who being desirous to learn here the success of his intended Expedition into Persia, received this Answer, That no Oracle could be given so long as those Divine Bones were so near the Shrine. Nor was it long after, before the Idol and the Temple were consumed by a fire from Heaven, as was avowed by those who observed the fall of it: though Julian did impute it to the innocent Christians; and in revenge caused many of their Churches to be burned to ashes. 21 Antioch, situate in that part hereof which is called Casius, first built, or began rather by Antigonus, when Lord of Asia, by whom named Antonia; but finished and enlarged by Selenus, after he had overthrown and slain him at the Battle of Hama. Built near the place, and partly out of the Ruins of an ancient City, in the second Book of Kings called Rabbah in the Land of Hamath, Hamath the Great, in the sixth of Amos; by Josephus and the Syrians, Reblis. Memorable in those days for the Tragedies of Jehohas and Zedechias, Kings of Judah; the first of which was here deprived of his Crown and Liberty, by Pharash Necho King of Egypt, 2 King, 23. 33. the other of his Eyes and Children, by the command of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, as was said before. In following times it was by some Greek Writers called Epiphania, from the nearness of it to that Grove: as afterwards in the times of Christianity, by the name of Theopolis, or the City of God; either from the many Miracles there done in the Primitive time, or from the great improvement which the Christian Faith did here receive, where the Disciples first obtained the name of Christians. The Royal Seat for many Ages of the Kings of Syria; and in the flourish and best fortune of the Roman Empire, the ordinary Residence of the Præfuit or Governor of the Eastern Provinces; next, of the Præfuit Prætorii Orientis, who had not only the superintendency over the Dioecesis of the Orient, though that large enough; but also of the Dioecesis of Egypt, Asia, Pontus, Thrace, extending to his Jurisdiction into all the parts of the then known World. Honoured also with the Residence of many of the Roman Emperours, especially of Venus and Valens, who spent here the greatest part of their times; and from the first dawning of the Gospel, with the seat of the Patriarch. A Title of such eminency in all times of the Church, the being in account to the See of Rome (till Constantine being made the Imperial City, got precedence of it) that there are at this time no less than four great Prælates which pretend unto it: that is to say, the true Patriarch, governing the Christians of those parts, whom they call Syrians or Melchites; the Pfæda-Patriarch of the Jacobite and Maronite Sectaries, both which for the greater credit to their Sejins, do assume this Title; and finally, a titular Patriarch nominated by the Pope; who since the time that the Western Christians were possessed of these Eastern Countries, hath assumed a power unto himself of nominating Patriarch for Alexandria, Hierusalem, and this City of Antioch.

The City seated on both sides of the River Orontes, about twelve miles distant from the Shores of the Mædian; the River Pharar passing on the South-side of it. By Art and Nature fortified even to admiration: compassed with a double Wall, the outmost of which was of Stone, the other of Brick, with four hundred and sixty Towers in the Walls, and an impregnable Citadel at the East-end thereof; and on the other side defended with big broken Mountains, whereunto was adjoining a deep Lake, coming out of the River Pharar, before-mentioned. Adorned in former times with many sumptuous Palaces, and magnificent Temples, answerable to the Reputation of so great a City; till taken by the Saracens, and after by the Turks and Mamelucks, men careless of all State and Beauty in their affairs of State, it began to grow unto decay. Recovered by the Western Christians from the power of the Turks, after a Siege of seven Months, June 3. Anno 1098, confirmed in their possession by a great and memorable Victory, got in the very fight hereof within few days after (June 28) obtained against Corbegas, Lieutenant of the Persian Sultan; in which, with the loss of four thousand and two hundred of their own, they slew a hundred thousand of the Enemy. The Town and Territory given by the Conquerors to Bohemund a Noble Norman, and Prince of Tarentum; who by practising with one Pyrrhus, who had the command of one of the chief Towers thereof, afterwards called St. Georges Tower, was secretly let into the City, and so made way for all the rest. Bohemund thus made the Prince, or as some say, King of Antioch, left it to Bohemund his Son about ten years after: succeeded in this Principate by Tancred and Rogers, Princes of great Renown in those Holy Wars; which last unfortunately slain by the Turks, not far from Alleppo, in the year 1120. Baldwin the second having revenged his death by a signal Victory, joyined this Estate to the Kingdom of Hierusalem. Betrayed about sixty years after this, that is to say, in the year 1188. it came into the Power of Saladine, the victorious King of Egypt and Damascus, and therewithal no fewer than five and twenty Cities which depended on the fortunes of it: the glories of this famous City so declining after this last Tragedy (but whether laid a waste of full purpose, or destroyed by the injury of the time, I am not able to declare) that it is grown the Sepulchre of what once it was, and lieth buried in its own sad Ruins, hardly preserving the repute of a sorry Village. Such is the infatigability of all worldly Glories. Some other Towns there are in this part of Syria, but not to be remembered the same day with Antioch.

As for the Story of this Province, as a State distinct, we find it had a King of its own, called the King of Hamath (the Kingdom of Tol or Ton before remembered) who together with the King of Arphad, commanded in this part of Syria, and the Isles adjoining. Vassals in time succeeding to the Kings of Tyre, who lorded it over all the Sea-coasts thereof, and consequently had great influence on the Islands also. And it continued in this State till the Affyrans Kings began to turn their Forces Westward; when added to that Empire by Tiglab Pilefer, after the subversion of the Kingdom of Damascus; or by Salmassiff, after the destruction of that of Israel. The proud but dreadful vaunt which Sennacherib, the Successor of those mighty Monarchs, made to Hezekiah, viz. Where are the Gods of Hamath and Arphad? shews clearly, that those Kingdoms had been conquered not long before; and therefore needs by Salmassiff, or Tiglab Pilefer. Afterwards, in the struggles between the Babylonians and Affyrans, for the chief Command, it was a while at the devotions of the King of Egypt, being at Reblis in this Province, that Jehobaz King of Judah was put into Bonds, by the command of Pharash Necho, as was said before. But Necho being not long after vanquished by Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, it returned again to that Crown, and after followed the same fortunes with the rest of Syria.

that Alam, or Helam, next unto which David discomfited that great Army of the Mesopotamians, mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. 16, 17. 9 Rafabba, a Town of note in the time of Ptolemy; but of greater in the Holy Scripture, where it is represented to us by the name of Rafab, Jsa. 3. 20. Rafab Civitas Syriae, as Saint Hierom hath it: and if a Town of Syria, then most like this 10 Beab, and 11 Berobab, two other Cities of this Kingdom, taken by David in his War against Hadad-ezar, 2 Sam. 8. 8. the last supposed to be the Barabene of Ptolemy, though placed by him among the Towns of Arabia the Desert, to which it seems it was allotted in the change of time.

This part of Syria as the rest, was once a distinct Kingdom of it self, by the name of the Kingdom of Sobab, or of Aram-Sobab. The first King thereof, whose name occurs in Holy Scripture, being Rebub, the Co-temporary of Saul King of Israel, by whom discomfited in battle, as is said 1 Sam. 14. 47. But Adad-ezar the Son of Rebub, a Prince of greater power and valour than his Father was, having brought all the neighbouring Kings under his command (as is said 2 Sam. 10. 19.) conceived himself a fit match for David, and thereupon opposed his passage, as he went to recover his border at the River Euphrates. In which Action though he lost a thousand Chariots, and twenty thousand Foot, and seven hundred Horse, yet would he not end the war: but first with the Syrians of Damascus, and after with the Amorites and their Confederates; and finally by the aid of the Mesopotamians, renewed the Quarrel. But being discomfited also in this last enterprise with the loss of forty thousand and seven hundred men, and his life to boot, the Kingdom of Zobab was brought under by the Kings of Damascus. The story of this war we have in 2 Sam. ch. 8. v. 10. in 1 Chron. ch. 18. and 1 King. 11. 23, 24. yet were not the Kings of Damascus so well settled in it, but that David had possessed himself of Beab and Berobab, and other pieces of importance: the Regal City of Hamath-Zobab being won by Solomon, and many of the best Towns of it built by him to assure his Conquest. But the Kingdom of Solomon being rent in pieces in the next Succession, the Kingdom of Zobab fell unto those of Damascus: and so continued till Damascus it self was conquered by the Kings of Affria: unless perhaps that Hamath, which Jeroboam the second is said to have subdued (together with Damascus it self) to the Crown of Israel, 2 King. 14. 28. were this Hamath-Zobab, as perhaps it was.

After this nothing memorable in the affairs of this Country, till the time of Gallienus the Roman Emperor: during whose reign, amongst the rest who *cannon*ed that Empire betwixt themselves, commonly called the Thirty Tyrants, Odenatus a man of great power and virtue assumed the Imperial habit, and took unto him the command of these parts of Syria, together with Mesopotamia, and some other Provinces, which he had conquered from Sapor the King of Persia: against whom he had to good an hand, that he discomfited him in battle, seiz'd upon his Treasures, and took many of his Nobles, and most of his Concubines. For which great acts admitted partner in the Empire by Gallienus who was not long after slain by Maurinus his Cousin German. He by that murder hoped to obtain the Principality of Palmyrene (for by that name it was now called) but in that deceived. For after his death, Zenobia his unfortunate Widow, a most masculine Lady, not only preserved the Principality of Palmyrene for the use of her Children; but took upon her both the Purple habit, and the command of his Army: which she managed with great wisdom and gallantry, the rest of the time of Gallienus, all the reigns of Clau- dus, and Quintillus, his two next Successors. But vanquished and took Prisoner by Aurelianus (who had the happiness to unite the broken limbs of that Empire into as strong a body as ever formerly) the wasted in triumph through Rome. The terror of her name, and the unsuccessfulness of the fight, so generally heightening the expectation; Ut ea specie nihil unquam esset pompabilis, fatis Trebellius Pollio. That never any of them was esteemed so glorious. A Lady of so strong a virtue, and of such command upon her self, that it is said never to have made use of her husbands company when she perceived her self with child. After this nothing singular in the story of Palmyrene, but when all the rest of Syria was subdued by the Christians of the West, this Province and the next only was made good against them by the Turkish Sultans of Damascus.

COELO-STRIA.

COELO-STRIA is bounded on the East with Palmyrene, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with Palsetine; on the North, with Palmyrene, and some part of Syria Propria, from which divided by the interposition of Mount Libanus; on the South, with Ismaea and Arabia Deserta also.

This is the Syria so much mentioned in the Books of Kings and Chronicles, called by the Greeks, Calo-Syria, i.e. Syria Cava, because partly situate in the hollow Valleys interjected betwixt Libanus and Anti-Libanus, and sometimes also Syro-Phoenicia, from the intermixture of those people; as the Phoenicians which went with Dido into Africa, were called Libo-Phoenices. By the Romans when made a distinct Province of that Empire, it had the name of Phoenice Libani, or Phoenice Libanensis, to difference it from the other Phoenicia, which they call Martima. But before all this by the Hebrews named Damasc, Syria Damascena in the Latin, from Damasc the chief City of it: unless perhaps we should rather say, that Aram-Damasc contained only that lay between the Mountains of Libanus and Anti-Libanus, the rest being added by the Romans, out of the neighbouring parts of Palsetine and Arabia Deserta, as perhaps it was.

Chief Rivers hereof, are 1 Abana, and 2 Pharfar, the Rivers of Damascus, as the Scripture calleth them, 2 King. 5. The one of which is thought to be the River Adonis, spoken of already; the other that which Ptolemy calleth Chrysorrhoas, or the golden Flood; which rising in the Hills of this Country, passeth by Damascus, and so together with the other into the Mediteranean Sea. Chief Mountains of it, 1 Aladamas by the Phoenicians called Syrian, by the Amorites, Samir; a ridge of Hills which beginning at the East-point of Anti-Libanus, bend directly Southwards, shutting up on that side the Land of Israel, whereof more in Palsetine. 2 Hippus, a large of Mountains in the South parts of this Province, where it bordereth on Arabia Deserta.

Towns of most consideration in it. 1 Helipsis so called from an Image of the Sun there worshipped in the time of Paganisms; now Belebec, or (as some say) Ealbec. 2 Chalcis, more Eastward toward Damascus, which gave the title of a King to Ptolemy Menelaus, and his Son Lysanias, the Kingdom then extending over the City of Abila, and the whole Province of Ismaea in Palsetine. But that Family being either expired or grown out of favour, and Abila with Ismaea otherwise disposed of, the title of the King of Chalcis, with the Town and Territory, was given to Herod, brother of Agrippa the first, King of Jewry. Erroneously supposed by some Learned men to be that Chalcis, from which the Country called

Chalcidien

Chalcidien takes denomination; that Chalcis being placed by Ptolemy a degree and a half more East than Damascus, and two degrees more towards the North; where as this Chalcis lieth on the West of that City, in the shades of Libanus, and in the very same degree of Northern Latitude. 3 Abila, seated at the foot of Libanus, betwixt Helipsis and Chalcis, from whence the Country round about it is called Abilene; given to Lysanias, the Son of the former Lysanias, King of Chalcis, with the Title of Tetrarch, Mentioned Luke 3. 1. with those other Princes which shared Palsetine amongst them. Not that he was the Son of Herod, as anciently Beda and Enthymias, and of late times some very indolent men have been of opinion: but partly because the Cities of the Chalcis and Abila of right belonged to those of the Tribe of *Naphthali*m (though never conquered or possessed by them) and so to be accounted a part of Palsetine; and partly because the Tetrarchy of Abilene, when Saint Luke wrote that Gospel, was possessed together with the rest by King Agrippa. Restored (as it seemeth) to the former Family, after his decease; for known it was by the name of Abila Lysania in the time of Ptolemy. 4 Adida, memorable for the Victory which Aretas King of Arabia obtained near unto it, against Alexander King of Jewry, the Kingdom of Syria then lying open as a prey to the next Invaders. 5 Hippus, or Hippone, as Pliny calleth it, not far from the Mountain of that name. 6 Capitolias, now called Sanet, 7 Gadara, 8 Scythopolis, 9 Gerasa, and 10 Philadelpheia, reckoned by Ptolemy as Cities of Calo-Syria; but of right belonging unto Palsetine, where we meant to take notice of them. 11 Eden, at the foot of Mount Libanus, now a Town of the Maronites; and anciently of such esteem, that the whole Country of Damascus was called Beit-Eden, Amos 1. 5. 12 Damascus, situate in a large Plain environed with Hills, and watered with the River Chrysorrhoas, which, with a great noise descendeth from the Mountains, and so abundantly serveth the City, that not only most of the Houses have their Fountains of it, but their Orchards and Gardens have some Rivulets conveyed into them. The Country round about abundantly enrich'd with plenty of most excellent Wines (the Vines hereof bearing Grapes all the year long) and great store of Wheat; as their Orchards with variety of most delicate Fruits: our Damascens, (or Pruna Damascena, as the Latins call them) coming first from hence; as also our Damask Roses, but infinite sort of their natural sweetnels, by the transplantation. A place so furnishing of Delights, so glib about with odoriferous and curious Gardens, that the vile Impostor Mabomet would never be persuaded to come into it, for fear (as himself was used to say) left being ravished with the inexpressible pleasures of it, he should forget the business he was sent about, and make there his Paradise. But Mubavius, one of his Successors, having no such scruple, removed the Regal Seat unto it, where it continued (for the most part) till the building of Bagdad by Bagiafer the twentieth Caliph, about an hundred years after this Removal: the Regal Seat before that time being at Mecca, Cufa, or some other of the best Towns of Arabia Felix. The chief Buildings of it, of late times (till destroyed by the Tartars) were a strong Castle, in the opinion of those times held to be impregnable; and not without great difficulty forced by Tamarlane, whom nothing was able to withstand; as was majestic a Church, garnished with forty sumptuous Porches, and no fewer than 9000 Lanthorns of Gold and Silver; which with 30000 people in it (who fled thither for Sanctuary) was by the said Tamarlane most cruelly and unmercifully burnt, and pulled down unto the ground. Repaired by the Mamaluks of Egypt, when Lords of Syria, it hath since flourished in Trade, the People being industrious, and celebrated for most excellent Artizans; the branching of Satins, and fine Linen, which we call by the name of Damaski, being amongst many others, one of their Inventions. Renowned in the Old Testament for the Kings hereof and the birth of Eliezer, Abraham's Steward (so honourably ancient was this City); and in the New, for the Conversion of St. Paul, who first preached the Gospel in this place, and here to narrowly escaped the snares of his Enemies, that he was fain to be let down out of the House in which he was, by the help of a Basket.

But ancient and honourable though this City of Damascus was, we find nothing of the Story of it, till the time of David; the Kings thereof until those days, being conceived to have been Homagers and Tributaries to the Kings of Zobab. The first Exploit ascribed unto them in the Holy Scripture, is their coming to the aid of Adad-ezar, upon his first defeat by David: in which action having lost 22000 men, they were so broken, that they did not only suffer David to put Garrisons in the best Cities of Damascus, but patiently became his Servants, and brought Presents to him, 2 Sam. 8. 5, 6. The name of this unfortunate Prince not made known in Scripture, is by Josephus affirmed out of Nicolaus Damascus, to have been Adad (a name much cherished and assumed by the Kings Successors) who keeping constant to the party of Adad-ezar in his following Wars, was at last slain with him, in that great discomfure which David gave them, mentioned in 2 Sam. ch. 10. v. 18. In which Text the Scripture telleth us nothing of the death of those Kings, that being supplied to us by Josephus out of their Records; who also added, that Rezin, one of the chief Commanders of Adad-ezar, taking this advantage, not only usurped his Masters Kingdom, but made himself Master of the Kingdom of Damascus also. From this time forward the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Syria. Nor is this the Tradition of Josephus only, but founded plainly on the Scriptures, of which see 1 King. 11. v. 23, 24. The Scriptures after this taking no notice of any other Kings of Syria (by the name of Kings of Syria) but of those that reigned in Damascus; who in short time had swallowed up the petty Kingdoms of Geshur, Itt-tok, Rebub, besides that of Sobab before-mentioned.

THE KINGS of SYRIA or DAMASCUS.

- 1 Adad, the Friend and Confederate of Adad-ezar King of Sobab, in whose quarrel he was vanquished and slain by David.
- 2 Rezin, of whom the Scripture saith, In the 2. of Chron, that when David flew them of Sobab, he fled from Adad-ezar his Lord, and gathered men unto him, and certain Captains over a Band, and went to Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.
- 3 Adad II, an Idumean, supposed to be of the Family of Adad-ezar, but rather as I think of Adad, for fear of David fled to Egypt, where he married Tabner the Queens Sister; and hearing that both David and Joab were dead, returned again into his Country, and as some write, expelled Rezin out of Damascus, and reigned there as King.
- 4 Hezion, Successor unto Adad.
- 5 Tabrimon, the Son of Hezion, as is said 2 King. 15. 18.
- 6 Beit-hadad, the Son of Tabrimon; hired by Assi King

King of Judah, to aid him in his Wars against Baalsh of Israel.

7 Ben-badad II. Son of the former, twice invaded Israel in the reign of Ahab; but both times notably repulsed: the first time by a Sally of 7000 men at the Siege of Samaria; the next at Aphec, where with the like number in effect, he was taken Prisoner, and his Army routed.

8 Hazael, Captain of the Host to Ben-badad, anointed King of Syria by the Prophet Elifha, whom God appointed to do that, by his hands he might avenge himself on Ben-badad, whom Hazael slew; but he proved as ill a neighbour to the Kings of Israel, as those before him. He attempted upon Judah also in the time of Joram, but bribed with the Treasures of the Temple, he withdrew his Forces.

9 Ben-badad III. Son of Hazael, discomfited in three set Battles by Joram King of Israel.

10 Ben-badad IV. Son of Ben-badad the third.

11 Ben-badad V. Son of Ben-badad the fourth.

12 Ben-badad VI. Son of Ben-badad the fifth, in the time of one of which three Kings, but which one we find not for certain, Jeroboam the Son of Joar King of Israel subdued both Chamath, and Damascus; of which see 2 King. 14. v. 18.

13 Rezin II. Son of Ben-badad the sixth, and the last King of Damascus, who joining with Pekah King of Israel, against Abaz King of Judah, enforced him to call unto his aid Tiglath Pileser, King of Assyria; by whom Rezin was taken and beheaded, and the City of Damascus won; the Kingdom of Syria by that means united to the Assyrian Empire.

After this time, the Syrians continued subject to the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs; and in the overthrow of that Empire by the Medes and Persians, became a part of their Estate: remaining so till the first Battle betwixt Alexander and Darius, fought near Issus in Cilicia. The Victory wherein falling to the Macedonians, gave him without more trouble than the Siege of Tyre, the possession of Syria and Phœnicia. He dying not long after his Conquest of Persia, this Country lay as it were at stake betwixt Ptolemy King of Egypt, and Antigonus the chief Lord of Asia: but the possession of it, together with the rest of the Persian Empire, in both Asia, fell in conclusion to the share of Seleucus, for his many great and signal Victories firamed Nicæus a man strangely preferred. For being at the first Governour of Chaldaea only, he was forced to leave Babylon, and to forsake his Province for fear of Antigonus, then dreadful to all the Macedonian Captains; and to fly into Egypt, where he became Ptolemy's Admiral. After which Ptolemy fighting a pitched Field with Demetrius, Son to Antigonus, took Seleucus with him, and having won the Battle, gave him aid and licence to recover his former Government. Seleucus well beloved of the People, soon made himself Master not of Chaldaea only, but of all the Persian Provinces beyond Euphrates: and not long after (being seconded by his good Friends Ptolemy, Cassander, and Lysimachus) he encountered Antigonus at Issus in Ionia, where Antigonus himself was slain, and his whole Army routed. This Victory made Seleucus Lord of all Asia, from whence passing over into Europe, he vanquished and slew Lysimachus: Seven Months after which Victory, he was slain by Ptolemy Ceraneus, whose Patron and Protector he had formerly been; being yet the last Survivor of all Alexander's Princes, and the only Possessor of all the Dominions which his Master had, by the way of Conquest, Egypt excepted. His Successors, although they were Lords of all Asia, yet since in Syria they kept their residence, to the end that they might the better furnish themselves with Souldiers out of Greece upon all occasions, as was said before, they were commonly called the Kings of Syria. But long they held not in that greatness of Estate and Power, which Seleucus left them; being a full-bodied Tree, and of several Limbs, it endured the lopping off of many Branches; and many a sad blow at the very Root of it, before it fell. For in the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of this House, Arfaces a Noble Parthian recovered from it all the Provinces of the Persian Empire, lying on that side of Euphrates; and erected the so much celebrated Parthian Kingdom, whereof more in Persia. And in the Reign of Antiochus Magnus, so called for his Victories in Egypt, Judea, and Babylonia, the Romans extorted from it all the Asian Provinces on this side Mount Taurus, not wanting many provocations to induce them to it: for he not only had made War against Ptolemy Philopater King of Egypt, whom the Romans had taken into their Protection; but stirred up the Cities and States of Greece against them: invaded Lysimachia, and some other parts of Europe, in defiance of them, and had received Annibal the Carthaginian, and then the Aetolian, their most mortal Enemies, into his Dominion, governing his Counsels by the influences which they had upon him. Nor may we think but that Ambition and Avarice, to add to their Fame and Empire by the overthrow of so great a Prince, did persuade much with them. So that the point being brought to a ready issue, they pleaded it on both sides in the Battle of Magnesia, a City of Lydia, to which Antiochus brought an Army of 300000 Foot, and as many armed Chariots, besides a Host of Elephants, if the Roman Writers be not over-lavish in their Reports. Receiving the Advice of Annibal, and committing his Affairs wholly to Evit-Congellus, he was vanquished by no more than four Legions of Enemies, and for his Peace compelled to quit all his Asian Provinces on that side of Taurus, and to pay 15000 Talents in ready money for the charge of the War. The rest of his Estates they were content he should enjoy for a longer time, Et libentius quod tam facile cessit (as Plutarch handsomely puts it on him) because he had so easily relinquished that. Afterwards in the civil Brolls among themselves, about the Succession of the Kingdom, Alexander King of the Jews took from them many of their best Towns in Palestine, as Joppa, Gaza, Ambedon, Azani, Rhinocorua, almost all Samaria, and Gaskonia, with Scythopolis, Gadara, and many other strong Towns in Cœle Syria. Finally, when they had continued almost all Syria, the Royal Race, and changed their Kings no less than ten times in forty years (a sure sign of a falling and expiring Kingdom) they were fain to cast themselves upon Tigranes the King of Armenia, a puissant and successful Prince, till engaged in the Quarrel of Mithridatus against the Romans: by whom stripped of all his Estates on this side Euphrates, he was fain to content himself with his own Armenia, leaving Syria to the absolute disposal of Pompey, who presently reduced it to the form of a Province. This said, we have not much more to do with the House of Seleucus, but to lay down their Names, and times of their several Governments, till we draw towards the last end of

THE MACEDONIAN KINGS of STRIA.

A.M.
3564 1 Seleucus Nicæus, the first King of this House. 31.

3585 2 Antiochus, firamed Soter, or the Saviour; memorable for nothing so much, as marrying with Stratonice his Father's Wife, in his Father's life-time.

3704 3 Antiochus II. by his flattering Courtiers firamed Theos, or the God; but being poisoned by his Wife, he proved a Mortal.

3719 4 Seleucus II. firamed by the like flattery Callinicus, or fair Conquerour, because shamefully beaten by the Parthians.

3739 5 Seleucus III. called for the like reason Ceraninus, or the Thunderer; the eldest Son of Callinicus.

3742 6 Antiochus III. firamed Magnus, the younger Son of Callinicus, a Prince that embraced many great Actions, and was fortunate in his Successes beyond Euphrates: he plagued the Jews, but lost all Asia Minor unto the Romans.

3778 7 Seleucus IV. called Philopater, the Son of Antiochus, who first began to cast his eye upon the Riches of the Temple at Hierusalem.

3790 8 Antiochus IV. firamed Epiphanes, or the Illuminist; but more truly Epimanes, or the Mad. The great Scourge of the Jews; Brother of Seleucus Philopater, with whom begetteth the Story of the first Book of the Maccabees.

3802 9 Antiochus V. called by the name of Eupator, the Son of Epiphanes; who by Lysias his Captain tyrannized over the poor Jews, for the little time that he reigned; as did also 3804 10 Demetrius, firamed Soter, Son of Seleucus Philopater, by the hands of Nicæus: having possessed himself of the Diadem, by the death of Eupator, slain in his favour by the Souldiers who revolted from him. He was afterwards deposed for a time by Alexander Bala, pretending himself to be the Son of Eupator, supported herein by the Antiochians.

3814 11 Alexander Bala, discomfited in his first Battle by Demetrius, whom he slew and vanquished in the second; married Cleopatra Daughter of Ptolemy Philometer, by whose aid he was victorious. But a Quarrel breaking out between them, Ptolemy invaded Syria, and caused himself to be crowned King of it; Alexander being slain by some of his Souldiers.

3819 12 Demetrius II. firamed Nicæus, Son of Demetrius the first, recovered his Fathers Kingdom, a Friend of the Maccabees, but too cruel to his own People, that he was driven out of his Kingdom by Tryphon General of his Armies.

3821 13 Antiochus VI. firamed Eusebius, the Son of Alexander and Cleopatra, advanced unto the Throne by Tryphon, and after slain by him to make way for himself unto the Diadem.

3824 14 Tryphon, called also Diodorus, having driven out Demetrius, and slain Antiochus, made himself King.

3827 15 Antiochus VII. firamed Soter, Brother of Demetrius, having overcome and slain Tryphon, succeeded him in the Estate; for a while victorious against the Parthians, but afterwards overcome and slain by them.

After whose death Demetrius Nicæus (having lived in Parthia since the loss of his Kingdom) was restored again unto the Throne, which having held about four years; he was again dispossessed and slain by

3843 16 Alexander II. firamed Zebennus, an Egyptian of mean birth, set up by Ptolemy Evergetes; and pretending himself to be the adopted Son of Antiochus, afterwards vanquished and slain by 3845 17 Antiochus VIII. from the crookedness of his nose firamed Gryphus, Son of Demetrius, aided herein by the Egyptians, with whom reconciled: having reigned about eight years in peace; employed him in war with his half Brother Antiochus firamed Cyzicenus; with which variable successes on both sides, continued till the time of his death, having reigned 29 years in all.

3874 18 Seleucus V. Son of Antiochus Gryphus, in the beginning of his reign overcame and slew his Uncle Cyzicenus; but being vanquished by Antiochus firamed Eusebius or Pius, one of the Sons of Cyzicenus, he fled into Cilicia, and was there burnt in his Palace.

19 Antiochus IX. firamed Eusebius, having first vanquished Seleucus, and afterwards Antiochus, another of the Sons of Gryphus, was crowned King of Syria; but slain not long after in the Persian wars.

20 Philip, and Demetrius III. firamed Eucerus, younger Sons of Gryphus, jointly Kings of Syria; but reigning in their several parts, Of which Demetrius intending to dispossess his Brother, was himself vanquished, and forced to fly into Parthia; leaving the whole Kingdom unto Philip. During which amongst themselves Syria was invaded, and in part conquered by Artax King of the Arabians, and Alexander King of the Jews.

3884 21 Tigranes King of Armenia, during these dissensions was by the Syrians chosen King, that by his power they might be freed from the Jews and Arabians: the most puissant Prince that reigned in Syria, since the time of Antiochus the Great, as being King of Syria by election, of Armenia by succession, of Media by conquest. But engaging himself with Mithridatus (whose Daughter he had married) against the Romans, was vanquished by Lucullus: who with the loss of five Romans only, and the wounds of an hundred, is reported to have slain of his Enemies above 100000 men. Finally, being again broken and vanquished by Lucullus, he yielded himself to Pompey (who being appointed Lucullus Successor, deprived him of the honour of ending that War) and retaining to himself Armenia only, he left all Syria to the Romans, having reigned eighteen years. And though Antiochus Comagenus, the Son of Eusebius, petitioned Pompey for a restitution to the Throne of his Ancestors, yet it would not be granted: Pompey replying, That he would not trust the Country into such weak hands as were not able to defend it against the Arabians, Parthians, and the like Invaders; and so reduced it presently to the form of a Province. The government of this Country under these new Lords, was accounted to be one of the greatest honours of the Empire: the Persæ hereof having almost regal jurisdiction over all the Regions on this side Euphrates, with a superintendency over Egypt. Niger, the concurrent of Severus was Persæ here; and on the strength hereof presumed on that competition. So also was Cassius Syrus, who being a Native of this Country, and well-beloved by reason of his moderate and plausible demeanour, had almost tumbled M. Antonius out of his Throne. On this occasion it was enacted by the Senate, that no man hereafter should have any military or legal command in the Province where he was born: Left perhaps supported by the natural propension of the people to one of their own Nation; and heartened by the powerableness of his Friends, he might appropriate that to himself, which was common to the Senate and people of Rome. But this was when it was entire, and passed but for one Province only, Phœnicia being taken into the account; which made the Antiochians so proud and insolent, that Adrian, in his time intended to subduet Phœnicia from it: Ne tot civitatem Metropolis Antiochia deceretur (faith Gallicanus) that Antioch might not be the chief of so many Cities. But what he lived not to accomplish, was performed by Constantine, by whom Phœnicia was not only taken off; but Syria it self divided into four distinct Provinces, as was shewed before, each of them having its Metropolis or Mother City; but all subordinate to the command of the Comes, or Præfide of the East, as he to the command of the Præfide Prætorii Orientis, the greatest Officer of the Empire, of whom we have often spoke already.

For the defence hereof as well against all Foreign invasions, as the insurrections of the Natives (a wavering and inconstant People) the Romans kept here in continual pay four Legions, with their aids, and other additaments. For so many Marians had here in the time of Galba; and by the strength and reputation of those Forces, was able to transfer the Empire, upon Vespasian. And though the Constantinopolitan Emperors to whose share it fell, in the division of the Empire, rather increased than diminished any part of this strength: yet when the fatal time came, that Empire was in the declination, the Saracens, under the conduct of Hamer, their third Caliph, Anno 636. possessed themselves of it, Heraclius then reigning in Constantinople. And it continued in their power till Tangolix the Turk, having conquered Persia, and the Provinces on that side of Euphrates, passed over the River into Syria, and made himself Master of a great part of that also. A quarrel falling out betwixt him and the nearest Kinsmen, and thereby a great stop made in their furthest progress, was then composed, by the mediation of the Caliph of Babylon, in the time of Axon his Successor. To Cutlu Meser was assigned a convenient Army, to be by him employed against the Christians, with Regal power over the Provinces by him gained, without relation or subordination to the Persian Sultan: of whose successes and affairs hath been spoke elsewhere. To Melech and Ducat, two others of his discontented Kinsmen, but all of the same Selæucian family, he gave the fair Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, and those parts of Syria, with whatsoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Egypt, who then held all Phœnicia, and the Sea-coasts of Palestine; to be held in fee and vassalage of the Crown of Persia. To these two brethren then we are to refer the beginning of the Turkish Kingdom in Syria: who, with their Successors, by reason that here they held their residence, caused themselves to be called

The TURKISH KINGS of DAMASCUS.

1075 1 Melech and Ducat, the first Turkish Kings of Damascus, by the gift of Axon, the second Sultan of the Turks in Persia, added to their Dominions all the rest of Syria, together with part of Cilicia, and some neighbouring Provinces in the Lesser Asia, N. N. Sultan of Damascus, at such times as the Christians of the West won the Holy Land: against whom he notably defended the City and Territories of Damascus; and in a set battel discomfited and slew Roger the Norman, Prince of Antioch.

1146 3 Noradine, (the Son of Sangein) General of the Armies, and Son-in-law to the former King, succeeded him in the estate. A noble Prince, memorable amongst other things for a gallant answer made to his Commanders when they perswaded him to take the advantage on the death of Baldwin the third and to invade Hierusalem whilst the Christians were busie in solemnizing his funerals. Not so, faith he, Compassion and regard to be had of the just sorrow of those Christians, who have lost such a King, as could not be equalled in the world.

1175 4 Melechysala, Son of Noradine, continued by reason of his youth, by his Nobles, and Souldiery, who made choice of Saladine for their King; by whom dispossessed first, and after vanquished.

1176 5 Saladine, the Turkish Sultan of Egypt, having vanquished the Persians, or Parthians, coming under the conduct of Caochod, Uncle to Melechysala, to restore that Prince to his estate, remained King of Damascus: and by the puissance of his Armies, recovered from the Christians all Syria, and the Holy-Land, with the City of Hierusalem also.

1199 6 Eladet, or El-Aphed, the eldest Son of Saladine, succeeded in the Realm of Damascus; which he exchanged for that of Egypt with his Brother Elaziz.

7 Elaziz, the second Son of Saladine, succeeded upon this exchange in the Realm of Damascus, murdered not long after by his Uncle Saphradine.

8 Saphradine, the Brother of Saladine, having barbarously murdered eight of the Sons of Saladine, (the youngest called Saphradine escaping only, who was after Sultan of Aleppo) possessed himself of the Kingdom of Damascus, left at his death to Corradine, his Son or Nephew.

9 Corradine, Son or Nephew to the Tyrant Saphradine, was by him at his death left Sultan of Damascus; to which all Syria and Palestine were then made Provincials. But the treacheries and murders of Saphradine crying loud for vengeance, Hælan the Tartar, in the year 1260, having taken the King of Damascus Prisoner (but whether Corradine, or some other, I am not able to say) brought him before the walls of the City threatening to kill him in the sight of the people, if they did not deliver it unto him, which the Citizens refusing to do, the wretched King was torn in pieces, and the City taken by assault: the Kingdom taken by the Conquerours conferred upon Agad the Son of Hælan. And so ended the Selæucian Family of the Kings of Damascus in the person of Corradine, or the Son of Corradine, most miserably murdered by the Tartars; as it had done in Egypt 17 years before, in the person of Melechysala, and Elmutan, the Son of Melechide, as villainously depoted and murdered by the Mamelucks. So slippery is the foundation of those Kingdoms that are laid in blood.

Nor did this Kingdom hold long in the hands of the Tartars, Tartars, recovered from them in short time by the Mamelucks, then Kings of Egypt: from them once more regained by the furious Tamarslane: who in the year 1400 besieged Damascus with an Army of 1200000 men, (if the number be not mistaken, and one Cypher added more than should Jin pursuit whereof he filled up the ditches with his Prisoners, put all the people to the sword; and with great Art raised three Towers as a Trophy of his victory, built with the heads of those whom he had so slaughtered. A man so strangely made up of vice and virtues, that it is hard to say which had the predominance. But the violence of this tempest being overblown, the Mamelucks, from whom he had also conquered the Kingdom of Egypt, recovered Syria by degrees, and repaired Damascus, continuing in their power till the year 1516, when Selimus the first discomfited Campfon Gaurus the Egyptian Sultan in the fields of Aleppo. Upon the news whereof the Citizens of Damascus, fearing the spoil of their rich City, then of very great trading, let open their Gates unto the Villors; as did all the other Cities and Towns of Syria, by their example. By means whereof, without any more blows, the Turks became Lords of this Country; as the next year of Egypt also, by the vanquishment and death of Tonimbine who succeeded Campfon: so rooting out the name and government of the Mamelucks, and adding those rich Kingdoms to the Turkish Empire.

And so much for Syria.

MOUNT HERMON.

N our passage out of Cælo-Syria into Palestine, we must cross Mount Hermon; a ledge of Hills; which beginning at the East point of the Anti-Libanus, bend directly South: in different places, and by several Nations called by divers names. By Polomy called Aladamas; by the Amorites, Samir; by the Phœnicians, Syriens; and by that name remembered in the Book of Psalms. But Aladamas they are called only where they border upon Cælo-Syria. Where they begin to part the Region of Trachonitis from Arabia Deserta, they are called by Moses and the Scriptures Hermon, part of the Kingdom of Oz, the King of Basan, as is said, Joshua, chap. 12. 6. Syriem by the Sidonians, as is affirmed, Deut. 3. 9. Running further after this unto the South, they are called Gilead or Galaad; by Strabo, Trachonitis, after the name of the Region along which they pass, and are conceived to be the highest part of all Mount Libanus, or rather of that long ridge of Mountains which there beginning. And so we are to understand the words of the Prophet Jeremy, saying, Galaad tu mihi Caput Libani, as the Visger readeth it. That is to say, that as the head is the highest part of a man; so these Hills, or this part of them, was the highest of all the branches, or spurs of Libanus, called Galeed by Jacob, from that heap of stones which was there laid by Laban and Jacob, to be a witness of the Covenant which was made betwixt them, Gen. 31. 27. the word signifying in the Original, An heap of Witnesses. And Laban said, This heap is a Witness betwixt me and thee this day; therefore was the name of it called Galeed, ver. 28. By these Hills, and the main body of the Anti-Libanus lying on the North, and the Mountains of Phœnicia and Jumee on the West, the Land of Palestine is so shut up on every side, that no Fortresses can be stronger by Wit or Art, than that Country by Nature: the passages in some parts so narrow, as hardly to afford passage for a single person. Claudius rudique montibus, hinc abruptis rupibus, & profundis vallibus concussis Tormentum, inde alia & implexis an fructibus sic contrahit, ut per angustor colles vix pateat transitus viatori, as my Author hath it. I had almost forgot to add, that that part of these hills, which is commonly known in Scripture by the name of Hermon, is in one place thereof called Sibon, as Deut. 4. 48. where it is said, that the Israelites possessed the Land from Aroer on the bank of the River Arnon, even to Mount Sihon, which is Hermon. As also that one of the highest tops or Summits of it, had the name of Amara, alluded to by Solomon in the fourth of the Canticles, by some mistaken for Ananias, a branch of Taurus, which divides Syria from Cilicia in the Lesser Asia, with which Solomon had but small or no acquaintance. And so having cleared our selves of so much of this Mountain, as lay before us in our way, we pass over to Palestine: where we shall meet with it again, (or rather with the Western parts and branches of it) under the names of Gilead and Trachonitis, as a part of that Country.

O F

PALESTINE.

PALESTINE is bounded on the East, with the Hills last mentioned, by which parted from Calo-Syria, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea; and some part of Phœnicia; on the North, with the Anti-Libanus, which divides it from Syria; and the rest of Phœnicia; and on the South, with some part of Arabia Petrea.

It was first called Palestine from the Philistines, the most potent Nation of those parts. A name first found in the History of Herodotus, but generally used in times succeeding by the Greeks and Romans. And this I look on as the proper and adequate name of the whole Country, according to the bounds before laid down: the others, by which commonly called, being more restrained, and properly belonging to so much heretofore, as was in the possession of the Tribes of Israel. And of this sort are: 1 Canaan, or the Land of Canaan, so called from Canaan the son of Cham, by whom first peopled after the Flood; 2 The Land of Promise, because by God promised to Abraham, and his seed, for an habitation; 3 Israel, from the Israelites, or sons of Jacob, whose surname was Israel; 4 Judea, and by us Jewry, from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, the most prevalent of the Tribes of Israel. And 5 Terra Sancta, or the Holy Land, because the subject of the greatest part of the Holy Scripture; and that the work of our Redemption was herein accomplished by our Lord and Saviour. Which notwithstanding, we must know, that though these names do many times by a Synecdoche, express the whole Country of Palestine; yet neither the Canaanites or the Israelites were ever Masters of the whole: except only in the time of David, and of some of the Maccabean Princes, as also in some part of the reign of Herod the Great; all which had the good fortune to command it totally.

But being the most considerable people of it were the Tribes of Israel; we will first look upon the Country People under that capacity. And for so much heretofore as was held by them, it is situate between the 2d and 4th Climates; the longest day being fourteen hours and a quarter. The whole length but 200 miles, and not above 80 in breadth; yet was of such a fruitful soil, that before the coming in of the Israelites, it had 30 Kings; and after the coming in of that people, so extremely populous, that David numbered a Million and 300000 fighting men, besides those of the Tribes of Levi and Benjamin. But of the fruitfulness heretofore more shortly.

As for the People they were by composition of a middle stature, but strong of body: in their best times a murmuring and stiff-necked generation, never well pleased either with God or Man, with their Priests or Princes; seldom conform unto the Commandments of their God, nor very much constant to themselves; so crippled in their goings betwixt Superstitions and Idolatry, that they knew not how to walk uprightly: Idolatrous above measure, and incorrigible in it, till their coming back from the Captivity of Babylon: and after that as superstitious and severe, in the point of their Sabbath, as they had formerly been exorbitant in the worship of Idols. No Medium on either side, but extreme in both. Divided anciently into these four ranks, that is to say, 1 Jews, 2 Hellenists, 3 Proselytes, and 4 Samaritans: all of them pretending a right unto this Country, though not all of them dwelling in it.

Of these the first called Jews, from Judah, the predominant Tribe; and Hebrews, from Heber the son of Seth, grand-son of Sem, and one of the Ancestors of Abraham, were such as naturally descended of the Tribes of Israel, and lived for the most part in their own Country, adhering to the Law of Moses, and embracing the whole Canon of the Old Testament, from the Book of Genesis to the Book of the Prophet Malachi. Called also Israelites, because descended from the loyns of their Father Jacob, to whom God gave the name of Israel, for his great honour. But after the ten Tribes were carried away by Sargon, after to an endless captivity; and two Tribes (with the remainder of the rest) returned from that temporary one which they found in Babylon, the name of Israelites was laid by, and that of Jews assumed, as more proper to them. These read the Scriptures, and executed all Divine Offices in their natural Hebrew.

2. The Hellenists, were such as were Jews by parentage, but lived dispersed in most Provinces of the Roman Empire: called by that name (we may English it, the Grecizing Jews) because they read the Scriptures in the Greek or Septuagint's Translation; and performed all publick Offices in that language also. In other things Asseprophitians in their Sabbath, as tedious of their Circumcision, and others of the Rites and Ceremonies of the Law of Moses, as the Jews of Palestine: and for that reason, scorned and derided by the Gentiles, amongst whom they lived; Credits Judæus appella, faith one of their Poets, relating to their circumcising; Recutaneus Sabbata pates, faith another of them, with whom though unto their Sabbaths. Novi illic ritus & ceteris moribus contrarii, faith Tacitus, a graver Author, of the whole body of their Rituals, or Acts of worship.

3. The Proselytes were such, as not being Jews by birth, or descent of Parentage, conformed themselves unto their customs, and desired to be admitted to their Religion. And these were also of two sorts, the one called, Proselyti and the other, Proselyti fideles. The first of these, were admitted by the Jews to the worship of God, and were instructed in the hopes of the life to come, were obliged to those Precepts which the Hebrew Doctors call the Precepts of the sons of Noah; but were neither circumcised, nor otherwise conform to the Law of Moses. Which Precepts of the sons of Noah, so called, because supposed to be given by Noah unto his Sons, when he came out of the Ark, were seven in number: that is to say, 1 That they dealt uprightly with every man. 2 That they blessed and magnified the Name of God. 3 That they worshipped not any false Gods, but to abstain from Idolatry. 4 To refrain from all unlawful lulls and copulations. 5 To keep themselves from theft and robbery. 6 And from shedding blood. And 7 Not to eat the Flesh or Member of any Beast, taken from it when it was alive, by which all cruelty was forbidden. These, though they were admitted to the Worship of God, and might repair unto the Temple; yet because of their Uncircumcision, they were not suffered to converse with the Jews, nor to come into the same Court of the Temple with them: but were accounted as unclean, and had their Court apart assigned them in the Worship of God, which was called Avium Gentium, or Immundorum, and was the uttermost of all. The other Proselytes, which was called Proselyti fideles, conformed all things to the Jews, as in Circumcision, Sabbath-keeping, and all other Ceremonies: and were accounted of as adopted Jews; privileged as they were, to worship in the Lunar Court; bound as they were, from eating or drinking with a Gentile; and in a word, partakes with them in all things both divine and humane, and different in nothing from them but their Race or Parentage. These last in the New Testament called simply Proselytes, without any addition: the former by the name of Sabæus, or the worshipping Gentiles, of which Eccl. 16. 2. 14. & ch. 17. 24. 17. & ch. 18. 24. &c.

4. As for the Samaritans, they possessed a great part of this Country, which the Proselytes did not; yet were not so much Jews as they. But of these more anon, when we come to Samaria, the proper place of their abode.

As for the natural Jews themselves, they are divided also into several Sects; as, viz. 1 Essenes, 2. the Sadducees, 3. the Scribes, 4. the Pharisees, 5. the Herodians, and 6. the Gadonites, or Gallileans. The Essenes, or Esseni, derive their name, as some conceive, from Asca, which signifieth facere, to do, because they laboured with their hands: as others say, from Asa, which signifieth separatus, or to cure diseases, because they were much given to the Study and Practice of Physick. Their beginning is not yet agreed on. The first time they were heard of, was in the time of Jonathan, the Brother of Judas Maccabeus, about 150 years before Christ's Nativity; then mentioned by Josephus, Antiqu. Judaic. lib. 12. cap. 9. A Pythagorean kind of Jew, and not much differing in opinion from those old Philosophers, professing as they did, 1 Community of Goods, 2 Abstaining even from lawful pleasures, 3 Forbidding of Oaths, 4 Forbearing Wine, and drinking Water, 5 Ascribing the conduct of Affairs to fate or destiny, 6 And using only inanimate or unbloody Sacrifices. Some other Dogmata they had, but these the principal: forbidding Marriage not being common to the Scd, but only to some few amongst them. And though we find no mention of them in the New Testament, the Scd in those times being small and inconsiderable; yet it is thought that St. Paul alludeth to their Tenets: as where he adviseth Timothy to make use of Wine, and glanceth upon those who prohibited Marriage, 1 Tim. 4. 3. or condemned others in the use of Meat and Drink, Coloss. 2. 16. As for the manner of their life, they lived together as it were in Monasteries, or Colleges, and in every one had their Superior, or Oratory: admitting none into their Fellowships or Society, unless he brought all he had into their common Treasury; and not then neither under a three years Probationership. More of them he that willeth to see, may satisfy himself in that Tract of Philo, intitled De Vita contemplativa, where he most copiously describeth their Institute and course of life: mistakingly applied by Eusebius to the Primitive Christians, as if that Tract had purposely been composed of them, by that learned Jew.

2. The Sadducees either derive their name from Sadoc, who lived about the time of Alexander the Great, and is thought to be the first Founder of them; or from Sadoc an Hebrew word signifying Justice; the men pretending to be so exact and strict Justitaries, as if they would justify themselves before God's Tribunal. The occasion of the Scd or Hercle (for both it was) said to arise from a mistake of Antigonus, a right learned man, who teaching, That we ought not to serve God as Servants do their Masters, for the hope of Reward, occasioned Sadoc and Baitus, two of his Auditors, to conceive that there was no Reward nor Repurchase for a Godly Life; and consequently, no Resurrection nor World to come, neither Angels nor Spirits. These were the most capital of their Errors, as appeareth Act. 23. 6. 8. Math. 22. 3. Luk. 20. 20, 27. &c. But other Dogmata they had, not mentioned in the Holy Scripture; ascribing nothing unto Fate or Predestination, but all things altogether to a mans free-will; 2 Teaching the Soul to be annihilated at the hour of death; 3 Rejecting all Traditions; and 4 Allowing no more Scripture than the five Books of Moses. In most of their opinions contrary to the Scribes and Pharisees, but joining with them both in opposing Christ: and though like Samson's Foxes they looked divers ways, and were tyed together by their Tails only; yet in those Tails they carried Firebrands to destroy God's Harvest, and had done it, if they had been able.

3. But indeed the Pharisees were the men, who were the Master-wits in the Arts of Mischief, Hominum roburior impetrant, in the Father's words. Fellows of such a perfidious and concocted malice, that they were almost able to possess the Devil. Their name they derive from Pharez, which is to separate. Separavit we may rightly call them: For they were first ἀποσπείροντες τὸν νόμον, separated to the Study of the Law of God, as Saul was brought up to that purpose at the feet of Gamaliel: And secondly, ἀποσπείροντες τὸν νόμον ἀπὸ τοῦ λαοῦ, separated from the rest of Mankind, by a more illicit profelion of sanctity; as the Pharisee boasted of himself, that he was not as other men, or as that Publican. And that they might so seem unto simple men, they did thidly separate themselves from the Society and Conversation of others not so pure as themselves, whom they called Populum terre, or the Sons of the Earth, upbraiding Christ that he kept company with Publicans and Sinners: and more than so, used a particular kind of Habit, and had a Garb unto themselves which no others had; using it for a by-word amongst themselves, that Vester Populi Terræ sunt concubatio Phariseorum. To which end, as their countenances were more clouded and severe than others did they wear their Phylacteries of a broader size than others did: which, by the way, were fores of Turbantes bound about their Heads, and upon their hands, wherein were writ the Ten Commandments of God: foolishly interpreting the words of Deut. And they shall be as Frontlets between thine Eyes, &c. c. 6. v. 8. They began at the same time with the Sadducees, which was about 300 years before Christ's Nativity. As for their Dogmata, besides those specified above, which were also practicable, they maintained, 1 A Pythagorean Metempsychosis, affirming that the Soul of a Righteous man passed from one into another at the time of his death: from many other Torrents which fall into it, because no living Creature is nourished in it, suffocated with the Bisuminous favour which it sendeth forth, from the abundance of which matter it is also called Lacus Asphaltites. Nigh hereunto flood the once famous Cities of Sodom and Gomorra, with three others more, whence the Valley had the name of Pentapolis, destroyed for their abominations by a fire from heaven: now fruitful in wheat only, but not in subulance; the fruits here growing-being very fair unto the eye. Sed levi talis pressio vagum fatiscunt pulvere, but it touched, moulder into ashes, as Solinus hath it.

Chief Hills and Mountains of it, besides Anti-Libanus, and Mount Hermon, spoken of already, which be only borderers, are 1 Mount Sion, memorable for the Tower of David, which was built upon it, called frequently the Holy Hill of Sion. 2 Mount Moriah, famous for the intended Sacrifice of Isaac, and the Temple of Solomon. 3 Mount Calvary, on which CHRIST suffered, supposed to be the burial-place of our Father Adam. 4 Mount Tabor, on which our Saviour was transfigured. 5 Mount Olivet, from which he ascended into Heaven. 6 Mount Garizim, whereon stood the Samaritan Temple, their ordinary place of Worship, mentioned Joh. 4. 20. 7 The Mountains of Saron, stretching with intermixed Valleys from the Sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean, not far from Tyre, there ending in a white cliff, and for that cause called Capo Bianco by the Sailer. The whole Mountain pleasantly enriched with the fragrant smells of Rosemary, Sweet Marjoram, Hyssop, Bayes, and other Odoriferous Plants which do grow there naturally; but for that, destitute of any other Inhabitants than Leopards, Boars, Jacals, and such Savage Creatures. 8 The Mountains of Gilboa, the highest on the West of Jordan, as 9 those of Basan, celebrated for their height in the Book of Psalms. And 10 those of Abarim, on the East-side of it: from one of the Summits of which last called Nebo, by some Writers Piligrim, the Lord gave Moses a Survey of the Land of Promise.

As for this whole Country comprehended in the name of Palestine, it hath had divers divisions, according to the quality of the people, or the will of those who have been formerly Masters of it. Divided first betwixt the Philistines, Perezites, Hittites, Jebusites, and others of the Sons of Canaan, on this side Jordan; the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, and Amorites, dwelling on the other. When conquered by the Sons of Jacob, it was divided into the twelve Tribes of 1 Judah, 2 Benjamin, 3 Simeon, 4 Dan, 5 Asher, 6 Nephthali, 7 Zabulon, 8 Issachar, 9 Gad, 10 Reuben, 11 Ephraim, and 12 Manasseh. When that great breach was made by Jeroboam, in the Kingdom of David, it was broken into the two Kingdoms of Judah and Israel; of which the first contained only the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the latter comprehending the other Ten. When the Israelites were led Captive into Affrica, and a new set of People planted in their rooms, those new-comers from Samarita, their Capital City, had the name of Samaritans; and when the men of Judah were released of their long captivity, and came back from Babylon, they took to themselves the name of Jews. After which time, the whole Country of Palestine anciently possessed or subdued by the seed of Abraham, was divided into 1 Perea, 2 Judea, 3 Galilee, 4 Samarita, 5 Judea, and 6 Idumea. When conquered by the Romans, all these were joyned into one Province, which for a time was reckoned as a part of Syria, or at least subordinate. But Constantine notwithstanding of the one or the other, went a way by himself, and cait it into three Provinces, viz. 1 Palestina

Prima, 2 Palestina Secunda, and 3 Palestina Salutaris; the Metropolis of the first being Cæsarea Palestine; of the second, Samaritis; of the third, Hierusalem. But this division of Constantines growing out of use, we will adhere unto the former: Beginning first with those parts thereof which lay on the other side of Jordan, because first conquered and possessed by the house of Israel; who at that Gate found entrance into all the rest; and coming round to Idumea, which last of all these Provinces was added to the State of Jerry. In the Geography whereof, I must confess my self a Debtor to Sir Walter Rawleigh, whose industry herein hath saved me a great deal of search, though sometimes I make bold to differ from him, and add to him, as I see occasion.

I P E R E A.

P E R E A, is that part of Palestine, which lyeth betwixt the River Jordan, and the Mountains of Arum (which divide Palestine from Syria and the Arabia) East and West; and reacheth from Pella in the North to the chief Town of Arabia Petraea in the South. By Pliny it is made to bend more towards Aegypt, who describes it thus: Perea Judea pars est ulterior, Arabie & Aegypti proxima, asperis dispersa montibus, & cetera Judeis, Jordane amne disiecta. Perea (saith he) is the furthest part of Judea, neighbouring Arabia and Aegypt, interperfed with rough and craggy Mountains, and parted from the rest of the Jews by the River Jordan. So called from the Greek word peras, in regard of the situation of it on the other side of that River; and not improperly might be rendered by Trans-Jordania. Blessed with a rich soil, and large fields beset with divers Trees, especially of Olives, Vines, and Palms. The habitation in times past of the Midianites, Moabites, and Ammonites, at 1 of the two Tribes of Gad and Reuben. Of all which I shall speak in order, beginning with the Midianites, and the Children of Lot, as the first occupants hereof; upon the knowledge of whose affairs, the State and Story of the Israelites hath so much dependance.

And first the MADYANITES inhabited on the South-East of the Dead Sea, at the very entrance of the Country; descended from one or more of the five sons of Madian, the son of Abraham by Rebecca, mentioned Gen. 25. 4, who leaving the rest of their brethren to seek themselves new habitations, more towards the Banks of the Red Sea, and the Desarts of Arabia Petraea, continued near unto the place of Abraham's dwelling; and mingling with the Moabites and Canaanites in blood and marriages, came in short time to lose all the knowledge of the true God, and to worship Idols; as the rest of their neighbours did.

Their chief Cities were 1 Recome, built by one of the five Kings of the Midianites, which was slain by Jehoshaphat, afterwards called Sebah, 2 King, 14. 7. accounted at that time a City of the Edomites; next of the Israelites or Arabians, and by them called Hagar. Best known unto the Greeks and Romans, by the name of Petra, and by that name we shall take further notice of it when we come to Arabia. 2 Midian, on the Banks of the Dead Sea, the ordinary residence of their Princes, absolute of themselves at first, as in other places; but at the time when Moses and Jehoshaphat led the people into their possession, subjected unto Sihon King of the Amorites; whose Dukes their five Kings and Princes are said to be, Jesh. 13. 21. A people whom the Israelites had neither not caustily provoked them, at the request of the Moabites, by sending amongst them as Balaam the false Prophet had advised; the most beautiful of all their women, not only to entice them to prohibited mixtures, but to allure them to the worship of their Idols also. A malicious and successful plot, but alike dangerous to both parties: God sending a fierce Plague amongst the Israelites, which cost them the lives of 24000 persons, besides such as perished by the sword; and giving a command to Moses, to avenge him of the Midianites, who had so provoked him. On which Commission Moses called out 12000 men, and sent them under Phineas against the Midianites: by whom all their Princes were slain; their Cities and goodly Castles burnt with fire, their men, women, and male-children put unto the sword, as is related in the one and thirtieth Chapter of the Book of Numb. Yet notwithstanding this great slaughter, they recovered their former power, if not a greater, and after the death of Barak the Judge of Israel, did for the space of four years so afflict that people, that they were fain to hide themselves in the Caves and strong holds of the mountains, as is said Judg. 6. 2. their enemies having left them neither Sheep, Oxen, nor Ass, or any sustenance at all, &c. But God being raised up by God for their deliverance, encountered with their four Kings, and put them to flight: of which four Oreb and Zeeb were taken and slain by the Ephraimites at the passage of Jordan; Zabab and Zalmunna taken by Gideon himself, and executed by his own hand, as the story telleth us. In this War there are said to have perished of this people and their Confederates, no fewer than 120000 persons, by which we weakened that we hear no more of them from this time forwards, in any action of importance: their name and Country being first incorporated into that of the Edomites, and after into that of the Israelites, and other the Inhabitants of Arabia Petraea.

2 The MOABITES possessed all the Country, from the Midianites in the South, as far as to Esebon in the North, on both sides of the River Arnon; having Jordan on the West, and the Hills of Abarim on the East. Possessed at the first by the Emmins, a race of Giants, whose chief City was Shenech Kiriatshaim. But these being vanquished and broken by Chedorlaomer and his Associates, of which see Gen. 14. 5, their forsaken seats were taken up by the Moabites, descended from Moab, one of the sons of Lot, who lived here in great prosperity all the time of Valah, Grand-father unto Balaam, the foe of Israhel, from whom Sehon King of the Amorites had taken all the parts of Moab on the North of the River Arnon, and made that River, which before was the middle of Moab, to be the North bound or border of it. In which estate it stood in the time of Moses.

Chief Cities of it at that time, were 1 Rabbat, the Regal seat of Balaam the King of Moab, the Rhamathum of Israhel, 2 Diblataim, destroyed with the rest of Moab, by Nebuchadnezzar, as is said Jer. 48. 22. 3 Gallim, the Principality of Phalti the Son of Lashai, to whom Saul gave his Daughter Michal, formerly married unto David, 1 Sam. 25. 44. 4 Mathana and 5 Nathaniel, thorow which the Israelites passed, after they had left the Well called Beer. 6 Bamsath, where Moses was encamped when he sent to Sehon to demand a passage through his Country, Numb. 21. 19, &c. 7 Mizpah, the City of Refuge to the Father and Mother of David, in the time of his troubles under Saul. 8 Hor, the chief City of Moab, not meddling with Moses in his march this way, the Lord himself forbidding him to touch upon it, or distress it, because it had been given by him for an inheritance to the children of Lot, Deut. 2. 9. Which prohibition was not only for this place particularly; (though this place particularly there mentioned) but for all the Lands and Territories then in their possession. 9 Kir-hareseth, of which note for the barbarous and inhumane fact of Matha

the Moabitish King, who being besieged herein by the Kings of Judah, Israel, and Edom, without hope of escape, sacrificed his own eldest Son on the wall thereof, who moved the Kings of Juda and Edom, that they forsook the King of Israel whose the quarrel was. So the siege was raised, 2 King. 3. 17.

Now as Moses did not at the present disobey God's Order, in leaving the Moabites in quiet; so neither did the Moabites on their parts provoke him to any hostile act, giving him a free and open passage in his march for Canaan; out of an hope that when the Amorites were subdued, they should be put into possession of their lost Estates. And though they were deceived of that expectation, the Israelites looking on that Country which they had conquered, as the spoils of the Amorites, and giving it for a possession to the Tribe of Reuben: yet durst they not do any thing in the way of arms, but sent for Balaam the false Prophet, to call them by his Curses and Incantations into some Diseases, whereby their strength and courage might be taken from them. Balaam the son of Zippor was at this time King After whom we find not the name of any other, till we come to Eglon, who with the help of Ammon and Amalek, overmastered Israel, and for the space of 18 years tyrannized amongst them: when slain in his own House, and afterwards 10000 of his people by the hand of Ehud. But this indignity was in the times succeeding revenged by Saul in some part, who made war upon them; but more by David, who subdued them, and made them Tributaries: and not only so, but subjected them to the vilest Offices, as is intimated in that form of Speech, Moab is my wash-pot, Psal. 60. 8. Taking their opportunity, they withdrew themselves from the House of David, and put themselves under the command of the Kings of Israel, to whom they paid for Tribute in the time of Abah, 100000 Lambs, and 200000 Rams, with their Heeces on: but quickly weary of those payments, and revolting from the House of Abah also, they were invaded by Jehoram, aided herein by the Kings of Judah and Idumea, by whom being vanquished, Mesha their King was fain to shut himself up in Kir-hareseth, as was said before. After this joyning with the Ammonites and the Idumeans or sons of Edom, they invaded Jehoshaphat King of Judah, to whom God gave a memorable and signal Victory, without blow or Battle: the Ammonites first setting upon the Edomites, and after upon one another, till they were almost all destroyed, 2 Chron. 20. 23. From this time we hear nothing of them; but probably they recovered some part of their former Dwellings, when that two Tribes and a half on the East of Jordan were carried away captive by Tiglah Pilser. Possessed hereof, and of other their habitations, till the reign of Zedekiah King of Judah, when vanquished, with the rest of these Nations, by the Babylonians and Affrians under Nebuchadnezzar. Nor find we any mention of them in the Ages following, the name of Moab being forgotten, or grown out of use: the South parts of their Country laid to Arabia Petraea, as the East parts were to that of Arabia Deserta, and all the rest, as well as that which had been conquered by the Jews, swallowed up in the general name of Palestina.

3 The AMMONITES inhabited on the North-East of the River Arnon, and possessed all that Tract from Arnon, on the Head of the River, to the City of Rabbat, and on both sides of the River Jaboc, as well within the Mountains of Galaad as without the same. The Seat in elder times of the Rephaim, and Zanzumims, a Giant-like Race of men, as the Emmins were; but vanquished also, as the others, by Chedorlaomer, Asteroth and Heth being then the principal of their Habitations. Succeeded too in their desolate and forsaken dwellings, by the children of Ammon, the other Son of Lot, and the Brother of Moab; both Houses running the same fortune; These Ammonites being conquered, and deprived of the best part of their Country on the South-side of Jabes, by Og King of Basan; as the Moabites, at the same time, of theirs by Sehon. A Monument of which subjection was the Bed of Og, found in the City of Rabbah, the chief City of Ammon, there to be seen when Moses had subdued the Kings of the Amorites, as appeareth Deut. 3.

Chief Cities at such time as the Israelites first conquered the Land of Canaan, were Rabbah, the Regal City of their Kings; taken by Og of Basan, as is said before; but again quitted as it seemeth on the coming of Moses, that he might be better able to keep the Field. Memorable in succeeding times for the death of Uriah, slain here by a design of David's when besieged by Joab. Who having brought it to terms of yielding, sent for the King to come before it, that he might have the honour of taking a place so defensible, environed in a manner with the River Jabes, and therefore called the City of Waters, 2 Sam. 12. 27. Afterwards repaired and beautified by Pholomy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, who having made himself Master of those parts of Arabia, which lie near unto it, and liking the convenience of the situation, honoured it with the name of Philadelphia, 2 Dabema, supposed to be Rithma, by the Learned Junius, mentioned Numb. 33. 18. (the Hebrew Letters D and A being much alike) a place of great strength amongst the Ammonites, 3 Minneth, in the South Border; and 4 Abel-vinorum in the East Border of Ammon; both mentioned in the pursuit of that People when subdued by Jephthah, 5 Mispha, sometimes one of the Cities of the half Tribe of Manasseh, and at that time honoured with the residence of Jephthah; but afterwards recovered by the Children of Ammon: in whose hands it was, when utterly destroyed and burnt by Judas Maccabeus, 1 Mac. 5. 35. 6 Magedo, and 7 Bofor, two other strong places of the Ammonites, there also mentioned; but said to be in the Region of Gad, by which name, or by that of Gileadites, all the Country of the Ammonites lying on this side of the Mountains, was at that time called.

As for those Ammonites, they had nothing at all to do with Israel as they passed towards Canaan; neither provoking them, nor being provoked by them, to any acts of hostility. Afterwards not well pleased that they were not restored to the possession of those Lands which had been taken from them by Og of Basan, (conferred by the Decree of Moses on the Tribe of Gad) they joined with the Midianites in their Expedition. But worsted by the puissance and good fortune of Gideon, they lay still a while, till stirred up by some secret motion from Almighty God, to avenge him on that sinful and idolatrous People, who by worshipping the gods of the Heathen, had provoked him to anger. Prosperous in it for a time, till his wrath was pacified; who having made use of them to chastise his People, delivered him by his Rod to be burnt by Jephthah, vanquished and driven home by him with a very great slaughter. Not so much crushed by the unsuccessfulness of this attempt, but that in the time of Saul they brake out again and besieged Jabes Gilead; Nabab, a cruel Tyrant, being then their King; who having brought the City into great extremity, would give them no other conditions than the loss of every man's right eye: to the end that using to carry a great Target on their left Arms, where-with the eye on that side was wholly shadowed, they might by this means be disabled from all future service. But Saul came time enough to five them from that shame and loss; from that cause so offensive to Nabab, that to despight him, he shewed friendship to David in the time of his trouble. A courtship which David was so mindful of, that he sent Ambassadors to Hanna the Son of Nabab, to make acknowledgment of it; and to confirm the amity which he had with his Father; but found so ill requital from him, that instead of thanks and kind acceptance, his Messengers were despitely handled, their Beards half shaven, and their Garments cut off by the knee. Incensed therewith he sent Joab against them, by whom the Country was laid waste, and Rabbah their chief City taken; their Kings Crown, weighing a Talent of Gold, set on David's head, and all the Prisoners executed with great severity, some of them being cast into Lime-kilns, and the rest torn in pieces with Saws and Harrows. Quiet a long while after this, we hear no great news of them till the reign of Jehoshaphat, against whom confederated with the Edomites and Moabites, they made open War; but fell by another Swords, as was said before. Not well recovered of this blow, they were subdued and made Tributaries by Ozias King of Judah, and continued in the time of Joash his Son; who so increased the tribute laid upon them by his Father, that it amounted to an hundred Talents of Silver, ten thousand measures of Wheat, and as many of Barley. Taught by this Lesson how to value the Kings of Judah, they continued either quiet Neighbours, or obedient Subjects, though much improved in power and reputation, by gaining the greatest part of their ancient Dwellings, on the removal of the two Tribes and an half, on the East of Jordan, to the Land of Affria, by Timoth Pileser. For after this (with reference to the common danger) Baal their King was so strict a Confederate with Zeeb, that when Nebuchadnezzar had taken Zeeb with him unto Babylon, and left Gedaliah as his Deputy to command the Country, Ismael, one of the blood of the Kings of Judah, was sent by Baal to slay him. But he paid dear for his attempt; his Country being shortly conquered by the Babylonians, and the name of Ammonite forgotten: changed by the Grecians when they came to Lord it over them, to those of Gileaditis and Philadelphias; according to the new name of their Principal City, and the old one of the Mountains and Hills adjoining.

4 The REUBENITES took name from Reuben, the eldest of Jacob's Sons by Leah, of whom, in the first Muster which was made of them at Mount Sinai, there were found 46000 fighting men; and 43700 at the second Muster, when they passed over Jordan. Their dwelling was on the East of that famous River, having the Gadites on the North, the Deftar Arabia on the East, and the Land of Moab on the South, from which parted by the River Arnon.

Places of most observation here, 1 Abel-Sittim, placed in that part of the Country which was called the Forest of Moab; the last incamping place of Moses: afterwards by the Jews called simply Sittim: Memorable for the Wood so often mentioned in the Scriptures, of which the Ark of the Lord was made. In after-times by the Greeks and Romans it was called Alunus, mistook by some for that Abila or Abilene whereof Lysimachus was Tyrant; that Town and Territory, as Josephus doth affirm expressly, being situate amongst the spurs and branches of Libanus, far enough from hence. 2 Bethbarah, or Beth-Bara, where John baptised, and Moses made his last and most Divine exhortations to the Tribes of Israel, contained in Deuteronomy. 3 Medbarnis, the strongest in-land in-land City and Castle in those parts of the World, standing aloft upon a Mountain every way inaccessible: first fortified by Alexander Jannaeus King of the Jews, as a frontier Town against the Arabians; and afterwards demolished by Gabinus, one of Pompey's Lieutenants, in the War against Archelaus. Unfortunately remarkable for the death of John Baptist, where murdered by the command of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, and Lord of this Country of Peræa. 4 Lafa, or Lesbab, of which Gen. 10. 19, by the Greeks called Calabrie, by reason of the fair Fountains rising from the Hills adjoining, out of which issue Springs both of hot and cold Waters, as also bitter and sweet; all which soon after joined into one stream, make a wholesome Bath, especially for Convulsions and contraction of Sinews. 5 Medeba, famous for the defeat given to the Syrians and Ammonites by the conduct of Joab, 1 Chron. 19. 7. In the time of the Greeks laid with some other Towns of this Tract unto Cela-Syria; but in the declining times of the Selencian Family, regained unto the Crown of Jerry by Alexander, the second King of the Race of the Maccabees; and finally, with eleven others in those parts, delivered by Antipater the Father of Herod into the hands of Arctas King of the Arabians, hoping thereby to join him to the side of Hyrcanus the Son of Alexander, whose cause Antipater most favoured. 6 Bosfor, or Bosra, a City of Refuge, and one of those that were allotted unto the Levites on that side of the Water. 7 Livias, a Town new built by Herod, in honour of Livia, the Mother of Tiberias Cesar: different from that which the Geographers call 8 Libia (though by some confounded) the same with Laban, mentioned Gen. 1. 1. 9 Kedemoth, another City of the Levites, giving name unto the adjoining Desert, from whence Moses sent his Ambassadors to Sehon King of the Amorites, 10 Bamath-Baal, the chief City of the worshippers of Baal, to which Balaam was brought by Balaac to curse the Israelites. 11 Hishbon, the Regal City of Sehon King of the Amorites. 12 Adam, or the City Adam (Jos. 3. 17.) where the Tribes passed dry-foot over Jordan, opposite unto Gilgal in the Tribe of Benjamin. Within this Tribe is the Mountain Nebo, from which Moses took a view of the Land of Canaan: an Hill as it seemeth of two tops, whereof that which looketh towards Jericho, is called Pisgab: that which looketh toward Moab being called Hur. Here is also a high Hill named Peor, where the filthy Idol Baal was worshipped also, who hath hence the addition of Baal-Peor.

5 The GADITES were so called from Gad the seventh Son of Jacob, begot on Zilpah the Hand-maid of Leah; of whom were found at the first Muster when they came out of Egypt, forty five thousand, five hundred and fifty fighting men; and at the second, when they entered the Land of Canaan, forty five thousand bearing Arms. Their situation was betwixt the Reubenites on the South, and the half Tribe of Manasseh upon the North; the River Jordan on the West, and the Mountains of Arnon on the East; by which last parted from the dwellings of the Children of Ammon.

Cities of most observation, 1 Arzer, on the Banks of the River Arnon, the principal City of the Gadites. 2 Dibon, more towards Jordan; of great note in the time of Jehoshaphat, and of no small account in the time of Saint Hierom. 3 Beth-nimrah, of which Ezay prophesied that the Waters thereof should be dried up; seated upon the Arnon also. 4 Natoroth, more in the body of the Tribe. 5 Beth-baram, mentioned by Josephus, chap. 13. v. 27, by Josephus called Betaramphus; new built by Herod Antipas, and called Livias, in honour of Livia the Wife of Augustus Cesar, translated into the Julian Family; who also laid unto it fourteen Villages, to make it of the greater Power and Jurisdiction. 6 Beth-celab, by Josephus called Vetecabab, the habitation of Miriam, who in the Siege of Hierusalem, when destroyed by Titus, was compelled by Famine to eat her own Son. 7 Succoth, not far from the River Jordan, so called from the Tents or Booths which Jacob set up there, in his passage from Mejopotamia to the Land of Canaan: the People of which Town having denied relief to Gideon, as he followed the chase of Zeeb and Zalmunna, were by him miserably tortured at his return, under a Tribulum or Torelling-Car, wherewith he tore their flesh, and bruised their bodies. 8 Jab-zor, another of the Regal Seats of Sehon King of the Amorites; first taken by Moses, after recovered by the Moabites (as appeareth Jsa. 16. 8.) then possessed by the Ammonites; and finally from them regained by Judas Maccabeus, 1 Mac. 5. 8. 9 Mahanaim, so called from the Army of Angels which appeared to Jacob (Gen. 32. 2.) as ready to defend him against all his Enemies, the word in the Original importing a double Army. A place of very great strength and safety, and therefore made by Abner the Seat Royal of Hishbeth, the Son of Saul, during the War he had with David; as afterwards the retiring place of David, during the Rebellion of his Son Absalom. 10 Kegelim, the City of Bazillai the Gileadite, so faithful to David in that War. 11 Ramoth, or Ramoth Gilead, so called from the situation of it near the Mountains of Gilead: a Town of special note in the Book of God: particularly, for the Pacification here made betwixt Jacob and Laban, for the death of Abah King of Israel, who lost his life in the recovery of it from the hands of the Syrians; and finally, for the Election of Jehon to the Crown of Israel. Anointed at the Siege hereof, by a Son of the Prophet. 12 Penuel, so called from the interview which the Lord pleased to bestow there on his Servant Jacob, at his return out of Mejopotamia, mentioned Gen. 32. 32. the word signifying the place of the face or vision of God: defaced by Gideon for their churlish usage of him, when he craved relief of them against the Midianites; to whom, together with them against the Moabites and Ammonites, did once belong. But pertaining to these two Tribes, did once belong. But pertaining to them taken by Og King of Basan, and Sehon King of the Amorites, it came by the overthrow of those Kings to the hands of Moses; by whom allotted unto the Tribes of Gad and Reuben, for their habitation. Continuing theirs till the fatal period of the Kingdom of Israel began to approach; at what time their two Tribes, with the half Tribe of Manasseh lying on the East of Jordan, being carried captive into Affria, by Tiglah Pileser, the Moabites and Ammonites recovered a great part of their ancient dwellings. Of which possessed, till their subversion by the Babylonians. Afterwards this whole Country coming into the hands of the Kings of Syria, had the name of Peræa, for the reason formerly delivered. And being won piece-meal by the Kings of Syria, came with the rest of the Kingdom of Judaea, to the possession of Herod the Great; by whom bequeathed at his death unto Herod Antipas, one of his Sons, who held it, together with both Galilee's, under the name of Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa, as Josephus or of Galilee only, as Saint Luke; who being dead, it was belowned on Agrippa King of the Jews, of whom more hereafter.

2 ITUREÆA.

ITURÆA hath on the East and North, Calo-Syria on the West, the River Jordan and on the South, Perea. So called from Itur one of the sons of Ismael, seated in this Tract; though lost by his Posterity to the Amorites, one of the most powerful Tribes amongst the Canaanites; and by them made the Patrimony of the Kings of Basam. The Race of which King ending in Og, the wealthiest and best parts hereof, were given by Moses to the half Tribe of Manasse; such parts of it as lay towards Damascus being taken on by the neighbouring Aramites, and made a Kingdom of it self, called the Kingdom of Gessur; and the more mountainous and unpleasant left to the first Inhabitants, as not worth the conquering. But both the Kingdom of Gessur, and those of the half Tribe of Manasse, slipping from one Lord to another, till they came into the hands of the Greeks; the name of Iturea revived again and grew into very good esteem: the Itureans being reputed for good Soldiers, especially at the Bow and Arrows of which thus the Poet in his Georgicks, lib. 2.

— Itureas tacti torquentur in Arcus.
Of the best Ewe that can be had
The Iturean Bows are made.

The whole Country in the times of the Greeks and Romans, divided into Trachonitis, and Iturea specially so called: this last again being subdivided into Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Panæa. For whereas it is said in St. Luke's Gospel, that Philip the Brother of Herod was Tetrarch of Iturea, and the Region of Trachonitis; and by Josephus, that for his Tetrarchy he had the Provinces of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Panæa: it must needs be that the four last mentioned Provinces make up that one, which by St. Luke is comprehended in the name of Iturea; distinct from that of Trachonitis, though a part thereof. Inhabited in the time of Josephus, as in those of John and David, both by Jews and Syrians; the Syrians dwelling in the mountainous and more barren parts, the Jews in that which was assigned them in the time of Moses; the whole not yielding unto Galilee for extent of ground, but far inferior to it for wealth and fruitfulness; not well inhabited where best, and in some places which are desert and very barren, hardly inhabited at all, or bearing any thing but wild fruits. Such was it in the time of Josephus, and not bettered since.

TRACHONITIS is that mountainous and hilly Country, which beginning at the borders of the Ammonites, where the Hills are called the Mountains of Agathai, extendeth it self Northwards as far as Libanus: the Hills in those parts being by the Jews called Galeed, Syria, and Hermos; but by the Greeks, for the craggy and roughness of them, by the name of Trachones. The people mischievously bent and much given to Witchcraft, as we find in Strabo. Montanum regionem incultam Ituræi & Arabes, maleficia omnes. So he, or his Translator rather, for I have not the original by me. Where by Arabians he meant those of Trachonitis, which every where he maketh to be the same with Iturea, though differing from it as the Caspian Countries do from the rest of Gloveshire, or as a part both from the whole, because united by that name into one Estate, at the time he lived in. Soled & Trachonitis Iturea nomine appellari, faith the learned Grotius, according to the general consent of the ancient Writers. A people generally addicted to spoil and robbery, living especially on the spoil of those Merchants which traded to and from Damascus: till with some difficulty restrained to a more orderly life by

Herod, on whom Augustus Cæsar had bestowed the Country, to the end that by strong hand he might hold them in.

The People and the Country by Josephus are thus described: "The Trachonites (faith he) have neither Towns, nor Lands, nor Heritage, nor any other possessions, but only certain Retreats and Caves under the ground, where they lived like Beasts; and having made abundant provision of water and victuals, were able to hold out a long time against any Assailant. For the doors of their Caves were made so narrow, that they could be entered but by one at once; and the way to them not direct, but full of turnings and windings, not possibly to be found out but by the help of a Guide: The whole Country naturally consisting of craggy Rocks. The passages of the Caves once entered, they were found to be very large and spacious, sufficient to contain great multitudes of those Thievish people, who when they had not opportunity to spoil their Neighbours, would rob one another, and omitted no kind of wickedness, being so accustomed to their thurty that could not live otherwise. So he. But I conceive this is not meant generally of all the people, but only of some body of Thieves or Out-laws, which possessed themselves of the freights of the Mountains, and from thence issued to assault and spoil the Passengers. For it is afterwards expressed, that revolting upon the news of Herod's death, and committing new outrages; they no longer held of his recovery but they fled the Country, and betook themselves unto a strong Cattle in Arabia, where they increased to the number of 1000 persons. So that there is no question to be made at all, but they had Villages & Lands, and Heritages, in the more civil parts hereof, though not amongst those Mountains which Josephus speaks of. And amongst those, I reckon, 1. Gerra, 2. Elei, 3. Naxa, 4. Adrama; all named by Ptolemy, and all placed by him in the Longitude of 70 degrees or upwards: more towards the East than well agree with the position of this Country, or with any part of Batanea, lying more towards the West than Trachonitis, thought that part of Iturea, by him ascribed. Hither also I refer the City of Tybbe, the Country of old Tobit, and of the Prophet Elias. 6 Tob, where Joseph lived in exile, when oppressed by his brethren, till the necessities of his Country called him to the publick Government. 7 Hippat at the foot of those Mountains, reckoned amongst the Cities of Calo-Syria, differing in soil as well as Etymology from another of the same name in Batanea: this being so named from the Mountain Hippus, under which it lieth; that from a Garrison of Horse there placed as shall there be shewn. 8 Bathira, on the borders of this Country towards Batanea, built there by Herod, and planted with a Colony of the Jews; which came thither from Babylon; the better to suppress the infolencies, and prevent the Robberies of this thievish people, accustomed (as before is said) unto spoil and rapine.

2 BATANEÆA is that part of Iturea which anciently made up the best and greatest part of the Kingdom of Basam, whence it had this name: the changing of S to T, as Allyria into Atlyria, and the like, being usual among the Greeks. But that Kingdom being brought to an end by Moses, it was given to the half Tribe of Manasse, so called of Manasse the son of Joseph, of whom there were found at the first muster near Mount Sinai, 32200 men able to bear arms; which though increased in the Deserts, yet were they of such a swift confidence, that there were found 52700 fighting men of them, when they passed over Jordan. Their Territory on that side of the River, stretching from Jaboc on the South, to the Realm of Gessur on the North; and from the Mountains unto unto Jordan, East and West, was exceeding fertile: replenished with all sorts of Cattel, and adorned with the goodliest woods in that part of the world, the Oaks of Basam being celebrated in the holy Scriptures.

It had in it sixty fenced Cities when first conquered by those of this Tribe. The principal of which, 1 Pella, formerly called Basis, but being rebuilt by Seleucus, the great King of Syria, was by him called Pella; with reverence to a City of that name in Macedon, the birth-place of Alexander, to whom Seleucus owed his greatness and whole estate. Destroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, because not willing to admit of the Law of Moses it was afterwards restored by Pompey to its former lustre. Memorable in Church story for the Admonition or premonition, given by a voice from Heaven, to the Christians dwelling at Hierusalem, to remove thence and dwell at Pella, that if they might escape that destruction, which the Roman Army under Titus was to bring upon it. 2 Edreï, the Seat-royal of the Kings of Basam; 3 Carnaim, on the banks of Jaboc, taken by Judas Macchabeus, who fit fire on the Temple of the Idols there, and burnt therein all such as fled thither for Sanctuary. 4 Ephron, a strong City upon Jordan, taken and burnt by the same Judas Macchabeus, for refusing to give a passage to his Army. 5 Jabesh Gilead, more near unto the Mountains, whence it had that Adjunct; memorable in the Scriptures, for the siege of Nabash King of the Ammonites, the raising of that leg by Saul, and the gratitude of the people towards him again, in taking down, embalming, and the entombing the bodies of him and his sons, which the Philistines had most despitiously hanged on the walls of Beisban. 6 Astaroth, a City of great note in the elder times: the feat of the Rephaim, a Giant-like Race of men, of whom defended Og of Basam; from whence the Country adjoining had the name of the Land of Givon. 7 Astaroth, the Goddess of the Sidonians, had here her Worshipers. 8 Ganlon, sometimes possessed by Og of Basam, and afterwards made one of the Cities of Refuge; of such esteem in the times of the Greeks and Romans, that the North part of Bataneia or Batanea was called Gaulonitis; divided into Superior and Inferior, so often mentioned by Josephus. And of this City or Country was that Judas of Galilee, spoken of in the fifth of the Acts, the Founder of the Gaulonites, or Anti-Herodians. 9 Gamala in the lower Gaulonitis, so called because the Hill upon which it stood was fashioned like the back of a Camel: invincibly situate, strengthened both by Art and Nature; and at the last with so great difficulty and hazard of Vespasian's person, stormed by Titus, that the Romans in the heat of the execution, spared neither Women nor Children; in sum, that all the Inhabitants perished, except some few women which had hid themselves.

10 Galada, after ten months siege, taken and destroyed by Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews; repaired by Pompey and by Gabinus made one of the five Seats of Justice for the whole Country of Palestine: the other four being Hierusalem, Jericho, Hamath, and Sephorab. 10 Gera, or Gergesa, the chief City of the Gergesites, the people whereof on the loss of their Swine intruded our Saviour to depart out of their Coast, as St. Matthew hath it. St. Luke, and St. Mark, ascribe it to the people of Galada. Not that the Cities were both one, or the Evangelists at odds in their Relation; but because they were two neighbouring Cities, and their fields lay in common pace casis de vicinage, as our Lawyers phrase it; and so the story might be common to both alike. 11 Hippus, not far from the River Jordan, so called from a Garrison of Horse there placed by Herod, not far from the Mountain Hippus, as some suppose, which is too far off to have any influence upon it. 12 Julias, built by Philip the Tetrarch of Iturea, in the Southern border of his estate, in imitation of the like work of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee and Perea; to ingratiate himself with Julia, the Wife of Tiberias Cæsar. 13 Abel, by Josephus called Abel Maacha, for distinctions sake: where Sheba that grand Rebel besieged by Joab, and the City brought into some danger, had his head cut off, and thrown over the Wall, at the perswasion of a wife Woman of the Town. So the rebellion ended, and the City was saved.

North of Bataneia, or Batanea, lyeth the Kingdom of GESSUR, by a latter name called AURANITIS, from Hauran, a chief City of it, mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 16. 18. A Kingdom spoken of by Moses as the Northern bound of the half Tribe of Manasse on that side of Jordan, Deut. 4. 14. by Josephus as the Northern border of the Kingdom of Basam, Chap. 12. 5, and reckoned as a part of Syria because held by the Aramites, 2 Sam. 15. 8. A Kingdom, though of no great Territory, yet of some consideration in the eye of the World: David esteeming the alliance of the Kings hereof of some use unto him; and therefore marrying Maacha the daughter of Tolmai, King of Gessur, by whom he had Abijah and Tamar. And to this King it was that Abijah fled on the killing of Amnon, abiding here three years, as the story telleth us.

Conterminous to this, or at least not very much distant from it was the petit Kingdom of Ikthab, which sent 12000 men to the aid of the Ammonites against David; and not far off, but more towards Palmyrene, or Aram-Zobab, that of Beik-Rechob, Confederates in the same War also with the other Syrians, mention whereof is made in the second Book of Samuel, Chap. 10. 6. Which whether they belonged to Syria, or to those North parts of Iturea, is of no great certainty, and of little consequence. For after their this greatness and last exploit we hear no more by the Kings of Damascus.

To return therefore into Gissur more certainly within the limits of Palestine, the places of most observation in it, were 1 Gessur, then the chief City of it, and giving name unto the whole. 2 Malucab, or Macani, as some call it; conceived to be that Maacha mentioned in Chron. 19. 6. But of this we have already spoken in Comagena. 3 Chauran, or Hauran, mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel, Chap. 47. whence they: Northern parts of Palestine were called Auranitis, 4 Chafar-Hauran, there mentioned by that Prophet also, 5 Uz, near the borders of Damascus, the first habitation of Uz the son of Aram, and Grand-child of Sem, by whose name so called: supposed to be the Founder of Damascus also, and that more probably, than that the Country thereabouts should be the Land of Hus ennobled by the dwelling and story of Job. 6 Sacra, mentioned by Bochartus, and by some conceived to be the habitation of Bildad, firmament of the Shechite, one of Job's three Friends, mentioned in that story: but both of him, and Job himself, and the Land of Hus, we shall speak more at large when we come to Arabia. More certainly remarkable for a Port of great strength and use, for the commanding of the Country; recovered from the Turks in the time of Baldwin the second, by digging with incredible labour through the very Rock upon which it was seated.

As for the fortunes of this dart, after the Tribes on that side of Jordan were led captive into Assyria, and the Kingdom of Damascus subverted by Tiglarh-Pileser; it followed the fortune of the Babylonian and Persian Empires, together with which it came to the Macedonian Kings of the Race of Seleucus. In the declining of which House it was conquered (or at least the greatest part thereof) by Alexander the second, King of the Jews of the Race

Race of the Maacebers, but lost again for the most part in the time of Hircanus the son of Alexander; yet afterwards made up the greater part of the Kingdom of Chalkis possessed by Ptolomy the son of Menneus, in the beginning of Herod's greatness: who dying left it to Lysanias his eldest son, murdered about seven years after by Marc. Antony, on the suggestions of Cleopatra, who presently seized on his Estates. But Antony and Cleopatra, having left the Stage, Lysanias a son of the murdered Prince entered next upon it, by the permission of Augustus. During whose time Zenodorus, Lord of the Town and Territory of Pancas, farming his Demesnes, and paying a very great rent for them; not only suffered the Trachonites to play the Robbers, and inflict the Merchants of Damascus; but received part of the booty with them. Augustus, on complaint hereof, gave the whole Country of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulanitis, and Auranitis, to Herod the Asideite, before created King of Jewry; that by his puissance and power he might quell those Robbers, and reduce the Country into order: Leaving unto Lysanias nothing but the City of Abila, (of which he was the natural Lord) whereof and of the adjoining Territory, he was afterwards created Tetrarch, by the name of the Tetrarch of Abilene, mentioned Luke 3. Nor did Herod's good fortune end in this. For presently on the death of Zenodorus, not long after following, Augustus gave him also the District of Pancas (of which we shall speak more when we come to Galilee) which with the Countries formerly taken from Lysanias, made up the Tetrarchy of Philip his youngest Son; affording him the yearly Revenue of 100 Talents, which made 37500 l. of English Money. On Philip's death his Tetrarchy was by Cains Caligula conferred on Agrippa the Nephew of Herod by his son Antipater, whom he had also dignified with the title of King; after whose death and the death of Agrippa Minor, who next succeeded his estates devolved to the Romans, and have since had the same fortune with the rest of Palestine.

3 GALILEE.

GALILEE is bounded on the East, with Batanea, and part of the half Tribe of Manasse on the side of Jordan; on the West, with the Sea-coast of Phoenicia, on the Mediterranean; on the North, with Anti-Libanus on the South, with Samarita. So called, as some say, from Geliloh, a Phoenician word signifying as much as borders; because the bordering Country betwixt them and the Jews.

The Country not so large as that on the other side of the River, but far more fertile; naturally fertile of itself, every where producing excellent fruits without much pains to the Husbandman, and so well cultivated in old times, that there was hardly any waste ground to be found in it. Thick set with Cities, Towns and Villages, in the time of Josephus, and those so populous and rich, that the smallest Village in it is affirmed by that Author, to comprehend no fewer than 15000 Inhabitants. A number beyond all parallel, if reported rightly, and not mistaken in the transcripts. The people from their childhood very stout and warlike, not daunted for fear of want, or dread of penury: which seconded by their vast and almost incredible numbers, made them experimentally known for a tough piece of employment when subdued by Ti. Ant. And this, together with their zeal to the Jewish Religion, makes it more than probable, that there was something in them of the ancient Israelite; and that they were not merely of an Assyrian, either stock or spirit; but intermixt with such remainings of the Tribes as had saved themselves, either by flying to the Mountains, or hiding themselves in Caves and Desarts, or otherwise were inconsiderable for strength and numbers; in the great transplantation of them made by Salmanser. And in this I am the more confirmed by their speech or language, which was the same with that of the natural Jews, differing no otherwise from it than in tone, and dialect; as our Northern English doth from that which is spoke in London: as appears by the communication which the Damofel had with St. Peter, in the High-Priests Hall; in which she plainly understood him, but so that the pronounced him for a Galilean. For had the Transplantation been so universal, as some think it was, and that both sick and sound, old and young had been carried away, and none but Colonies of the Assyrians to fill up their places; it must needs be that those New-comers would have planted their own language there, as the Saxons did on the extirpation of the Britons, on this side of the Severn. The like may be affirmed of the other Tribes on this side of Jordan, especially Simon and Dan, which either bordering upon Judah, or having their Lands and Cities intermingled with it, continued in great numbers in their former dwellings, under the Patronage or subjection of the Kings thereof.

Divided it was anciently into the Higer and Lower. The Higer so called from its situation more amongst the Mountains, had also the name of Galilea Genimim, or Galilee of the Gentiles; and that either because it lay betwixt the Gentiles and the rest of the Jews; or because a great part of it had been given by Solomon to the Kings of Tyr. But for what cause soever it was called so first, certain it is, it held this name unto the last; known by it in the time of the Apollies, as appears by St. Matthew's Gospel, Chap. 4. 15. The Lower Galilee is situate on the South of the other, memorable for the Birth and Education of our blessed Saviour, whom Julian the Apollite called for this cause, in scorn, the Galilean: as for the time, the Disciples generally had the name of Galileans imposed upon them, till that of Christian, (being a name of their own choosing) did in fine prevail. Both, or the greater part of both, known in the New Testament by the name of Decapolis, or Regio Decapolitana, mentioned Mat. 4. 25. Mark 7. 31. So called from the ten principal Cities of it, that is to say, 1. Cesarea Philippi. 2. Afr. 3. Cedes-Nephthalim. 4. Sebeth. 5. Chorazin. 6. Capernaum. 7. Beit-Saida. 8. Jotapata. 9. Tiberias. And 10. Sychoptolis. By which account it stretched from the Mediterranean to the head of Jordan, East and West; and from Libanus to the hills of Gilboa, North and South; which might make up a square of forty miles. With reference to the Tribes of Israel, the whole Galilee was so disposed of, that Afr., Nephthalim, and a part of the Tribe of Dan, had their habitation in the Higer; Zabulon, and Issachar in the Lower; according to which distribution we will now describe them.

1. The Tribe of NAPHTHALI was so called from NAPHTHALI the sixth Son of Jacob, begotten on Bilhah the hand-maid of Rachel; of whom at the first muster were found 53420 fighting men, and at the second 44540 able to bear arms. The Land allotted to them lay on the West side of the River Jordan, opposite unto the Northern parts of Jurea; where before we left: having on the West, the Tribe of Asher, and that of Zabulon on the South. Within which Tract were certain Cities which they never conquered; and one which appertained to the Tribe of Dan; the chief of those which were with-held by the Gentiles, being Chalkis, Abila, Heliopolis, Cities accounted of as belonging to Celestia; where they have been spoken of already. That which did appertain to the Tribe of DAN lay on the North-East part hereof, confronting the most Northern

Northern parts of Jurea, as before was said; where the Danites held one Town of moment, besides many other of less note. And it seemed destined to this Tribe by some old Prelate: the Eastern Fountain of Jordan (which hath its original in this Tract) being called Dan, at the time of the defeat which Abraham gave to Chedorlamer and his Associates, hundreds of years before this Tribe had ever a possession in it. Of which see Gen. 14. 14. The Town of moment first called Leshem, by some Writers Lesh; afterwards subject or allied to the Kings of Sidon, and upon strength thereof made good against those of Naphthali; but taken by some adventures of the Tribe of Dan. Of whom it is said, Job. 19. 47. That finding their own Country too little for them, they went up and fought against Leshem, which they took, and called DAN. Accompanied after this exploit, the utmost border Northward of the Land of Canaan, the length thereof being measured from Dan in the North, unto Beitphai in the South: remarkable for one of the Golden Calves which was placed here by Jeroboam, and for the two spring-heads of Jordan, rising near unto it. When conquered by the Romans it was called Pancas, from a Fountain adjoining of that name: which with the Territory about it, after the death of Zenodorus, who held it of the Roman Empire, as before is said, was given by Augustus Cesar unto Herod the Great: and by him at his decease to Philip his youngest Son, with the Tetrarchy of Jurea and Trachonitis. By him repaired and beautified, it was called Cesarea Philippi, partly to curry favour with Tiberius Cesar partly to preserve the memory of his own name: and partly to distinguish it from another Cesarea, situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, and called Cesarea Palestine: and being so repaired by him, it was made the Metropolis of that Tetrarchy. Mentioned by that name, Mat. 16. 13. when St. Peter made that confession or acknowledgment of his Lord and Master, that he was CHRIST the Son of the living God. By King Agrippa, who succeeded him in his Estates, in honour of the Emperor Nero, it was called Neronia. But that, and the Adjunct of Philippi, were of no continuance: the Town being called Cesarea Pansa in the time of Ptolomy; and simply Pancas, as before, in the time of St. Hierom. Of this Cesarea was that Woman whom our Saviour cured of the bloody Flux, by touching but the Hem of his Garment: who in a pious gratitude of so great a mercy, erected two Statues in this place, representing CHRIST, and her self kneeling at his feet; remaining here entire till the time of Julian the Apollite, by whose command it was cast down, and a Statue of his own set up in the place thereof, miraculously destroyed by a fire from Heaven. The City being at that time, and long before, an Episcopical See. Of less note there were, 1. Haleb, and 2. Reccath, both situate in the confines of it. And not far off the strong Town and Castle of Magdala, (the habitation as some say of Mary Magdalen) where the Pharisees desired a sign of our Saviour CHRIST, as is said Mat. 15. 39. & 16. 1. the same, or some place near unto it, being by St. Mark (reporting the same part of the Story) called Dalmannutha, Chap. 8. 10. 11. But whether this Castle did anciently belong to these Danites, or to those of Naphthali, or to the half Tribe of Manasse beyond the River, I am not able to determine.

Of those which were in the possession of the Tribe of NAPHTHALI, the Cities of most eminent observation were, 1. Hazor, or Azor, by Junius and Tremellius called Chazar, the Regal City and Metropolis of all the Canaanites: memorable for the Rendezvous of 24 Canaanite Kings in the War with Josiah; by whom it was taken notwithstanding, and burnt to ashes. But being afterwards rebuilt, it became the Regal Seat of Jabin the King of the Canaanites, who so grievously for the space of 20 years, afflicted Israel; till vanquished by Deborah and Barak, Destroyed in that War, and repaired by Solomon, it continued in so good estate in our Saviour's time, that it was then one of the ten Cities of Decapolis; it being so still, but known by the name of Asiopolis, 2. Capernaum, seated on the River Jordan, where it falleth into the Sea of Galilee; of which Country it was accounted the Metropolis, in the time of our Saviour, with whose presence and preaching often honoured, and one of the principal of the Decap. litans. Some marks of its former greatness is retained when St. Hierom liv'd, who confessed it to be a Town of some good capacity; but for decayed in the time of Breidenbach and Brachensis that it consisted but of six poor Fishermen's houses 3. Hamaith, so called from Hamathi the Son of Canaan, planted in these parts; a Town of such esteem in the elder times, that it was reckoned to be one of the Gates of the Land of Canaan; and therefore called in Scripture, Introitus Hamathi, or the entrance of Hamath; as Numb. 34. 8. Job. 15. Judg. 3. 3. Eccl. Mistaken by St. Hierom for another of the same name in Syria, by the Greeks and Romans after them, called Epiphania. And in this I say he is mistaken; Epiphania being placed by Ptolomy two degrees more Eastward than Cesarea Philippi, the most Eastern City of all Galilee; & two degrees more North than that, though the most Northern City of all Palestine. The ground of this mistake we have seen before. Won by the Syrians of Damascus, it was again recovered to the Crown of Israel, by Jeroboam the second Son of Joa; and after added by the Romans (as were Sychoptolis, Pella, Gadara, and some others of this tract) unto Celestia, 4. Kadeph, so difference it from others of the same name, called Kadeph, Naphthali, high seated on the top of an Hill, as is said, Job. 20. 7. The King whereof being taken and slain by Josiah, it was made one of the Cities of Refuge, and given to the Levites. Most memorable for the Birth of Barak, who discomfited Sisera, Lieutenant of the Host of Jabin before mentioned, in the infancy of the Levites State; one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, in the time of the Romans; and an Episcopical See in the first ages of Christianity. 5. Riblah, watered with the fountain of Danphib, a little Rivier, which hereabouts falleth into Jordan: to which City, as some say (but I think erroneously) Zedeckias the unfortunate King of the Jews was brought prisoner unto Nebuchadnezzar who caused his children robe slain before his face, & then put out his eyes. But this I look on as an Error in them that say it the Scene of this Tragedy being by Josiah laid in Riblah (or Riblah) a City of Syria; the same which in succeeding times had the name of Antioch. And certainly Josephus, who for so long was Governor of both the Galilees, cannot be conceived to be so ignorant of the State of this Province, as to transfer that bloody execution to a City of Syria; if it had been acted in this Country. Nor can I think that this Riblah, none of the greatest Towns in the Tribe of Naphthali, should be capable of the Court and Train of that mighty Monarch; especially for so long a time, as he is said to have attended in that place, the success of his forces then before Hierusalem, and the disposal of the State when the Town was taken. 6. Saphe, another of the Decapolitan Cities, strongly if not impregnable seated; one of the strongest Fortresses of the Western Christians, as it was after their expulsion of the Turks and Saracens; who from hence waited and subdued all the neighbouring Country, as far as to the very Sea. The only place, not of this Country only but of all the East, in which the Jews (who possessed it a part of this Town) have any shadow of a Common-wealth. 7 Bethlehem, mentioned Jaf. 19:28, made tributary unto those of this Tribe; though otherwise possessed by the Canaanites who held out against them. 8 Cartham, or Kiriathaim, situate near the Mountain, which in following times was called Mons Christi, because much frequented by our Saviour; who here made choice of his Apostles, as is said Mark 3: 13 and where he made also that Divine Sermon, recited in the 5, 6, and 7. Chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel. 9 Masfuboth, a place of a great strength, but forced by Bacchides, General of the Armies of the Kings of Syria, in the time of the Maccabees, 10 Cinnereth, a strong City, after called Genezareth; whence the Lake or Sea of Tiberias, neighbouring near unto it, is sometimes called the Lake of Genezareth, as Luke 5: 1, 8c.

2 The Tribe of ASER, was so called from Aser, the eighth Son of Jacob, begotten of Zilpah the Hand-maid of Leah; of whom at their first Muster when they came out of Egypt, were found 41500 persons able to bear arms, all above twenty years of age; and at the second Muster when they entered the Land of Canaan, 53400 fighting men of the new increase. The portion of the Land allotted for their habitation was plentiful in Wine, Oyl, and Wheat, with great store of Balsam; extending from the Coast of Sidon, to Ptolemais, thirty miles in length; and from the Mediterranean Eastward to the Tribe of Nephthali, some twelve miles in breadth. And though they never were of power to reduce the maritime Cities of Ptolemais, Tyres, Sarepta, and Sidon, under their command; yet had they in this narrow compass many beautiful Cities and Towns of note; which they were quietly possessed of, till their subjugation by the King of Affria.

The principal of those, and others which have since been founded, 1 Aphak, memorable for the great slaughter there made of the Syrians, when besieged by Ben-hadad; of whom 100000 were slain by the Israelites under the leading of Ahab, and 27000 killed by the fall of a Wall. 2 Gabala, mentioned by Ptolemy amongst the mid-land Cities of Phoenicia; but belonging properly to this Tribe: one of those twenty which were offered by Solomon unto Hiram, and upon his refusal peopled by the Israelites. Fallen to decay, it was afterwards rebuilt and strongly fortified by Herod the Great. 3 Gilead, a Town of great strength and consequences the birth-place of John or Jehonathan, one of the three seditions in Hiersusalem when besieged by Titus, where he did more mischief than the Enemy. Attempting to betray this City to the power of the Romans, he gave the Tyrants an opportunity to be Masters of it, by whom it was burnt unto the ground. But being rebuilt by the authority of Josephus, then Governor of Galilee for the Jews, it was afterwards yielded to Titus upon composition. 4 Canas, for distinction sake called Canas-Major, to difference it from another of that name in the Lower Galilee, affirmed for the dwelling of that Woman, whose Daughter Christ delivered of an evil Spirit; called by Saint Matthew a Woman of Canaan, chap. 15, a Syro-Phœnician by Saint Mark, chap. 7. the Syro-Phœnicians of this Tract, being originally of the Race of Canaan, as was said before. 5 Hebbar, or Cestibar, the furthest City of the North; as 6 Mellal, or Malphal, to the South, of the Tribe of Aser. Of later date there are 7 Thoron, a strong place, built by the Christians on the Hills near Tyres, to hinder the excursions of the Turks, when they held that City. Situate in a pleasant and fruitful Soil, of great importance in the Wars of the Holy-Land, and giving name to the Noble Family of the Lords of Thoron; one of which being Confrontable to King Saladin the third, lieth buried in the Chappel adjoining to it; a curious piece of workmanship, and dedicated by the name of the Blessed Virgin. 8 Belford, so named from the strength and beauty of it; seated on the high grounds near the River Naar, and memorable for the great repulse which Saladin the victorious King, of the Turks received before it; being forced to raise his Siege with dishonour and loss, on the coming of the Christians Armies. Some others Forts here are of the same erection, as 9 Monfort, and 10 Mount Royal (or Caltrun Region) belonging to the Dutch Knights (of whom more hereafter) and by them valiantly defended against the Infidels.

3 The Tribe of ZABULON, was so called from Zabulon the tenth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah; of whom there mustered near Mount Sinai 57400 able men; and 65000 at their second Muster, when they came into Canaan. Their Territory lay on the South of Aser and Naphthali, and the North of Zabulon, extending from the Lake of Tiberias to the Midstream.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Jokotham, the King whereof was slain by Jofabab, and the City given unto the Levites. 2 Zabulon, or the City of Mena; lately and magnificent City, till burnt to the ground by Cristian a Roman President. 3 Canas-minor, so called to difference it from the other in the Tribe of Aser, the birth-place of Nathanael, and as some say of Simon Zelotes; memorable for the Marriage at which our Saviour wrought his first Miracle, of turning Water into Wine: Called in Saint John's Gospel Canas of Galilee, 4 Resfabe, standing in the Border betwixt both Galilee, and therefore strongly fortified by Josephus against the Romans. 5 Dathab, where Jofabab found his Brethren as they fed their flocks; and where the Prophet Elijah brook blind the Syrians, who besieged him in it. 6 Behsaida, situate on the Sea of Galilee, one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, the birth-place of Peter, Andrew, and Philip; but most renowned for the Miracles and Preaching of our Lord and Saviour. 7 Nazareth, now a small Village, seated in a Vale betwixt two Hills, not far from Ptolemais or Acon; upon one of which two Hills it was formerly built, where still are to be seen the ruins of many Churches here founded by the Christians; it being in the flourishing times of Christianity an Archbishop's Sec. Of great esteem for being, if not the birth-place, yet the habitation of the Virgin Mary, who was here saluted with those joyful tidings by an Angel, as she sat in her Chamber. Of which Chamber it is said in the Popish Legends, That it was after the Virgin's death had in great reverence by the Christians, and remained in this Town till the Holy Land was subdued by the Turks and Saracens, Anno 1591. Then most miraculously transported into Sclavonia; but that place being unworthy of the Virgin's Divine Presence, it was by the Angels carried over into the Sea-coast of Italy, Anno 1294. That place also being infested by Thieves and Pirates, the Angels removed it to the little Village of Loretto, where her Miracles were quickly divulged; inasmuch that Paul the second built a most stately Church over this Chamber, and Agnes the fifth made the Village a City. And thus we have the beginning of our famous Lady of Loretto. Here did our blessed Saviour spend a great part of his Life before his Baptism; from whence both he and his Disciples had for many years the name of Nazarenes. 8 Josaphat, long since seated on the top of a Mountain, near the Lake of Genezareth, fortified by Josephus in the War with the Romans; but after a long Siege taken by Vespasian, and the City in Josephus the Historian, chief Governor of the City, and of both the Galilees. 9 Tiberias, raised out of the

the ground by Herod the Tetrarch, and named thus in honour of Tiberius Cæsar. Situate in a fruitful Soil, on the edge of the Lake, which afterwards took the name of the Lake or Sea of Tiberias; This City being held by the greatest of the Lower Galilee, and the Metropolis of the Decapolis Region. In this City it was that our Saviour CHRIST called Saint Matthew from the Receipts of the Custom-house; and near unto it, that he raised the Daughter of Jairus. 10 Bethulsa, more within the Land, seated on an high Hill, and of very great strength, as appears by the story of Judas and Heliferus. 11 Jafba, a place of like strength, but forced by Titus; who in the fury of the storm slew in it above 15000 persons, and carried away with him 2000 Prisoners. 12 Sephoria, or Sippora, the habitation of Jochab and Auna, the Parents of the blessed Virgin; fortified with strong Walls by Herod the Tetrarch, who made it his Regal Seat for the Lower Galilee. Before that time, it had been made by Gabinus, one of the five Judicial Refuges for the Palestinians; after that not without great difficulty forced by Vespasian; and is nothing now but a Castle known by the name of Zaphet, or Saffet. The ordinary Residence, for the most part, of the Turkish Sanziak who hath the Government of this Province; and lately, if not still, of the Emirs of Sidon; Faccardine the late Emir having been made the Sultan of it, before his falling off from the Turks. Not far off is Mount Tabor, famous for the transfiguration of our Saviour; for a sumptuous Chappel built on the top of the Hill in memory of it, by the Empress Helen, Mother of Constantine the Great; and for the Fountain of the Brook Chifon, which presently divided into two Streams, runneth Eastward with the one to the Sea of Tiberias; and Westward with the other to the Mediterranean.

4 The Tribe of ISSACHAR is so called from Issachar the ninth Son of Jacob, by his Wife Leah; of whom were found at the first Muster 54400 fighting men, and 64300 at the second Muster. Their Lot, in the partition of the Land amongst the Tribes, fell betwixt Zabulon, and the half Tribe of Manasse on this side Jordan, North and South; extending from that River to the Mid-Land Sea. A Territory not so well replenished with strong and eminent Cities, as was that before nor yielding so much matter of observation in the course of bulines.

Those of most note in it, 1 Taricheas, on the side of the Lake, about 8 miles from Tiberias, of great strength both by Art and Nature; as, with witness the notable resistance which Vespasian found when he besieged it, by whom taken with great difficulty and incredible slaughter, 2 Cibion, a City of the Levites. 3 Remeth, called also Jarnuth, another City of the Levites; where the Hills of Gilboa as take beginning, and thence range as far as the Mediterranean Westward, and the City of Jezreel towards the East. 4 En-hadda, near which Soil being diffracted by the Philistines, flew himself for grief, or else for fear of killing into the hands of those merciless Enemies, against whom he had so often returned victorious. 5 Naim, on the Banks of the River Chifon, where CHRIST raised to life the Widow's Son. 6 Harparan, or Aphrat, on the banks of the same River also. 7 Endor, of chief note for the Witch with whom Saul consulted; and the discomfiture of the Midianites by Gideon, who perished at Endor, and became as the dung of the Earth, faith the Royal Psalmist. 8 Daharab, one of the Cities of Refuge. 9 Archea, not far from the Cave of the two Thieves, who so greatly infested Galilee in the time of Herod. And 10 of a later date the Castle of Pilgrims (Caltrun Peregrinorum in Latine Writers) built by Raymond Earl of Tholose, and after fortified by the Templars, for the security of such as travelled to the Holy Land; and for long time the Magazine or Store-house of the Western Christians, now called Tortosa. Situate on the Shores of the Mediterranean, near a spacious Bay; on the North-side whereof Mount Carmel, described already.

As for those Galileans which succeeded in the place of these Tribes, they were for the most part originally such as were sent hither by Salmanassar to inhabit there, when the Israelites were led away into endless thralldom; but intermixed with some Remains of the ten Tribes, as was said before. And yet as if they had been wholly of the same extraction, with the rest of the Samaritan Nations, they were as much despised by the Jews (as witnesseth that scornful by-word, Can there any good come out of Galilee?) as the others were: though these as Orthodox in Religion as the Jews themselves. In which so zealously affected, that neither threats nor force could make them offer Sacrifice for the health of the Roman Emperours, who they looked on as the Enemies of their Law and Liberty. Brought under the command of the King of Jewry by the Maccabees, and with the rest of that Kingdom bestowed on Herod by the Romans. Left by him at his death to Herod named Antipater, the second of his Sons then living with the Title of Tetrarch, which he enjoyed till the death of our Saviour; and on his deprivation (being banished to Lyons in France by the Emperor Caligula) bestowed upon Agrippa his Brothers Son, the first King of the Jews so named. Under him, and his Son Agrippa the second, it continued till the general Revolt of the Jewish Nation, Subjected by the Sword of Vitus to the Power of the Romans; it hath since followed the same Fortune with the rest of Palestine.

4 SAMARIA.

SAMARIA is bounded on the East with the River Jordan; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Galilee; and on the South with Judea. So called from Samaria, the chief City of it, of which more hereafter.

The Country interchangeably composed of Fields and Mountains, excellent good for Tillage, and full of Trees, yielding variety of Fruits: watered both with the Dew of Heaven, and many fresh Springs which the Earth affordeth it, occasioning thereby abundance of Grains, and consequently of Mith-cheals exceeding plenty. Heretofore very wealthy, and no less populous; but now famed for neither.

The People for the most part were originally the descendants of those Affrians whom Salmanassar sent hither to possess the dwellings of the captive Israelites. Gentiles at first, till better instructed by the Lyons whom God sent amongst them, and after by the Priests sent hither by the Kings of Affria; they entertained the five Books of Moses, and out of them learned the manner of the God of the Land, 2 Kings 17. Further than this they would not go, rejecting all the rest of the Sacred Canon; and no strict Observers of this neither. And though at first they embraced the Worship of God, as that they still adhered to the gods of the Nations where before they dwelt, as Nergal, Alfihach, Nibbar, Tarak, and the rest of that rabble; mentioned 2 Kings 17. yet they were soon taken off from those impieties, and became zealous in the worship of one only God; erroneous chiefly in the place which was destined to it. The wicked policy of Jeroboam the Son of Nabat, was as natural to them, as if they could not have possessed his Estates without it; and therefore would not suffer their people to go up to Hiersusalem to worship, as the Law required. More pious in this than their Predecessors, that they erected no Golden Calves in Dan and Beithel, or any other parts of their Dominions: though to divert the People from the Temple of God, they would have a Temple of their own. Mount Garizim, and the Temple there (of which more anon) as sacred unto them, as that of Solomon to the Jews. Schismatical enough in this, but not Idolatrous and Schismatical too as the others were; yet so concited of themselves, and their own perfections, that they imagined themselves debased by any company but their own. If therefore they had visited any of their neighbour Nations, at their return they used to sprinkle themselves with urine: but if by negligence, or the necessity of business, they had touched any not of their own Sect, they drenched themselves, cloaths and all, in the next Fountain. But in this the Jews cried quittance with them, not so much as eating or drinking with them, nor having with them any kind of commerce or dealing, as appears John 4. 5. but loading them, on the other side, with all the bitterness of reproach and hatred. There are two manner of people (saith the Son of Sirach) which mine heart abhorreth, and the third is no people: they that sit on the Mountains of Samaria, the Philistines, and the foolish People that dwell at Sichem, Ecclesi 10. And this continued to the times of our blessed Saviour, whom when the Jews endeavoured to reproach with their heaviest calumnies, they could find out none so great, as to say that he was a Samaritan, and (which they thought came all to one) a man that had converse with Devils and familiar Spirits.

Of these there were some Sects also, as amongst the Jews. 1. The Dofibians, so called from Dofibear or Dofibai, supposed to be the first Priest who was sent thither by the King of Assyria: agreeing with the Jews in Circumcision, and the Sabbath, and the Doctrine of the Resurrection, (in which last they differed from the common Samaritans, who was a Sadducee in that point) but differing from them in some points of as signal consequence. For they rejected the Writings of all the Prophets, as not deceitful inspired by the Holy Ghost; they ate of nothing that had life, like the Pythagoreans, abstained from Marriage like the Efenses; and in the point of Sabbath-keeping out-went the Pharisees: it being resolved upon amongst them, That in what posture soever a man was found on the Sabbath day morning, in the same he was to continue without alteration the whole day after. 2. The Selvians, so called from Selva, or Selviab, one of the Companions of that Dofibai; who though they kept all the publick Festivals, as the Jews and the other Samaritans did, yet they kept them not at the same time: transferring the Paschever to August, the Pentecost to Autumn, and the Feast of Tabernacles to the time of the Paschever; not suffered for that cause to worship in the Temple of Garizim. 3. The Goribians, who kept the same Festivals, and observed the same times of those Solemnities, as the Law required, but kept only one of the seven days of those great Festivals, and laid by the rest, as days of ordinary labour. In other points not differing from the other Samaritans, who though at first possessed of all the Land belonging to the Ten Tribes of Israel, were yet reduced at last to a narrower compass: shut up betwixt Galilee and Judea, within the ancient Territories of the Tribe of Ephraim, and the other half Tribe of Manasse, on this side of the Water.

1 The half Tribe of MANASSES on this side of Jordan, was situate betwixt Itachar on the North, and the Tribe of Ephraim on the South; extending from the Mediterranean, to the Banks of that River, in which the places of most consequence and consideration, 1. Beth-san, environed almost with the Land of Itachar, situate near the Banks of Jordan, where it beginneth again to streighten and be like it self, having been almost lost in the Sea of Galilee: first called Nifa, and so called by Bacchus or Liber Pater, the Founder of it, in memory of his Nurse there buried; but the Children of Manasse not being able to expel the Natives out of it, as in other places, gave it the name of Beth-san, or the House of an Enemy. Afterwards when the Syrians invaded those parts of Alfa, and compelled some of the Jews to serve them against the rest (whom notwithstanding their good Service they put all to the Sword) they new-built this City: called therefore by the Grecians, Scythopolis, or the City of Scythians; and by them reckoned as a City of Calo-Syria. Memorable in the Old Testament for the hanging of the dead bodies of Saul and his Sons on the Walls hereof, by the barbarous Philistines: in the time of our Saviour, for being the greatest of all the Decapolis Regions; as afterwards in the flourishing times of Christianity, for being the See of an Arch-bishop: now nothing but a desolate Valley, and an heap of Rubbish, out of which many goodly Pillars, and other pieces of excellent Marble, are often digged. 2. Terzah, used by the Kings of Israel for their Regal Seat, till the building of Samaria, and the removal of it thither. 3. Arabatana, the Territory whereof called Aralatana, was afterwards made one of the Tribarities of Judea. 4. Thelers, not far from Samaria, where the Battard Abimelech was wounded with a Stone, which a Woman threw at him from the Wall; and perceiving his death to be drawing on, commanded his Page to slay him, that it might not be said he perished by the hands of a Woman. 5. Ephra, or Hephra, in which Gideon dwelt: near wherewith there stood an Altar consecrated to Baal, defaced by Gideon: and not far off the fatal Stone on which Abimelech slew 70 of his Brethren. An Heathenish cruelty, and at the day practised amongst the Turks. 6. Asphem, an agreeable Village, made famous only for the great and notable defeat which Ptolmy Latyrus here gave to Alexander the King of the Jews: which Victory he used with so great barbarity, that he slew all the Women as he passed along, and caused young children to be fed in Caldrons. 7. Bezek, the City of the bloody Tyrant Adonibezek, whose Story (touched upon before) see at large in Judges, chap. 1. By Josephus it is called Bala, and semeth to be the place in which Saul assembled the chief strength of Israel to Judah, to the number of 33000 men, for the relief of Jahob-Gilead, then distressed by the Ammonites. 8. Jezebel, the Royal City of Abah, and the Kings of his Race, situate on the foot of the Mountains of Gilboa: so near unto the Borders of Itachar, that some have placed it in that Tribe. Memorable in sacred Story for the stoning of Naboth by the procurement of Jezebel, and the breaking of Jezebel's neck by the command of Jehoi. A City which gave name to the Plains adjoining, called the Valleys or Plains of Jezebel (but by the name of Campus Magnus in the Book of Maccabees, lib. 1. cap. 10.) extending from Scythopolis to the Mediterranean: famous for the great and many Battels which have been fought in its name, by Gideon against the Midianites, of Saul against the Philistines, of Abah against the Syrians, of Jehoi against Jehoram; and finally, of the Christians against the Saucent. 9. Migdale, unfortunately observable for the death of the good King Johab, slain hereabouts in a Battel against against Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt; and before that of Abasiah King of Judab, who received his death-wound at Gaber, a Town adjoining, when pursued by Jehoi. 10. Dora, or Dor as the Scripture calls it, on the Mediterranean, not far from the Cattle of Pilgrims in the Tribe of Itachar. A very strong and powerful City, and therefore chose by Tryphon for his City of Refuge, who having first treacherously taken, and barbarously murdered Jonathan the Maccabean, after he had received 2000 Talents for his Ranlom; and no less villanously slain Antiochus the sixth of Syria, his Lord and Master whom he succeeded in his Throne, was by Antiochus the seventh, with an Army of 120000 foot, and 8000 horse, besieged in this City, and most delerately put to death. 11. Cesarea, anciently called the Tower of Siraton, from Siraton a King of the Zidonians; new-built by Herod, and by him not only beautified with a large Theatre and Amphitheatre, both of polished Marble, with a fair and capacious Haven, which with incredible charge and pains he forced out of the Sea. And having in twelve years brought it to perfection, in honour of Drusus Cesar, Son-in-law of Augustus, he called one of the chief Towers thereof to be called Drusus, the City it self to be called Cesarea Palestine. The stateliness and magnificence of which City (when first built by Herod) he that lifts to see may find the same described at large by Josephus the Jew, in the 15th Book of Antiq. cap. 13. In this City was Cornelius baptised by St. Peter: Here did Paul plead in defence of Christianity before Festus then the Roman President: and finally, here Herod Agrippa was smitten by an Angel, and devoured by Worms, after his Rhetorical Oratory, which his Parasites called the voice of God, and not of man. The Metropolis of all Palestine, when one Province only; as afterwards of Palestina prima, when by Constantine, or some of his Successors, cantoned into three: the first Bishop hereof being said to be that Cornelius, whom Saint Peter here initiated in the Faith of CHRIST. 12. Antipatris, another City of Herod's building, in the place where Kapharsalama, mentioned in Matt. 7. 31. had sometimes stood; who in honour of his Father Antipater, gave it this new name. Near herunto did Judas Maccabeus overthrow a part of Nicanor's Army: and not far off, the Mountain where Obadiah the Steward of Abah hid the hundred Prophets, whom he preserved against the fury of Jezebel: Finally, to this City it was that Saint Paul was conveyed by the command of Lyfias to save him from the Jews, who lay in wait to destroy him.

2 The Tribe of EPHRAIM was so called from Ephraim, the second and youngest Son of Joseph; of whom were mustered in the Deserts 45000 fighting men, and 32500 in the Land of Canaan; where their Lot fell betwixt this half Tribe of Manasse, on the North; and the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin, upon the South, extending from the River Jordan to the Mediterranean.

Places of most consideration, 1. Saron on the Mediterranean, to the South of Antipatris, mentioned Acts 9. 35. and giving name unto that fruitful Valley which reacheth from Cesarea Palestine, as far as Joppa. 2. Lydda, upon the same shores, where Saint Peter (virtute Christi, non sua) cured Aeneas of the Palsy. By the Gentiles it was called Diospolis, or the City of Jupiter; but by the Christians, in the time of the Holy Wars, it had the name of Saint George's; partly from a magnificent Temple which the Emperor Justinian there erected to the honour of that blessed Martyr; but principally from an opinion which they had amongst them, that he suffered Martyrdom in that place. An opinion founded on mistakes, first of a Cenotaphium, or an empty Monument erected in this City to preserve his memory, for the Grave in which he was interred: the other, in taking the word Paffio, used in the Martyrologies, for the place of his suffering, which is meant only of the Story or Celebration. But whoever they entitled it by the name of Saint George's, as was said before, and made it on that account also an Episcopal See. 3. Ramatha, or Arimatha, a City of the Levites, supposed to be the dwelling of Joseph, who begged of Pilate the Body of CHRIST. 4. Holon, or Ajalon, a City of the Levites also; by some placed, and perhaps more fitly, in the Tribe of Dan, and there we shall hear further of it. 5. Themath-Cares, given by the Israelites to Jothub, who enlarged the same, and made it a strong and goodly City; honoured with the Sepulchre of that brave Commander, one of the Nine Worshies of the World; and afterwards made one of the Presidures of Judea, by the name of Thamnitis. 6. Adafa, or Adafa, where Judas Maccabeus with 3000 Jews overthrew the Army of Nicanor. 7. Jefeti, called otherwise Pelcri, which gave name and birth unto the Pelcrians, part of David's Guard, under the governance of Benaiah. 8. Silo, situate on the top of a lofty Mountain: the receptacle of the Ark, till taken and carried thence by the Philistines. 9. Michmath, the habitation of Jonathan, one of the Maccabean Brethren, situate in the middle way from Samaria to Hiersusalem, now called Byra. 10. Naiab, where Saul prophesied. 11. Beithoron, a City of the Levites, beautified by Solomon, but made more famous by the great and notable overthrow which Judas Maccabeus here gave to Lyfias. 12. Pirbaton, on the Mountain Amelec, the City of Abdon the Judge of Israel. 13. Sichem, called also Sichor, the habitation in the old times of Sichem the Father of that Hamor, who defoured Dinah the Daughter of Jacob; the City for that cause destroyed by Simeon and Levi; repaired again, and afterwards by Abimelech levelled with the ground; a third time re-edified by Jerobam the Son of Nebas; and a third time ruined by the Kings of Damascus: yet notwithstanding these blows, it was of good esteem in the time of our Saviour, who abode in it two days, and converted many. Memorable for Jacob's Well, which was very near inmore for his neighbourhood to Mount Garizim, where the blessings were to be read to the people (of which see Deut. 11. 27. and Job 8. 23.) and where afterwards was built a magnificent Temple for the use of the Samaritan Nation, at the cost and charge of Sanballat, a great Prince amongst them. Who having married his daughter to Manasse, brother of Jaddus the High Priest of the Jews, and fearing he would put her away, to avoid the sentence of Excommunication, which he was involved in for that Match, promised him, that if he would retain her, he would build a Temple answerable to that of Hiersusalem, and make him the High Priest thereof, which was done accordingly. But this Temple had not stood above two hundred years, when destroyed by Hircanus the Maccabean; the place remaining notwithstanding a place of worship, as appears John 4. 20. As for the City of Sichem, or Sichor, it was by the Grecians called Nicopolis, afterwards made a Colony by the Emperor Vespasian, who caused it to be called Flavia Cesarea: of which Colony was that renowned Justin Martyr. 14. Samaria, the Metropolis of the Kingdom of Israel, founded by Omri one of the Kings thereof, on the top of the Mountain Sammou (which overlooketh all the bottom as far as the Sea-coast) whence it had the name. A lately and magnificent City, conjectured by Brocardus, who had traced the ancient Ruins of it, to be bigger than Hiersusalem. Destroyed by the Afrians when they carried away the Ten Tribes; but afterwards repaired again, and again beaten to the ground by the Sons of Hyrcanus above-mentioned: But Herod the Great, who was pleased with the situation of it, did again re-edify it, in more stately manner than before; as appeareth by the great store of goodly Marble Pillars, and other carved Stones, in great abundance found amongst the rubbish: and having rebuilt it to his mind, inclosed it with a strong wall, and beautified it with a goodly Temple, in honour of Augustus-Cæsar, whom the Greeks call Sebastos, he caused it to be called Sebastie. Memorable after this new erection from the Sepulchre of John Baptist, having made the Metropolis of Palestina Secunda, (by consequence an Archbishop's See) now nothing but a few cottages filled with Greecian Monks.

Nor were the Samaritans themselves (so called from this their principal City) less subject to the vicissitudes and change of fortune, than the City was. Defended for the most part from the Assyrians, and such other Nations as were sent thither to fill up the empty places of the captive Tribes: but called Cuthians by the Jews, either because most of them were of Cuth, a Region of Perfia, as Josephus telleth us, which is now called Chuzestan; or else by way of scorn, for Chusier, as being of the Posterity of the accursed Cham, by Chus his son. Having embraced the Law of Moses, they began to think better of the Jews than the other Nations, but fitted their affections to the change of times: it being the observation of the said Josephus, that as often as the Jews were in any prosperity, then they called them Cozins, and would be of the same Nation with them; but when their fortunes were on the declining hand, then they were strangers which came thither out of foreign Nations, and no kin at all. Nor doth he wrong them in that Character. For when Alexander the Great had granted the Jews a release of the seventh years Tribute, the Samaritans desiring the like exemption, pleaded for themselves Exegias (as Sarus &c. that they indeed were very Hebrews), though it pleased the Sidians to call them Sichemites. But when Antiochus raged against them with fire and sword, the Samaritans sent Letters to him, disclaiming all relation to those of Judah, and challenging their descent from the Modes and Perfians. Nor were they content only to disclaim all kindred with the Jews, in the times of trouble, when any persecution rose against them for the Law of God; but did them also all ill Offices, and joyed with their Enemies to their destruction: especially after the Jews had refused to admit of their assistance, in the re-building of the Temple; which after that they hindered with great malice, and no less perfervence. But the fortune of the Jews did at last prevail, the whole Nation being subdued by Hyrcanus the Maccabean, who destroyed their Schismatical Temple also, and levelled Samaria it self to the very ground. After this, subject to the Jews, who possessed themselves of most of their Cities, and contracted them into a narrower compass than they were in formerly: but still full of hatred and contemned, that nothing was able to appease that inveterate malice, which they had conceived; till both Nations were extirpated in the time of Adrian, and made to seek their dwellings in other Countries. Made afterwards a Province of the Roman Empire, by the name of Palestina Secunda; successively subject with the rest, to the Perfians, Saracens, and Turks, who do now possess it.

5 J U D E A.

J U D E A is bounded on the East with the Dead Sea, and the River Jordan; on the West, with the Mediterranean; and on the North with Samaria, and on the South with Idumea. So called from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, who after their return from the captivity of Babylon, communicated the name of Jehon unto all the Nations, as they did that of Judah to this part of the Country.

The Soil of the same nation with that of Samaria, before described; but it is more swelled with Hills, and more strewed with Rivers, though of no great fame. And therefore we shall say no more, as to the general character and description of it; but look on the particular parts as it stood divided betwixt the Philistines, the Tribes of Dan, Simoon, Judah and Benjamin.

And first, the PHILISTINES commanded all the Sea-coasts from the South of Phœnicia, to the North of Idumea; or from the Castle of Pilgrims, to the City of Gaza, taking both into the accompt. But Joppa, and all the Towns on the North of that, being taken in by the Israelites, they held no more than six Towns of any importance, with the Countries and Territories adjoining to them: but those few populous and strong, that by their own power, and the assistance of the Edomites, and the rest of their Neighbours, not well affected to the Tribes, they kept them under terms, and lay more heavy on them than all the Canaanites together; as will appear when we sum up the story and successes of their affairs.

In the mean time let us survey the Country which was holden by them, notwithstanding all that could be done against them by the Kings of Israel: and therein we shall find worth our observation, 1. Geth, or Gath, the birth-place of the huge Giant Goliath, slain by David, as also of many others of the like Gigantic proportion, slain by David's Worthies. Destroyed by David, or rather slighted and dismantled, it was re-built by Roboam the Son of Solomon; but again razed by Ozias King of Judah, who found the Philistines there garrisoned both in his neighbours to him, and finally laid waste by Hazeel the King of Syria. Not much regarded after that, though it kept the name of Gath in St. Hierom's time; till in these latter Days the King of Hierusalem erected there a new Castle, from the ancient ruins. From hence, as I conceive, the Idol Dagon, so much worshipped by these Philistines, was by the Syrians and Phœnicians called Asu-Gath; and not from Gath a Syrian Queen, as is said by many. 2. Asaron, on the South of Gath, of great wealth and power, and one that held out notably against the Danites and Judeans. Much spoken of in the holy Scriptures, but for nothing more than their Idolatrous worship of Belzebub, that is to say, the Lord of Flies: so called by the Jews, either in contempt of the Idolatries committed to him, or because of that great multitude of Flies which attended his Sacrifices, whereof some say, the Temple of Hierusalem was wholly free. But whatsoever he was, or for what cause so named, certain it is that he was heretofore in especial honour, and therefore called in Scripture the god of Asaron: and his other Abazabab the King of Israel felt his Messenger, to enquire of this Idol, concerning his health. 3. Aphid, (by the Greecians called Asen) memorable in Holy Writ for the Temple of Dagon into which the Ark of the Lord was brought; that Idol falling down before it, as not able to stand upon being the Ark fo near. Near to this Town was Judas Maccabean overcome & slain by Bacchides, Lieutenant to Demetrius the King of Syria; and not long after the Town itself was taken by Jonathan the brother of Judas, who put the Citizens to the sword, and burnt all such as fled to the Temple of Dagon, together with the very Idol, consumed in the same fire with the Idolaters. Rebuilt by Gabinus a Roman General, in the times of Christianity it was

was made an Episcopal See; and continued a fair Village till the days of St. Hierom. 4. Acalon, on the Sea-side also, said to be built by Acalus a noble Lydian, employed by his King in a war against the Syrians; but this very uncertain. One of the chief and strongest Cities of the Philistines, of great note amongst the Gentiles for a Temple, dedicated to Directo, the Mother of Seniramis, here worshipped in the form of a Mermaid: & for another of Aphs, wherein Herod the Father of Antipater, and Grandfather of Herod the Great (from his birth in this City called Herod the Acalonite) is said to have served as the Priest. It had in the first times of Christianity an Episcopal See; and in the course of the holy Wars was beautified with a new wall, and many fair buildings by King Richard the first; 5. Gaza, more within the Land, on the River Bejor; a fair and strong Town, formerly called Alis, from whence perhaps the name of Gaza was derived by the Heathens; or else it was so called by the Perfians, in regard that Cambyses here laid up the Treasure which he had provided for the War of Agypt, the word Gazain the Perfian Language signifying treasures. Of which Cambyses it is said by Pomponius Mela, Cum anti Aegyptum peteret, huc belli opes & pecuniam involvit oneri. After which it was made the Receipt of Treasure, in which the Perfians laid the Tribute of the Western Provinces, whence all riches had in time the name of Gaza. Once Caleb took it, but not able to hold it against the Philistines, he again deserted it. Destroyed by Alexander the Great, and re-built again, it made notable resistance against the Maccabees; till at last forced by Simon the brother of Judas, who liked the place so well that he intended to have made it his place of residence: not decayed in length of time, but that it was a goodly City in the days of Brochadus. And it is still the best of all this Coast, built on an hill encompassed with rich and pleasant valleys: the buildings low and mean, as in other places; but some of them adorned with pillars of Asian Marble, digged out of the remaining ruins. 6. Maima, the Port Town of Gaza, but made a City of it by Constantine, by whom called Constantia; but re-fortified again by Julian unto those of Gaza, and by him commanded to be called Gaza Maritima.

These were the chief places holden by the Philistines, a strong and Giantlike race of men, such as the Scripture calls by the name of Anak, or the Sons of Anak. Originally descended from Cushim and Caphorim, of the race of Emoraim the Son of Cham; as appeareth both by the common consent of ancient Writers, and plain Texts of Scripture, Jer. 47. 4. and Amos 9. 7. These being settled first in the borders of Agypt and Idumea, and the Cushim gave name unto the Province of Canaan, and the Mountain Cafus; proceeded Northwards and subdued the Avims, a Canaanitish people, planting themselves in their habitations, as is laid expressly Deut. 2. 23. Here Abraham found them in his time, and here they were when Isaac went down to Gerar. Governed at first by one King whom they called always by the name of Abimelech, as the Egyptians theirs by the name of Pharaoh, sometimes by five, according to the number of their principal Cities; but still united in the times of approaching dangers. Too strong to be subdued by the Tribes of Israel, they made head against them, and maintained them at several times, for above 150 years, tyrannized over them, till broken by Samson, and for a time kept off by Samuel. Recovering again, they vanquished the Israelites in the time of Saul, whom they discomfited, and changed his dead body barbarously on the walls of Bethsai. But David, a more fortunate Prince, overthrew them in many batteles, and at length took the Town of Gath, one of the strongest Towns they had;

and by that means fo weakened them, that they durst not stir all the time of David, nor along while after. Beginning to be troublesome in the days of Ozias King of Judah, they were warred on by him, their Army overthrown, Ita and Amcia, two of their strong Forts, took and razed, and the Town of Gath again dismantled. In the time of the Idolatrous Achaz, associating with the Edomites, (who evermore attended the destruction of Judah) they broke out again; took Bethsaiem, Ajalon, Timnah, and some other Towns; carried away many Prisoners, and slew much People: But the good King Ezekiab made them pay dear for it, taking from them, the greatest part of their Country, betwixt Gath & Gaza. Which notwithstanding, they recovered to so great esteem, that the whole Country had from them the name of Palestine. But broken by degrees by the Maccabees, they lost both their power and reputation, falling in common estimate as a part of Jerry; the fortunes of which it followed for the time succeeding.

2. The Tribe of DAN is so called from Dan the fifth Son of Jacob, by Bilhah the Hand-maid of Rachel, of whom were mulctured at Mount Sinai 62700 fighting men; and 66000 at the second muster, in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt Ephraim, on the North; Simoon on the South, the Tribe of Benjamin, on the East, and the Mediterranean on the West.

Places of most note in it, 1. Joppa (now called Jaffa) once a famous Mart-Town, and the only Haven to Judea in foregoing times: the Town where Jonah took ship to fly unto Tarshish, where Peter raised Dorcas from death to life; & where he lying in the house of one Simon a Tanner, was in a Vision taught the conversion of the Gentiles. This City they report to have been built before the flood. And here they say reigned Cepheus, whose Daughter Andromeda was by Perseus delivered from a Sea-monster, some of whose bones the people used to shew to strangers, even to the flourishing of the Romans. Just as our citizens of Coventry and Warwick shew the bones of the Dun-Cow of Dunfearn heath, and the bones of I know not what Giant, slain by Guy Earl of Warwick. In the time of the Maccabees it was garrisoned by the Syrians, who having in the Port a Fleet of good power & strength, invited 200 of the chief citizens to go aboard with them, & there drowned them all: for which their Fleet was fired by Judas, and such as did escape the fire, fell upon the sword. Twice taken by the Romans, & the second time burnt unto the ground: new walled, and fortified with Towers by King Lewis of France, in the year 1250, the holy Wars then drawing to their final end. Now nothing standing off but two little Towers where are certain Harquebusses for defence of the Haven, none of the belted-defence from the South & West-wards with eminent Rocks, but exposed to the fury of the North; which makes it more unsafe than the open Seas when enraged by Tempests. Not much frequented by the Merchants, who trade here but for Cottons only, & hold their Factory not far off in a Town called 2. Rama, by the Movers called Ramala, situated in a sandy plain, on the rising of a little Hill: built of Free-stone, but the streets thereof narrow, and the houses contemptible. More beautiful in the ruins of some Christian Churches, and a Monastery built by Philip the God of Burgundy, where the House of Nieodemus stood, than in any of the remaining Edifices. 3. Jamnia, near Joppa, where Judas burnt the rest of the Syrian Fleet, the flame whereof was seen to Hierusalem, 240 furlongs off: mentioned by Ptolomy, and in the times of Christianity an Episcopal See; now not discernible in the ruins. 4. Cedar or Cedron, fortified against the Jews by Condeba one of the Lieutenants of Antiochus, who hereabouts was overthrown.

Gibeah, all Israel arming against it as one man. For besides that perished in the former Battels, there fell in one day 25000 men that drew the Sword: the fury of the Conquerors after that great Victory sparing neither man nor beast, nor any thing that came to hand, and burning down all their Cities also which they came unto. So great an havoc was there made of innocent Maidens, that when the edge of this displeasure was taken off, there were not Wives enough found for those young men which had escaped. The other Tribes having bound themselves by a solemn Oath, not to betray their Daughters on them: inasmuch that they were fain to provide themselves of Wives of the Daughters of Jabish-Gilead, a Town of the Manassites beyond Jordan, whom they took by assault; and of the Daughters of Shiloh, whom they took by stratagem. The whole Story see at large in the Book of Judges, c. 19. 20. 21.

The Territories of this Tribe lay betwixt those of Ephraim on the North, and Judah on the South; having the Dead-Sea to the East, and the Tribe of Dan to the Westward of them. The chief of their Towns and Cities were, 1. Michmas, the incamping place of Saul, 1 Sam. 13. 2. and the abiding place of Jonathan, one of the Maccabean Brethren, 1 Maccab. 9. 73. 2. Mispah, famous in being the ordinary place of assembly for the whole body of the People, in matters of War and Peace: as also in that standing in the midst of Canaan, it was (together with Gilgal) made the Seat of Justice, to which Samuel went yearly to give Judgment to the People. 3. Gebah, the North border of the Kingdom of Judah toward Israel. 4. Gebeah, the Country of Saul, the first King; where the abutting of the Levite's Wife by the young men of this Town, had almost rooted the Tribe of Benjamin out of the Garden of Israel. 5. Ai, a great and strong City, in the Siege of which the Israelites were first discomfited: but when by the death of Achan, who had sinned the accursed thing, the Camp was purged, Joshuah by a warlike Stratagem surpris'd it. 6. Gibeon, the mother-City of the Gibeonites, who profligating the unresistable Victories of the Israelites, came to the Camp of Joshuah, and by a wife obtained peace of him and the People: Employed by them in hewing Wood, and drawing Water for the use of the Tabernacle, after the fraud was made known unto them, called Nethinims, Ezra 4. 3. from Nathan, which signifies to give, because they were given to the service of the Tabernacle first, of the Temple after. Saul about four hundred years after, slew some of them, for which fact the Lord caused a Famine on the Land; which could not be taken away till seven of Saul's Sons were by David delivered unto the Gibeonites, and by them hanged. This Famine did God fend, because in killing those poor Gibeonites, the Oath was broken which Joshuah and the Princes swore concerning them. In defence of those Gibeonites it was that Joshuah stayed War against the Kings of the Canaanites, and wayed the motion of the Sun by his fervent Prayers. 7. Jericho, destroyed by the sound of Rams-Horns, was not only levelled by Joshuah to the ground, but a Curse inflicted on him that should attempt the re-building of it. This Curse notwithstanding, at the time when Abub reigned in Israel (which was about five hundred years after the ruin of it) Hiel a Bethelite, delighted with the pleasantness of the place, re-edified it. But (as it was foretold by Joshuah) as he laid the foundation of the Walls, he lost his eldest Son; and when he had finished it, and was setting up the Gates thereof, he lost also the younger. It may be Hiel when he began this Work, minded not the Prophecy, it may be he believed it not: peradventure he thought the words of Joshuah not so much to proceed from the spirit of Prophesy, as from an angry and vexed heart; they being spoken in way of wish, or execration. And it is possible, it may be, he chose rather to build the eternity of his name on so pleasant and beautiful a City, than on the uncertain lives and issues of two young men. 8. A-nathoth, the birth-place of the Prophet Jeremy, and the Patrimony of Abiathar the High-Priest, first hindered by the command of Solomon, as to a place of his own, when deposed from his Office by that King. 9. Nab, called 1 Sam. 22. 19. the City of the Priests, destroyed by Saul, for the relief which Abimelech the High-Priest had given to David; the Ark of the Lord then residing there. 10. Gilgal, upon the bank of Jordan, where Joshuah did first eat of the Fruits of the Land, and kept his first Passover; where he circumcised such of the People as were born during their wandering in the Wilderness; and nigh to which he set up twelve Stones, for a Memorial to Posterity that the Waters of Jordan did there divide themselves, to give passage to the twelve Tribes of Israel. Here Agag, King of the Amalekites, was taken in pieces by Samuel; and here Samuel once every year administered Justice to the People. For being fated in the midst of the Land of Israel, betwixt North and South, and on the East-side of the Country near the Banks of Jordan, it served very fitly for that purpose: as Mispah also did, which stood in the same distance, in regard of the length of the Land of Canaan, but situate towards the West-Sea, near the Land of the Philistines: and therefore interchangeably for the use of the People. 11. Bethel, at the first called Luz, but took this new name in remembrance of the Vision which Jacob saw here, at going towards Mesopotamia, as is said Gen. 28. 19. It signified the House of God, and was therefore chosen by Jeroboam, for the setting up of one of his golden Calves; though thereby (as the Prophet said) he made it to be Beth-aven, the House of Vanity, Hosai 15. & 10. 4. For then it was a part of the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, and the Southern border of that Kingdom on the Coast of Ephraim: but taken from it by Ahish the King of Judah, and after that accounted as a member of his Kingdom, till the destruction of it by the Chaldeans. Called with the rest of those parts in the Macabees, by the name of Aphaim, which signifieth a thing taken away; because taken away from the ten Tribes, to which once it belonged, 1 Mac. 11. 34. where it is said, to have been taken from the Country of Samaritania, and added unto the borders of Judea. 12. Ramath, another place there mentioned, and said to have been added to the Realm of Judah of Israel; formerly the South border of the Kingdom of Israel; and therefore strongly fortified by Basai, one of the Ash King of Judah. 13. Chadai, or Hadai, one of the three Cities (the other two being La and 15000) which were inhabited by the Benjaminites after the Captivity. Destroyed in the Wars with the Kings of Syria, and afterwards re-built by Simon the Maccabee.

But the chief Glory of this Tribe, and of all the rest, and not so only, but of all the whole World, was really was the famous City of Hierusalem, seated upon a rocky Mountain, every way to be ascended with steep and difficult Ascents (except towards the North Mountains, all other sides also with some neighbouring Mountains, as it placed in the midst of an Amphitheatre. It consisted in the time of its greatest flourish of four parts, separated by their several Walls, as if several Cities: we may call them, the Upper City, the Lower City, the New City, and the City of Herod: all of them but the Lower City, seated upon their several Hills. Of these, that which we call the City of Herod, had formerly been beautified with the Houses of many of the Prophets as in our Saviour's time with that of Mary the Mother of John Mark, mentioned Acts 15. 37. converted to a Church by the Primitive Christians: the Western part whereof was wholly taken up by the Palace of Herod, (a wicked but magnificent Prince) for cost excessive, and for strength invincible; containing Gardens, Groves, Hilpoods, places devised for pleasures, besides those for exercise. Fortified with three Towers at the corners of it. That on the South-East of the Wall, fifty Cubits high, of excellent workmanship, called Mariamne's Tower, in memory of his beloved but insolent Wife, rashly murdered by him. Opposite to which, on the South-West corner, stood the Tower of Phasaelus, so called by the name of his Brother, seventy Cubits high, and in form resembling that so much celebrated Egyptian Pharos: and on the North Wall, on a high Hill, the Tower of Hippick, exceeding both the rest in height by fourteen Cubits, and having on the top two Spires in memory of the two Hippici, his very dear Friends, slain in his service in the Wars.

2. On the South-side flood that part which was called the Old City, possessed if not built by the Jehusites, and therein both the Mountain and Fort of Sion: but after called the City of David, because taken by him; and thereon built a strong and magnificent Castle, the Royal Court and Mansion of the Kings succeeding. In the West part hereof stood the Tower of David; a double Palace built by Herod, the one part whereof he named Agrippa, and the other Cesar, composed of Marble; and every where interlaid with Gold; and not far off, the House of Annas and Caiaphas, to which the Conspirators sought our Saviour to receive his Tryal.

3. That which was called the Lower City, because it had more in it of the Valley, was also called the Daughter of Sion, because built after it, and did in Majesty and greatness exceed the Mother. For therein upon Mount Moriah, stood the Temple of Solomon (whereof more anon) and betwixt it and Mount Sion, on another Hill, the Palace which he built for his Wife the Daughter of Egypt; and that which he founded for himself, from which by an high Bridge he had a way unto the Temple. West hereof, on a lofty Rock over-looking the City, stood the Royal Palace of the Princes of the Maccabees, re-edified and dwelt in by King Agrippa, (though of Herod's Race) and not far of the Theatre of Herod's building, adorned with admirable Pictures, expelling the many Victories and Triumphs of Augustus Caesar. In this part also stood Mount Akra, and on that once a Citadel built by Antiochus King of Syria, but razed by Simon one of the Maccabean Brothers, because it over-topped the Temple; the House of Helena Queen of Adiabene, who converted from Paganism to Judaism, had here her dwelling, and her edifice: and finally, Herod's Amphitheatre, capacious enough to contain 80000 people, whom he entertained sometimes with such Shows and Spectacles, as were in use amongst the Romans. And in this part also, on a high and craggy Rock, not far from the Temple stood the Tower of Barris, whereon the same Herod built a strong and impregnable Citadel, in honour of Mark Antony, whose Creature he first was, called by the name of Antoniana, having a fair and large Tower at every corner, two of them fifty Cubits high, and the other seventy; afterwards garrisoned by the Romans, for fear the Jews presuming on the strength of the Temple, might take occasion to rebel.

4. As for the New City, which lay North to the City of Herod, it was once a Suburb only unto all the rest; inhabited by none but mechanical persons, and the meanest Tradesmen; but after encompassed by Agrippa with a Wall of 25 Cubits high, and fortified with ninety

Turrets. The whole City fenced with a wonderful circumvallation on all parts thereof; having a Ditch cut out of the same Rock, as Jesseph an eye-witness writeth, sixty foot deep, & no less than two hundred and fifty foot in breadth. First built, say some, by Melchisedek the King of Salem; by the Jehusites themselves say others: by whomsoever built, called at first Jehusalem, afterwards Jerusalem, with the change of one letter only: enlarged in time, when made the Royal Seat of the House of David, to the magnificence and greatness before described, till it attained unto the compass of sixty furlongs, or seven miles and an half. Unconquered for the first four hundred years after the entrance of the Children of Israel; and when David attempted it, the people presumed so much on the strength of the place, that they told him in the way of scorn, that the blind and the lame which they had amongst them (as the Text is generally expounded) should defend it against him. But as I think, the late learned Mr. Gregory of Christ Church in Oxon, hath found out a more likely meaning of the Text than this, who telleth us, that the Jehusites by the Blind and Lame (as they knew well what the Israelites called Blind and Lame) did understand those Tutelar Idols, on whose protection they relied (as the Trojans did on their Palladium, for defence thereof: and then the meaning must be this, Those gods whom you of Israel call blind and lame, shall defend our Walls. Why else should David say, (had they meant it literally) that his soul hated the lame and the blind? 2 Sam. 5. 8. or why should the People of Israel be so uncharitable as to say, That the blind and lame should not come into the House (or the Temple of God) were it meant no otherwise? But notwithstanding these vain hopes, the Town was carried under the conduct of Joab, that fortunate and courageous Leader; and made the Royal Seat of the Kings of Judah.

Proceed we now unto the Temple built by Solomon, in providing the Materials whereof there were in Lebanon 30000 Workmen, which wrought by 10000 every Month; 70000 Labourers, which carried Burdens; 80000 Quarry-men, that hewed Stones in the Mountains; and of Officers and Overseers of the Work, no less than 3300 men. The Description of this stately Fabric, we have in the first of Kings, cap. 6. 7. In the year of the World 2350, it was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar at the taking of Hierusalem: re-built again after the return from the Captivity; but with such opposition of the Samaritians, that the Workmen were fain to hold their Tools in one hand, and their Swords in the other, to repulse, if need were, those malicious Enemies. But yet this Temple was not unfavourable to the magnificence of the former; so that the Prophet Haggai had good occasion to say to the People, cap. 1. ver. 3. Who is left amongst you that saw this House in her first Glory? is it not in your eyes as nothing, in comparison of it? Nor fell it short thereof only in the outward Structure, but some inward Additions: For it wanted, 1. The Pot of Manna, which the Lord commanded Moses to lay upon the Tegistimony for a memorial, Exod. 16. 32. &c. 2. The Rod of Aaron, which only budded of all the Rods of the Princes of Israel, and was commanded to be kept before the Ark of the Tegistimony, for a token against Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Num. 17. 10. 3. The Ark of the Covenant, the making whereof we have Exod. 25. 10. and the placing of it in the Oracle, or Sanctum Sanctorum, 1 Kings 6. 19. 4. The two Tables of the Law, writ by God's own finger, and by Moses laid up in the Ark of the Covenant, Exod. 40. 20. and Deut. 10. 5. And 5. The Fire of Sacrifice, which came down from Heaven, mentioned Lev. 9. 24. 2 Chron. 17. 11.

which by the Priests was to be kept continually burning never to go out. This second Temple, partly because it was grown ruinous, partly because it seemed not magnificent enough, but principally to carry favour with the Jews, Herod the Alexandrian pulled down, and set up another in the place: making it not much inferior (if at all) unto that of Salomon, but far superior to the other Imperial Temple, as Tacitus most truly called it. And this was it to which our Saviour did sometimes vouchsafe his presence.

But here we are to understand, that by the Temple it is not meant the Fabric only, or the House it self; but also all those several Courts which encompassed, being four in number. That is to say, Atrium Sacerdotum, or the Priests Court, which was next unto the Temple wherein stood the Brazen Altar for the daily Sacrifice, and the Laver for the washing of the Priests and the Sacrifice also; into which Court might none enter but the Priests alone. 2. Then there was Atrium Populi, or the Peoples Court, separated from the other by a Wall of three Cubits height; to which the people did repair to perform their Sacrifices, to say their prayers, and to make payment of their vows. In the middle of this Court, did Salomon make a brazen Scaffold for the Kings his Successors; 2 Chron. 6. 13. and afterwards in imitation of his Porch built before the Temple, were many Porches built about it for the people to repair in rainy weather, which gave to this whole Court the name of Salomon's Porch, whereof see John 10. 23. Acts 3. 11. With that stood Atrium Famularum, or the Womens Court, divided from the other, as is collected out of 2 Chr. 20. 5, in the time of Jehoshaphat King of Judah; in which stood the Treasury, or poor mans Box, mentioned in the one and twentieth Chapter of St. Lukes Gospel: from whence this whole Court had sometimes the name of Treasury, as appeareth John 8. 20, where it is said, that these women spoke JESUS in the Treasury, that is to say, in the Womens Court, where the Treasury or Alms-box stood. Betwixt these last was an ascent of 15 steps, on which the Levites used to sing those 15 Psalms, which do immediately follow the hundred nineteenth Psalm upon each step one: from whence they had the name of Psalms Graduates, or Cantica Graduum, i.e. the Psalm or Songs of degrees. And so far all was counted holyground, upon which none might tread but either natural Jews, or circumcised Proselytes, whom they called Proselyti fidei, as before was said; or such of the other Sex (not natural Jews) who having received all outward initiations, had bound themselves unto the observation of the Law of Moses. 4. So was it not with the fourth and last Court, called Atrium Gentium, or the Court of the Gentiles, designed for the use of those Gentiles, whom they called Proselyte Portæ, bound only unto the keeping of the Precepts given to the Sons of Noah. For in that, as unanctified ground (though counted part of the Temple also) did they permit a Market of Sheep and Oxen, the Sale of Doves and Pigeons, and the Tables of Money-changers, for the Oblations of the People: habling the poor Gentiles amongst their Cattle, & ranking them with the worst of them. And out of this Temple, or Court of the Temple did CHRIST our Saviour cast the buyers and sellers, and overthrow the Tables of the money-changers; asserting it to its primitive and original use, which was to be an house of Prayer for all the Nations. This last Court separate the other by a wall of three cubits height, adorned with certain pillars of equal distance, bearing this inscription, ΜΗ ΔΙΣΒΑΛΕΙΣ ΕΙΣ ΤΗΝ ΑΓΙΑΝ ΑΥΛΑΝ, i. e. Let no Alien (or one that is no Jew) enter into the Holy Place: as to this wall it is that the Apostle alludeth, saying, He hath broken down the middle-wall of partition between us (i. e. between the Jews and Gentiles) making one of us, Ephes. 2. 14, 15. inferring hereupon, that the Gentiles are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-Citizens with the Saints, and of the household of God, v. 9.

But to go forwards with the Temple, having continued in the glories of which Herod brought it, not above 85 years, it was finally destroyed by Titus the Son of Vespasian, in the 69 year of Christ's Nativity. At what time the Temple of Delphos was utterly overthrowed by Earthquakes and Thunderbolts from Heaven; neither of them ever since repaired, though much endeavoured. The concurrence of which two Miracles evidently sheweth, that the time was then come in which God would put an end both to the Jewish Ceremonies and Heathen Idolatries, that so the Kingdom of his Son might be all in all. For this destruction of the Temple of Hierusalem I may call a miracle, in regard it was done against the command of Titus; who was not only careful to preserve it, before his Soldiers had put fire to it, but did all that possibly might be to quench it. His reason was, Populus Jdp. Venerat in Hierusalem, as Josephus hath it, because thereof would redound so highly to the prejudice of the Roman Empire, in being deprived of such a glorious and magnificent structure. But do he who could with his utmost industry, there was no quenching of it till it was consumed. And it adds somewhat to the marvel, that this should happen on the tenth day of August, on which day the first Temple had been burnt by Nebuchadnezzar. And certainly it is worth the noting (I hope shall not be accounted superstitious for this observation) to see how happy or unfortunate, one the same day had been found unto divers persons. In the Wars betwixt the French and Spaniards for the Realm of Naples, Friday was observed to be very lucky to that great Captain Gonsalvo; he having on that day given the French many notable overthrowes. Wednesday is said to have been fortunate to Pope Sixtus the Fifth, for on that day he was born; on the same made a Monk; on that day created General of his Order; on the same day made a Cardinal, then chosen to be Pope; and finally on the same inaugurated. To Henry the Seventh of England, Saturday was observed to be very fortunate in all his actions; as was the 24 of February unto Charles the Fifth, on what day forever: for on that he came into the world, and in that he took the King Francis prisoner at the Battel of Pavie, and on the same received the Imperial Crown. But to return unto the Temple, we find that on the Sabbath, or Saturday, it was taken by Titus, on the same day by Herod, and on that also by Titus. But go we forwards to Hierusalem as now it standeth, it lay in rubbish and unbuild (after the destruction of it by Titus) till repaired by Adrian; and then the Temple not so much as thought of, till out of an ungodly policy, in the Reign of Julian, that Politick Enemy of the Church; who to diminish the infinite number of Christians by the increase of the Jews, began again to build this Temple. But no sooner were the foundations laid, but a terrible Earthquake cast them up again, & fire from Heaven consumed the Tools of the Workmen, together with the Stones, Timber, and other materials. As for the City it self after the defolation in it which was made in Titus, it was re-edified by the Emperor Elus Adrianus, who named it Elus, gave the Jews, and gave it to the Christians. But this new City was not built in the place of the old. For within this, Mount Calvary comprehended, which was not in the old before. As on the other side, a great part of Mount Sion, part of the City of Herod, and the joyl where the New City stood, are left out of this: the ruins of the other still remaining visible, to shew the ancient greatness and magnificence of it. To look upon it then as it stands at present, it is now only famous for the Temple of the Sepulchre built by Helena (whom most report to have been daughter to Cylius a British King) Mother to Constantine the Great. Much ado had the good Lady, to find the place where the Lords body had been laid: for the Jews and Heathens had raised great hillocks on the place and built there a Temple of Venus. This Temple being plucked down, and the Earth digged away, the found three Crosses, whereon our blessed Saviour, & the two Thieves had suffered. To know which of those was the right Cross, they were all carried to a Woman, who had been long afflicted with sickness, and now lay at the point of death. The Crosses of the two Thieves did the weak woman no good, but as soon as they laid her on the Cross on which the Lord died, she leaped up and was restored to her former health: the occasion of the Festival on the third day, by the Latines called Inventio sancte Crucis. This Temple of the Sepulchre, even at the first building, was highly revered and esteemed by the Christians of these parts. And even until our days, it is much resorted to, both by Pilgrims from all the parts of the Romish Church, who fondly and superstitiously hope to merit by their journey: and also by divers Gentlemen of the Reformed Churches, who travel hitherwards, partly for curiosity, partly for love to the antiquity of the place, and partly because their generous spirits imitate the Heaven, and delight in motion. Whosoever is aided to the sight of this Sepulchre, payeth nine Crowns to the Tithe Officers: so that this tribute only is worth to the Grand Seigneur, eighty thousand Ducats yearly. The other building generally very mean and poor, if not contemptible, built of flint-stones, low, and but one roof high: flat on the top for men to walk on; and fenced with Battlements of a Yard in height to preserve them from falling: the under-rooms no better than vaults, where they repose themselves in the heat of the day. Some houses near the Temple of Salomon, and the Palace of Herod adorned with Arches towards the Street, where Passengers may walk dry in a shower of rain; but not many such nor any thing but the ruins left of the ancient buildings. The whole circuit of it reduced to two or three miles, and yet to those that take a survey thereof from some Hills adjoining, where the ruins are not well discerned from the standing edifices, it affordeth to the eye no unpleasant prospect. And as the place is, such is the manner, quality, gathered together of the scum of divers Nations: a few poor Christians, of all the Oriental Sects, which dwell there for devotion; and some Turks, content to lay in it. Inasmuch that when Robert Duke of Normandy, being then not cured of his wounds, was carried into this City on the backs of some of this rascal people, he called to a Gentleman of his, who was going for England, and bad him, say, that he saw Duke Robert carried into Heaven on the backs of Devils.

Come we now to the Tribe of LEVI, though indeed not reckoned for a Tribe, because not planted close themselves, but mingled and dispersed amongst the rest of the people, having forty eight Cities assigned them for their habitation, proportionably taken out of the other Tribes. So was it ordered by the Lord, partly that they being far apart for his service, might be at hand in every place to instruct the people; and partly to fulfil the Prophecy which he had spoken by Jacob, who had foretold to Levi at the time of his death, that he should be divided in Jacob, and scattered in Israel. The like fortune he had Prophesied of Simeon also of the accomplishment whereof, so far as it referred to him, and the dispersion of his Tribe, we have spoken before. Now to make up the number of the twelve Tribes, Joseph was divided into Ephraim and Manasse; and the Levites were reckoned to belong unto that Tribe, within whose Territory, that City which they dwelt in, stood. Their maintenance was from the Tenth or Tithes, the first Fruits, Offerings, and Sacrifices of the people: and as it is in Job. 11. 17. The Priesthood of the Lord was their Inheritance. There were of them four kinds: 1. Punies or Tyrones, which from their childhood, till the five and twentieth year of their age, learned the duty of their Offices. 2. Graduates Solai, which having spent four years in the study of the Law, were able to answer and oppose in it. 3. Licentiate Amolai, who did actually exercise the Priestly Function. And 4. Dollors (Rabins they use to call them) who were the highest in degree. For maintenance of whom, they had (as before is said) the Tithes, first Fruits, and Offerings of all the rest of the People besides the 48 Cities assigned for their Habitation: which last, with the several Territories appertaining to them, extending every way for the space of two thousand cubits, seem to have been a greater proportion of it self, than any of the other Tribes, with reference to the small number of Levites) had in their possessions. Then for the Tithes, there was not only a full tenth set out of all kinds of increase; but such an imposition laid upon all sorts of grain, as came to more than a sixth part of the Crop it self. For first, out of six thousand bushels (and so accordingly in all after that proportion) a sixtieth part at least, (and that they termed the Iberumab, or the evil eye, or the niggards first fruits) was to be set forth as the first fruits of the threshing floor: which was an hundred in the total. Out of the residue being five thousand and nine hundred bushels, the first Tithe paid unto the Levites, came to five hundred and ninety bushels; and of the residue, being five thousand three hundred and thirty bushels, five hundred thirty and one were paid for the second tithe, unto the Priest, which ministered in the holy Temple; yet so, that such as would decline the trouble of carrying it in kind unto Hierusalem, must pay the price thereof at the Priests own estimate. Laying which several sums together, it appears demonstrably, that of six thousand bushels (or fic de ceteris) there will accrue one thousand two hundred seventy and one bushels to the Priests and Levites; and but four thousand seven hundred seventy and nine to the Lord or Tenants, which is not fully a sixth parts was laid before. Then had they the first born of mankind; and all unclean beasts, redeemed at a certain rate; the first fruits of Wine, Oyl, and Wool; the first fruits of the dough, and of the firstlings of clean beasts (their blood being sprinkled on the Altar, and the fat offered for burnt-offering) the flesh remained unto the Priest. They had also all the meat-offerings, the sin-offerings, the trespass-offerings, the shake-offerings, the heave-offerings, and the Shew-bread: as also of all Eucharistical Sacrifices the breast and the shoulders of others the shoulder, the two cheeks, and the maw; and of the whole burnt-offering they received the skin, besides the free Gifts of the People, appearing thrice yearly before the Lord: and all this brought in unto them without charge or trouble. Which makes it evident, that they were far more liberally provided for, than the rest of the Tribes, though they had no whole Country allotted to them, as others had. And so much for such parts of the Land of Palestine as were possessed in part, or wholly by the Sons of Jacob; proceed we now to the Inheritance of the Sons of Esaú.

Jehosophat: and instead of a Vice-Roy sent unto them from the Court of Hierusalem, set up a King of their own Nation; never returning after that to the House of David. For though Joram made War presently upon them, and got the Victory; yet he did not prosecute it unto any effect, nor beat them out of any of their strong Holds, nor reduce any of their Cities unto his obedience: as if he had got honour enough in the eye of the world by being Master of the Field; or shewing his abilities in command of a greater Army, than the Edomites could bring against him. The like error was committed by Amaziah, who by a vast Army of 300000 fighting men, did no greater wonders than the killing of 10000 and the taking of as many Edomites; but neither left Garrisons in any of their defensible places, nor reduced any part of their Country under his obedience. And for the latter part thereof, it was as punctually fulfilled in the time of Antipater, an Idumean, Herod the Ascalonite, his Son, and their Successors; who in the decrepit age of the House of Jacob, became King of the Jews, and Lorded over them with insolence and contempt enough.

Mean time to look upon the intermediate passage of their State and Story. It seemeth that at first they were governed by Dukes, each having the command of those several Families, of which they were the Heads or Princes. But as Ambition and Power did prevail among them, the more potent having vanquished or awed the rest, took to himself the name of King: which by the names of their Fathers, and their several Cities in which they reigned, seem to have been chosen by Election; or otherwise to come in by strong hand, as the Sword could carry it. The names of which are thus set down in the Book of Genesis.

THE KINGS OF EDM.

- 1 Bela, the Son of Beer.
- 2 Jobab, the Son of Zerah.
- 3 Hobab, of the Land of Teman.
- 4 Hadad, the Son of Bedad, who warred against the Midianites, and vanquished them in the Fields of Moab, Gen. 36. 35.
- 5 Samlab, of Masrahah.
- 6 Saul of Rehoboth, by the River Euphrates.
- 7 Ebal-Hanan, the Son of Aebhor.
- 8 Hadar, the Son perhaps of Baal-Hanan, for I find no mention of his Father. After whose death the Heads of the several Families resumed the Government again; ruling over their own Tribes, without any one Sovereign or Supreme. And all these Kings they had, before there reigned any King in Israel, Gen. 36. 31. that is to say, before any form of Supreme Government was established amongst them in the person of Moses, called by the name of a King in the Book of Deuteronomy, chap. 35. v. 5. But this distracted Government did not long continue, the Edomites being under a King again, at such a time as the Children of Israel came out of Egypt: for it was unto the King of Edom that Moses sent Messengers from Kadesh, to desire a passage thorow his Country. Which being denied, and the Edomites in Arms to defend their Passes, Moses forbore to force his way, though the nearest for him: partly because he had no mind to spend those forces in fighting with Hills and Deserts, which were designed for the conquest of another Country; but principally, because God commanded him not to meddle with them, or to take so much as a foot of their Country from them, Deut. 2. 5. But David, upon whom lay no such obligation, having vanquished the Syrians, and other Nations round about him, followed his fortunes unto Edom, whom he overcame, and put Garrisons into all their Cities, and the Edomites became his Servants. Governed from thenceforth by a Deputy or Vice-Roy (as is said before) till the time of Joram the Son of Jehosophat King of Judah, in whose Reign they revolted, as before was said. Never regained to that Crown, and but twice endeavoured; that for the Word of God might be in all. Only the Simenites in the Reign of Hezekiah, wanting Pasture for their Cattel, and room for themselves, seized on the parts that lay nearest to them, destroyed the Inhabitants thereof, and dwelt in their habitations, because there was pasture for their Flocks, 1 Chron. 4. 29. Provoked wherewith, and with the natural Antipathy which was between them, no People were more mischievously bent against Judah, than the Edomites were: no men so forward of themselves, to assist Nebuchadnezzar against Hierusalem; none that so vehemently cried, Down with it, down into the ground, none half so ready to set fire unto the Holy Temple. But they got little by this Service to the Babylonians, their own thraldom following close upon that of Judah, with whom made fellow Subjects to the Chaldeans, as afterwards to the Persians, and Kings of Syria, of the Race of Sелеucus. In the declining of that Houle, subdued by Hyrcanus the Son of Simon, the fourth of the Maccabean Princes; by whom they were compelled to be circumcised, and to receive the Law of Moses: not only reckoned after that, as a Province of the Jewish Kingdom, but as natural Jews. Which notwithstanding, and that the setting of that Crown on the head of Herod and his Houle, being originally Idumeans, might in all reason have extinguished their invertebrate malice: yet was their hatred of that Nation as great as ever. Fomenting therefore how they had been rewarded by the Babylonians; they would needs add the Romans against them also: putting themselves into Hierusalem, when besieged by Titus, only of purpose to betray it; joyning with the seditious there, doing more mischief in the City than the Enemy had done without: and finally, setting fire to the second Temple, as they had done unto the first. Subjected afterwards by the Romans, they followed the same fortune with the rest of Judea.

Having thus gone thorow with the story of those neighbouring Nations which encompassed Canaan, it will be seasonable to look on the affairs of the Canaanites first, and after on the Houle of Jacob, who possessed their Country. First for the Canaanites, they descended from Canaan the Son of Cham, who with his chosen Sons were here settled immediately after the Confusion of Babel. Of those twelve (taking in the Father) five planted in Phoenicia, and the Coasts of Syria; that is to say, Sidon, Hark, Arvad, Semari, and Hemabi: the other seven in those parts which we now call Palistine, though not all of that; the Edomites, Moabites, Midianites, Amorites, and Iureans, being Occupants or Tenants with them. And of those seven came those five Nations, which by Gods appointment were totally to be rooted out, viz. the Canaanites, the Amorites, and the Hittites, the Jebusites, the Hivites, the Gergasites, and the Perizzites. But from which of the Sons of Canaan these last descended, is not yet agreed on: unless perhaps they were descended of the Sinners (not otherwise reckoned in this Manner) and got the name of Perizzites on some new occasion. Governed at first by the Kings of their several Families, with the names of Kingship number of which increased, as their Families were subdivided into smaller Branches: inasmuch as Jehoshaphat found 31 into smaller Branches: inasmuch as Jehoshaphat found 31 Kings of the Canaanites only besides what might descend from those who were settled in Phoenicia, and the Borders

ders of Syria. The most potent of these Nations were the Amorites, the Jebusites, and the Canaanites properly so called. Of which the Amorites had not only enlarged their Borders beyond Jordan, but in the Reigns of Og and Sidon, ruling at the same time at their several parts, had thrust the Iureans, Amorites, and Moabites out of most of their Countries; and so restored the same again to the Race of the Emmins and Zananzimins (of which Line Og and the Kings of Basan were) who had been dispossessed thereof by the Sons of Lot. These vanquished in the time of Moses, and their Habitations assigned over to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the one half Tribe of Manasse. The Canaanites properly so called, as they were the first which fought with the Houle of Jacob; so they were the last of all these People that contended with them. The first fought with them under the Conduct of Arad their King, who thinking it more safe and prudent to encounter the Enemy in another mans Country, than to expect them in his own, gave Battel unto Moses in the Deserts of Moab; and having cut off some of the out-parts of his Army, and taken a few Prisoners, he went home again. But Jabin, under whom they make their second on-set, went to work more resolutely, and taking a time when the Iniquities of that People cried aloud for vengeance, so prevailed against them, that he tyrannized over them for the space of twenty years. After which time, his Army being discomfited by Barak, in the time of Deborah, Sifera, his great Captain, slain by Jael the Wife of Heber the Kenite, and most of his Cities taken and possessed by the Israelites, he perished himself in the dose of that War; for it is said, That they prevailed against Jabin the King of Canaan, till they had destroyed him, Judg. 4. 24. As for the Jebusites, they were grown formidable (at the time of the coming of the Ebreans) to the rest of their Neighbours, that their King Adinibezek bragged, that he had cut off the Thumbs and great Toes of 70 Kings, and made them eat the crumbs which fell under his Table. But being vanquished by Judah, he was served in the same kind himself by Judah and Simen, and carried to Hierusalem, where he died: the whole Country of the Jebusites, and the City of Hierusalem it self, the Fortres of Mount Zion excepted only being made a prey unto the Victor. And though the Jebusites held that Fortres till the time of David; yet being they were only on the defensive side, and made no open War against those of Israel, I reckon the Canaanites as the last which did contend with them for the chief Command.

The Canaanites thus conquered, and for the most part worn out of the Country, the Israelites succeeded in their Possessions; according to the promise of God, made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac, and confirmed to Jacob. Governed after the death of Moses and Jehoshaphat, by the Congregation of the Elders, as appears by many passages in the Book of Judges; the Judges (as the Scripture calleth them) not being extraordinary Magistrates, but raised up occasionally by God for some special purpose, according to the exigence of their Affairs; Carrying in this a likeness unto the Dictators in the State of Rome. So that the Government at first was an Arbitrary; though to say truth, it was rather a Theocracy, as the Fathers call it; that is to say, a Government wherein GOD presided more immediately, than in other Nations. And thereupon when the People cried out to Samuel to have a King, God said unto him, Hearken unto the voice of the People, for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over them, 1 Sam. 8. 7. God was their King, and he had mightily reigned over them since they came out of Egypt; but they desired to have a King like other Nations, to go in and out before them, and to fight their Battels a King whom they might fee with their bodily eyes, and converse with him in such manner as the People did, which dwelt round about them. And so came in the Monarchy or Kings Government, begun in Saul, but confirmed in David; the first a Benjamin, the second of the Tribe of Judah; of which Jacob had foretold at the time of his death, that the Kingdom of his People should be vested in it. But there were only three in all, reckoning Saul for one, who had Dominion over the whole Houle of Israel; the Kingdom after Solomon's death, being rent in twain: ten of the twelve Tribes revolting unto Jeroboam the Son of Neba; and only Benjamin and Judah, and so much of the Tribes of Dan and Simen as lay intermingled with and in the Tribe of Judah, remaining firm to Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, who misgilded by some evil Counsellors which were about him, had given occasion to the breach. A breach that could never be soldered nor made up again, notwithstanding the fair opportunities which were after offered of uniting Judah unto Israel (for so the two Kingdoms were distinguished in the time of Joram; rejoyning Israel to Judah, in the time of Asha. The opportunity offered to Asha King of Judah, for regaining the revolted Tribes, was the confusions which in his time had fallen out amongst them, by several Factions; each challenging the privilege of making a King unto it self: Nadab the son of Jeroboam being slain by Baasha, Ela the son of Baasha murdered by Zimri, Zimri deposed by Omri the Father of Abah, and Tibni a Competitor against Omri also. During which time, as the People must needs suffer many great oppressions, which might make them think of their Allegiance to the Houle of David: (so could not Asha have wanted many fair advantages (had he made his best use of them) of working on that divided Kingdom, and reducing it back unto this houle. But there were two reasons which prevailed more against this re-union than any that could be presented to invite them to it. First, the imperiousness and arbitrary Government of the Kings of Judah, putting to death, without formality of Law, those that had displeased them, as in the case of Shimei, Joab, and Adonijah, in the days of Solomon; and railing on the Subject what fumes they pleased, though more for ostentation of their own magnificence, than the necessities of the State. Of which exactions Rehoboam the Son of Solomon was so far from promising a release or some mitigation at least, that he threatened to make them more than double to what they had been formerly: And how knew they but that Asha, and all such as descended from him, might be of the same temper also, and accordingly to those Principles which their Fathers left them. Whereas the Kings of Israel holding by no other Title than the Love of their People, and the moderate and regular form of their Government over them, had put their mouths into such a taste of the sweets of Liberty, and made them so much Masters of their own both Lives and Fortunes, that Naboth durst deny him his Vineyard to Abah, though offering full compensation for it; and Abah durst not question the life of Naboth, but by suborning Witnesses to accuse him of Blasphemy. So that the present confusions under which they suffered, by the change and violent death of so many Kings one after another, being only temporary, and not likely to continue long, were no persuasions unto them to accept of Asha, and much less to offer themselves unto him; who conceived all adversity to be far more tolerable, than the weighty Scepter of that Houle. And there was something also of preceding profit, which swayed the business. The people were obliged by the Law of Moses to make three chargeable Journeys yearly to Hierusalem, to worship there in the Holy Temple; and to pay a double Tenth yearly out of their Estates (beside Offerings and other Casualties) to the Priests and Levites. Jeroboam out of an ungodly policy, fearing their frequent Journeys unto Hierusalem might be an occasion of reducing them to the House of David, released them of that charge and trouble, by setting up a new form of Worship, erecting golden Calves for them in Dan and Bethel, and leaving every man unto the liberty of his own opinion, so it ended not to the Establishment of the old Religion. And on the other side, the Levites which dwelt amongst them, and received their Tithes, not willing to conform to these new impieties, and finding that their Ministry was no longer useful, withdrew themselves into the Kingdom of Judah, and left the ancient places of their Habitations: by means whereof, the people were released of those payments also. If they returned again to their old obedience, and accepted Asa for their King, they must return again also to their old Religion; the golden Calves of their own Imaginations and Inventions, must no more be worshipped: and (which no doubt prevailed most on the common people, who like that Religion best which costs them nothing) the ancient payments to the Priests and Levites must come up again. Rather than so, they were resolved to suffer yet a little longer, to please themselves in expectation of more settled times: and so falling off to Asa, though as moderate & religious a Prince as they could have wished for, had they had power of fashioning a King to their own desires. Now as this opportunity of rejoicing Israel unto Judah, proved unsuccessful unto Asa, so did the like of uniting Judah unto Israel, prove as unprofitable unto Joas the Son of Jehobabaz, and Grand-child of Jehu King of Israel, who being provoked by Amaziah King of Judah, made War upon him; and not only discomfited him without Battle, and took him Prisoner without blows, but led him captive to the very Walls of Hierusalem; and by his Authority got the Gates thereof to be opened to him. But not contented with this honour (greater than ever had befallen to the Kings of Israel) he caused 400 Cubits of the Wall to be broken down; through which breach he entered triumphantly in his Chariot, carrying the unhappy Prince before him: and being entered, sacked both the Royal Palace and the Holy Temple. This was the opportunity which was given to Joas, of uniting Judah unto Israel; and this the loss of it. For the People, otherwise like enough to have accepted him for their King, as a Prince of whose noble acts they had heard much speech, were so exasperated by their rash and unbecomable outrages, that they looked upon him as a Sacrilegious Church-Robber, whom the Holy Altars were not safe from; and as a covetous and ungoverned Tyrant, not able to conceit the fulness of his own prosperities. If he were thus unsatisfiable in his covetousness, and insupportable in his pride, when he was a Candidate for their Kingdom; when in all common prudence he would have sought their love, and insinuated into their good opinions, by easing them of former Taxes, and shewing them fair hopes of his moderate Government: what must they look for when their Towns were filled with Garrisons, Hierusalem stuffed with armed Troops, and all the Princes of the House of David, from whom they might expect Redemption from cruel Bondage, destroyed or banished, or otherwise made unable to afford them succours? Rather than so, they were resolved to rise as one man against him, and let him see, that neither their Army was so scattered, nor themselves so cowed, but that they durst adventure it to a further trial. The fear of which made Joas sensible of the loss of his opportunity: and so content with Hostages for his safe retreat, he returned home again without other benefit of his Victory, than the spoil and honour. And that this possibly might be the motive of his going back, without putting the success of the affair to a further hazard, may be made probable by the like occurrence in the Story of Guicciardine, which in brief is this: Peter de Medicis had very weakly opened the Gates of Flurence to Charles the Eighth, then in his passage towards Naples. Charles entrencht it triumphantly as a conquered City, armed in complacent manner, and his Lance on his Thigh; his whole Army with him. Many insolencies being committed by the French, the Citizens prepare to fight in defence of their Liberties. Charles willing to go forwards on his march towards Naples, recourts Conditions in writing: but so intolerable, that Peter Capponi, one of the chief Citizens, catching the Papers out of the King's Secretaries hands, and tearing them before his face, Do you (saith he) send your Trumpets, we will ring our Bells, and see what will follow. Which stout and peremptory dealing did daunt the French, that they condescended upon very easy terms to abandon the City, and restore all the places appertaining unto their Estate, which were then in his power. The like consideration probably might prevail with Joas, as did then with Charles; and prompt him not to fight with an enraged multitude in the streets of a City, where he could make no use of his Hosts; and where he might be more galled with Women and Children, throwing Stones or Darts out of their Windows, and from the tops of their Houses; than with an armed Enemy in the open Field. Nor wanted Joas an example of this kind, in the times before him; even that of Abimelech, in the Book of Judges: who having taken the Town of Thebez, and forced all the Men and Women into the Castle, was slain there by a piece of a Mill-stone, thrown at his head from one of the Towers of it by the hands of a Woman.

To proceed further in the Story of these several Kings or recapitulate the sum of their principal Actions (as in other places we have done) may be thought unnecessary: the Scripture being in the hands of all sorts of persons, in which their Actions and Successions are at large contained. So that I only shall subjoin their names, with the time of their Reigns, and the year of the World in which they did begin their Empire: leaving the rest unto industry and search of the Christian Reader, of whose acquaintance with the Scriptures I dare make no question. This only I premise as concerning the Judges, That the time of their continuance in that authority, is not to be measured from the time of their coming to it, till the entrance of the next Successor, as in that of the Kings: these being occasionally raised by Almighty God, for some present Service, and no standing or established Magistracies; except Moses and Joshua only, who held the Government during life, and managed it as absolute Princes.

3310 16 Jofiah, the Son of Amon, a right godly King; unfortunately slain by Pharab Necho King of Agypt, at the Battle of Megiddo. 31.

3341 17 Jehoiabaz, the Son of Jofiah, a King of three months only; deposed and sent Prisoner by Pharab Necho, to Eilat in the Land of Hamath, since called Antiochia.

18 Jehoiakim, the Son of Jofiah, and half Brother of Jehoiabaz, advanced unto the Throne by Necho, who changed his name from Eliakim, by which he formerly was called, into that of Jehoiakim. 11.

3351 19 Jehoiachin, or Jechoniah, the Son of Jehoiakim, at the end of three Months led captive unto Babylon, with his Wives and Mother, and the Great Officers of the Realm, by Nebuchadnezzar.

20 Zedekiah, another of the Sons of Jofiah, and Brother by the whole blood of Jehoiabaz, made King by Nebuchadnezzar in the place of Jehoiachin, or Jechoniah; his name being changed from Mattaniah, by which called before. But rebelling against his Benefactor, contrary to the counsel of the Prophet Jeremy, he was taken Prisoner in the eleventh year of his Reign, Hierusalem destroyed, the Temple ruined, and the People carried captive to the Land of Babylon, A.M.3362. where they lived in exile 70 years. Which time expired, Cyrus the King of the Persians gave them leave to return to their Country, and to re-edify their City and Temple. Which work being finished, by the encouragement of Ezra, Nehemiah and Zorobabel; and the Nation again settled in some part of their old Possessions, they were after governed by their High Priests, and the Council of their Elders, which they called the Saubedrim, the High-Priest bearing the chief stroke, and being looked on as a man of the greatest Power. And therefore I will here subjoin the Catalogue of so many of them as governed the Affairs of this Country, from the Return of the People from the Captivity of Babylon, till the time of the Maccabees; who managed the Estate heretofore both as Priests and Princes, till their Subjection by the Romans.

The High-Priests of the JEW S after the Captivity.

A.M.

- 3427 1 Jofiah, the High-Priest at the time of the Return, assistant to Zorobabel in rebuilding the Temple, which he lived not to finish; though continuing (as some say) in the Government 100 years. But I believe rather, that the Names of his Successors being lost, the whole time is ascribed to him.
- 3550 2 Jehoiakim, said to be the Son of Jofiah, in whole time, by the diligence of Ezra and Nehemiah, the Temple was finished, and the Worship of God restored.
- 3580 3 Jonathas, or Johanan. 30.
- 3610 4 Jaddus, who entertained Alexander the Great coming to Hierusalem, (of whom more anon) the Brother of that Manasseh, for whose sake, and on whose occasion, the Temple on Mount Gerizim was built by Sanballat, with the leave of Alexander. 20.
- 3630 5 Onias succeeded Jaddus, as Jaddus had done Jonathas; not by Birth (as formerly) but by Election of the People.

- 3651 6 Simon, surnamed Justus. 9.
- 3660 7 Eleezer, the Brother of Simon. 32.
- 3692 8 Menelaus, the Brother of Eleezer and Simon.
- 3718 9 Onias II. 14.
- 3732 10 Simon II. 10.
- 3744 11 Onias III., the Son of Simon the 2d.
- 3787 12 Jafan, the Brother of Onias the 3d.
- 3789 13 Menelaus II., the Brother of Jafan, in whose time the Temple was prophesied by the Syrians, at the Command of Antiochus Epiphanes.
- 3794 14 Alcimus, under whose Government the Maccabees began to appear in defence of their Country and Religion, by whom succeeded in the Office of High-Priest, after his decease. Among these none of greater note than Jaddus, High-Priest at such time as Alexander the Great having conquered Syria, marched towards Hierusalem, and was encountered by this Jaddus in his Priestly Vestments assuring him in the Name of the most High God, and making it demonstrable from the Prophecy of Daniel, That he should prosper in his Enterprize against the Persians. An hope which Alexander did embrace with the greater confidence, because (as he affirmed to Parnonius his chief Commander) he had once at Dia, a City of Media, seen in a Dream or Vision such a Person as Jaddus was, he habited, and professing the same one God; by whom he was encouraged to pursue the Action which he had in hand, with assurance of Victory. And upon this the Jews were so much favoured by him, that he gave them leave to live according to their own Laws, and to enjoy with Freedom their own Religion. But it held only for his own time; For shortly after his decease, they were on both sides plagued by the Kings of Egypt and Syria, who ransacked their Goods, and carried their People, made havock of their Goods, and compelled many of them both to eat of forbidden Meats, and offer Sacrifice unto Idols. At the last God raised up Mattathias (descended from Asmoneus a Priest of the rank of Jearib) and his five Sons, to resist these intolerable; who in the Reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, who in the Reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, undertook the Protection of the People of Syria, undertook the Protection of the People, and gave unto the Syrians many notable evils; inasmuch that the Jews made choice of Juda surnamed Maccabees (the eldest of the five Brethren) for their Prince or Governor.

The ASMONEAN Princes of JEWRY.

A.M.

- 3759 1 Judas Maccabees, the third Son of Mattathias above-mentioned, one of the nine Worthies, vanquished three great and puissant Armies of the Syrians, conducted by Apollonius, Gorgias, and Lysias, men of great renown, being Commanders of the Forces of Antiochus Epiphanes, before mentioned.
- 3805 2 Jonathan, the Brother of Judas, vanquished the Forces of Bacchides and Alcimus, Captains of Demetrius King of Syria; and after many notable exploits and deeds of Arms, was treacherously murdered by Tryphon, assisting at that time to the Syrian Diadem.
- 3823 3 Simon the elder, brother of Judas and Jonathan, subdued the Cities of Gaza, Jope, and Jamnia, and cleared Judea of the Syrians; perfidiously slain in the course of his fortune by his Son-in-law Pholomy. 8.
- 3831 4 Johannes Hyrcanus, the third Son of Simon (his two two other Brethren being in the power of Pholomy) succeeded in the Government. He destroyed the Temple on Mount Gerizim, conquered Alamaria, and subdued the Idumeans, compelling them to be Circumcised; transferred the War into Syria; and dying, left the Sovereignty to his eldest Son Aristobulus.

The ASMONEAN Kings of JUDAH.

- 3862 1 Aristobulus, caused himself to be Crowned, and was the first King of Judah after the Babylonian Captivity; he starved his Mother, and slew Antigonus his Brother.
- 3863 2 Alexander, the Brother of Aristobulus, exceedingly enlarged the Kingdom of Jury by the conquest of Turæa, and some parts of Syria; but was withal so great a Tyrant, that he causfully slew of his own Subjects fifty thousand in battle; and commanded 800 of his principal enemies to be hanged before his face. He left behind him two sons, Hyrcanus who was at last slain by Herod after all his troubles, leaving no issue Male behind him; and Aristobulus the father of Alexander, and of Antigonus, of whom more anon: of which two Alexander was the Father of another Aristobulus, the most beautiful Prince of all his time, and of Mariamne the wife of Herod, by whose command they were most villainously murdered.
- 3890 3 Alexandra, by some called Salome, the wife of Alexander, and following the counsel of her husband at the time of his death, committed her self and her Children into the hands of the Pharisees, then in great power and credit among the people; by means whereof she procured an honourable burial for her husband, obtained the Kingdom for her self, and finally left it to her Children, whose disagreements caused the ruin of this famous Family.
- 3899 4 Aristobulus II. the younger Son of Alexander, an active Prince, and beloved of the Military Men, having presently after the death of his Mother possessed himself of the greatest part of the Forts and Castles, by the forced consent of Hyrcanus his elder Brother, succeeded in the Kingdom and High-Priesthood also; both which he held with great trouble and opposition both from his Brother and the Romans, whom most imprudently they called in to decide the Controversie. By Pompey sent Prisoner unto Rome (with Alexander and Antigonus his two Sons) he escaped thence and raised a new Army for the recovery of his Kingdom; but being forced to yield himself to Cabinius one of Pompey's Lieutenants, he was sent back again to Rome, where he died in Prison, having reigned three years and six months.
- 3903 5 Hyrcanus II. a Prince of weak parts, and not fit for Government, was made High-Priest in the first year of his Mothers reign, but disposed of that dignity by Aristobulus his younger Brother. Restored again by the favour of Pompey, he was again disturbed in his possession by Alexander the eldest Son of Aristobulus; who escaping out of Rome, had raised some Forces, and began to dispute the Title with him: but was soon after discomfited by Gabinus afore-mentioned, and slain by Scipio, another of Pompey's Captains. After the death of Aristobulus, which happened in the year 3903, Hyrcanus was looked on by the People, not only as their High-Priest, but as their Prince and King, commonly called to by Josphus in the course of his History. His affairs managed for the most part by Antipater (an Idumean born, and the Father of Herod) his constant and most faithful friend in all his troubles, who governed the Estate with great care and prudence. But he being made away by Poyfon, Antigonus the younger Son of Aristobulus, set on foot his Title to the Kingdom, and drew in an Army of the Parthians to make it good; by whose aid, having treacherously inflamed Hyrcanus, he cut off his ears (to make him incapable of the Priesthood for the time to come) and sent him Prisoner to Babylon; taking upon himself the Title of King, though never acknowledged for such by the Jewish Nation. But long he did not please himself with that Title neither, for being besieged in Jernsalem by Herod, then newly created King of the Jews by the Roman Senate, and by him taken Prisoner in the sack of that City, he was sent in bonds to Mark Anthony, and by him beheaded. As for Hyrcanus the rightful Prince of this Country, he remained Prisoner for a time amongst the Parthians, till hearing of the death of Antigonus, he returned into Jewry, and lived contentedly under the Government of Herod, of whose greatness he had laid the first foundation, and was by him in fine wickedly murdered.

The Idumean Kings and Princes of Jewry.

A.M.

- 3940 1 Herod the Ascalonite, surnamed the Great, Son to Antipater the Idumean, was by the power of Mark Anthony created, and by Augustus confirmed King of Jewry; under whom that Kingdom was more enlarged, and in greater splendor than ever it had been in since the time of David. A Prince of great Magnificence, but of greater Vices. During his Reign, the Scepter being now departed from Judah, the Lord CHRIST was born.
- 6 2 Archelaus, eldest Son of Herod at the time of his death, succeeded with the Title of King; but in truth and reality possessed only a Tetrarchy, or fourth part of the Kingdom, though the best and largest of the four, containing Judea, Samaria, and Idumea. The rest of Herod's Kingdom was divided into three other Tetrarchies, i. e. the Tetrarchy of Galilee and Petras, given to Herod Antipas; Secondly, That of Turæa, given to Philip, another of the Sons of Herod; And thirdly, That of Abilene, conferred on Lysanias. Banished into France, his Tetrarchy was made a Province of the Roman Empire; governed by Pontius Pilate, at our Saviours Passion.
- 16 3 Herod II. surnamed Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee and Petras, on the banishment of Archelaus, succeeded him, as chief of the Herodian Family, but not in his Tetrarchy, and at last followed him in his banishment also. This is he who murdered John Baptist, and in whose time CHRIST suffered.
- 40 4 Herod III. surnamed Agrippa, in honour of Agrippa the Son-in-law, and most trusty Favourite of Augustus Caesar, Nephew to He- rod the Great, by his Son Aristobolus begotten on Marianne of the Race of the Asmonæes, was by Caligula first invested in the Tetrarchy of his Uncle Philip, with the Title of King; and next, in that of Antipater also; and finally by Claudius, in that also of Lysanias, some part of the Tetrarchy of Archelaus being added unto his Dominions. This was the man that murdered James, and imprisoned Peter; and in the end was stricken by an Angel, and devoured by Worms.

- 47 5 Agrippa Minor, son of Herod Agrippa, was he before whom St. Paul pleaded in defence of the Gospel and the last which had the Title of King of the Jews: for in his time the City of Hierusalem was destroyed by Titus, and the whole Kingdom made a Province of the Roman Empire, Anno 73.

And here it is to be observed, that when Salmanassar had subdued and captivated the ten Tribes of Israel, he sent new Colonies of his own to plant this Country; that so fruitful and well-situate a part of his Empire might yield its full tribute, and not lie open to the fury of the next Invader. But the Romans not having (it seemeth) so much policy or providence, as those whom they counted barbarous; having laid the Country desolate, left it unfurnished of new Colonies: whereby the Persians, next the Saracens, and after them the Turks, entering the Roman Empire at this door, have successively driven the Romans out of the whole. Now that we may the better perceive how the Romans had weakened, and almost utterly rooted out the Jewish Nation, we will relate some of their particular Misfortunes, which were not more cruelly inflicted on them by the Enemy, than justly deserved by themselves; they wishing, though (I suppose) not desiring, that the innocent Blood of our Saviour should be on them and their Children. First then the Inhabitants of Cesarea slew of the Jews in one day, about 20000, and such as fled were took and imprisoned by Florus the Roman Lieutenant of Judea. To revenge this slaughter, the Jews set upon the Syrians; in which skirmish 13000 of them were slain. The people of Alexandria put 50000 of them to the sword; they of Damascus, 10000; Antioch, a Roman Captain, slew in Afsalon 10000 of them; and Cestius another Captain, 80400 persons. Now to come to the wars here managed by Vespasian: This Vespasian in the siege of Apha, a Jew and took prisoner, 17130 persons; in Samarita, 11600 persons; in Joppa, 42200 persons; in Toppa, 60000 many killed and drowned themselves, that the Sea threw up again 4200 dead bodies; and the rest so totally perished, that there remained none to carry tidings unto Hierusalem of the loss of the Town. In the City of Tarichea, Jews were slain, and made captives, 45000 persons, besides those which were given to the King Agrippa. In Gamala there perished 50000, and none left alive but only two women; in Caesarea 5000 men died by the Sword; in the City of Gadara there were slain 32200, besides an infinite number which had drowned themselves. In Hierusalem it self, there died 1100000 of them, partly by the Sword, and partly by the Famine; the worst Enemy of the two; there were found 2000 in Privies and Sinks; and 97000 taken prisoners, inasmuch that 30 Jews were sold for a Penny. So punctual was the Divine Justice in retreating to this wretched people, according to the measure of their Iniquities, that they who bought their Saviour for 30 pence, should be sold at thirty for a penny in the open Market.

Now that Hierusalem was able to contain such a number of people, is evident, in that when Cestius was Lieutenant of Jewry, the High-Priest died at his request, and bore the people which came thither to eat the Pascal Lamb; and found them to be two millions and seven hundred thousand living souls, all found and putrid; For to Lepers, or men having a flux of Seed, or women in their monthly terms, or to strangers, it was not lawful to eat of it. And when Titus laid Siege to the City, it was in the Feast of the Paschever, when most of the people were there assembled; God (as it were) having thus imprisoned them. All these Massacres, besides divers others which I have omitted, and infinite numbers which were slain in the Fields and Villages, which drowned themselves, & which were privately made away, amounting all to almost 2000000 of people, happened in the compass of four years; beginning at the 12th of Nero, and ending at the 2d of Vespasian; yet was not the whole Nation rooted out, till they year 136. For then this miserable people, having stirred up 6 notable rebellions; the one under Trejan, and the last under Adrian, the Emperours, were generally banished their native Country, and never again permitted to inhabit it, otherwise than as strangers. After this dissolution, the Jews were dispersed all over the World, and especially in Spain, where Adrian commanded many of them to dwell; yet they found every where so little favour, that having divers times been put to grievous murther and ransoms, they were at last thrust out of most of the Kingdoms of Europe also. They were banished out of England by Edward the first, Anno 1290. Out of France by Philip the Fifth, 1307. Out of Spain by Ferdinand the Catholic, 1492. Out of Portugal by Emmanuel, 1497. Out of Naples, and Sicily, by Charles the Fifth, 1529. Yet are they found in great numbers in the Romish parts of Germany and Poland; in most Cities of Italy, especially Rome it self, where are no less than 15000 or 20000 of them; and also in the Popes Country of Avignon. The reason why they are permitted to live thus under the Popes nose, is pretended to be an expectation of their Conversion, which is a mere pretence indeed; the true reason being the benefit hence arising to his Holiness's Coffers: the hopes of their Conversion being very small, and the means less. For besides the scandal, Datum & acceptum, by the Popes kind worshipping of Images, so preposterously contrary to the first Table of the Law; they are not permitted to see any Book of Christian Religion, no not to much as the New Testament. And (which worketh much upon men of their metal) because at their Conversion they must quit all their goods unto the Church, as being ill gotten, and by consequence the works of the Devil, which in their Baptism they promise to renounce. They have also a Synagogue at Amsterdam, and are pretty thick spread over the Dominions of the Turks: who, notwithstanding do hate them for crucifying of CHRIST, that they used to say in the detestation of a thing, I would I might die a Jew. Neither will they permit a Jew to turn Turk, unless he be first baptized. And though their multitudes be so great both in Thebanica & Constantinople, that it is conceived they do amount to the number of 160000 persons; yet they are not only contemned but hated: but there, and in all other places of their habitation, upon every tumultuous assembly of the Common people, and constantly every Easter, whereforever they be, in danger of death. Inasmuch that if a Jew do but stir out of doors betwixt Maundy Thursday at noon, and Easter Eve at night, the Christians of the East, amongst whom they dwell (though far fewer in number) will be sure to stone them; because at that time, they buffeted, derided, and in fine crucified their Saviour. Hated in all the parts of the Turky Dominions, because employed as Publicans in gathering and enhancing the publick tributes, which they exact with all severity that may be, and improve unto the most. And no less hated in all parts of the Christian world, as Enemies to the Cross of CHRIST: so unreluctably addicted to their ancient Judaism, and so abhorring from the conversation of other men; that it is not pollible they should reap any other harvest, than contempt and scorn from those amongst whom they dwell.

To give you their Character in brief: They are a people which know how to comply with the times, and the condition which they live in; especially if their profit be concerned in it: reviled like Dogs, and used like Slaves, yet never flew to much as an Angry countenance. A Nation which will thrive whereforever they come, but most by Usury and Brokeage; not lending any thing but on pawns, and those once forfeited, never more redeemable. The best of both Sexes had to have an unfavourable rank; not incident (if not caused by flutthiness) to other people, from whom as different in their habit as in their Religion. And as for that, they retain still Circumcision, as the badge and cognizance of their Nation; but mingled with many Ceremonies not prescribed by the Law, nor observed by the Ancients: placing a void Chair for the Prophet Elisha, whom they believe to be present, though unseen at the Solemnity. And upon this they are so bold, that they conceive the Female Sex incapable of eternal life, because not capable of Circumcision; and therefore use to name them with no other Ceremony, than at six weeks end to have some young Wenches lift up the Cradle with the Child in it; which the that stand at the head, give them the name unto. Of their Sabbath so extremely doating, that they have added to the superstitions left them by the Pharisees: And herein they are so precise, that if a Jew travel on the Friday, and in the Evening fall a short of his Journeys end, that it amounts to more than 2000 Cubits, or six Furlongs, which they account a Sabbath-day journey, there must he sit him down and keep his Sabbath, though in a wood, or field, or the high-way side, without fear of wind or weather; of Thieves or Robbers, and without taking order for meat or drink: Periculum latronum prædominatur metu, penuria item omni cibi postquam negligit, as Beza observes it. And so far have they gone in despite of Christ, as to declare it unlawful to lift the Ox or Ass out of a ditch; permitted in the strictest times of Pharisaical rigour. So pertinacious in retaining the difference of meat and drink, that they will by no means sit at the Table with other men, and so precise in the dressing of it, that they will eat of no flesh but of their own killing only; and that too with such cautions and reservations, that if any of the entrails be corrupt or dislocated, they will sell the whole beast to the Christians for a very trifle. Beneficial in that only to the neighbouring Christians. Wine they forbear except it be of their own planting, nor so much out of dislike of that Liquor, for they are generally good fellows, and love their bellies, as for fear the Wine should be baptized: a Ceremony much used in the Eastern parts. Of the coming of their Messiah so full of hopes, that there is no great Warrior stirring, but they look upon him as the man still some sad Tragedy or other, which they suffer under that persuasion, makes them see their error promising to themselves whensoever he cometh, a restitution of their Kingdom: and such felicities therein, in the literal sense of some Texts of Scripture, which carry in them more mystical and sacred meaning. That in good time (but Gods, not theirs) they shall be made partakers of the several blessings which those Texts do speak of, is both the hope and with of all pious men who cannot chafe but grieve to behold the natural brutish, so long dismembered and cut off from the tree of life.

And this they neither hope nor wish for but on some fair grounds, presented to them by St. Paul: who said expressly, that when the fullness of the Gentiles is once come in, then shall Israel be saved, Rom. 11.25, 26. The words are so plainly positive, that they need no Commentary. Or if they did, we have the general consent of the Ancients, besides the constant current of most modern Writers; who cherish the glad hopes of their conversion to the Gospel, which the Apostle doth there aim at. Origene, Ambrosius, Hierom, Augustine, Chrysostom, for the primitive times; Beda and Hugo Cardinalis, in the times succeeding; Gorran, and Thomas Aquinas, for those of Rome; Calvin, Beza, Bedinger, and Peter Martyr for the Reformed Churches; besides divers others of great note, who expound that Text. Nor want there other Texts of Scripture to affirm as much; which he that doth desire to live, may find with the Explications of most Christian Writers, in a Book writ by Doctor Willet, Entituled, De generali & necessaria Judæorum vocazione; and thither I refer the more curious Reader. Out of all I shall take these words of Peter Martyr, written on that passage of St. Paul to the Romans, viz. Non sit Judæi perierunt ut nulla de stirpe Israel spes superest. The Jews (saith he) are not so wholly fallen from the favour of God, but that there still remains some hopes of their salvation. Of their Salvation then by the Gospel of Christ, when the fullness of the Gentiles is once come in, we conceive good hopes: but whether there be any of their restitution to their temporal Kingdom, is a further question; and not so clearly evidenced in the Book of God, though there be somewhat in that Book which may seem to intimate it. That the opinion of being restored to the Messiah, to that Temporal power which was taken from them by the Romans, was prevalent as well amongst Christ's Disciples, as the rest of the Jews, is, I take it, clear enough in the holy Gospel. In such a Kingdom, and no other, did the two Sons of Zebadee desire to sit on both hands of their Master; and the same was it, and no other, which all of them expected, as appeared by the words of Cleophas, Luke 24.21, that Christ should have restored unto them. We thought, said he, that this would have proved the man, that should have redeemed Israel. Redeemed Israel? From what? From sin and Satan, or the curse and bondage of the Law? Not so, Am sed ad hanc domum hanc; but from the yoke of Vassallage, which the Romans had so lately imposed on them, say the Fathers rightly. Touching the same it was that they moved him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the Kingdom of Israel, Mat. 19.16. In answer whereunto, our Saviour makes them no denial, as unto the thing, nor tells them that they never must expect such a reparation, but only puts them off as unto the time, and bids them rest themselves on the pleasure of God the Father. In whose hands the disposing of all Kingdoms was: It is not for you (saith he) to know the times and seasons, which the Father hath in his own power, ver. 7. By which answer (as it seems to me) there is a possibility of restoring them to their Kingdom also; though not in the 2d vis, at that very instant when they were most desirous to have it done, in any other time fit for them to know; that being a secret, which the Father hath referred to himself alone.

But leaving these Speculations of a Restitution of the Throne of Israel, and the great Power and Privileges it may then enjoy, let us look back on the Estate in which it flourished in the former times, when the Forces and Revenue of it were at the height. And first for the Revenue, they amounted in the time of Salomon (as is said 2 Chron. 9.13.) to 666 Talents of Gold, besides the benefits of his Customs and Impositions, which cometh cometh to 2997000 pounds of yearly income. A vast Sum for such a little Kingdom. Nor can we reckon them as less, if they were not greater in the time of David; of whom it is affirmed, 1 Chron. 22.14. That he left to Solomon 100000 Talents of Gold, and the 1000000 Talents of Silver towards the building of the Temple, besides 30000 Talents of Gold, and 7000 Talents of Silver, formerly deposited for that purpose, as is said 1 Chron. 29.4. Which if it be computed at the ordinary rate of a Jews Talent, reckoning a Talent of Gold at 4500 pound, and a Talent of Silver at 375 pound, will amount in our money to 840125000 pounds. So vast a Sum, that it had been sufficient to have built a Temple of pure Gold and Silver, far greater than the Temple of Solomon, without other Materials. I conceive therefore with our learned and industrious Brethren, that by the Talent in those places we are to understand a far lesser Sum than the ordinary Hebrew Talent; which whether it doth there signify, as Explanum, cited by Engelbim, was of opinion; or that every Talent of Gold came to three Golden Crowns of Athens, which maketh forty five shillings of English money, as Julius Pollux hath it in his Onomasticon, I am not able to determine. But measuring it by the last estimate, which I more approve of, it will amount to two millions and two hundred ninety and five thousand pounds: a vast Sum for a King to live in ready money, which was always exercised in war. And though I do not find expressly what the Revenues of Judah might amount unto after the division: yet by one circumstance I find them to be very great. For it is written, 2 Kings 18.14. that the yearly tribute imposed upon Hezekiah, by the King of Assyria, was three hundred Talents of Silver, and thirty Talents of Gold; amounting (according to the ordinary Hebrew Talent, which questionless is there intended) to two hundred forty seven thousand and five hundred pounds of English money; and therefore probably his ordinary Revenue must be thrice as much, above that tribute. Else the Assyrian had not left him a subsistence for a King to live on. Nor can I think that the Revenues of David were less to Herod, than formerly to Solomon, or David; considering his vast expences, the many and magnificent Structures which he brought to perfection, the immeasurable donatives bestowed upon Angustus, Livia, and the Court of Rome, together with the large Legacies he gave at the time of his death: not parallel'd by any King before or since, though of a more large and more ample Territory than he flood possessor of.

What forces the Kings of the Hebrews were able to bring into the field, may be estimated by the Muster which David made, when he numbered the People; and the enrolment of such as were able to bear arms, and for service, coming in all to five hundred thousand fighting men, in Judah only, and eight hundred thousand men in the Tribes of Israel. 'Tis true, that David never brought into the field so vast a multitude; but when the Kingdoms were divided, and war denounced betwixt Jeroboam and Abijah, we find almost the whole number brought into the field: that is to say, 800 thousand on the side of Jeroboam, the King of Israel, and four hundred thousand by Abijah, the King of Judah. After this, out of that small Kingdom, Asa the Son of Abijah, being invaded by Zarab the Arabian or Ethiopian, advanced an Army of five hundred and eighty thousand men, which was more than the enrolment made in the time of David. An infinite proportion for so small a Kingdom; and were it not avouched in the holy Scriptures, far above belief, had not that God who said to Abraham, that his Seed should be as the Stars of Heaven for multitude, been able to have made it good.

As for the story and affairs of this Country since the time of Adrian, the Jews being all expelled their native Soil, and Christianity in fine prevailing over all those parts; it was inhabited as the rest of the Empire was, by men of that Religion only: in this Country for advanced and countenanced, that Helena the Mother of Constantine, is reported to have built in it no less than two hundred Temples and Monasteries, in places of most note for the Miracles of Christ our Saviour, or the dwelling of some of his Disciples. In the year 615, the Persians under the Conduct of Chosroes their King, became Masters of it; and possessed themselves of Hierusalem also: expelled thence by the valour and good fortune of the Emperor Heraclius, who recovering the Cross on which Christ suffered, out of the hands of the Pagans, carried it with as great a triumph into Constantinople, as David once did the Ark into Hierusalem; occasioning thereby the annual Festival on the fourth of September, called Holy-Croft-day, or Exaltatio Sanctæ Crucis. But this glory and rejoicing did not long continue: For within twenty years after the recovery of this City from the power of the Persians, it was again conquered and subdued by Humar, or Aumar, Caliph of the Saracens, Anno 637. Under this yoke the captivated Christians had long suffered, when they changed the Tyrant, but not the tyranny, the Turk about the year 1079, overcoming the Saracens, and domineering in their stead. Twenty years did the Christians languish under this oppression, when one Peter an Armenian, travelling for devotion to the holy Land, and being an eye-witness of the miseries under which they groaned; at his return, made his addresses to Pope Urban the second, acquainting him with the sad conditions of the poor Christians in those Countries. A Council thereupon is called at Clermont in France, where the Pope (willing to employ the Christian Princes farther off, that he might the better play his game at home, did so effectually advance and endear the business, that no fewer than three hundred thousand fighting men, under several Leaders, undertook the service. And it prospered so well with them in the first beginning, that having beaten the Turk out of Asia Minor, taken the great City of Antioch, and most of the strong Towns of Syria, they incamped before Hierusalem, and in short time took it, Anno 1099. after it had been four hundred years and upwards in the power of the Infidels. The City being thus gained, was offered with the title of King, to Robert Duke of Normandy, Son of William the Conqueror; but he upon the hopes of the Kingdom of England, refused that honour never prospering, as it was observed, after that refusal, Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine, had the next offer of it, which with a religious joy he accepted of: though on the day of his inauguration he refused the Crown: affirming that it was not fit for a Christian Prince to wear in that City a Crown of Gold, where the Redeemer of the World wore a Crown of Thorns.

The Kings of Hierusalem.

- 1099 1 Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorraine.
1100 2 Baldwin of Lorraine, brother of Godfrey, was Ptolemais, and many other Cities of Syria.
1118 3 Baldwin II. surnamed of Bruges, Cousin of Godfrey, and Baldwin, the former Kings, overcame the Sultan of Damascus; and enlarged his Kingdom by the addition of Tyre.
1131 4 Fulk, Earl of Anjou, having married Milli-scent, the daughter of Baldwin the second, succeeded succeeded after his decease; unfortunately killed with a fall from his Horse.

- 1142 5 Baldwin III. Son of Fulk and Millicent, fortified Gaza against the Caliph of Egypt; and recovered Palestine from the King of Damascus.
1164 6 Amalricus, the Brother of Baldwin the third, so distressed the Great Caliph of Egypt, that he was forced to call in the Turk to aid him; by whom slain, and his Kingdom transferred on Saracen the Turkish General.
1174 7 Baldwin IV. Son of Amalricus, overthrew Saladin the victorious King of the Turk in a Fight near Ascalon, and valiantly defended his Dominions.
1185 8 Baldwin V. Son of Sybil the Sister of Baldwin the fourth, by William Marquis of Montferrat; unnaturally poisoned by his own Mother, having reigned only five Months to make way for her second Husband, called 1189 9 Guy of Lusignan, the last King of Hierusalem, that had the possession of the City: during whose time Saladin the Sultan of Egypt won that Kingdom, Anno 1187. which his successors defended against all invasions, till the year 1517. in which Selim the first, Emperor of the Turk, added the Holy Land, together with Egypt, to his Empire. When Hierusalem was taken by the Christians, it is said that the German Emperours name was Frederick; the Pope's, Urbanus the Hierosolymitan Patriarch, Heraclius; and that soalls were they called, when the Christians again lost it. This is the conceit of Roger Hoveden, in the Life of Henry the second; but how it can agree with Chronology, I do not see.
After the taking of Hierusalem by Sultan Saladin, the Christians retired their Forces into some of the other Towns of the Holy-Land, which they made good against the Enemy, and defended them under the Government of these three Kings following, viz.
10 Conrad Marquis of Montferrat, Husband of Isabel the Daughter of Amalricus King of Hierusalem.
11 Henry Earl of Champagne, second Husband of Isabel.
12 John de Brenne, Husband of Mary, or Yolande as some call her, Daughter of Conrad and Isabel, the last Christian King that ever had possession in Syria or Palestine: inhabited ever since by Moors and Arabians; few Christians, and not many Turk but such as be in Garrisons only. Yolande the Daughter of this John de Brenne, was Wife to Frederick King of Naples, who in her right intitled himself King of Hierusalem: and so now do the Kings of Spain, as Heirs unto Possessors of the Kingdom of Naples. Concerning which Title, it would not be amiss to insert this Story. When the Wars in Queen Elizabeth's time were hot between England and Spain, there were Commissioners of both sides appointed to Treat of Peace. They met at a Town of the French Kings, and first it was debated in what Tongue the Negotiations should be handled. A Spaniard thinking to give the English Commissioners a shrewd grid, proposed the French Tongue as most fit; it being a Language which the Spaniards were well skilled in: and for these Gentlemen of England, I suppose (saith he) that they cannot be ignorant of the Language of their fellow-Subjects; their Queen is Queen of France, as well as of England. Nay in faith my Masters, replied Doctor Dale a Civil Lawyer, and one of the Masters of Requests; the French Tongue is too vulgar for a business of this secrecy and importance, especially in a French Town: We will therefore rather treat in Hebrew, the Language of Hierusalem, whereof your Master is King; and I suppose you are therein as well skilled, as we in the French. And thus much for this Title.

The Arms of the Christian Kings in Hierusalem was Luna, a Cross Croiset croisé, Sol; which was commonly called the Hierusalem Cross. But for their Forces and Revenues, I cannot see how any estimate may be made hereof, in regard they subsisted not by their own proper strength, but by the Purles and the Forces of the Western Christians; more or less active in that Service, as zeal, or emulation, or desire of glory, were predominant in them.

Chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, after the Recovery thereof from the power of the Turk, were,

1. Of the Sepulchre, said to be instituted originally by Queen Helena. The Mother of Constantine the Great, by whom the Temple of the Sepulchre was indeed first built: but more truly, by Philip King of France, Anno 1099, at such times that temple was regained from the Turk. Their Arms the same with that of the Kings before blazoned, representing the five Wounds of our Saviour CHRIST. At the first conferred on none but Gentlemen of Blood and Fortune, now fable to any that will buy it of the Pater-Guardian, who with a Convent of Franciscans doth reside near that Temple.

2. Of Saint John of Hierusalem, begun by one Gerard, Anno 1114, and confirmed by Pope Paschalis the second. Their Badge or Cognizance is a White Cross of eight points. Their duty, to defend the Holy-Land, receive Pilgrims, and succour Christian Princes against the Infidels. They were to be of noble Parentage and Extraction; and grew in time to such infinite Riches, especially after the suppression of the Templars (most of whose Lands were after given unto this Order) that they had at one time in the several parts of Christendom, no fewer than 20000 Manours; and of such reputation in all Christian Kingdoms, that in England the Lord Prior of this Order, was accounted the Prince Baron in the Realm. But now their Revenue is not a little diminished, by the withdrawing of the Kings of England, and other Protestant Princes, from the Church of Rome; who on that change, seized on all the Lands of this Order in their several Countries; and either kept them to themselves, or disposed them to others as they pleased. Of these we shall speak more when we are in Malta where they now reside: advertising only at the present, that their first Great Master, was that Gerard by whom they were founded: the last that had his residence in the Holy-Land, one John de Villiers, in whose time being driven out of Palestine, they removed unto Cyprus, and in the time of Fulk de Villaret, Anno 1309, to the Isle of Rhodes. Out of which expelled by Solymen the Magnificent, Anno 1522, they removed from one place to another, till at last by the magnificence of Charles the fifth, Anno 1530, they were settled in Malta; and there we shall speak further of them.

3. Of the Templars, instituted by Hugh of Payen, Anno 1113, and confirmed by Pope Eugenius. Their Ensign was a Red Cross, in token that they should shed their blood to defend Christ's Temple. They were buried cross-legged, and wore on their backs the figure of the Cross; for which they were by the common people called Cross backs, or Crouch-backs, and by corruption Crock-backs. Edmund Earl of Lancaster, second Son to our Henry the third, being of this Order, was vulgarly called Edmund Crock-back; which gave Henry the fourth a foolish occasion to scorn, that this Edmund, from whom

landinus Melchior above-mentioned, affirming on the credible report of the people hereof, that they came neither out of Misopotamia, or Arabia Felix, as many wilemen do believe, but out of Saba in Arabia the Desart, which City (saith he) when my self was there, was, as I judged, called Semifacae.

Cities of note, in a Country so desart and uninhabited, we most look for few; yet some there are, inhabited by a more civil sort of people, whom they call by the name of Moors, giving that of Arabian to those only, who living roving and robbing up and down, Polomy gives the names of forty Cities and Villages in it (Civitates & vicis, saith the Latine) the memory of moit of which is now utterly perished. Those of most observation, 1 Sabe or Saba, the habitation of the Sabeans who pillaged Job; so called from Sheba, the Grand-son of Abraham by Returab, mentioned Gen. 25. 3. of whom, and of the rest of that Line, it is said, in the sixth verse of that chapter, that Abraham gave them gifts, and sent them away from Isaac Esauward, unto the East Country: now called Semifacae, as is thought by Melchior. 2 Therman, which possibly may be the Country of Eliphaz the Themanite, one of the Visitants of Job. As 3 Shubab, on the North hereof, was probably of Bilad, another of them, hence firamed the Shuite. 4 Tharacaj, by Pliny called Abipholi. 5 Zagmais, near the Persian Gulf, in the Country of the Raubeni, supposed to be descended from Alsham, the fourth Son of Ismael. 6 Phuntin, the 36th. 7 Obab, the 37th Mansion of the Children of Israhel. 8 Rhegama, another of those named by Polomy, in the Greek Copies called Begama. Of any Town of note now being, more than Semifacae before-named, I find nothing certain.

The first Inhabitants of this Country, of whom there is any certain Constat, where the Posterity of Euse, the Son of Nachor, and the Sons of Abraham by Returab; of whose being settled in these parts, we had before good testimony from the Book of God: and intermix'd with them lived some of the Descendants of Ismael also. For if the Adueni, whom Polomy calleth the Agubeni, fetch their original from Adhebi the third, and the Raubeni from Mihmai the fifth Son of Ismael, as some say they do, I see no reason but the whole Country might be called Kedar, from Kedar the second Son, as well as from the tawny complexions of the people of it. From them descended the Tribes or Nations (spoken of by Polomy, that is to say, the Orchemi, Chameubeni, Asiste, Majoni, Materni, and Agrei, besides the Adueni, and Raubeni, already specified). But being a dis-jointed People, not under any settled form of Government, not possessed of any thing worth looking after, they were either led not worth the conquering, in regard of their penury; or else unconquerable, in respect of their Country, impassable for great Armies, by reason of the rolling Sands, and want of all things. Yet I conceive, that lying so near to the Chaldeans, they followed the fortunes of that mighty Monarchy: Subjects unto it whilst it stood, and after Tributaries unto those who successively possessed themselves of the Supreme Power. Not looked at by the Romans, or regarded by them, who aimed at Wealth as well as Honour in their Expedition: nor otherwise subject to the Turks at this present time, than as they make use of him and his protection in their frequent Robberies: but counted of as a part of the Turkish Empire, because the more civil Arabians are indeed his Subjects.

2 ARABIA PETRÆA.

ARABIA PETRÆA (now called Barsaband Barkolaba) hath on the East Arabia Deserta, and part of Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Persia; on the West, the Isimus which joyneth Africa to Asia, and part of the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the North, Palestine; and on the South a long Ridge of Mountains, which divide it from Arabia Felix.

It had this name either from the rockiness of the Soil hereof, or more properly from Petra, the chief City of it, called also by Abibius, Scitarā, but I know not why: by the Hebrews, Chus, generally translated Ethiopia; by William of Tyre, Arabia secunda, Felix being reckoned for the first. By Strabo, Polomy, and Pliny, it is called Nababæa, which name it had from Nababæa, the eldest of the twelve Sons of Ismael; though properly that name belongeth only to those parts of it which lay next Judea: fruitful, though joyning to the Deserts: and thus remembered by the Poet, as an Eastern Country.

Eurus ad Auroram, Nababæaque regna regit,

Eurus unto the East did lie,

Where fruitful Nababæa doth lie.

The Country much of the same nature with the other, but in some parts thereof more fertile, it well manured: and in the time of Marcellinus, affirmed to be a rich Land, flourishing with variety of Trade and Traffick. But for the most part full of untravellable Deserts, except to those which carry their provisions with them for fear of starving, and go in great Companies, or Caravans, for fear of robbing: and yet much travelled by Merchants who traffick into Egypt and Babylonia; the Commodities whereof they lay on Camels, which are the Ships of Arabia, as their Seas, the Deserts. For upon one of these Camels, they will lay ordinarily 600 and sometimes 1000 pound weight: yet not afford him water above once in four days, not often in fourteen, if there be occasion. So that the Camel carrying so great a burden, and seldom fewer than 500 going in one Voyage, the Merchants, if he scape their robbing, makes a rich Return. Of these Deserts, the most memorable are the Sheep of Sin and Pbaran, in which the Ismaelites long wandered: not beautified with Grass, nor adorned with Trees, the Palm only excepted; nor furnished with Water, but by Rain or Miracle.

The People of it, for the most part, descended of the Sons of Chus and Ismael, intermixed with the Nubians, descending from Abraham by Returab, and the Amalekites, descended probably from Amalek, the Grand-son of Eisau, mentioned Gen. 3. 6. but all united at the last in the name of Saraceni. This name derived, as some think, from Sarra, signifying a Desert, and Saken which signifieth to inhabit, because they live for the most part in these desert places: as others say, from Sarak, signifying a Thief or Robber, agreeable to that of Arabia, before delivered. This last most suitable to their nature, and best liked by Scaliger. Saraceni a siccis dicuntur ab Esarac, i. e. a siccis regionibus, quod rapinis vivunt. So he, in his second Book de Emend. Temp. A People not reckoned in the former times, till made remarkable by their Conquest of a great part of the World; but always counted warlike and Martial men. Of whom take this Character out of Marcellinus. "The Saraceni (saith he) whom we are neither to wish for our Friends nor Enemies, are a Martial People, half naked, clad as far as the groin with painted Callocks, ranging up and down on Camels and swift Horses, as well in peace as troublesome times. Not used unto the Plough, to plant Trees, or get their living by Traffick; they wander from one place to another, without house or home, or any constant dwelling-place, or the use of Laws; nor can they long endure the same either Air or Soil, the manner of their living being always shifting, flitting like ravenous Kites; which if they chance to spy a prey, snatch it up in their flight; or if they chance to fasten on it as it lyeth on the ground, they make no long stay. Their food is chiefly upon Venison, and flocks of Mille, herbs which they gather from the ground, and birds which they get by fowling; but altogether ignorant of Corn and Wine. Their Wives they only hire for a time, though for a few of Money they present their Husbands with a Spear & a Tent, as in way of Dowry; but they part with them when they please. Both Sexes most extremely given to carnal lulls, the women as rambling as the men, married in one place, and brought to bed in another, leaving their Children where they fall without more care of them. So far, and to this purpose he.

Rivers of note here are not many. The principal are, 1 That called Trajanus amnis, or the River of Trajan, which passing through this Country endeth his course in the Red Sea. 2 Rhinocortura, called in Scripture the current of Egypt, which rising in this Country, and passing by the borders of Idumæa, hath its fall in the Lake of Sin, and together with the waters thereof, loseth it (as at last in the Mediterranean.

With Mountains it is better stored, and those of eminent observation, as 1 Mount Sinai, famous in all Ages for the promulgation of the Law; and of late times, for a Monastery of Maronites on the top thereof. The Hill so high, that both shores of the Red Sea may be thence seen, but ease of ascent by reason of steps cut out of the rock: it notwithstanding, he that beginneth to go up at the break of day, will hardly overcome the top of it till the afternoon. The Monastery made an Episcopal See, and formerly very well endowed, as appeareth by the Letters of Eugenius Bishop thereof, to the Arch-Duke Charl, Anno 1569, complaining that the Turks had sold all their Land, and that himself and the Monks were fain to pawn their holy Vessels, and take up money on Usury. Here is also a Mesque, or Mosque of Turks, who resort in pilgrimage to it as well as the Christians. 2 Mount Harab, where the Ismaelites worshipped the Molten Calf, about a mile and a half distant from Mount Sinai, but not so high: on the top of which is a Church also, and a Monastery of Coloivers, or Greek Monks, at the bottom, exceeding hospitable to Strangers, whom they entertain of free cost, and cheerfully show them all the places worth observation, which the Scripture mentions in that tract. Both hills by Polomy called Melan, or the Black Mountains; the last now called Orel. 3 Mount Hir, bordering on Idumæa; and memorable for the death of Aaron.

Places of moit observation, 1 Petra, the name given to this part, at first called Rekem, and at that time belonging to Midian: afterwards called Sela, when pertaining to the Idumæans. But falling under the power of the Arabians, it is now called Grat. Best known in holy Scriptures by the name of Sela, beforementioned, which signifies the same with the Laine Petra. A City of great note and strength in all times foregoing, taken by Amaziah the King of Judah, 2 Kings 14. 7. and by him called Jak-heli, but in vain besieged by Scaurus, a Roman General, who finding the place to be impregnable, was content by the perswasion of Antipater, to take a sum of money and raise the siege. Nor did the Emperor Trajan spend much better at it, his Souldiers being still beat off in all their Assaults, the very next time to him slain with a Dart, and himself forced to cast away his Imperial habit, and die for his liles the heavens themselves, if Dion (who is never sparing of the like prodigies) may be believed, fighting against the Romans with thunder, lightning, whirlwinds, and tempests, as often as they made any approaches to it: But in the end subdued with the rest of the Country. In such esteem, by reason of the strength of it, by the Soldans of Egypt, that they kept here her choicest treasures, and in the course of the Holy Wars, much aimed at by the Turks and Christians, as the Key that opened the Gates of Palestine; on the South border whereof, not far from Mount Har, before-mentioned, the Town is situate. The Metropolis of the Province when first under the Romans; and made the Seat of a Laine Bishop, when the Christians of the West were the Lords thereof. 2 Byssa, said to have been built by Angustus Cæsar, because by him repaired, when decayed and ruined: afterwards by Alexander Severus made a Colony of the Romans. This last most certain, and for such testified by this ancient Inscription, in an ancient Coin, COL. BOSTRAIN. T. R. ALEXANDRIANE. Memorable also for the birth of Philip the Emperor, one of that Alexander's next Successors, by whom it was caused for a time to be called Philippus, for the Metropolitan dignity removed thither from Petra somewhat before the time of Justinian, but by whom I find not, and for being the Episcopal See of Tima (hence firamed) Ephrenus, a reverend Father of the Church in the time of Julian the Apostate. A City of as great antiquity as the most that be, mentioned Gen. 36. 33. though there accounted of as a City of Edom, to which at that time it did belong; and is still remaining, & well known by the name of Bassireh, 3 Elama, on a bay of the Red Sea, called hence Sims Elamiticus: 4 Pbaraz, reckoned by Polomy for a chief Town of this Tract, from whence the Wilderners of Paran seems to take its name. 5 Berezine, so called from some of the Queens of Egypt, but better known by the name of Ezion-geber, one of the Stations or Encampings of the Children of Israhel made by Salomon the ordinary harbour for his Ships, which failed to Opbir in the East-Indies. 6 Sur, the chief City of the Amalekites, giving name to the Wilderners or Desert of Sur, coming close up to it: remarkable for the first incamping of the Tribes of Israhel after their miraculous passage over the Red Sea, and the defeat which Sad gave to the Amalekites, whom he smote from Havilah to this place. 7 Havilah, so called from Havilah the son of Chus, being the furthest border of these Amalekites, & Ismaelites, on the Gulf of Persia, as Sur was on the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia. 8 Madian, so called of Madian, the son of Abraham by Returab, situate towards the Red Sea also; the City of Jethro, whose Daughter Zipporah was the wife of Moses: who flying from the Court of Pharaoh King of Egypt, was by God's secret providence directed thither: that keeping the Flocks of Jethro in the Deserts adjoining, he might acquaint himself with the ways and passages, through which he was after to lead the house of Israhel. 9 Rephaim, the encamping place of Moses, where he discomfited the Amalekites; and to which the said Jethro came to him with his Wife and Children, advising him to ease himself of some part of that burden, which the Government of so great a People would else bring upon him. 10 Kadesh-barnea, the station of the Tribes, when the Spies which were sent to discover the Land of Canaan returned back unto them: memorable for the death of Miriam the Prophetess. And 11 Thara, no less memorable for the mutiny and punishment of Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, the place remembered Numb. 33. 27. But others will have 12 Makleth, mentioned 2. 25. of that Chapter, to be the Stage of that action, the Scriptures being silent in this particular. The rest of their encamping places, being moit of them in this part of Arabia, I omit of purpose, as obvious in the Scripture unto every Reader: as I do also some of the Cities of Moab and Ammon, accounted of by Pro-

lomy, as Critics of this Province; but spoken of already in our Description of Palestine, to which more properly belonging.

The old Inhabitants of this Country were the Midianites, the Ismaelites, the Amalekites, and the Children of Chus, who dwelling promiscuously together, are sometimes used for one another: the Merchants which brought Ysop of his Brethren, being indifferently called Midianites, and Ismaelites, Gen. 37. 28. and Zipporah the wife of Moser, who questionless was a Daughter of Madian, being by Miriam and Aaron called an Ethiopian or Chusite, as in way of reproach, Numb. 12. 1. But being they were different Nations, and such as had some special engagement with or against the Children of Israel, we will consider them by themselves, till we have brought them into one body, by the name of Chusites, *Ethiopian*s, or Arabians, which are all the same.

And first the MADIANITES were such of the posterity of Madian, the Son of Abraham by Retur, who preserving the knowledge of the true God, withdrew themselves from all communion with the Idolatrous Canaanites, at such time as the rest of their brethren did associate with them; and settled themselves more towards the banks of the Red Sea, where they did all good offices to the Children of Israel, as they passed through their Country. Of these the Kenites were a branch, as appeareth Judg. 1. 16. where Jethro the Prince or Priest of Madian, is called a Kenite: some of which turned Prophets, and dwelt with the Israelites in Canaan of Prophet, Isaiah the Kenite, the husband of Jael, who slew Sisera, was undoubtedly one. The rest, continuing mingled with the Amalekites, till the time of Saul, were by him warned (in memory of former courtesies) to withdraw themselves from them; lest they should perish with them in the same destruction. Afterwards we hear little of either people, losing their name in the greater Nation of the Ismaelites, with whom intermingled, or passing with them in the same common notion of Arabians, Chusites, or *Ethiopian*s.

Secondly, nor were the AMALEKITES, though a greater and more powerful Nation, of much more continuance defended, as it is conceived, from Amalek, the Grand-son of Esau (though I deny not but there are some reasons to be urged against that opinion) and planted on the backs of the Edomites, as their Guard or Out-work. A people maliciously bent against those of Israel, as if they had inherited the hatred which Esau their fore-father did bear to Jacob, whom they violently set on at Rephidim, when they supposed them spent and wearied with their flight from Egypt. And though discomfited in that battle, yet they continued in their malice against the Tribes, joining first with the Canaanites against them when they were in their Marches, and after with the Midianites, when not well settled in their new possession. A provocation for ill taken by the Lord of Hosts, because unnatural, and ill grounded, that he declared his resolution from the time of the Battle of Rephidim, to put out the remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven, Exod. 17. 14. Accordingly, when the Children of Israel were provided for by him, he commanded Saul to set upon them, and to slay both man and woman, infant and suckling, yea, their sheep and cattle. But some of them escaped this slaughter, and fell not long after upon Zig-Liz, the retiring place of David, which they took and ransacked; but being by him followed on the first intelligence, they were easily overthrown, and the prey recovered. Their malice yet survived their power; and what they could not do by their forces, they endeavoured to effect by joining with the Ammonites, Moabites, and other Enemies of David, in their Wars against him.

And this was ultimum conam, one of the last shafts of their dying light; nothing done by them worth remembrance of the times succeeding, most of the Nation being worn out, and those few which were left, retreating to the Mountains of Edom, but thereof also dispossessed by the Simeonites, during the reign of Hezekiah.

Thirdly, the ISMAELITES, descending from Ismael, the Son of Abraham by Hagar, branched into twelve great Nations, and grown wondrous populous, spread themselves over a great part of these three Arabia's: all of them either Thieves or Merchants; trading to Egypt in Spicery, and Balm, and Myrrh, or robbing those which traded in the like commodities. Called also Hagarens in the Scripture, as 1 Chron. 5. 10. Psal. 83. 6. &c. and by that name well known to many of the ancient Writers. A people for the most part of a vagabond and rough life, more given to spoil, than any honest course of living, which made every Traveller and Merchant to be armed against them; so verifying the prediction which was given to Ismael, that he should be a wild man, having his hand against every man, and every man's hand against him. St. Hierom so conceives that Prophecy to have been accomplished. More fully verified perhaps, when in and under the name of Saracens, (by which, and by the name of Scimiters, they were most generally known to the Greeks and Romans) they made full havock in the world, and were esteemed the common Enemies of all civil Nations. Never so governable in their best and most orderly times, as to acknowledge King or Law, till made one body with the Chusites, and the rest of those Nations: and then no further, than it stood with their lust or liking.

Fourthly, As for the Chusites, though they permitted the Nations above specified, to inhabit in those Deserts and waste places, which themselves either could not people, or cared not for; yet were they always of most power, and gave name to that whole tract of ground, containing now all Petrea, the South part of Deserta, and the Mountains which divide Petrea from Arabia Felix: which from them was called Chus, or the Land of Chus. Rendred in all places of the Old Testament by the name of Ethiopia, first by the Septuagint, and afterwards by all the Fathers Greek and Latins, the Vulgar Translation of the Bible; and almost all the other Translations at this day extant. And rendered right enough at first, as in all times since, though by some mistaken: who having never heard of any other Ethiopia than that in Africk, have transferred thither all those actions and Texts of Scripture, which are meant of this. The Septuagint, no doubt, were not so ignorant of the affairs of their next neighbouring Nation, as not to know by what name they were called by the Greeks, their then Lords and Masters. And he that looks into the History of Herodotus, who lived 150 years before that Translation, will find, that by the Greeks they were called *Ethiopian*s, and called so questionless from the full face reason that is to say, the swarthy, or Sun-burnt of their complexion, as the Ethiops of Africk were, that name being framed from the Greek word Aithra, signifying tawny and Oia, a countenance, by reason of their tawny and Sun-burnt Countenances. For speaking of the huge Army of Xerxes against the Greeks, he doth thus proceed, Ἀριθμῶν δὲ τῶν Ἀθίωνων ἦν τὰς Ἀφροῦσας ἀναγομένης τῆς Ἀραβίας, &c. Arjames (saith he) was Captain of the Arabians (he meant the Triglitides) and *Ethiopian*s which are beyond Egypt: but the Eastern *Ethiopian*s were ranked with the Indians, nothing differing from the other in the structure of their bodies, but their hair and voice only; the Eastern *Ethiopian*s wearing their hair smooth, those of Lybia curled. The Ethiops of Asia were armed like the Indians, but the Ethiops of Africa were arrayed with the skins of Beasts. Here too we have an Aryan Ethiopia in the time of Herodotus, the same acknowledged by Pausanias an old Greek Writer, and by Philostratus after him, though they look for it in the wrong place: the first amongst the Seres, in the North of Asia, the other on the River Ganger, too much in the East. Nor doth Ethiopia, one of the old Cosmographers, published by Strabo, shew more near the mark, who speaking of the River Tigris, saith that it burtheth it self, and runneth under the ground in Ethiopia. Which though Strabo doth interpret of these parts of Arabia, yet questionless that Author meant it of the Country about Mount Taurus, where that River doth indeed run under ground, and having passed under those vast Mountains, riseth up again.

But what need further search be made to find out the situation of this Ethiopia, when it is bounded out so plainly in the holy Scriptures? For when it is said of Zipporah the Wife of Moser, that she was an Ethiopian woman, Num. 12. 1. who is well known to have been a Native of this Country; and when it is said in 2 Chron. 21. 16. that the Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistines, and of the Arabians that were near the *Ethiopian*s, it must needs be that the Ethiopia there spoken, must be continuous to the rest of Arabia, and be intended of that Country wherein Madian was. So where God threatneth by the mouth of the Prophet Ezekiel, that he would lay waste the Land of Egypt, from the Tower of Syene, even unto the borders of Ethiopia, Chap. 29. 10. that is to say, from one end thereof unto the other, it followeth necessarily, that Ethiopia there meant, must be that part of Arabia, or the Land of Chus, as the bound of Egypt most remote from the Tower of Syene, which all Geographers acknowledge to be in the extreme South parts thereof towards the Cataracts of Nilus. For to expound it, as some do, of Ethiopia in Africk, on the borders whereof Syene stood, and stood so indifferently betwixt it and Egypt, that Stephanus, an ancient Writer, makes it very doubtful to which of the two it did belong, were to make the Scripture speak plain nonsense: as plain as if a man should say, that the French conquered all the Netherlands from Graveling to Flanders; or that the Sword hath ranged over all England, from Berwick to Scotland. As then we have found this Ethiopia of the Old Testament to be near the Philistines on the one side, and the Land of Egypt on the other; so may we find it to be bounded also on the East, with Babylonia or Chaldea: the River Gibon, which is said to compass the whole Land of Ethiopia, (or the Land of Chus, Gen. 2. 13. being no other than a branch of the River Euphrates, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldea). So that the Translation of the Septuagint in reading Chusites, or the Land of Chus by Ethiopia, needs no such alteration or emendation as some men suppose. The mistakes (whereof there have been many) which arise from hence, not being to be charged on them, or on their Translation, but on the ignorance of the Reader, or Error of such Expositors, who dreaming of no other Ethiopia than that in Africk, have made the Scripture speak of such things as it never means, and carried these Chusites into the African Ethiopia, where they never were. And yet perhaps it may be said, that the posterity of Chus, being straitened in their own possessions, or willing to seek new adventures, might have crossed over the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia (being but seven miles broad where narrowest) and mingling with the Sons of Ludim on the other side, might either give the name of *Ethiopian*s to them, or receive it from them.

Now to go forwards with the story, the first great action attributed to these Chusites, or Arabian Ethiops, incorporated with the rest of those mingled Nations, is the expedition of Zerah the King hereof, against Asa King of Judah, drawing after him an Army of a Million, and 300. Chariots of War (the greatest Army ever read of in unquestioned story) but for all that, discomfited by the Lord of Hosts, on the prayers of Asa, and all the spoil of that huge Army carried unto Hierusalem. After this Tiribakah, another of these Ethiopian Kings, finding how dangerous the great growth of the African Kingdom might prove unto him, prepared a puissant Army against Sennacherib, then belagging Libna, threatening the conquest of all Judah, and invading Egypt: upon the news of whose approach, Sennacherib's forces, which were even upon the gaining of Pelissium, the Gate of Egypt, were made to dilodge and provide for their safety. For though Herodotus call Sennacherib King of Arabia, and Affria, yet was he Master only of those parts of Arabia, which had been formerly possessed by the Kings of Israel, being no more than some few Cities of Petrea, bordering next unto them; or perhaps called so only in respect of those parts of Syria & Mesopotamia, which were sometimes comprehended under the name of Arabia, as before is said. What part they took after in the great War betwixt Nebuchadnezzar, and Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, is not hard to say. For besides that the same Reasons of State, obliging them to side with the Egyptians, were still in force; their giving Necho leave to pass through their Country with his Army, to invade the Babylonians on the banks of Euphrates, make that plain enough. Now that both Tiribakah and Zerah were Kings of this Assan, and not the African Ethiopia, is most clear and evident: partly in regard the Kings of Egypt would never suffer such huge Armies to pass thorough the whole length of their Dominions: but principally because it is said in the holy Scriptures, that Asa having overthrown that vast Army of Zerah, smote all the Cities about Gezar, which formerly had belonged unto the Philistines, but were then possessed by these Chusites and their Associates. After this, either as Confederates or Subjects, we find them aiding unto Xerxes in his war on Greece: and like enough it was that in Alexander's March from Egypt towards Persia, they submitted to him, as did all the other Countries thorow which he passed. He being dead, Antigonus, one of his great Commanders, sent Athenians with an Army to bring them in, who being trained into an ambush was discomfited by them: Demetrius the son of Antigonus, thinking that he had done enough in revenge of that overthrow, by compelling them to sue for peace. In the time of the Seleucian Race in Syria, we find them governed by Kings of their own, most of them called by the name of Anteus; of which one was of special note in the declining fortunes of the Seleucians, for bidding very fair for the Crown of that Country; and being a flicker in the Wars of Jerry, in the time of Hircanus the fourth King of the Race of the Maccabees, to whom at the Request of Antipater, the Father of Herod, he gave hopes of aid; and on those hopes was possessed of Medaba, and other Towns of good importance, which Alexander the Father of Hircanus had regained from the Syrians, and laid unto the Crown of Jerry, to which as parts of Imnea, and anciently possessed by the Tribes of Israel, he might make some claim. Another there was of the same name, and of no less power, whom we find to have been warred upon by Herod, about the time of the battle of Altium, and for the most part vanquished by him; and finally a third of more power than either, mentioned by St. Paul, 2 Cor. 11. 32. as Lord of Damascus. In the flourishing of the Roman fortunes, the King hereof having first aided Mithridates and Tigranes, in the War against them, submitted themselves unto Laelas, being then, no nearer to them than Armenia Major. The like they did to Pompey also, being then in Judea. First vanquished by Julius Cæsar in the time of Antiochus; but the Victory not improved to an absolute Conquest, till the time of Trajan, when partly by his personal presence, and partly by the valour and good fortune of Rabbi, his Lieutenant, they were fully vanquished, and brought in to the form of a Roman Province; but so, that they had Kings of their own (Vassals and Epistates of the Empire) as in former times; continuing in that condition till the rise of Mahomet. Of which more hereafter.

3. ARABIA FELIX.

ARABIA FELIX, is bounded on the East, with the Persian, on the West, with the Arabian Gulf, on the North with a long ridge of Mountains, which part it from Djefra and Petra; and on the South with the boundless Ocean. Encompassed on three parts with the Sea, on the fourth with rough, impassable Mountains; in situation and figure much resembling Italy.

It had the name of Arabia Felix from the fertility and happy condition of it, being esteemed the most fruitful & pleasant Country in all Asia, abounding with Myrrh, Balsamum, Frankincense, Gold, and Precious Stones: by Corippus called Odorum fertilitate nobilis Regio, from the abundance of Frankincense, wherewith enriched beyond all others. Concerning which there goeth a story, that when Alexander in his Adultery or Boyage, was sacrificing to the gods, and cast into the fire with both hands great store of Frankincense and Myrrh, Leonides his Governor, bid him be more sparing of those precious and dear Commodities, till he was Master of the Country in which they grew. Which Alexander remembering, when he had brought almost all the East under his obedience, he sent unto Leonides a Ship-laden with Frankincense, bidding him from thenceforth to serve the gods more liberally. But as well for the reason of this adjunct, as a more perfect character and description of it, take along of the Ammianus Marcellinus, who describes it thus: "On the East and South thereof (saith he), are the Happy Arabians: so called because so rich in Corn, as well as plentiful in Cattel, Vines, and Odoriferous Spices of all kinds; shut up betwix the Red Sea, and the Persian Gulf, and so acquainted with all blessings, which either Element can afford: well furnished with Roads and quiet Harbours for Shipping, the Towns of Trade and Merchandise standing very thick; the retiring Houses of the Kings, passing neat and sumptuous. Besides most wholesome Fountains of medicinal waters, they enjoy divers Brooks and Rivers very clear and pure, and a temperature of Air exceeding healthy; so that whosoever considereth all things aright, may well conclude, that there is nothing wanting to the accomplishment of its felicity in the highest degree. So Ammianus Marcellinus. To which we need add nothing more to fortify its happiness, than that Dante in his Comment on St. Augustine's Enchiridion ad Laurentium, is persuaded that it was the local place of Paradise. Diogenes (saith he) Paradisi terrestrius Regio pars quedam est Asiæ, que nunc dicitur Felix. But it hath other names besides this of Felix. By the Arabians themselves called Jemen, and Al-jemen (Ayamen corrupted by the Turks) which in that tongue signifieth the South, or Southern Region. By Virgil it is named Panchæia, quasi terra debilis, because of the many chops and chinks which the adour of the Sun makes in the Sands thereof, though by him much extolled also for its plenty of Frankincense.

Tripæ thuriferis Panchæia pingis arenis, Famed are the Woods the Panchæian Lands,
For rich and Incense-bearing Sands.

The People anciently, though more civil than the rest of the Arabians, had yet many strange and barbarous customs. Adultery amongst them was punished with death as in other places; but only he was held an Adulterer, which enjoyed any that was not his own kinswoman, be he his Sister or his Mother; and so they kept themselves in their own Families; Community of wives or women was esteemed no crime. And of this there is a Tale in Strabo, that the King of this Country had fifteen Sons, and but one Daughter, who according to the Customs hereto, was the common wife of all her brethren; every of which had a Staff of like making, which when he went in unto his Sister he did leave at the doors, and by so doing did bid entrance unto the rest, till it were removed. The young Lady, wearied with a continual excess of dalliance, secretly procured a Staff like unto the rest, which when she was desirous to prohibit their access to her, she left at her Chamber-door; and by that means did many times enjoy her desired privacy. At last it happened that all the Brothers being together, one of them departed towards his Sisters Lodgings, where finding a Staff before the door, and knowing that he had his Brethren in one place together, he ascended her by Adultery: but the truth being made known, the Lady was quitted, and their visits afterwards restrained. Of dead Bodies they took no care, nor so much as of their Chiefs or Princes; but left them to the custody of the next dung-hill. They bragged much of their descent from Jupiter; and neglected all Sciences & Arts, as disparagements to so great Nobility. Commendable only in the keeping of their faith and promises, and in that most punctual. Much of the same condition are the present Inhabitants, save that less faithful in their Contracts; and by their Law restrained from meddling with the wives of others, permitted many of their own. Some there are of them which apply themselves to the grazing of Cattel, and the rest to Merchandise, wherein very cautious and cunning; but hating to this day all Mechanical Arts. A Nation from the beginning unmixt with others, till the coming of the Turks amongst them, of which but few, and those dispersed in Garrisons: boasting of their Nobility, and glorying in nothing more than their greatest shame, namely that the false Prophet Mahomet was their Country-man; whose impieties are here generally embraced, and followed.

Amongst the rarities of this Country, some account the Phoenix, which growing old burneth herself in a nest of Spices, and from thence a young one ingendered; one of them only at a time, which after a life of five or six hundred years, thus reneweth her kind. But this tradition, questioned in former times by Pliny & some others, is now proved a Fiction; contrary both unto divinity & natural reason: though some of the Fathers made use of it as an argument to prove the Resurrection against the Gentiles, by whom the tradition was believed. More common, but of no less observation, is the Oryx, a Bird which swalloweth all it findeth, be it Stones or Iron. They delight chiefly in the Deserts, in the fens where they lay their Eggs, and then forgetting where they left them, sit on those they meet next. In that respect accounted for a simple Fowl, though otherwise of wit enough to preserve themselves keeping in flocks, and oftentimes with their fearful shrieces affrighting Passengers, whom they do appear afraid of like a Troop of Hares, whom they do appear afraid of like a Troop of Hares, whom they do appear afraid of like a Troop of Hares. Their wings, too little for their bodies, serve them not for flight, but to run more speedily; and by that means easily caught, though much laid in wait for, for their Skins, which the People fell into the Merchant with their Feathers on them. Nor of less note is the Frankincense, though of common use, almost peculiar to this Country, and here but to those parts thereof which we formerly posited by the Sabeis: the Wood out of which the Gum proceedeth, being about 100 miles long and 50 broad; gathered only in Spring and Autumn. More of this anon.

The Country is much commended by Ammianus for plenty of Rivers, the principal whereof are said by Procopius to be, 1. Batius, 2. Prion, 3. Harmar, 4. Lar, but the modern names thereof I find not. Many fair Lakes, and store of large capacious Bays on each coast of the Sea, 1. Sinus Eilatiticus, 2. Sabaiticus, 3. Leantes, 4. Sinus Magran, 5. Sinus Jebhyphagorum, 6. Misamis, 7. Sacer Sinus, or the Holy Bay; and 8. The Road or Naval Station called Negila. Mountains of most note, 1. Those which are called Melanæ, at the entrance of the Persian Gulf, 2. Cabuthra, at the entrance of the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia, 3. Hippus, 4. Prionus, not far from the River Prion, from whence is denominated, 5. Climax, 6. The Mountains called Dugni, &c.

Names of good note in ancient times it had very many, no Region affording unto Polymy the names of more, and amongst those many commodious Ports for Traffick, the Sea beginning its for the space of 3000 miles and upwards. Of most importance and observation in those times were, 1. Zebrium, 2. Bade, 3. Rhabana, 4. Carman, 5. Memabib, 6. Sabe, 7. Ar: the Royal Seats of 5 several Kingdoms, and therefore honoured by Polymy with the Title of Regie. Then there are, 1. Mausara, 2. Mora, 3. Negara, 4. Sabbaha, 5. Majra, 6. Sapha, which he called Metropoles; as being the head-Cities of some former Nations. Amongst the Ports he reckoneth, 1. Sapphus, 2. Trulla, 3. Tretos, 4. Cryptus, 5. Lamus, and 6. Moscha. Amongst the most noted Empories of Towns of traffick, 1. Musa, 2. Oasari, 3. Arabia, 4. Cane. Besides which there are some which do preserve the memory of their first Plantations, as 1. Sapha, upon the Persian Gulf, so from Saba, the first Son of Chus, 2. Rhegama, or Regma (the Greek Copies of Polymy have it) so named from Regma or Rasma the sixth Son; on the same Gulf also, 3. Sabe, on the Shores of the Red Sea. And 4. Sabe Regia, more within the Land, so named from Sheba the eldest Son of the same Chus, from which the rich and potent Nation of the Sabeans are to be derived. Out of all which, and many others by him named, we shall take more particular notice of some that follow. 1. Musa, a noted Port on the entrance of this Country, frequented anciently by the Ethiopian and Egyptian Merchants: who there laden their Ships with Frankincense, Myrrh, Spices, and other Commodities of this Country, bringing in, in exchange thereof, Saffron, Corn, Wine, Cintrments, Purple Dyes, &c. 2. Sabe, the Royal Seat of the Kings of the Sabeans, particularly of that Queen so memorized in holy Scripture; called in the Old Testament the Queen of Sheba, from her Country and place of dwelling; in the New Testament the Queen of the South, because of the Southern situation of it in respect of Judea: said there to come from the furthest parts of the World, because there was no part of the World which lay South to the Country of the Sabeans, over which she reigned. Situate on a little Mountain, affirmed by Agathangerides to be seventy miles from Agathangerides, the most beautiful by far in all Arabia, and the Metropolis of the rich and potent Nation of the Sabeans: rich in all the excellencies of Nature, especially in Frankincense, a Gum peculiar to them only, and growing here in a Wood of about 100 miles long, and 50 broad; not gathered but in the Spring and Autumn, nor then without great care, and many ceremonies. The Country hereabouts from hence called Thurifera, and this sweet Gum appropriated solely to them. Sabeis Arabum propter thura clarissimi, as we find in Pliny; Solis est thura virga Sabeis, as it is in Virgil: and finally, --- Thuriferis, falcata regna, Sabæis, in the Argonauticks of Valerius Flaccus. It was called also Mariaba, and by that name occurrieth in some ancient Writers. 3. Sapha, more towards the Persian Gulf, on the South-side of the Mountain Climax, the chief City of the Homeris; adorned in times of Christianity with a beautiful Temple. 4. Sabbatha, or Sabota; as Pliny calleth it, seated about the midst of the Country, on the top of an high and lofty Hill, from whence it had a gallant prospect on the Fields adjoining: anciently large and populous, and strongly fortified, having no fewer than 60 Temples within the Walls; the principal consecrated unto Sabis, the god of their Nation, to whom they offered the Tythe of their Frankincense, nbi decimas Deo quem Sabin vocant, mensura non pondere capunt Sacerdotes, as we read in Pliny.

But these and almost all the rest being grown out of knowledge, there have risen in their rooms, 1. Egra, on the Shores of the Red Sea, near the Bay called Sinus Eilatiticus, by Polymy called Agra, by the Arabians themselves Agra: the Port-Town to Medina, from which about three days' journey distant, 2. Jabir, or Jarir, in the way betwixt Algar & Medina, the birth-place of Mahomet; by whom furnished with a mud-wall, as his place of retreat in the first beginning of his Fortunes, 3. Medina, commonly called Medina Talabani, corruptly for Medina Talabani, that is to say the City of the Prophet, so called from the Sepulchre of Mahomet, that vile Impostor, which is there to be seen; although not in such an Iron Coffin, or drawn up to the roof of the Temple by virtue of an Adamant there placed, as some deliver. The Town situate in a desolate and barren place, bordering on Arabia Petraea; and of great Trade, rich, and well inhabited: the Sepulchre of that Elie Prophet drawing thither a continual resort of Pilgrims. The Temple gorgeous, having 3000 Lamps in it, which burn continually. The Sepulchre or Tomb enclosed with an Iron Grate, but of no magnificence or beauty: covered with a Carpet of green Velvet, which is sent hither yearly by the Grand Signeurs, the old one being taken off, and cut into innumerable threads or pieces, and sold for Relicks by the Priests (to such as come in Pilgrimage thither) for their great enriching. 4. Cusfa, the ordinary Residence of the first Caliphs, till the removing of the Imperial Seat to Damascus in Syria; and after that the usual place of meeting for consultation in Affairs of State, relating to the peace of this Country, and the Common Interest of this People; as memorably for the Sepulchre of Mertis Hali, the Progenitor of the Persian Sophies, as Medina is for that of Mahomet, 5. Mecca, supposed to be the Meclara of Polymy, situate in the like barren Soil, not far from Medina; but of far greater resort and traffick: in the whole wealth in a manner of this Country, together with the Commodities of Persia and India, being hither brought hither; and from hence by Camels backs transported into Egypt, Syria, Palatine, and other parts of the Turkish Empire. Unvalued, and richer for that cause, or for concealment of their fopperies from the eyes of Christians, it is made death for any Christian to come within five miles of it. Utterly destitute of water, but what they keep in Cisterns, from one shower of rain to another, or else brought thither with great charges, otherwise pleasantly feared, rich, and containing about 6000 Families: Every year visited with three Caravans, or Troops of Merchants and Pilgrims, from India, Damascus, and Grand Cairo, who having done their business and devotions there, go afterwards in Pilgrimage to Medina also, to the great enriching of both places. Eden, the Haven-Town to Meccha, from which distant about 40 miles, situate on the Red Sea, in a sandy foil, unwalked, and much exposed to wind and weather; but wealthy, well-built, and of great resort. 7 Zebti, now the Metropolis of the Country, situate about half a days Journey from the Red Sea, in a large plain, between two Mountains; a Riveret of the same name passing by it: well-traded for Sugars, Spice and Fruits: the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom taken not long after Eden. 8 Eltor, a Port Town of this Country, and the only Town where the Christians are full red to inhabit. 9 Aden, on the very entrance of the Red Sea, near the Straights called Babel Mandel: supported by some to be the Madree of Proton, but more agreeing in situation with the famous Empory by him called Arabia. The fairest Town of the whole Penninsula, of great strength, both by Art and Nature: well-traded, and well-fortified, having a large capacious Haven, seldom without good force of Shipping, and containing to the number of six thousand persons. Once a distinct Kingdom of it self, but treacherously surprized by the Turks, Anno 1538. and therewith all the rest of the Country: made afterwards the Seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, under whom, and him of Zebti, are supposed to be no fewer than 3000 Timariots. 10 Oran, the Lock and Key of the Southern Ocean. 11 Thema, or Theman, the same, I take it, which our later Travellers call Zeman, situate more within the Land: affirmed by Benjamin the Jew, limnamed Tundelstis, to be a Town of 15 miles square, but to have within the Walls thereof great quantity of Ground for Tillage. 12 Zural, a retiring place of the Caliph, when they lived in this Country. 13 Her, on the point or Promontory called chorosman, a Garrison not long since of the Kings of Ormus. 14 Muckabat, on the Persian Gulf near the point of Land called Cape Rozelgate: opposite to Surrat in the East-India, and possessed by the Portugals, who have fortified it with a well-built Castle, for defence of their Ships and Frigots which frequent those Seas. Of no great note till the taking of Ormus by the Persians, many of the Inhabitants whereof were since settled here. Of the Affairs of this Country we shall speak anon; having first took a brief view of the Islands which belong unto it.

4 The ARABICK ISLANDS.

THE ISLANDS which lie round about the Shores of Arabia Felix, and have been anciently accounted as parts thereof, are dispersed either in the 1 Red Sea, 2 Southern Sea, or, 3 the Gulf of Perfia.

1. The RED-SEA (called also by the Ancients Sinus Arabicus, and now Golfo di Mecca) is that part or branch of the Southern Ocean, which interpose it self betwixt Ægypt on the West; Arabia Felix, and some parts of Petrea, on the East; the North-East bound of it touching upon Idumæa, or the Coast of Edom. Extended in length from the Town of Suez, anciently called Asyne, in the bottom of it, to the Straights of Babel-Mandel, where it openeth into the Southern Ocean, for the space of one thousand and four hundred miles: in breadth, for the most part, but one hundred, but in some places almost two; the Straights themselves not being above a mile and an half, anciently chained by the Kings of Ægypt, as is said by Strabo; but now left open by the Turks, who is Lord hereof. A violent and inquiet Sea, full of Sands and Shelves; inasmuch as they who pass in and out, are fain to make use of Pilots which dwell thereabouts, and are experienced in the channel. Sufficiently famous in all times and Stories, for the miraculous passage of the Children of Israel, and the drowning Pharaoh King of Ægypt.

It took the name of the Red Sea, as some conceived, from the redness of the Sands; as others have delivered, from the redness of the Waters: but latter observations have discovered the weakness and absurdity of these Etymologies; the Sea and Sands being coloured heres in other places. By the Grecians it was called Erythræum, which in that Tongue signifieth Red also, not from the colour either of the Sands or Waters; but from one Erythræus, supposed to be the Son of Perfus and Adinmeda, who commanded the Eastern Shores thereof. And these come nearer to the mark than the others did. For the truth is, it was originally called the Sea of Edom, because it took beginning on the Coasts of that Country: which word in the Hebrew signifying Red, as appeareth Gen. 25.30. first given as a nick-name to Esfau, and from him afterwards to Mount Seir, or the Land of Edom, Gen. 26.31. was by the Greeks rendered Erythræum; and Mare Rubrum by the Latins. Whence the name of the Red Sea became known to all, but the rest of the name to few.

Of the great trafficque which was anciently driven up this Sea, we shall speak hereafter, when we are in Ægypt, on the other side of it. Look we now on the Islands which belong to Arabia, as they all generally do known in the times of Pliny by the names of 1 Adani, 2 Ani, 3 Ari, 4 Cardamum, 5 Comolus, 6 Damannum, 7 Elitracum, or the Isle of Hawks, 8 Malaita, 9 Polybit, 10 Socotris, 11 Timogentia, and 12 Zylana. But by what names now called, and of what note it is, is a thing so doubtful, that I dare not offer a conjecture. Late Travellers report almost all of them to be small, desolate, or but meanly inhabited, described by them under other names. One there is of indifferent largeness, said to be an hundred twenty and five miles long, though but twelve broad, called Dalapa; with a City in it of that name, where they gather Pearls, &c. Then there is Camaran, most extremely hot, of most note for the many spoils there made by the Portugals. 3 Xama, the Earth whereof is said to be Red (perhaps to countenance the vulgar Tradition, of calling this the Red Sea from the colour of the Sands or Shores) and the King a Moor. 4 The Samarian Island, spoken of by Strabo, inhabited by a remainder of that people, who as soon as they saw any Stranger land upon their Coasts, would most religiously desire him not to touch them. Such other Islands as lie upon the opposite Shores, and seem to appertain unto Æthiopia, shall find their place in our Description of the Æthiopian Islands.

II. The SOUTHERN OCEAN, comprehendeth that vast body of Waters, which from the Eastern Banks of both Æthiopia's, coast along on the South of Arabia Felix, and do directly Eastward, to the furthest India: in this regard called by some Writers Oceanus Indicus; by others Mare Australe, from the situation; and by some also Mare Rubrum, or the Red-Sea, from Erythræus a great King (as they suppose) reigning herabouts, and giving name not only to the Red-Sea (or Gulf of Arabia) strictly and specially so called, but to all the Sea-coasts also, from the opening of the Bay of Arabia, to the Coasts of India, by them called Mare Erythræum. In

In this vast Ocean Pliny placeth many Islands which belong to Arabia, but of little note, viz. two Ilands by the name of Insula Agaboclis. 2 Three more by the name of Cocconis; 3 Dyscoris, by Pliny called Dyscoris, with a City of the same name in it. 4 Seven others in the Bay called Sinus Saccharis, by the name of Zenith. 5 Organa, by Strabo called Tyrinna, memorable for the Sepulchre of Erythræus before-mentioned, being a great Hill planted with Trees. 6 Serapias, by Alexandrus Aristarchus called Targana, famed for a Temple of Serapis, the Ægyptian Idol. None of them now of any credit, nor formerly of any great note, the two last excepted.

III. On the East-side of Arabia Felix, betwixt it and Perfia, lieth another large Arm of the Southern Ocean, anciently called Sinus Persicus, or the Bay of Perfia, now Golfo di Elkatifis. A turbulent and unruly Sea, the Southern Ocean breaking in at the one end, and the River Euphrates at the other: the continual combating or clashing of which two great waters, make it so unquiet. Pliny placeth in this Bay (but as parts or members of Arabia) 1 Tylar, which Arianus sets at the mouth of Euphrates. Solimus in the Indian Seas, affirming it to be well stored with Vines and Olives: another of this name being placed by Theophrastus in the Bay of Arabia (but probably the place mistaken) affording good Materials for Shipping. 2 Alphana. 3 Thana. 4 Ichna; of which nothing memorable. To these late Travellers have adjoined two others, if not time of the former under these new names, that is to say, 5 Boyen, and 6 Gausfar, where they take the best fishes in the world, in beds of Oysters. Other Islands of this Bay (if any) belong to Perfia; where, if occasion require, we shall speak more of them.

To return therefore to the main Land of Arabia Felix, the first Inhabitants thereof were the Sons of Chus, and the Families which they brought with them. Their memories preserved in the names of some of the chief Towns and Nations, till the days of Pliny, Pliny, and some other of the ancient Writers. Divided afterwards into the several Tribes or Septs of the Cassianite, Cinadopolite, Homertine, Adamite, Elasari, Sachalite, Anarite, Gerei, Egei, Salei, Mineis, Leontis, Cattabani, Abnari, and divers others: each governed separately and partly by their several Chiefs; whom they honoured, as in other places, with the name of Kings. One of which spoken of by Justinus, named Hierotimus, is said to be the Father of 500 Children. Easie to have been overcome, because so divided, if any potent Neighbour had attempted the Conquest of them: as it is wondrous strange they did not, considering the richness of the Country, and the many temptations which they had to invite them to it. More worthily deserving the name of Philis, in that never conquered, than in all the other Rarities and Delights thereof. By Alexander once deluged for the Sea of his Empire, who probably had endeavoured the Conquest of it, having finished his War against the Persians, had he not died in Babylon at his coming back. Nor did the Romans ever extend their Empire beyond Petrea, though once Augustus did attempt it; employing for that Action Largus, his Lieutenant in Ægypt: one Sames being then King of those parts which lay nearest to him. The Romans at their first entry found no resistance: but when by the extraordinary heat of the air, and drinking salt waters, they began to grow sickly and diseased, the Arabians fell lustily upon them, and made them return back both with loss and shame. After this nothing done by the Romans, to disturb their quiet; nor much done by the Christians, to advance their glories: the whole divided into almost as many Religions, as Principalities and Estates. Most of them Gentiles, but circumscribed, as the Ismaelites, and other Arabians had been of old; many Jews intermingled with them, and some store of Christians, and but these divided also into Sects and Factions. In this state it stood, when Mahomet first began to broach his blasphemous doctrine. By birth of Tajriban, an obscure Village then not far from Medina: his Father called Abdalla, an Idolatrous Pagan; his Mother named Hemina, as perverted a Jewess. Deprived of both his Parents when but two years old, he was left unto the care of an Uncle: who not able to give him education, nor willing to be at the charge to keep him longer, sold him at sixteen years of age to the Ismaelites: by whom exposed to sale in the open Markets, he was bought by one Abdalmutalif, a wealthy Merchant. By him employed at first in Drudgery and servile Offices, till noting his great wit, and fitnes for better Services, he at last taught him as his Factor: sending him with his Camels and Loads of Merchandise into Syria, Perfia, Ægypt, and other places, wherein he did behave himself with such dexterity, that he much encreased his Master's wealth, and his own estimation. Of person he is said to be low, and withal flat-headed; but otherwise comely to the eye, and of good aspect. Much troubled with the Falling Sickness, which infirmity he made good use of afterwards affirming that those Fits were nothing but heavenly Raptures, in which he did converse with the Angel Gabriel. He is said to have been also well skilled in Magick, by which he taught a white Pidgeon to feed at his ear, which he gave out to be the H. Ghost, by whom he was instructed in the Law which he was to publish: but this not till afterwards. By Socrates, comeliness of person, and the great knowledge which he had in his Master's business, he gained so far on the Affections of his Mistress, that on the death of Abdalmutalif, she made him her Husband. Possessed of all his Master's Wealth, he affected ease: and being till then of no Religion, or at best a Pagan; he began to hearken unto Sergius, a Nestorian Monk: who flying out of Syria for fear of punishment (the Heretics of Nestorius being newly both revived and censured) came into Arabia, where he found entertainment in the House of Abdalmutalif, the Master of Mahomet. By his persuasions, who found him a fit Instrument for the Devil to work on, he began to entertain the thoughts of hammering out a New Religion, which might unite all Parties in some common Principles, and bring the Christians, Jews, and Gentiles (into which the World was then divided) under one Profession. Resolved on this, he retired himself unto a Cave not far from Meccha, as if he there attended nothing but Meditations: Sergius in the mean time sounding in the ears of the People, both his Parts and Piety. The People being thus prepared to behold the Poegant, out comes the principal Actor with some parts of his Alcoran (pleasing enough to sensual minds) which he professed to have received from the Angel Gabriel. And finding that this edited to his expectation, he next proclaimed Liberty to all Slaves and Servants, as a thing commanded him by God, by whom the Natural Liberty of Mankind was most dearly tenderd: which drew unto him such a rabble of unruly people, that without fear or opposition, he dispersed his Doctrines, reducing them at last to a Book or Method.

The Book of this Religion he calleth the Alcoran, that is to say, the Collection of Precepts: the Original whereof they feign to be written on a Table which is kept in Heaven, and the Copy of it brought to Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. A Book so highly revered by the Mahometans, that they write upon the Cover of it, Let none touch this but he that is clean. The body of it (as it now standeth) was composed by Ofman the fourth Caliph, who seeing the Saracens daily enclining to divers Heresies by reason of some false Copies of Mahomet's Law, and that the Empire by the same means was likely to fall into civil diffention; & by the help of his Wife, who was Mahomet's Daughter, he got a list of all Mahomet's Papers, which he reduced into four Volumes, and divided into one hundred twenty and four Chapters; commanding expressly upon pain of death, That that Book, and that only, should be received as Canonical through his Dominion. The whole body of it is but an Expolition and Gloſs on the eight Commandments.

1 Every one ought to believe that God is a great God, and one only God, and Mahomet is his Prophet. They hold Abraham to be the Friend of God; Meyer the Messenger of God; and Chriſt, the Breath of God: whom they deny to be conceived by the Holy Ghost, affirming that the Virgin Mary grew with child of him by ſmelling to a Rose, and was delivered of him at her Breasts. They deny the Mystery of the Trinity; but punish ſuch as ſpeak againſt Chriſt, whole Religion was not (ſay they) taken away, but mended by Mahomet. And he who in his Pilgrimage to Mecca, doth not, coming or going, viſit the Sepulchre of Chriſt, is reputed not to have merited, or bettered himſelf any thing by his Journey.

2 Every man muſt marry, to encreaſe the Soldiers of Mahomet. Four Wives he alloweth to every man, and as many Concubines as he will; between whom the Husband ſetteth no difference, either in affection or Apparel; but that his Wives only can enjoy his Sabbath Benevolence. The Women are not admitted in the time of their lives to come into their Churches: nor after death, to Paraſide: And whereas in moſt or all other Countries, Fathers give ſome Portions with their Daughters, the Mahometans give money for their Wives, which being once paid, the Contraſt is regiſtered in the cadie's Books; and this iſall their formality of Marriage. More of this Theme we ſhall ſpeak hereafter, when we are in TURCOMANIA, and among the Turks.

3 Every one muſt give of his wealth to the Poor. Hence you ſhall have ſome buy Slaves, and then manumit them; buy Birds, and then let them fly. They uſe commonly to free Priſoners, releaſe Bond-slaves, build Caves or Lodgings in the ways for the relief of Paſſengers, repair Bridges, and mend High-ways. But their moſt ordinary Almsconſtit in Sacrifices of Sheep or Oxen, which, when the Solemnity is performed, they diſtribute among the poor; to whom alſo, on the firſt day of every year, they are bound to give the Tithes or tenth part of their Gettings in the year foregoing: inſomuch that you ſhall hardly find any Beggars amongſt them.

4 Every one muſt make his Prayers five times a day. When they pray, they turn their bodies towards Mecca, but their faces ſometimes one way, ſometimes another way, believing that Mahomet ſhall come behind them, being at their devotions. The firſt time is an hour before Sun-ſetting, the ſecond, at noon-day; the third, at three of the clock after-noon; the fourth, at Sun-ſetting; the fifth and laſt before they go to ſleep. At all theſe times the Cryers kept a bawling in the Steeples (for the Turks and Saracens have no Bells) for the people to come to Church. And ſuch as cannot come, muſt when they hear the voice of the Cryers, fall down in the place where they are, do their devotions, and kiſs the ground three times.

5 Every one muſt keep a Lent one month in a year. This Lent is called Ramazan, in which they ſuppoſe the Alcoran was given unto Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. This Faſt is only intended in the day time, the Law giving leave to frolick it in the night as they beſt pleaſe; for they abſtain from Wine and Swines fleſh prohibited in their Law at all times, but never ſo punctually abſtained from, as in the time of their Lent.

6 Be obedient to thy Parents. Which Law is the moſt neglected of any in all the Alcoran, never any Children being ſo unnatural as the Turkiſh.

7 Thou ſhalt not kill. And this they keep inviolate amongſt themſelves; but the poor Chriſtians are ſetured to feel the ſmart of their fury. And as if by this Law the actual ſhedding of blood only were prohibited, they have invented puniſhments for their Offenders, more than death it ſelf. As firſt, the Strappado, which is hanging of them by the Arms drawn backwards; when they are ſo bound, they are drawn up on high, and let down again with a violent ſwing, which joyntureth all their back and Arms. Secondly, They uſe to hoſtup their heels, and with a great Cudgel to give them three or four hundred blows on the ſoles of their feet. Thirdly, It is ordinary to draw them naked up to the top of a Gibbet or Tower, full of hooks, and cutting the Rope, to let them fall down again; and by the way they are caught by ſome of the hooks, where they commonly hang till they die for hunger.

8 Do unto others as thou wouldeſt be done unto thyſelf. To thoſe that keep theſe Laws he promiſeth Paraſide, a place of all Delights, adorned with flowery Fields, watered with Chryſtalline Rivers, beautified with Trees of Gold, under whole cool ſhade they ſhall ſpend their time with amorous Virgins, whole Mantion ſhall ſtand far diſtant. The men ſhall never exceed the age of fifty, nor the women of fifteen; and thoſe to have their Virginities renewed, as ſoft as loſt.

Friday he ordained to be the Sabbath-day, partly to diſtinguiſh his Followers from the Jews and Chriſtians, who ſolemnize the days enſuing; but principally, becauſe he was on that day proclaimed King or Emperour, and ſolemnly ſo created. Wine and Swines fleſh are the principal things forbidden by the Alcoran: from theſe whercof they all unaniouſly refrain; but on theſe they are ſo ſetted, that when they come at it, they ſeldom go home again unſed; inſomuch that all the Wines in Conſtantinople have been thrown about the Streets, and death made the penalty for any that will preſume to bring any more into the City. Mahomet taught them, That every one ſhould be ſaved by his own Religion, him only excepted, that revolted from the Alcoran unto another Law; but ſo, that under the notion of Religion, he means only ſuch as worſhip the one and only God, excluding by that means the old Idolaters of the Gentiles from the hopes of Salvation. And he taught too, That at the end of the World, all men that profeſſed any ſuch Religion ſhould go into Paraſide; the Jews under the Banner of Muſes, the Chriſtians under the Banner of Chriſt, and the Saracens under the Banner of Mahomet. They compel no men therefore to abjure the Faith in which he was born, but commend and approve ſeriously ſuch as find zealous and conſtant in their own Religion; yet holding it an eſpecial honour to have daily new Proſelytes, they incite them by hope of freedom and preferment, which with many are motives too much prevailing. Hence I have heard many ſay, That it is better for a man that would enjoy Liberty of Conſcience, to live in the Countries profeſſing Mahometaniſm than Papiſtry: for in the one he ſhall never be ſee from the bloody Inquiſition; in the other he is never moleſted, if he middle not with their Law, their women, or their Slaves.

The Opinions which they hold concerning the end of the World, are very ridiculous; as that at the winding of a Horn, not all fleſh only, but the Angels themſelves ſhall die; that the Earth with an Earthquake ſhall be ſhaken together like a lump of dough; that a ſecond blot of the ſame Horn, ſhall after forty days reſtore all again; that Cain ſhall be the Captain or Ringleader of the damned, who ſhall have the countenance of dogs and ſwine; that they ſhall paſs over the bridge of Juſtice, laden with their ſins in ſatchels; that the great finners ſhall fall into hell; the leſſer into Purgatory only; with a thouſand like ſuppoſes: which it is needleſs to add here, conſidering that the Alcoran it ſelf is now extant in Engliſh, and every one that liſts may read it. A thing fo full of Taniſties, incoherence, and ſuch groſs abſurdities, of ſo impure and carnal mixture, that he muſt lay aſide the uſe of his natural reaſon, who is taken by it, if force, ambition, or the want of Chriſtian education do not lead him on. For if we ſeriously look into the cauſes of the deplorable increaſe and long continuance of this Religion, we ſhall find them to be chiefly theſe, 1 The greatness of the Victories gotten by the Saracens, who ally compelled the conquered Nations to receive their Law. 2 The great zeal and diligence of the Arabians themſelves, who being a numerous people, and much given to Merchandize, have poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Sea-Coaſts of Africa, from the ſtreights of Babel Mandel, almoſt as far as to the Cape of Good Hope; of all the Iſlands in thoſe Seas, and many Factories and good Towns on the Coaſts of India: in all which they have ſet their Religion alſo, as a thing inſeparable from their Nation. 3 A peremptory restraint of all diſputation in any point of Religion whatſoever it be. 4 The ſuppreſſing of Philoſophy, and the ſtudy of Humane Sciences; the light whercof might eaſily detect the groſſeneſs of their Superſtitions. 5 The ſenſual liberty allowed of having variety of Wives, and as many Concubines as they are able to keep. 6 The promiſe of the like ſenſual pleaſures in the other world, with which a ſenſe not illuminated with the Spirit of God, doth for the moſt part ſeem to be more affected, than with the ſpeculative hope of ſpiritual happineſs. 7 The forbidding of Printing and printed Books, by which the people might come to ſee the verity and purity of the Chriſtian Faith; the falſhood and impurity of the Law of Mahomet. Theſe laſt not without at leaſt not able to induce belief; if the firſt had not opened and prepared the way.

For indeed force of Arms was the ſtrongest Argument by which Mahomet himſelf confirmed, and his Succeſſors in their times have ſince propagated and diſperſed his Doctrine. Strengthened by the report of that raſal Rabb, which repaired to him, he aſſaults Medina, pretending a quarrel to the Jews, who had there a Synagogue, Repulſed at firſt with loſs of men, and a wound in his face, by which ſome of his fore-teeth were beaten out; there likely to have made an end of his new Religion, if not recovered by his Soldiers for a further miſchief. At the next ſort he prevailed, the Battle being fought near a place called Beder, ſituate betwixt Mecca and Medina, frequently mentioned in the Alcoran. After which fight he took the City, converting the Synagogue to a Temple for his own impieties: the news whercof ſo ſtartled the Phylarche, or Nobility of Mecca, that they armed all their Powers againſt him, and ſped ſo well in the beginning of the War, that they drove him forcibly from their Territories; which not long after he ſubdued, and ſet his chief ſeat at Mecca. From that his flight, the Saracens began their Computation of years (as we from CHRIST'S Nativity) which they call the Hegira; which beſt beſt beginneth about the year of our Redemption 617. Concerning which time, I cannot but obſerve, that Mahomet compelled his devil'iſh Doctrine, beginning his Empire; and Boniſace the third aſſumed his Antichriſtian title, beginning his unlimited Supremacy night about the ſame year. It was called the Hegira, from the Arabick Hegirathi, which by the Learned in that Tongue, is rendered by Diarye, ſay the ſpace, i. e. the perſecution raiſed about Religion. Joſeph Scaliger in the firſt Edition of his moſt glorious work De emendatione temporum, caſteth off this Etymology with purum putum mendacium. He will not have it called Bra fige or perſecution, but Bra Hagarene; becauſe ſoforth the Arabians were by ſome called Hagarens. I believe it would have puzzled Joſeph, with all his reading, to ſhew unto us any Epoche or Bra, which is taken from the name of a Nation. And therefore other reaſon he giveth us none but this; Nos autem ſcimus vocem illam primogeniam ſignificatione ab Hagarens non a fuga duci. But time and oppoſitions at the laſt reclaimed him from this Error; and in the ſecond Edition of his Work, he is content to follow the common opinion of thoſe men, whom in the firſt he whiſtled off with the infamous appellation of mendaces.

But to proceed, It hapned much about this time, that the Saracens revolting from Heraclius the Eaſtern Emperour, joyned themſelves unto him. They had long been diſpleaſed with their condition and now hoped to mend it. Exasperated by Julian the Apollate, when they ſerved in his Wars againſt the Perſians, for telling them when they demanded their pay, that he had more ſtore of Steel than Gold; but then they wanted a fit head to reſort unto. Now ſerving Heraclius in the ſame War, they were uſed by his Officers in the ſame ill manner. Asking their pay, the Treafurer of the Army made them this churliſh answer, that there was ſcarce money enough to pay the Roman and Grecian Soldiers; and muſt thoſe Dogs be ſo importunate for their Wages? Provoked herewith, and hearing the ſame of Mahomet, they betook themſelves to him: who ſtrengthened by their Forces, and the coming in of the reſt of their Country-men ſoon brought the three Arabians under his ſubjection. To which, having defeated the Emperours Forces ſent againſt him, he added ſome parts of Syria and Aegypt; and returning to Mecca, there died frantick and diſtemper'd, in the ſeventieth year of his Age, and three and twentieth of his Impiunities: of which he had ſpent thirteen at Medina, and the reſt at Mecca. His dead body being kept four days in expectation of a Reſurrection, which he promiſed to perform at the end of three; grown full of ſtench and putrefaction, was carried to Medina, and there interred: his Succeſſors out of wicked and worldly policy, keeping up the reputation of that Religion after his deceaſe, which they deſired in his life; and calling themſelves Caliphs, and Vicars General, to him, their Prophet, to the Catalogue of which we haſten; made intricate, not more by their own conſuſions, than by the difference of thoſe names by which they are preferred to us by ſeveral Writers; according to the times and Languages in which they writ.

The Caliphs or Emperours of the Saracens.

- 947 30 Egypt, Palestine, with great part of Syria and Mesopotamia. 12.
- 657 40 Olman, the third of Mahomet's Great Captains, Husband of Zeneb, his second Daughter; succeeded under that pretence, and added all Babry to his Empire. Distressed by the faction of Hali, and beleagued in his own house, he flew himself in the eighty seventh year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign.
- 660 43 Hali, the Kinsman and next heir of Mahomet, and the Husband of Fatime his eldest Daughter, succeeded on the death of Olman: murdered by the procurement of Muhavia, near Cusa, in Arabia Felix.
- 681 64 Muhavia, having murdered Hali, his Son Hafem, or Ofsan, and eleven of the Sons of that Hafem, the twelfth only escaping with life (from whom descended the Family of the Alavei, and the Persian Sophies) assumed the Government as rightful-Successor to Olman, whose Widow, the daughter of Mahomet, he had took to wife. He conquered Rhodes, Cyprus, and a great part of Asia Minor, and was the Founder of the Family of Aben Humeya.
- 685 68 Gizid, the Son of Mahomet, more skilled in Poetry than in Arms.
- 707 90 Habdalla and Marwan, Competitors for the Supreme Dignity; but carried at last by Marwan.
- 716 99 Abimelech, the Son of Marwan, established the begun Conquests of Armenia, and Mesopotamia. 22.
- 719 102 Ulidor Ulit, under whom the Saracens or Moors first conquered Spain. 9.
- 721 104 Zulcinus, Brother to Ulit, whose Captain Muljamus besieged Constantinople, till his Ships were burnt, and his Men consumed with the Plague. 3.
- 725 107 Humar, or Haumar II. Son of Ulidor Ulit. 2.
- 743 125 Isid, or Gizid II. the brother of Hammar, with whom during his life he was joynt Caliph, and after his decease enjoyed it wholly to himself.
- 744 126 Evelid, by some called Ischam, in whose time Charls Martel made such havock of the Moors in France, Anno 734, their General then named Abderamen. 18.
- 745 127 Gizid III. the son of Gizid the second.
- 752 134 Hyeer, by some called Ibrahim, the brother of Gizid the third, slain by Marwan.
- 756 138 Marwan II. the last of the house of Ben-humeya, slain by Abdalla, of the house of Fatime and Hali.
- 777 156 Abdalla, of the house of Alaveci, or Alabeci, descended from Hali and Fatime, the eldest daughter of Mahomet; called also the Family of Abas, because of their descent from Abas the Uncle of Mahomet, and perhaps Father unto Hali.
- 20 Mahomet II, surnamed Bugiafer, or Abugefer, who built the City of Bagdet, made from that time the constant seat of his Successors till their fatal period.
- 21 Mahadi. 9.

- 286 168 22 Mufa, or Moyse. 1.
- 287 169 23 Aron, or Arachid, who compelled Isra. Empress of Constantinople, to pay him tribute. 23.
- 280 193 24 Mahamad, or Mahomet III.
- 285 198 25 Abdalla III. who took and spoiled Creta, and overthrew the Greeks; he also spoiled Sicilia, Sardinia, and Corfica. 17.
- 282 215 26 Mahomet IV. wasted Italy, burnt the Suburbs of Rome, and harassed the forenamed Islands. 40.

Others reckon these Caliphs to have succeeded Mahomet the second.

- 285 198 25 Mamon. 12.
- 287 210 26 Mareizam. 8.
- 285 218 27 Wack. 4.

- 291 234 29 Montacer. 1.
- 292 352 30 Abul Hamet. 6.
- 298 241 31 Almazet. 4.
- 293 245 39 Motadi Bala. 7.
- After whose death, the Egyptians withdrew themselves from their obedience due to the Babylonian Caliph, and chose one of their own, to whom all the Arabians, and those of the Mahometan Religion, in Africa and Europe, submitted themselves. Of the Egyptian Caliphs, when we come into that Country. Take now with you the names only of the Syrian and Babylonian Caliphs; for story of them I find little or none, the power being totally in the hands of the Sultans of the several Provinces, and nothing left unto the Caliphs but an airy title, the shadow of that mighty Tree, which formerly had spread itself over most part of the World.

- 20 Mustenatar.
- 1255 638 21 Mustatzen, the last Caliph, of High Priest of the Saracens of Bagdet, or Babylon, living in the account of a Prince or Emperor; looked on as the Supreme Lord of the Saracen Empire; starved in his Castle of Bagdet, and his whole posterity starved in his Castle of Bagdet, and his whole posterity starved in his reign. Yet there is still remaining a carcass of year of his reign. Yet there is still remaining a carcass of the old body, one whom they call Caliph, whose hands and the neighbour Princes use to receive their Diadems and Regalities; for so we find that Solyman the magnificent, after his conquest of Chaldea, Mesopotamia, and Assyria, 10.

to have been by one of these poor titular Caliphs, Crowned King of Babylon, Anno 1513.

This unwieldy body of the Saracen Empire, having thus two heads, began apparently to decline: losing to the Kings of Oradea and Nawarre, a great part of Spain; to the Kings of Sardinia, and Corfica; to the Norman, Naples, and Sicily; and finally most of their Empire, with their very names, to the Turks and Tartars. For Allan, or Haslon, a Tartarian Captain, starved Mutstazem the Babylonian Caliph, in his Tower of Bagdet, and rooted out all his Posterity, (as before was said;) and Saracen the first King of Egypt, brained the last Egyptian Caliph with his Horsemen's Maces; leaving not one of Issue or Kindred surviving. The office of the Caliphs (as to matters which concern their irreligion, and the supreme determination of the doubts and controversies which occur therein) being now executed in the Turk Dominion, by the Misly, or Chief Priest of the Turk Mahometans.

As Mars shewed himself a friend unto those Saracens, in their wars and triumphs; so also did Phabus pour down no less Celestial influence, on such as addicted themselves to Scholarship. Bagdes in Chaldea, Cairoan, Fes, Marocco, in Barbary; and Corduba in Spain, were their Universities: out of which came the Philosophers, Astronomers, and Astronomers; the Physicians, Rhetors, and Mathematicians; the Geographers, and almost all the Textuaries and profound Writers, (as Hali, Algazel, Alhamazari, &c.) in Astrology, from a great part of our Astronomical and Astrological terms are borrowed.

There is now no Kingdom, Island, or Province which acknowledged the Empire of the Saracens, but the Kingdom of Fes and Marocco only: Arabia it self, the very first seat of their power, acknowledging a subjection to the Turk Empire. For first Petra, and Deserta, being subdued by the Turks, when they conquered Persia, or otherwise following the fortunes of the present Victor, were afterwards accounted of as subject unto the Mahometans of Egypt, who out of that Country and all Syria, had by degrees disseized the Selzucetan Family. And as the Vassals of that Crown, though but Subjects at will, they more molested Selimus in his march towards Egypt, by falling on his Rear, and terrifying him with their night-Alarms, than all the Forces of the Mahometans in the field against him. But Egypt being subdued, and the Mahometans utterly destroyed, some of their Chiefs being gained by money, and thereby by promise of preferment; the whole Nation of these wild Arabs swore allegiance to him: continuing in account as subject unto his Successors, but in effect doing what they list; governed as formerly by the Chiefs of their several Clanners, and in their Robberies taking no more notice of the Turks than they do of the Christians. And as for Felix, it continued also in a free condition, in respect of any forcible power; till of late times the Turks and Portugals entrenched upon them. For in the year 1538. Solyman Bassa, Admiral of the Turkish Fleet against the Portugals, who had diverted the trade of the Red Sea, and otherwise given offence to Solyman the Magnificent, by aiding the Persians, went with a strong Army to take Diu, a Town and Island of East India, then in their possession. But being unable to effect it, at his coming back he called in at Aden, one of the best traded Ports of Arabia Felix, invited the King thereof aboard, most treacherously hanged him, and surprized the City. The like he also did to the King of Zibur, the Port Town to Mecca; and by that means got possession of all the Coasts of this Country, bordering on the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; of which the Turks still continue Masters. But in the Inland parts, and towards the Persian Gulf, of no power at all; nor suffered to travel up and down without a Pass, from those of the Arabian Chiefs; or if they do, in danger to be set upon by the Natives, who brook them not. Some parts hereof which lie next unto the Isle of Ormus, made one Kingdom with it; but the Kings originally of this Country, by whom the City of Ormus was first built: and so continued till the taking of Ormus by the Portugals, Anno 1622. who since the taking of that Isle by the King of Persia, hold Murshabur, and some other pieces upon this Continent. The residue of the Country canted amongst a company of petit Princes, as in former times; before ambition taught them to devour one another.

And so much for ARABIA.

6 CHALDEA. 7 ASSYRIA. 8 MESOPOTAMIA.

Hese Provinces, which properly and originally constituted the Assyrian Empire, I have joyned together in the Title, because united in the Story and Affairs thereof though severally to be considered in the Description and Chorography of them.

6 CHALDEA.

CHALDEA is bounded on the East, with Susiana, a Province of Persia; on the West, with Arabia Deserta; on the North, with Mesopotamia; and on the South, with the Persian Bay, and the rest of Deserta. Originally called Chasdim from Chesed the fourth Son of Nachor, the brother of Abraham. Chesed quoad quartus est, à quo Chasdim, id est, Chaldei postea vocati sunt, as Et. Hierome hath it. But why the Chaldeans should derive their name from Chesed, being a People long before Chesed's birth, I am not able to determine: unless he taught them the first Principles of the Art of Astronomy; or was the Author of some signal benefit unto them, which we know not of. It was called afterwards Babylonia, from Babylon the chief City of it; and at this day by Belonius, Asania; by the Arabians, Reldan; by the Turks, Curdistan.

But the name of Chaldea sometimes went beyond those bounds, taking in some part also of Mesopotamia as appeareth by that passage of St. Stephen, saying, Acts 7. 2. 3. 4. That the God of glory appeared to our Father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran; and said unto him, Get thee out of this Country, and from thy kindred, and come into the Land which I shall shew thee. Then he came out of the Land of the Chaldees, and dwelt in Charran, &c. Where clearly that part of Mesopotamia, which lay next unto Assyria, where then Abraham was, is included under the name of Chaldea, or the Land of the Chaldees. Which I desire the Reader to take notice of, because I must make use of this observation in another place.

The Country by Herodotus said to be so fruitful, that it yielded ordinarily two hundred, and in some places three hundred fold; the blades of Wheat and Barley being as he affirmeth four fingers broad. By Pliny it is said of the Babylonians, that they mowed their Corn twice, and feeded it a third time, or else it would be nothing but blades: and yet so, that the worst of their Land yielded fifty, and their best an hundred-fold increase. Nor is the nature of the soil so altered in long tract of time, but that (as late Travellers have observed) it would in all likelihood attain to its first fertility, if it were ordered with like care and diligence, as in former times. But what need more be said as to the natural fruitfulness and delights of this Country, than that it pleased God Almighty to make choice of some part hereof for the Terrestrial Paradise or Garden of Eden, in which he placed our Father Adam, at his first Creation. For there that Paradise, by men both skilled in Divinity and Geography, is affirmed to have stood. Yet amongst all sorts of Writers we find different opinions. Some make Paradise to be a place of pleasure, and the four Rivers to be the four Cardinal Vertues; but these Allegories on the Scripture are unwarrantable. Others place it in the air, under the Circle of the Moon; and tell us that the four Rivers in the Scriptures mentioned, fall down from thence and running all under the Ocean, rise up again in those places where they are now found: but this is so vain a foppery, that I will not honour it with a consultation. Such as make Paradise local, are divided also into three ranks (for I omit the rest) whereof some place it under the Aequator, but this agreeth not with the bounds prescribed by the Holy Ghost. Some conceive the four Rivers to be Tigris, Euphrates, Nilus, and Ganges; and that Paradise was the whole world; but this cannot be: for then when Adam was driven out of Paradise, it must follow that he was driven out of the world, which were absurd. Those of the soundest judgments place it here, in an Island which is made by the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and some branches running from them both: the uppermost of which is called Pison, (falsely rendered Ganges) which watereth the Land of Havilah, or that part of the Land of Havilah, which is now called Chosroan, or Susiana, a Province of Persia; and the lowermost is named Gibon, (improperly by some translated Nilus) which compasseth the East parts of Arabia Petrea, by the Septuagint for the reasons above mentioned, rendered Ethiopia. And this agreeth both with the position of this Country, and the course of those Rivers. For that Tigris and Euphrates (which the Hebrew Text called Hiddekel, and Perah) do here join their streams, is confessed on all sides. Then as for Pison, it is no other than that River by Ptolemy, called Basilus, or Regius; by Cassius more nearly Pisi-Tigris, or Pasi-Tigris, Perenti ad fluvium, Pasigris incolæ vocant, as his own words are. A little stream, which watereth the Land of Havilah, or the Country of the Chavelei, or Chavalei, or Chavilani: (for by these several names they are called amongst the Ancients, who place them betwixt the Babylonians, and the Nabatheans an Arabian people) poureth it fell into the Tigris, and falls together with it into the Gulf of Persia. And finally for Gibon, by Ptolemy called Marsus, and by others Marsurus, it is no other than a branch of Euphrates, which watereth the Land of Chal, or Ethiopia Asiatica, take which name you will, I shew it fell at last in the Lakes of Chaldea.

But though in general the Country was extremely fruitful, yet in some places wasit covered with a slimy matter, which the overflowing of the waters, and the nature of the soil together, did bring forth abundantly. Used by them in their buildings, instead of Mortar, than which more more durable and binding; and therefore chosen for the Cement of the Tower of Babel, Gen. 11. 3. Some allow it a Cliff, which opening fendeth out such a flock, that it killeth Birds as they fly over it; and others, of a like open place near a Town called Atis, which continually throweth out boyling Pitch (named therefore Hell-mouth by the Moors) filling therewith the adjoining Fields; and that herewith the people use to pitch their Boats. But this in some places only, the Country generally being both healthy and delightful, as before was said.

The People anciently were much addicted unto Sooth-saying and Divinations, and no less noted for being Authors of the first Idolatry that was ever practised in the World. Induced unto the latter perhaps by the Power of their Kings, who would needs confer Divine Honours upon some of their Ancestors. But to the first inclined by their own disposition, and the situation of their Country, yielding a fair sensible Horizon (for the Rational is alike in all places, both in Hills and Vallies) and consequently profitable to the observation of the six several Orb, and the full period of the courses of each several Planet. Certain it is that they grew so noted in this Art, that at the last every Astrologer, or Figure-flinger, was called a Chaldean. Genis nomine ad eos venientes transiit, qui sese itus sapientia specie venditabant, as Besa hath observed in his Annotations. For giving too much credit to them, the People thus flouted by the Satyrs.

That is to say,

Joves Oracles no greater credit have,

Than Sooth-sayings of a Chaldean cozening Knave. The Language which was spoken here, had the name of the Chaldee, or Chaldean Tongue; of great antiquity, and sanctified by the Holy Ghost, some Chapters of the Prophecy of Daniel being written in it. So different from the Hebrew in its primitive purity, that the Jews did not understand its appearance by the words of the Officers of Hezekiah, 2 Kings 18. 26. desiring Balshazzar to speak to them in the Chaldee Tongue, that the common people of the Jews might not hear his Blasphemies. A further proof may be, That a man may have some knowledge in the Hebrew, and yet be ignorant of the Chaldee; as many are, no doubt, at this present day. But whatsoever it was in its primitive purity, it altered afterwards when the Jews came to live amongst them, during the Captivity: out of whose long commerce with them, both Nations lost their proper Languages; and fell upon a third, made out of both, which was called the Syriack. Of this we spake before, when we were in Syria and Palistine. And this is now the natural Language of this Country, and its Neighbour Assyria; but with a little mixture of the Greek and Arabic: Not vulgarly spoken elsewhere, for ought I can find; but used by many others in their Sacred Offices, by whom not commonly understood. For in this Language, all the Sects of the Eastern Christians do associate their Publick Liturgies: that is to say, the Nestorians, Jacobites, Maronites, (for I reckon not the Melchites, who use the Greek Liturgic, amongst the Sectaries.) The like do also the Indians or Christians of Saint Thomas, the Coptites or Christians of Aegypt, and the poor remainder of the Chritians in the life of Zocataria, an Island on the Coast of Africa. Used to those Liturgies, when the Language was more understood amongst them; though now worn out of vulgar knowledge, by the overspreading of the Arabic, Tartarian, and Turkish Conquests. In which the Prelates of these Churches have fallen into the great error of the Church of Rome; and without taking notice of the alterations, hapning in the Vulgar Tongues of those several Nations, which are united under them into one opinion, keep up a Language in their Liturgies which they understand not; as if the capacities of the People could be sooner raised to the understanding of an unknown Language, than the publick Liturgies be fitted unto their capacities. The ancient Picty of the Church and the modern Languages of God's People, are not inconsistent; though out of private ends some have taught us otherwise. But I fear this error (as some others) will not be so easily remedied, as apprehended. From the Tongue in which they celebrate the Divine Offices of their Religion, pass we to the Religion it self, whose Sacred Offices are so celebrated.

The Christian Faith was first preached in this Country by Saint Peter, of whose being in Babylon (the chief City hereof) himself assured us in the last words almost of his first Epistle; and other business he had none here, but to preach the Gospel. Much persecuted by the Persians (who were then possessed of all these parts) it prevailed at last; Christianity growing up the faster for the cutting down. The Patriarchal See, originally planned in Seleucia, successer unto Babylon in repute and greatness, is not also in name; the Bishop whereof, by order of the Nicene Council, had the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction of these parts, with the name of Catholicus; and the next place in Session, at all publick Assemblies of the Church, next after the Patriarch of Ephesus. And besides this, the Indians or Christians of Saint Thomas acknowledge him for their Primate or Metropolitan; as they did afterwards in his right, the Patriarch of Mozul. At this present here are some remainders of Christianity, part of them Jacobites, but the most Nestorians; of whom more anon.

Of the chief Rivers hereof we have spoken already; and Mountains there are none to hinder us in our passage forwards: So that without more delay, we may take a view of their principal places. And in the first place we meet with Babel, in the Hebrew signifying Confusion, famous for Confusion of Languages which here happened. For immediately after the Universal Deluge, Nimrod the Son of Cham, the Son of Cam, perfwaded the People to secure themselves from the like after-claps, by building some stupendous Edifice, which might resist the fury of a second Deluge. This Council was generally embraced, Hebrew only and his Family, as tradition goeth, contradicting such an unlawful attempt. The major part prevailing, the Tower began to rear a head of Majesty, 5149 paces from the ground; having its basis and circumference equal to the height. The passage to go up, went winding about the outside, and was of art exceeding great breadths: there being not only room for Horses, Carts, and the like means of Carriage, to meet and turn; but Lodging for Men and Beasts, and, as the Persian reporteth, Grass and Corn fields for their nourishment. But God beholding from on high this fond attempt, sent amongst them (Tongues) which hindered the proceeding of this Building, one being not able to understand what his fellow called for.

of their first Wives. 6 Not praying before the Cross, nor giving a religious worship to the Crucifix, or other Images. So much for these Nestorian Sectaries, if so named aright, considering the qualifications added to their opinions: now (but corruptly) called Nestorians: the greatest Sect of Christians in all the East.

The solemnities which these Christians use in contracting Marriage, because not very usual, I will here relate: Their wives they never see till the day of their marriage, but hearing a good report of the young Woman, negotiate with her Parents for her. Agreed upon the business, they meet in the Chancel of the Church, wherein there is a partition with an hole in it: the Bridegroom and his friends standing on the one side, the Bride and her kindred, on the other. When there the Cassie or Churchman biddeth the Bridegroom to put his hand thorow the hole into the Partition, and take his Bride by the hand, which he doth accordingly: the Mother of the Bride, with a sharp-pointed instrument, made of purpose pricking the Bridegrooms hand all over, with sufficient eagerness. If when he feeleth the smart, he lets go her hand, they take it for a sign that he will not love her; if he hold her fast, and wring her hand till he cry again, they take it for a very good Omen, and are glad they have so well bestowed her. After the Marriage is consummated, if a Male-child be born unto them, the Father taketh his own name, and is called by the name of his eldest Son: so as if the Fathers name be Moses and his sons name Joseph, the Father is now more called Moses but Abba Joseph, or the Father of Joseph. So highly do they reverence Marriage, and the fruit thereof, Posterity.

It was anciently divided into these six parts, 1 Arachabitis, bordering on Armenia Major; so called for Arachabitis, or the plantation of Arachab, the Son of Sen. 2 Adiabene, bordering on Mesopotamia, so called, quasi Adiabene, or inaccessible, because fenced with such unfordable Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, that there was no easy coming to it. 3 Assyria, quasi Assyria, as it is said in Strabo: or rather for Adiavene, from Dianus and Adiavene, the chief Rivers of it (the same which Ptolemy called Lychnis and Coprus) as in Marcus. 4 Calacene, and Stacene from Sittace, and Calach, two chief Cities of it; of which more anon. 5 Arbelites, and 6 Apolloniates, from Apollonia and Arbela, two other of the principal Cities.

Here then we have four of the Cities of Assyria brought unto our hand, 1 Calach, one of those four which Nimrod built in the Land of Assur, Gen. 10. 11. and one of them to which the Ten Tribes were transplanted by Salmanassar, 2 King 17. 6. and 18. 11. of such esteem those elder days, that Calacene as Ptolemy, or Calachene as Strabo most rightly call it, did take name from hence. 3 Sittace, situate about two miles from the banks of Tigris, in the way from Babylon to Susa. A City when it gave name to the parts adjoining, both great and populous; well seated in a fruitful Soyl, and well shaded with trees of several sorts; supported by the situation of it to be that Aecad, (or rather built in or near the place of it) which was one of the first four Cities of Nimrod's Kingdom. 4 Arbela, on the banks of the River Coprus, built as some say by Belus (or Belochus) Prifian an Assyrian King, whence it had the name. Near unto there is a place which Strabo calleth Knarphogor, or Cnephium, conceived by some to be the place where Noah framed the Ark. 4 Apollonia, built after the Macedonian conquest, as appeareth by the name, which is wholly Greek; not otherwise observable, but for giving the name of Apolloniates to the Country adjacent. Add unto these, 5 Gegnamela, situate in the middle space betwixt Lychnis, and Coprus memorable for the last and greatest battle betwixt Alexander and Darius, the King of Persia, who had he made good the Eastern banks of the River Tigris, might easily have vindicated the Macedonians from coming over the River being so extremely swift and violent, that the Macedonians were not able to pass it, but by linking their hands and arms together, and making one entire body to oppose the Currents; and therewithal of so great depth, that the footmen were fain to hold their Bows & Arrows over their heads, to keep them from being moistened and made unserviceable. But having miserably lost this opportunity by the cowardice of Mazeus, who had the keeping of this Pass, he was enforced to venture all upon a Battle: drawing unto this place an Army of 50000 Horse, 200000 Foot, in their account who speak least of it (for Arianus makes it above a Million) opposed by Alexander with no more than 40000 foot, and 7000 horse of his Europeans; but those victoriously successful: 40000 of the Persians slain, (but Diodorus Siculus speaks of 90000) with the loss of 300 Macedonian victory, as is said by Curtius. In memory of which notable victory, a Mountain near the place of the Battle, was by Alexander called Nicator, known by that name to Strabo and some other Ancients. 6 Rebubath, another of the four Cities, which Nimrod is said to have built in Assur; by some supposed to be Birbath, an ancient City upon Tigris, and bordering to near unto Mesopotamia, that by Ptolemy it is placed in it. Of which more anon. 7 Rhesina, another of the Cities of Nimrod's building, feared by Moses betwixt Calach and Nineve, Gen. 10. 12. and there commended for a great City. Which Character with the site thereof, have induced some learned men to think it to be the same which is by Xenophon called Larissae, built by him on the River Tigris, much about this place, and said to be a City of such strength and greatness, that it was no less than two Parasangs, or four miles in compass: the Walls in height a hundred foot, twenty are in breadth; so strongly cemented, that Cyrus, who besieged it, could have never taken it, if a casual Eclipse of the Sun had not discouraged the defendants. But whether this conjecture be good or not, we have here Larissae for another of the principal Cities. 8 Nineve, by the Greeks and Latines called Ninus; first built by Nimrod, and called Nineve with relation unto Ninus, his Son or Nephew, after the example of Cain whose steps he followed: of whom is said, that he built a City, and called it after the name of his Son, Enoch, Gen. 4. 17. I know the building of this City is by some ascribed to Assur, grounding themselves on that of Moses, Gen. 10. 11. Out of that Land went forth Assur, and built Nineve, &c. But I like better of their judgment, who take Assur in this place for the name of the Country, and not of the man; making the Text to speak of Nimrod, and to say of him, Egeffus est in Assur, &c. that is to say, And he went forth to Assur or the Land of Assyria, and there built Nineve, Rhebooth, and the rest there named. A City so enlarged by some of the succeeding Kings, that it came at last to be bigger than Babylon, in compass 450 furlongs, or 60 miles; and therefore laid in the Book of Judas, to be a City of three days journey, in circuit, as indeed it was: accommodating 20 miles for a days journey, according to the common estimate of those elder times; as also of the Greeks and Romans, in the times succeeding. Nor was it of less strength than greatness, the walls an hundred foot high, and so broad that three Carts might go abreast on the top thereof: and in those walls 1500 Towers, each of 200 foot in height: So strong, that it was thought to have been impregnable especially because of an ancient Prophecy, which signified that the Town should never be taken, till the River became an enemy to it. A Prophecy which which induced Sardanapalus to make it the seat of his war against Belochus, and Arbaces, then in arms against him; who having besieged it three years without hope of success, at last the River overflowing, carried before it twenty furlongs of the Wall. Which accident terminated the effeminate King, that he burnt himself in the midst of his treasures, and left the Town to the Beneficence, threatened destruction by the preaching of the Prophet Jesabib, escaped then upon repentance. But the people going on in their wicked courses, it was destroyed by Alyxer King of the Medes, that it might no longer be an encouragement to the Assyrians to rebel against him as formerly against some of his Predecessors: and so destroyed, that in the time of Saint Cyril of Alexandria, as himself affirmeth in his Comment on the Prophet Nahum, his words etiam non videretur deorsum rorare, that one could scarce discern in what place it stood. Mosul at this time, and for long since, the chief of Assyria: seated on the Tigris, and raised out of the ruins of Nineve: of most note for being the ordinary abiding place of the Nestorian Patriarch, who either in this City it self, or the Monastery of St. Hermes near adjoining to it, hath his constant residence. The Nestorians in this City so considerable, both in power and number, that though it be in the hands of Mahometans, either Turks or Persians; yet there are numbered in it fifteen Christian Churches, and at least 40000 Souls. A Seat so maligning by the Pope, (whom they commonly call the Reprobate Bishop) for the greatness of the jurisdiction which this Patriarch hath: that not contented to withdraw the Indians from him, (whereof more hereafter) Pope Julius the third, set up an Anti-Patriarch against him, to whom he gave the title of the Catholic of Mosul also; to whom the Nestorians dwelling in the Northern parts of Mesopotamia, (if some Writers of the Papal Party may be believed) do submit themselves, 10 Arzeri, of greater strength than Mosul, though of less antiquity than reputetur from which the whole Province of Assyria, is now called Arzerum. And 11 Schibberwal, at this time of the greatest note, as being the ordinary Residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg or Begs; who hath 10000 Timariars, under his command, to defend this Country, and be ready for any service, as occasion is.

8 MESOPOTAMIA.

MESOPOTAMIA, is bounded on the East, with the River Tigris, by whom parted from Assyria; on the West, with Euphrates, which divideth it from Comagene, a Province of Syria; on the North, with Mount Taurus, by which separated from Armenia Major; and on the South, with Chaldaea, and Arabia Deserta, from which last it is parted by the bendings of Euphrates also.

In the Scripture it is called most commonly by the name of Padan Aram, that is Syria Culis; but that name properly belongeth to the North-parts of it; Aram or Syria, because inhabited originally by the Aramians, whom the Greeks call Syri; and Padan, or Culis, from the fruitfulness and riches of it, exceedingly plentifully stored both with corn and wine, and furnished with all necessities for the life of man; in that regard by Strabo called Mesopotamia Fecunda. The Southern parts heretofore barren and full of Desarts, not having any herbage in them, sed sine fructibus, nor any kind of Tree, as we read in Xenophon: amongst some of the ancient Writers had the name of Arabia, partly because so like in nature to Arabia Deserta, and partly being planted with parts is sometimes Syria Transfluvialis, or Syria beyond the River (Euphrates), of which see 2 Sam. 10. 16. But generally in the Hebrew it is called Aram-Naharajim; which the Greeks render properly by Mesopotamia, or the Country in the middle of Rivers: environed by Tigris on the East, and Euphrates on the West and South; the River Chaboras, or Alorus, passing also through it. The Latines generally call it by the same name which the Greeks had given it; Prifian join to shew his faculty in Grammar, calling it Medama; By the Turks it is now called Diarbech.

As is the Country, such the People, the most Adipive of any we have met with hitherto; able at no time to stand by themselves, but still requiring the addition of some neighbour Nation to be joyned unto them. Nothing that they can call their own, their Name, their Language, nor their Country. Beholding for their Name in the North, to Syria; in the South, to Arabia; the Chaldeans also putting in for a share, and challenging those parts which lie next Assyria, to belong to them. Their Language anciently the Syriack, at this day the Arabick, their Country successively subjected to the Babylonians, Assyrians, Medes, and Persians. From them first conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Pompey, reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperor Trajan; more fully settled and confirmed by Aurelianus. But being recovered by the Persians, they fell together into the power of the Saracens, and are now commanded by the Turks. Never appearing of themselves on the Stage of action, but when once God shewed his mighty power in their many weaknesses; and raised them up to be a Scourge to the house of Israel, of which see Judges 3. 8. Hired afterwards by Adadnezar, King of Syria Zabab, in his war against David, by whom most shamefully defeated, 2 Sam. 10. 16, 18. Yet notwithstanding memorable in the Book of God, for the birth of Abraham and Rebecca; the long abode of Jacob, and the birth of his Children, in that respect affording an Original to the Hebrew Nation.

The Christian faith was first preached here by St. Thaddeus, one of the 70 Disciples; Anno 43, upon this occasion. Agabus the Toparch, or Prince of Edessa, one of the chief Cities of this Country, having been long afflicted with an incurable infirmity, and hearing of the fame of JESUS, beseeched him by a special message to come and help him: whereunto our Saviour made this Answer, That he could not visit him in person, the things he was to do, whilst upon the earth, being to be performed only in the Land of Canaan; but that he would take care of his health in convenient time. Accordingly, not long after his Ascension, St. Thomas the Apostle, by immediate revelation from our Saviour, sent Thaddeus thither; by whom the Prince was cured, and the Gospel preached, and many of the Nation converted to it: the Assyrians wherewith, together with the Copies of the several Letters from Agabus to CHRIST, and from CHRIST to him, preserved in the Archives of Edessa, were by Eusebius translated out of the Syriack, and inserted into the body of his Ecclesiastical History, lib. 1. cap. 14. Once planted, it found good increase, continuing in the purity of it till about the year 530. at what time one Jacobus Syrus (so called from his birth and abode in Syria) took upon him the defence of the Errors of Eutyches, touching the unity of natures in CHRIST our Saviour. Whole followers finding the Patriarchs of Antioch too vigilant over them, removed for the most part further off, settling themselves in Babylonia, and Mesopotamia, where they continued in great numbers. Governed by their own Patriarch, to whom the Jacobites in Syria are also subject, who takes unto himself the Title of Patriarch of Antioch, and is successively called Ignatius, as if the undoubted 1959 4 Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus subdued the Arabians; but invading the Indians also, he was vanquished and slain by their King Staurabates. Of this great Lady it is said, that she was born in Acalon, a Town of Syria, and exposed to the fury of wild beasts. But being born not to die so ingloriously, she was brought up by shepherds, and at full age presented to the Syrian Vice-roy, who gave her in marriage to his only Son. Going with him to the wars, she fell in acquaintance with Ninus, who liking her person and spirit, took her to his bed. This bred in him a greater affection towards her, so that he granted her at her request, the command of the Empire for five days; making a Decree, that her will in all things should be punctually performed: which boon being gotten, she put on the Royal Robes, and (as some Writers do report) commanded the King to be slain. Having thus gotten the Empire, the exceedingly enlarged it, leading with her an Army consisting of one hundred thousand Chariots of war, three millions of Foot, and half a million of Horse. A woman in whom there was nothing not to be honoured or applauded, but her insatiable lust in which, if the Greek Writers say true (as we have no reason to believe it of so gallant a woman) she was very guilty.

 3126 38 Sardanapalus, by Eusebius called Tosofceus, the last King of this Race. Of which, being

38 in all, there is scarce any thing remaining but the very names: registered in this order by Berosus, or rather by Frier Amnius a Monk of Viterbum in Tuscany, who hath thrust upon the world, the fancies of his own brain, under the name of that ancient Historian. The chief Kings of note after Semiramis, were,

 1. Ninus, or Zameis her Son; who by his Deputies and Lieutenants subdued the Arians, Balians, and Cassians: but was otherwise a man of effeminate and unliking carriage. And therefore is conceived to be the elder Bacchus, so much celebrated amongst the Grecians.

2. Belus the second, who recovered that Country which afterwards was called Judea, to the Assyrian Empire, from which it had revolted in the time of his Predecessor, (on the defeat of Amraphel, one of his Lieutenants, by the Sword of Abraham;) and subdued many other Nations.

3. Belochus Priscus, the tenth King, who by some Writers is said to be the author of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Auspium. For of Sooth-saying there were in all four kinds.

1. This Auspium, quasi Avispium, taken from the flight of Birds, either on the right hand, or on the left; (and hence the Proverb cometh, Avi finit, good luck, because in giving, the right hand is opposite to the receivers left; or from the number of Birds, whence Romulus had promised to him the Empire before his Brother, because he had seen the double number of Vultures; or lastly, from the nature of them, whence the fable Romulus, seeing the Vultures, was (saith Florus) speci plenius verum bellatricem fore, ita illi sanguini & preda afflicti ante pollicebantur.

2. Auspium, ab Aras inspicendo, in which the Sooth-sayers observed whether the Beast to be sacrificed came to the Altars willingly, or not: whether the trails were of natural colour, exulcerate, &c. or whether any part were wanting. All Histories afford variety of examples in this kind: I need give no particular instance. A kind of Divination said to be practised first by the Tuscan, or Hebræans; introduced in the knowledge thereof by one called Taget, who appearing to certain Plough-men out of a Furrow, taught them this mystery, and so vanished.

3. Tripidium, so called quasi Terridum and Tempidum, from the trembling or shaking of the Earth, was a conjecture of future success, by the rebounding of crumbs cast unto Chickens. We have an instance of this in the life of Tiberius Gracchus, who being feloniously bulie in promoting the Law Agaria, was sorely warned by the keeper of his Chickens to desist from that enterprise; because when he had thrown the crumbs to the Coop, there came out but one of the Chickens only, and the same without eating went back again; which was taken for a sign of ill luck, as the greedy devouring of them had been good. But Tiberius slighting the advertisement, and pursuing his design, was the same day slain.

4. Augurium, so called ab avium garrula, was a Prediction from the chirping or chattering of birds; also from the found and voices heard they knew not whence, nor on what occasion. In which latter kind the death of Cæsar was divined from the clattering of Armour in his house; and the poisoning of Germanicus by the founding of a Trumpet of its own accord. In the former an Owl screeching in the Senate-house, was deemed ominous to Augustus; and a company of Crows following Sejanus to his house, with great noise and clamour, was judged to be fatal to that great favourite: and so it proved.

5. Manitus, the thirteenth King, who revived again the ancient Discipline, corrupted by the floatfulness and effeminacy of his Predecessors; and by the terror of his name awed the Ægyptians.

6. Alades, the eighteenth King, more absolute in Syria and the Western parts, than any of the Kings before him.

6. Sardanapalus

6 Sardanapalus, the last King of this Race, who being wondrous effeminate, and utterly unable to govern so great an Empire, gave opportunity to Arbaces, his Lieutenant in Media, to conspire against him. By whom, associated by Belochus Governor of Babylon, he was besieged in the City of Nineve, and there reduced unto such extremities, that gathering his Treasures all together, he burnt himself and them in one funeral Pile, Esolum falsum vitium imitatus, as is said by Justin. The Treasure which he is said to have burnt with him, amounted to one hundred Millions of Talents of Gold, and a thousand Millions of Talents of Silver: which in our English Money comes to twenty thousand and five hundred Millions of pounds. A Mass of Money, which as it must be long in gathering, so probably it had not been the Sun in many years, and therefore grown rusty might require a fire to purge it. This Sardanapalus afforded it, it may be, to end his life with that, in which he placed his Summum bonum. It may be slighted unto his enemies, and it is possible it might be in policy, that to great a treasure not falling to the possession of his Foes, might so much the more disable them from making resistance against, or detaching the Empire from his next rightful Successors. For it is of all things most foolish, both to lose our Treasure, and with it to enrich our Adversaries. On which consideration the Spaniards tied their Indian Fleet at Gades, and the Genoese theirs at Tripolis, that their Lading might not come into the possession of their enemies, the English and Mahometans. After the death of this Sardanapalus, Arbaces took Media & Perse, with the adjoining Provinces; Belochus strengthened himself in Assyria, Chaldea, and the adjacent Regions, his Kingdom being called the new Kingdom of Assyria.

The new Kings of Assyria, and Chaldea.

A.M.

- 1465 1 Paul Belochus, the beginner of this new Monarchy, or Race of Monarchs.
 1594 2 Paul Assur, destroyed Galilee, and subdued the Kingdom of Damascus; the same who is called Tiglat Pileser in the Holy Scriptures.
 1717 3 Salmassar, who destroyed Samaria, and ruined the Kingdom of Israel, and carried the ten Tribes to perpetual Captivity. This is the Nabonassar of the Chronologers.
 1827 4 Sennacherib, whose blasphemous Host was vanquished by Angels from Heaven, and he himself murdered by his two Sons, Adramelch and Sherazer. 7.
 1933 5 Assarhaddon, who revenging his Fathers death on his Brothers, was deposed by his Deputy of Chaldea, and the Seat-Royal transferred from Nineve to Babylon. 10.
 2042 6 Meroch Baladan, Governor of Babylon, succeeded his Master in the Throne, conceived by some, to be the Mardacempades of Ptolemy; by others, to be also the same King, who by his Captain Holofernes did slay Judas.
 2183 7 Ben Merodach, the Son of Meroch Baladan. 21.
 2304 8 Nabopolassar, who vanquished Pharaoh Necho King of Ægypt. 25.
 2339 9 Nabuchodonosor the great, by some called the Hercules of the East, who conquered Ægypt in the life of his Father; with whom he reigned for a time, and mightily enlarged the City of Babylon. He joyed also with Alyages King of Medes, in subverting the proud City of Nineve; and in the eighteenth year of his Reign destroyed Hierusalem, and carried the people captive unto Babylon. But in the last seven years of his Reign he was so distracted, that he lived not much unlike the Beasts of the Field; according to the Word of God spoken by Daniel, Chap. 4. during which time his Son Eulmerodach, his Daughter Nicores, with Niglisar her Husband, and Laborsfordrach their Son, governed his Empire as Protectors, and therefore are by some reckoned as Kings. Finally, Nebuchadnezzar having recovered his senses, was again restored unto the Throne; and died, when he had reigned in all 44 years.

- 3383 10 Eulmerodach, the son of Nebuchadnezzar, slain by Alyages King of the Medes. 26.
 3409 11 Balthassar, son of Eulmerodach (the Nabonidus of Berosus) a Prince of a dissolute and cruel nature, was in the latter end of his reign assailed by Cyaxares the son of Alyages (whom the Scriptures call Darius Medus) and by Cyrus the Persian: by whom he was slain in the seventeenth year of his reign, and the Empire of the Babylonians was transferred to the Medes and Persians.

A. M. 3426.

That this was the end of Balthassar, is the common opinion. But Josephus Scaliger in his learned and industrious work, De emendatione temporum, maketh him to be slain in a tumult by his own people: who elected into the Empire a Nobleman of the Medes, called in prophane stories, Nabonidus; in Divine, Darius Medus, who after a 7 years reign was slain by Cyrus King of the Persians. But by the leave of so worthy a man, this cannot hold good. For the Lord by his Prophet Jeremy, had pronounced (Chap. 27.) That all Nations should serve Nebuchadnezzar, and his son, and his sons son; whereas Nabonidus was a Prince of strange blood, and so the Nations were not to serve him: and in Balthassar, the fons son of Nebuchadnezzar, was this word accomplished. But let us examine his argument, and withal the scoffs, which very prodigally he bestoweth on such as maintain the contrary opinion: Natio Chronologorum, the whole rout of Chronologers; boni & diligenter vivi, good fine meaning men; & addunt alia nihil veriora, are his first Compliments. Ut igitur quod Chronologorum est, omnes respiciant, &c. therefore that they may repeat their ever being Chronologers, he bringeth in Berosus, cited by Josephus, in his first Book against Apion. But Berosus there maketh Nabonidus (to whom he faith the Kingdom of Balthassar was by the people delivered) to be a Babylonian, and not as Scaliger would have him say, a Nobleman of the Medes; neither can the authority of Berosus countervail that of Daniel, who in Chap. 6. telleth Balthassar, that his Kingdom should be divided amongst the Medes and Persians. His second argument is drawn from the nature of the word, Βασιλεύς & Δασιλεύς, and Darius the Mede took the Empire, by which word too, is implied (saith he) not a forcible invasion, but a willing acceptance of the Empire offered. To this we answer, that Darius indeed took the Empire quietly and willingly, being offered unto him by Cyrus, and his Army consisting of Medes & Persians, who according to the Word of God, had taken it from Balthassar, Darius being then absent. Quid si probaveris (saith he) enim cognominatum fuisse Medum? He hath yet one trick more than all these; and Medus must not be the National name name, but the surname of Darius, which he proveth out of a fragment of Megasthenes, cited by Eusebius, in his work De Preparatione Evangelica, where he is called Médocavdris & Yeqi Médoc &c. an argument of all others the most slight and trivial. For besides that Médoc may there as well be the name of his Nation, as of his Family; and besides that, it thwarteth the places of Jeremy and Daniel, already quoted; it is Diametrically opposite to another place of the same Daniel, in his ninth Chapter, where he is called, Darius, of the seed of the Medes. Of this Darius more anon when we come into Media. As for Nabonidus, unquestionably he was the same with Balthassar. For besides that Josephus and Berosus attribute to either of them the reign of 17 years, the same Josephus (who might best know the truth in this case) telleth us that Balthassar was by the Babylonians called Nabonidel, a name not to great a stranger to Nabonidus, as Scaliger's Darius, or Herodotus's Labinius. But in this we must pardon Joseph. Scorn and contradiction was a part of his essence. For had he not been in some things singular, in all, peremptory, he had neither been a Scaliger, nor the Son of Julius.

But leaving Joseph to the singularity of his own conceits, we find nothing done by the Assyrians or Chaldeans after this subjection, which might denote them to have been once the Lords of so great an Empire. Successively inflavied by the Medes, Persians, and Macdonians, then by the Persians again, afterwards by the Saracens, next by the Turks, a third time by the Persians, once again by the Turks of the Ottoman Family, unto whom now subject: never endeavouring to assert in the way of war, or opposition, either their ancient reputation, or their native liberties; but suffering themselves to be won, lost, fought for, and again recovered by their quarrellous Masters, as if they had not title to their own Country, but were born to follow the fortunes of all Pretenders. The reason of which is principally to be ascribed to the form of Government used amongst the Persians, which was so Despotical and absolute, if not tyrannical, that they held all the people conquered by them in the nature of slaves, not suffering any to grow great in a state of inheritance, or to enjoy any place of power and profit under them in the conquered Provinces, but at the pleasure of the Prince; as it is now used amongst the Turks of the Ottoman Empire. By means whereof, the great men having no alliance amongst themselves, and as few dependants amongst the people, were never able to make head against the Conquerors but in the fall of the present Prince fell together with him: it being a good rule of Machiavel, that where the ancient Nobility is in good regard, linked in alliances with themselves, and well respected by the common and inferior people; there it is difficult for the Invader, though a Conquerour, to win a Country, and harder to keep it being conquered. But on the other side, where the Nobility is quite worn out, and the Prince doth hold his Subjects in the nature of slaves, there both the Conquest will be easie, and soon assured. For to what purpose should the Subjects resist the Conquerour, or stand any longer to their King, than he stands to himself, when they are sure the Conquerour can lay upon them no heavier burdens, than they were accustomed to before, and have withal a flattering hope, that their new Masters may be gentler to them, than their former were? It fares no otherwise, with them than with Esof's Afs, which refused to take the opportunity of an escape from the hands of the enemy, by which he was taken, because he knew it was not possible they should lay more load upon his back, than his old Master made him bear. To which condition the Chaldeans and Assyrians being brought by the Persians, and never accustomed to the taste of a better fortune, have followed the same success as the Persians did, falling together with them from one hand to another: the particular account of whose estate we shall find in Persia, taking this only for the close. That when Solyman the Magnificent had discomfited Tamas King of Persia, and taken the great City of Bagdat, Caramis, Nardin, and the rest both in Assyria, Chaldea, and Mesopotamia, submitted to him without any resistance, and received his Garrisons. And for a confirmation of his Estate, he received at the hand of the Caliph of Bagdat (who by an old Prerogative had the nomination, or confirmation, at the least, of the Kings of Assyria, and the Sultans of Egypt) the Royal Ornaments and Ensigns, Anno 1534, incorporating by that means those Regions into his Estates, and making them Provinces of his Empire; in which he left Sagierbeg at Bagdat to command in Chief, and divers Sagierbegs in their several and respective Provinces. And still though the Persian Kings have since taken, and are still possessed of some places of importance in them; yet I account them in regard of the said inviolability, and the long possession following on it, for Provinces of the Turkish Empire: as I do Media of the Persian, though Taurus, and some other pieces of it be possessed by the Turks.

MOUNT

MOUNT TAURUS.

MOUNT TAURUS is a constant and continual ridge of hills, which extend from the Mediterranean to the Indian Seas; running thorow the whole length of Asia from West to East, and dividing it, as the Equator doth the Globe, into North and South. It was called Taurus from the rest of Asia the left, on the North thereof are called Taurus; and where they part it from Cemagena a Province of Syria, they are called Ammanus. On the East side of the River Euphrates (which forceth it self a throw it) it sometimes resumeth the name of Taurus, as in Ptolemy's three first Tables of Asia, and sometimes taketh the name of Niphates, as in the fourth: retaining that uncertain appellation, so long as they bound Armenia from Mesopotamia. After the River Tigris hath also cut them afunder, they continue the name of Niphates altogether, until they separate Assyria and Media, and then they call themselves Costris: although between the upper and lower Media, they appear not always, but are seen discontinued, and broke in pieces: such parts of it as are found in the middle of that Country, being called Orantes; those which lie more towards the East being named Coronus, out of the Southern parts whereof issueth the River of Bagradus, which divideth the ancient Persia from Caramania. Continuing further Eastward by the name of Coronus, they give unto the Parthians and Hyracians, their proper Countries; and afterwards change themselves into the Mountains of Serapis, out of which riseth the River Maurguis. And now beginning to draw towards the end of their course, they first make themselves the South border of Bactria, and are then known by the name of Parapamisus; and after take unto themselves the name of Caucasus, where the famous Rivers Indus, Hydaspis, and Zaradus, have their first beginnings. In this point do they hold their heads exceeding high, to equal the Mountains of Imaus; whom they encounter within the 35, 36, and 37 Degrees of Latitude, and the 140 Degree of Longitude: known by no other name than this, till finally they terminate their course in the Indian Seas. So far, and to this purpose, that noble Gentleman. It may be added hereunto, that though the ancient Writers could trace the course of this Mountain, no further than the meeting of it with Imaus; yet later observations follow it to the wall of China: the parts beyond Caucasus being not known by the names of Delangier, and Nangroon. But this is to be understood only of the main body of these Mountains, which hold on in an even course from West to East; not of those spurs and branches of it, which shoot either to the North, or South: such as are the Anti-Taurus in some parts of the lesser Asia; the Gordian hills, and the Montes Moschici, with those which Pliny calleth Pariedri, others Variadri, in Armenia Major; and that of Caboras, which flieth it self on the North-east of Assyria, with divers others.

In such a continual course of Mountains it must needs be that many fierce Nations did inhabit in former times, not easily subdued, nor so soon reduced unto civility, as such who were possessed of places less defensible, and fitter for commerce and traffick with the rest of mankind. And they continued in these late times, the last which were brought under by the Turks and Persians, the mightiest Monarchs of those parts; though bordering on, or totally environed with their dominions. Two Kingdoms they afforded of long continuance: one towards the West, where it closeth with the Mountains of Anti-Taurus, and divideth Syria Cemagena from Armenia Major; the other towards the East, separating Media from Hyracania. For want of other names to describe them by, we will call the first the Kingdom of Aladenites, and the last the Kingdom of Bahaman: according to the names of the two last Kings.

1 The Kingdom of ALADEULES contained that part of this Mountainous tract, which beginning in or about Anti-Taurus, extended it self as far towards the East, as to the banks of the River Tigris, where they part Mesopotamia from Armenia Major. Inhabited by a people naturally very fierce and warlike, more famous for nothing than their want of all things; who as men dwelling in a rough and barren Country, could little profit themselves by husbandry; and therefore gave themselves to grazing, breeding on their pastures some store of horse and Camels, which they sold to others, but especially maintaining themselves and their families by hunting and stealing. Supposed to come originally from the Cappadocians, and Armenians of the lesser Asia, which by long and continual wars in the former Ages, were forced to forsake their dwellings, and for safety of their lives to fly to these uncultivated and desolate Mountains. Where searching every hill and dale, and following the opportunity of Springs and Rivers, but chiefly the mildest Temperature of the Air, and most cheerful aspect of the Sun, they built in many places poor Villages; and afterwards some better Towns. The principal of which is named Maras, so called as it is conceived from the River Marfias, which rising out of the Mountain Calen, passeth passeth by the fame, and not far off falleth into the River Euphrates.

When it was made a Kingdom first, it is hard to say, the Kings hereof being mean and inconsiderable in the eye of the world, not worth the conquering; and wanting power to conquer others and enlarge their territories: nor indeed worthy any King but one of their own, who could content himself with reigning over Rocks and Mountains. The last was Aladulter, so much spoken of in the Turkish Histories, and by them called the Mountain King. Conceived by some Writers to have been the Author of such a Paradise, as we shall find described, when we come to Drangiana, a Province of Persia; and by that means grown formidable to his neighbouring Princes. But that which made him most really and truly known, in the stories of the former times, was the stout opposition which he made against the Turks, in their wars with Persia. He had before given no small check to the proceedings of Bajazet the second, in his conquest of the Carmanian Kingdom; and so left troubled Selimus the Son of Bajazet, in his Persian wars, impeaching what he could the greatness of the Ottoman Family: Fought with by Selimus, he made good his ground with a great deal of courage, till betrayed by Ali Beg, General of his Horse, and seeing his Army terrified by the thot of the Turks, he was fain to flee. But being at last taken, and put to death by the command of Selimus, his Kingdom was converted to a Turkish Province, Anno 1515: and so continued to this day.

2 The Kingdom of BAHAMAN was situate more towards the East, amongst the Mountains which divide Media from Hircania, as before was said. The Mountains in those parts so high, that Travellers at the end of a two days journey, may discern the middle Region of the Air to be beneath them: exceeding troublesome to ascend, about 50 miles in height when once got to the top; but more dangerous by reason of the Rocks and Precipices, in the going down: full of inhospitable freights, and so cold and barren, that were not Sovereignty a temptation above all resistance, no man would take upon him the command of so poor a Kingdom. And yet in this extremity of height and cold, there is great quantity of Sulphur, which makes it sparkle in the night, like the hill Vesuvius, in Italy, by means whereof here are many Hot-Baths, three of them walled about, two open; to which resort unfound and decrepit people, in very great multitudes. The chief Town of it Larry Jeon, in the ordinary Road or Pass betwixt Omuel, the last Town of Hircania, and Damas the first of Media. But the Kings Seat was in a Village called Reyna, where he had a Castle so built upon the best advantages of Art and Nature, that it seemed invincible; adorned above, with gardens, flowers, and most pleasant fruits; and furnished beneath with a Rivulet of pure water, which pleasantly passing thorow the Castle, fell into the Valley. A Castle of so large a circuit, that besides the Kings Family or Court, it was able to admit a garrison of 10000 men.

The last King hereof was the foresaid Bahaman, derived from a long descent of Royal Ancestors, comparing for antiquity with the Persian Sophies: who though ill-neighbourred on both sides, by the Tartarian on the one, and the Kings of Persia on the other: yet had they with great fortune, policy, and valour, maintained their Royalties against all pretenders. But Abas the late Persian Sophy, having either conquered or reduced Hircania, picked a quarrel with Bahaman; pretending that by the opportunity of his situation he might rob his Carmanian, hinder his progress towards the Hircanian Sea, and turn into other Channels all the Streams or Rivers, which rising from Mount Taurus, watered and enriched his Persian Territories. And though Bahaman never had attempted any of the things objected; yet it was cause enough of quarrel that he might so do: and therefore is besieged in his Castle of Reyna, with an Army of 3000 men. Finding no possibility to prevail by force, the General of the Persians proceeds by treachery, invites the old King into his Camp under colour of Parley; and by this means drew his two Sons out of the Castle to the Parley also. Whom having got into his power, he first caused their heads to be cut off; and after making use of their Seals and Signets, obtains a surrender of the place: and with it the possession of this mountainous Kingdom, Anno 1601. or thereabouts, united ever since to the Crown of Persia.

OF TURCOMANIA.

TURCOMANIA is bounded on the East, with Media, and the Caspian Sea; on the West, with the Euxine Sea, Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor; on the North, with Tartary; and on the South, with Mesopotamia, and Affrica. So called from the Turcomans or Turks; who from hence made their first expedition for the conquest of Persia, and after spread themselves over all those parts of Europe, Asia, and Africa, now in their possession. A Country which consisteth of four several Provinces, each Province having to its self its particular story; and therefore we must look upon it, as it is now divided into those four parts, that is to say, 1 Armenia Major, or Turcomania properly and specially so called; 2 Colechia, now called Mengrelia; 3 Iberia, now named Georgia; and 4 Albania, which they now term Zuria.

i ARMENIA MAJOR.

ARMENIA MAJOR is bounded on the East, with Media, and some part of the Caspian Sea; on the West, with the River Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Minor, in the lesser Asia; on the North, with Colechia, or Mengrelia; and on the South, with Mesopotamia, and some part of Affrica.

It was called Armenia, as some say, quasi Aram-Mini, or the Mini of Syria: but as others say, quasi Har-mini, that is to say, Mont Mini, or Montana Miniasis: the Mini, or Minii, being a Region of this tract, mentioned by Jeremy the Prophet, Chap. 51. 27. and by him placed betwixt Ararat and Atkenaz, which shew the situation of it to be hercabouts. Major which added to it for distinction sake, to difference it from Armenia Minor: and now it is called Turcomania, as the first seat in which the Turcomans or Turks did fix themselves, after their eruption out of Scythia.

The Country in the most part overspread with hills, branches of those huge mountains of Taurus, and Anti-Taurus; but intermixt with fertile and delightful Valleys, liberally furnished with Cattel, and good store of Fruits, though much subject to deep flows, which do much annoy it. The Riches of it not to be better estimated than by the frankness of Tigranes, once King hereof. Who being fined by Pompey at 6000 Talents, not only very readily laid down that sum; but added of his own accord to every Roman Souldier 50 Drachms of Silver, 1000 Drachms to each Captain, and to every Colonel a Talent. For though Tigranes had added some part of Media, and the whole Kingdom of Syria, unto his Estate: yet those being new Acquests, and not fully settled, were not much likely, for the present, to enrich his Coiffers: new conquered Provinces being for the most part more chargeable than beneficial to the Vittor.

The people are generally great bodied, of comely performance, and patient of all kind of labour; good Archers, when put to it, but careless of honour got by war; merry, desirous to be at ease, and apt to be footed. The women tall, but homely, of a manly look, most of them skilful at their Bow, or some other weapon. Their Families for the most part great, the Father, and all his Posterity to the third and fourth generation, living under a roof; after whose death the eldest, whether Son or Brother, hath the chiefest Rule. In diet and bathing all alike; and in most places they are said to be very industrious; painful in tillage, and well seen in Manufactures, especially rich Tapestries, Grograins, and watered Chamless: with which they traffick into most Cities of the Turks and other Mahometans; privileged, as they say, by a Charter under Mahomet's own hand, above other Christians, and upon that occasion more dispersed in the Eastern Countries than any Nation in the world, the Jews excepted.

They have a Language of their own, which they call the Armenian, not only used amongst them in common talk, but in sacred offices: the Scriptures being translated into that language also; and that, as the people do affirm, by the hand of St. Chrysostom, at such time as (on the solicitation of the Emperors Endocia, his most eager enemy) he was confined to the lesser Armenia, by the Emperour Arcaidius: to whom also they ascribe the invention of the Armenian Characters, or Letters, still in use amongst them.

They received the Christian Faith by the preaching of St. Bartholomew, and were anciently of the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople, as a Province of the Pontick Dioceses; which together with the Asian Dioceses, and that of Thrace, were by the Council of Chalcedon laid unto that Patriarchat. But falling into the opinion of Eutycher, touching one nature only in CHRIST our Saviour, they withdrew themselves long since, from the communion of the Greeks, whom they hold in greater detestation than all other Christians; and chose two Patriarchs of their own, of whom more anon. Other opinions which they hold besides those of Eutycher, (which yet they labour to make capable of an Orthodox sense;) and those wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, as 1 Denying Purgatory, and prayers for the dead. 2 Admitting none to be made Priests, except those that be married. 3 Denying the body of Christ to be really under the species of bread and wine. And 4 Re baptizing such as come to their Communion from the Latine Churches, Are these that follow, in which they differ also from most Churches else, viz. 1 In receiving Infants to the Lord's Table, immediately after Baptism. 2 In abstaining from unclean meats. 3 In fasting, on Christmasts day. And 4 In holding their Children under the fire, as a necessary circumstance in Baptism; because John the Baptist told the people which followed him, that CHRIST would baptize them with the Holy Ghost.

and with fire; in which place he meaneth not material fire, but the lively purgation of the Holy Ghost, according to the nature of fire. The Church of this Sect is governed by two Patriarchs; whereof the one hath under his jurisdiction this Turcomania, comprehending 15000 Families, besides very many Monasteries: and the other hath under him the two Provinces of Armenia the Lesser and Cilicia, comprehending 20000 Families, or thereabouts: The first residing anciently in Sebastia, the Metropolis of the greater Armenia; the second originally at Melitene, the Metropolis of Armenia Minor; but of late at Sis, a small City, not far from Tarsus in Cilicia. Both honoured with the title of Catholiques, and having under them to the number of 30 Bishops.
